

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/

•

•

19654

THE

ANNUAL REGISTER,

OR A VIEW OF THE

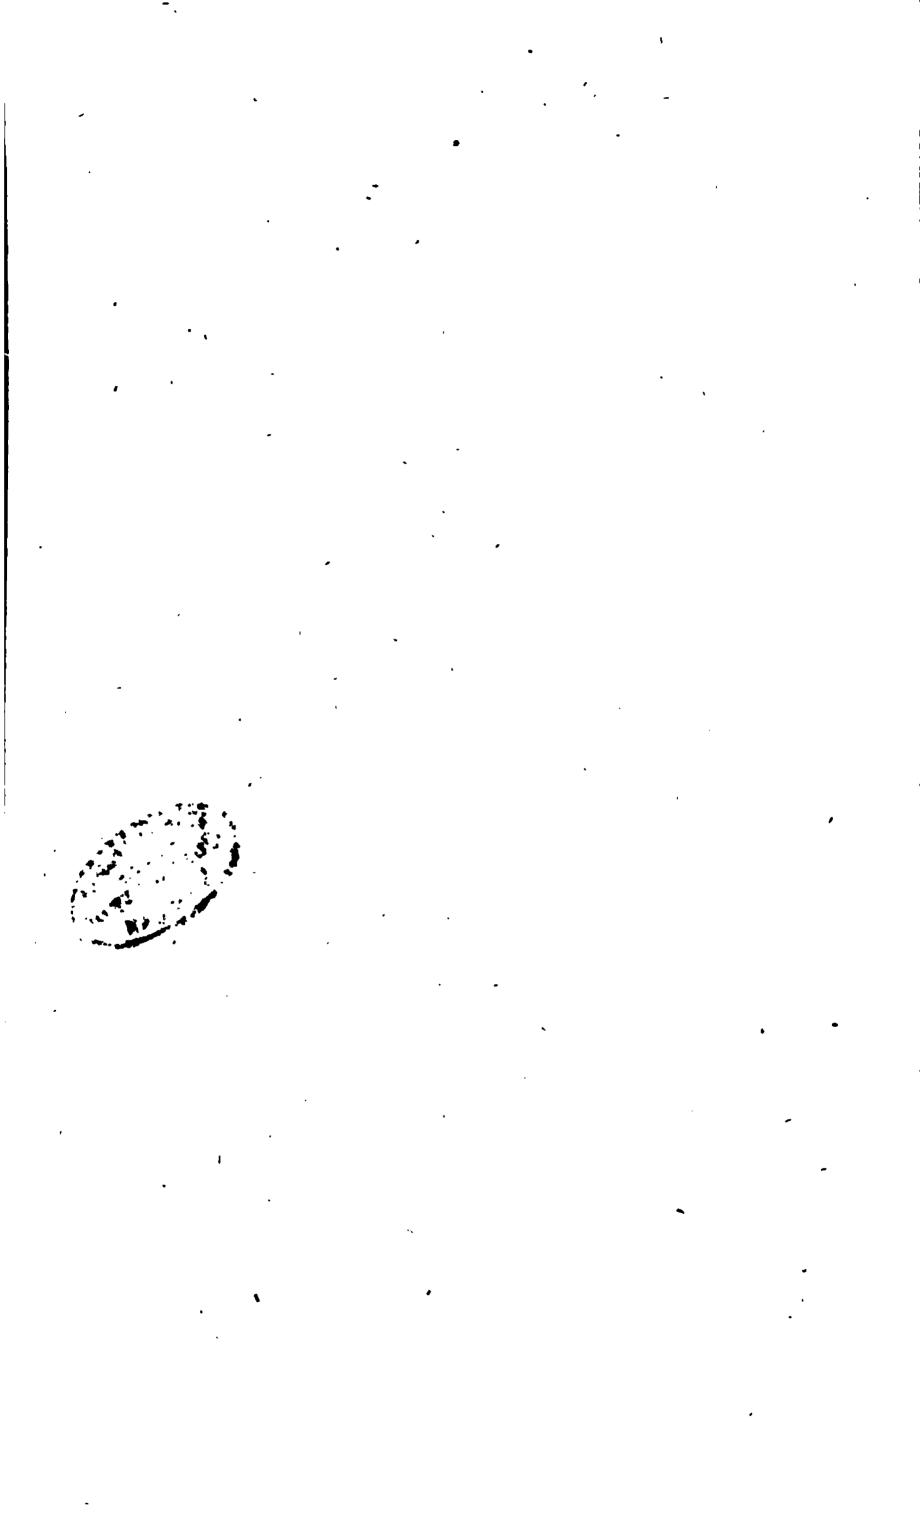

HISTORY, POLITICS,

AND

LITERATURE
For the YEAR 1796.

Register,
DGILVY AND SON;
LLEN, AND CO.
DOD.

PREFACE.

both its origin and conduct, the year 1796 is particularly interesting to every subject of the British empire. The spirit of innovation, imported into this country, from France, became strong, rampant, and daring. The established order of affairs was loudly threatened. Outrage, in a quarter that ought to be held the most facred from violence, was actually begun: multitudes of men appeared ready to precipitate themselves into anarchy and rebellion.

In such circumstances, the British government deemed it necessary to take strong measures of prevention. On the conduct of administration the nation was divided, according as they were, more or less, forcibly struck with the dangers to be apprehended from popular encroachments on the one hand, or those of the executive government on the other. The apprehensions of both parties were abundantly justified by experience.

Vol. XXXVIII,

It was scarcely possible, that, in such a shock, the balance of our constitution should not, in some degree, be shaken, and bent a little, for a time, towards one side or other. The candour and indulgence with which we have treated the opposite opinions on this important, delicate, and tender subject, we wish to be considered, by our readers, as a pledge of that perfect impartiality and freedom from all party spirit, by which we wish this work to be distinguished. As it extends to many years back, so we hope it will be continued, and find acceptation in the world, for many years to come. It is not for any party, or temporary humour, or passion, that we select and record the transactions and events of the passing years, but for our countrymen, and all men, in all times and circumstances,

Though we are rather inclined to be of opinion with those who think the measures of administration, to which we have now aliuded, were compelled by the dangers and exigencies of the times, we are neither unconcerned, nor unalarmed, at whatever seems to impose restraint on civil or political freedom.

PREFACE.

VEN in the history of the present war, so novel in both its origin and conduct, the year 1796 is particularly interesting to every subject of the British empire. The spirit of innovation, imported into this country, from France, became strong, rampant, and daring. The established order of affairs was loudly threatened. Outrage, in a quarter that ought to be held the most sacred from violence, was actually begun: multitudes of men appeared ready to precipitate themselves into anarchy and rebellion.

In such circumstances, the British government deemed it necessary to take strong measures of prevention. the conduct of administration the nation was divided, according as they were, more or less, forcibly struck with the dangers to be apprehended from popular encroachments on the one hand, or those of the executive government

Vol. XXXVIII.

government on the other. The apprehensions of both parties were abundantly justified by experience.

It was scarcely possible, that, in such a shock, the balance of our constitution should not, in some degree, be shaken, and bent a little, for a time, towards one side or other. The candour and indulgence with which we have treated the opposite opinions on this important, delicate, and tender subject, we wish to be considered, by our readers, as a pledge of that perfect impartiality and freedom from all party spirit, by which we wish this work to be distinguished. As it extends to many years back, so we hope it will be continued, and find acceptation in the world, for many years to come. It is not for any party, or temporary humour, or passion, that we select and record the transactions and events of the passing years, but for our countrymen, and all men, in all times and circumstances.

Though we are rather inclined to be of opinion with those who think the measures of administration, to which we have now alluded, were compelled by the dangers and exigencies of the times, we are neither unconcerned, nor unalarmed, at whatever seems to impose restraint on civil or political freedom.

On

On a due balance between prerogative and liberty has the British constitution been supported. When either of these has preponderated many evils have been suffered. But there is something in the genius, manners, habits, and character of the English nation, different from, and paramount to, laws and forms, that, amidst all the deviations of the constitution, has constantly brought it back to its true spirit. The same principles which have enabled England, by the immensity of its resources, to stand unshaken in the midst of the disasters that besel the coalition, and to display greater and greater energy, in proportion to increasing difficulties, will, we doubt not, save the state from the disastrous consequences which too often flow even from precedents sounded in temporary expediency.

In tracing the movements of armies, the revolutions of states, the political intrigues, dissentions, and contests, which mark the year 1796, we have exerted our usual industry, not only in delineating objects, according to their respective magnitude and importance, but in reducing them within the wonted limits of our Annual History of Europe.

.. 2 .. A

19604

THE

ANNUAL REGISTER,

OR A VIEW OF THE

HISTORY, POLITICS,

AND

LITERATURE

For the YEAR 1796.

LONDON:

Frinted by T. Russon, No. 51, Little Queen-Breet, for the Proprietors of Dodfley's Annual Regifier, w.otridge and son; R. faulder; J. Cuthell; ogilvy and son;

&. lea; J. Nunn; J. Walker; Lackington, allen, and co.

&. jeffery; and vernor and hood.

#200.

PREFACE.

EVEN in the history of the present war, so novel in both its origin and conduct, the year 1796 is particularly interesting to every subject of the British empire. The spirit of innovation, imported into this country, from France, became strong, rampant, and daring. The established order of affairs was loudly threatened. Outrage, in a quarter that ought to be held the most sacred from violence, was actually begun: multitudes of men appeared ready to precipitate themselves into anarchy and rebellion.

In such circumstances, the British government deemed it necessary to take strong measures of prevention. On the conduct of administration the nation was divided, according as they were, more or less, forcibly struck with the dangers to be apprehended from popular encroachments on the one hand, or those of the executive Vol.XXXVIII.

A government

government on the other. The apprehensions of both parties were abundantly justified by experience.

It was scarcely possible, that, in such a shock, the balance of our constitution should not, in some degree, be shaken, and bent a little, for a time, towards one side or other. The candour and indulgence with which we have treated the opposite opinions on this important, delicate, and tender subject, we wish to be considered, by our readers, as a pledge of that perfect impartiality and freedom from all party spirit, by which we wish this work to be distinguished. As it extends to many years back, so we hope it will be continued, and find acceptation in the world, for many years to come. It is not for any party, or temporary humour, or passion, that we select and record the transactions and events of the passing years, but for our countrymen, and all men, in all times and circumstances.

Though we are rather inclined to be of opinion with those who think the measures of administration, to which we have now alluded, were compelled by the dangers and exigencies of the times, we are neither unconcerned, nor unalarmed, at whatever seems to impose restraint on civil or political freedom.

On

On a due balance between prerogative and liberty has the British constitution been supported. When either of these has preponderated many evils have been suffered. But there is something in the genius, manners, habits, and character of the English nation, different from, and paramount to, laws and forms, that, amidst all the deviations of the constitution, has constantly brought it back to its true spirit. The same principles which have enabled England, by the immensity of its resources, to stand unshaken in the midst of the disasters that besel the coalition, and to display greater and greater energy, in proportion to increasing difficulties, will, we doubt not, save the state from the disastrous consequences which too often flow even from precedents sounded in temporary expediency.

In tracing the movements of armies, the revolutions of states, the political intrigues, dissentions, and contests, which mark the year 1796, we have exerted our usual industry, not only in delineating objects, according to their respective magnitude and importance, but in reducing them within the wonted limits of our Annual History of Europe.

head, they will perceive, we have not been inmeteric. It is not a minute and circumstantial detail transactions and events that we understand to be wished for and expected in our historical sketches; but a narrative brief and rapid, yet clear and comprehensive: one that may give a just view of what is passing in the world, without too much time or trouble of reading. The curiosity of such of our readers as may have a taste and turn for more particular information, respecting various occurrences, will be gratified in the second part of the volume.

For the YEAR 1796.

ϙϲͻϙϥϲͻϙϥϲͻϙϥϲͻϙϥϲͻϙϥϲͻϙϥϲͻϙϙϲ϶ϙϥϲ϶ϙϥϲ϶ϙϥϲ϶ϙϥϲ϶ϙϥϲ϶ϙ

THE

H I S T O R Y

E U R O P E.

CHAP. I.

Situation of the French Nation and Government, and Views of the Directory.

—Difficulties to be encountered by France at the Close of 1795.—State of Parties in England.—Temper of the British Nation.—Assemblies for the Purpose of a Parliamentary Resorm, and Peace with France.—A great and dangerous Scarcity of Provisions.—Meeting of Parliament.—Insults and Outrages of an immense Mob against the King, on his Way to the House of Lords.—The regret of all People of Sense at this Treatment of the King.—Speech from the Throne.—Debates thereon.—In the House of Commons.—And in that of the Lords.

AFTER the death of Robefpierre, the convention were more at liberty than they had been to declare the voice of the people; and the fentiments of nature, with an inclination to peace, began to appear in the public councils, as well as among the generality of the French nation: but it too often, nay, most commonly happens, in all governments, that the real interests of the many are facrificed to those of the few: the dictates of humanity
Vol. XXXVIII.

to the views of personal aggrandizement and ambition.

Uniformity and steadiness of government may proceed from different and even opposite causes; the predominant habits and passions of absolute monarchs on the one hand; and the virtues of nascent and juvenile republics on the other: when the external relations of the state are neither many nor complicated; when its interests are easily discerned and constantly pursued, the integrity integrity and upright intentions of the representatives and rulers being constantly supported by a genteral simplicity of manners, and a facred regard to the principles of morality and religion. In the newly conftituted government of France both these kinds of steadiness were wanting. It was less democratical indeed than that of 1793; but still the executive power was configued into five hands instead of one only. It was not stayed as all other republics of any extent and durability have hitherto been, by some individual power, whether under the name of archon, duke, doge, king, stadtholder, or the president of a congress. It was impossible that five directors, and these Frenchmen too, should, for any length of time, act with harmony. They split into parties hostile and violent, in proportion to the power with which they were invested: in order to retain which the preponderating party treated their rivals in the directory, and their opponents in the councils with the most mercilels severity, and repeatedly violated the constitution, under the pretence of preserving it. Like their predecessors in the revolution, in default of simplicity of manners, and the other requisites to a genuine republic, they had recourse to intrigue and violence. Had their own manners been more pure than they were, without those adventitious supports in so great and corrupt a commonwealth, and where all are so prone to direct, but none to be directed, they could not, for even a short time, have held together any femblance of a regular fabric of government.

There was one point, however, in which the directory on their elevation to power unanimously agreed.

The jacobinical party that had for long domineered in the public-councils, confident as above related, from victory over the sections of Paris, and treading in the very footsteps of Robespierre, had appointed a commission of five, for the safety of the country; and but for the bold and animated efforts of a few men would certainly have effected the slavery of France in the permanency of the convention. The directors, confcious of the general odium they, in common, with the other leaders of the convention, had incurred on this attempt, and also of their malvertation in precipitating the confideration of the new constitution. and garbling the reports that had been made concerning its acceptance, determined to divert the minds of the nation from their own conduct, and to exhauft the public discontents by a prosecution of the war. If this should prove successful, of which they entertained not any doubt, the merit would, in a very great degree, be reflected on themselves, and the enemies of the directory would be regarded, by the nation at large, as enemies to the victories and glory of France. They were undoubtedly fortunate in the choice of their commanders. fucceiles of their generals occupied and dazzled the public mind for a time; but wisdom, constancy, and purity of design, without which no prosperity can be lasting, were wanting in the supreme councils. The armies were neglected; the tide of success was turned; and finally, to shew how little that temporary fuccels was owing to any principles inherent in the constitution, the vast and stupendous genlus of one man, to which chiefly the directory were indebted for a temporary

temporary splendour, ultimately wrought their ruin, and introduced a new order of affairs into the distracted and sluctuating commonwealth.

The close of the year 1795 was not so favourable to the French as that of the preceding; they had projected at its commencement to follow up their fuccesses in Holland, by carrying their victorious arms into the heart of Germany; but a variety of obstructions had either prevented or frustrated their designs. At home the violence of the many factions, open or concealed, stood perpetually in the way of government, and impaired its proposed energies. Abroad the remaining parts of the coalition against France, though foiled in their repeated attempts, still preserved their spirit, and determination to perfift at all hazards in carrying on the war.

The principal scene of action had been on the banks of the Rhine. Here it had been generally expected, that after the subjugation of the feven United Provinces, the French would have met with no confiderable opposition; but though dispirited, as well as weakened, by the fevering of fo material a limb from the great body of the confederacy, it still found sufficient refources to make head against the French, in a country where the generality of the inhabitants, though distantished at their rulers, were not so imprudent as to preser a foreign to a domestic yoke, and would not fail to co-operate in opposing French invation. To this disposition of an incomparable majority of the inhabitants of Germany was, in a great measure, due the little progress of the French in those provinces of the empire on the rightfide of the Rhine, into which they had, with much difficulty, found means to penetrate, and from which they had been, after much fruitless toil and unsuccessful efforts, compelled to retire with very considerable losses.

The failure of the French in their expedition into Germany; their expulsion from every post they had occupied on the eastern banks of the Rhine; their retreat across that river; the pursuit of their discomsited army into the borders of France; and the feveral defeats they experienced, were circumstances so little hoped for at the commencement of this year's military operations in those parts that they proportionably revived the spirit of their enemies, and infused a degree of confidence into them, to which they had been strangers, since the disasters of the preceding campaign.

But, notwithstanding their ill fuccess on the Rhine, the French maintained a decided superiority in every other quarter. Europe seemed to stand at bay, and to wait with anxiety the termination of a quarrel that had produced fo many stupendous events. The diffolution of the confederacy, by the fecession of Prutsia and Spain, was far from being confidered as complete: the principal members, Great Britain and Austria were held fully competent, though not to the purpose of subduing, yet still to that of repressing the French; and this was now viewed as the only object, at which they ought, in prudence, in the present situation of their affairs, to aim.

During the course of the campaign, the government in France had entertained some ideas tending to a general pacification; but the [B2] lofti-loftiness of their pretentions, dictated by the pride of their nation, was so apparent, that Europe was not furprifed that they were only mentioned transiently in their occasional diffeourles on that subject. veteracy of the ruling party to England subfified almost as violently as ever. The French beheld, with that rancour which attends an unfuccessful rivalship, the improbability of their ever attaining to an equality with the English at sea. It greatly mortified their pride, that all the European nations should unamimoufly afcribe a decided superiority in naval tactics to the English, and represent these as no less invincible on the ocean, than the French had hitherto been at land; with this difference, however, to the difadvantage of the latter, that it would prove a much easier talk to overcome them at land than the others at lea.

Other causes of distatisfaction militated against the ruling party in France. The royalists, however depressed, were not dispirited: their numbers, though inserior to those of the republicans, were immense; they maintained a close correspondence with each other, and cemented their reciprocal connections with all those acts of friendship and kindness that bind men so strongly together, when suffering from the same causes, and acting from the same motives.

The vigilance of the republican government found confrant employment in obviating the dangers that threatened it from the indefatigable activity of those irreconcilable antagonists, who, though surrounded with continual observers of all their motions, neglected no opportunity to further their defigns, and boldly encountered every risk of being detected in their profecution.

Enraged at these domestic enemies, the predominant party was perpetually occupied in holding out every species of menace and terror to repress and discourage them; but neither threats nor invitations availed. Actuated by hatred and refentment the royalists considered themselves as equally justified, by conscience and interest, in their determination to feize every occasion of resisting the established powers, holding them as usurpers, with whom no measures ought to be kept, and whom they were bound to oppose, whenever there appeared the least likelihood of doing it to any effect.

Such was the fituation of France at this period, deeply convulsed at home, and though in polletsion of many extensive countries, yet, searful that having acquired, and retaining them only by the right of the sword, they might lose them through the same means: an event, which considering the vicissitudes of war, was not more improbable than the astonishing successes that had attended their arms against all likelihood and expectation.

distracted with these internal divisions, those of England were agitated little less with incessant differences and disputes on the propriety of continuing a war, which had occasioned such losses of men and expence of treasure, without producing those effects which had so repeatedly been represented as infallible. Nothing

While the people in France were had been omitted to procure fuccefs: every ministerial demand had been granted, every measure acceeded to; but the object proposed remained

remained unaccomplished, and as far out of the reach of all reasonable expectation, as at the first moment of its being attempted parties feemed, at this period, to unite in the like strain of reasoning. Numbers of those who had warmly espoused the cause of the minister, thought that a sufficient trial had been made of the various schemes he had brought forward, in order to compel the French to revert to their former fituation; and that, having failed, prudence enjoined him to defift, and to leave the re-establishment of the French monarchy to a future period, and more auspicious opportunities.

That party, which had opposed the war from its very commencement, were loud in their reprobation of its continuance, and reproached ministers with a total want of forefight, in not feeming to have apprehended the difficulties they would have to contend with, and, with equal inability, to encounter As the events of the war countenanced these reproaches, the public joined in them, and the government was thought very reprehensible in pertitting against reiterated experience, in a contest that threatened to waste the strength of the nation ineffectually, and the aim of which, were it attained, would not prove an indemnification for its €oft.

Ideas of this nature were now generally predominant, and became, at last, so prevalent, not only among the multitude, which had long been fwayed by them, but among the more reputable classes, that a variety of affociations were formed, and meetings held, for the avowed purpose of petitioning the legislature in lavour of peace. The city of London led the way, and, in a commonhall, the votes, for a petition, were four thousand, and only one hundred against it.

The terms in which it was conceived were extremely pointed. " None of the ends proposed by the war, (to use the words of the petition) had either been, or appeared likely to be, obtained, although it had been carried on at an unprecedented expence to this country, and had already produced an alarming increase of the national debt, augmented by subsidies, paid to allies, who had notorioufly violated their folemn engagements, and rendered no adequate fervice for large fums actually received them, and wrung from the credulity of the generous and industrious inhabitants of this island." It concluded by expressing a firm and decided conviction, that the principle on which the war appeared to be carried on, neither was, nor could be, essential to the liberty, the glory, or the prosperity, of the British empire.

Other addresses, in a similar style, were resolved on in several of the principal cities in the kingdom. The adherents to ministry endeavoured, on the other hand, to procure counter petitions: but these were faint and languid in compariion to the former; those who framed them, did not venture to speak in justification of the war; they went no farther than to leave to minifters the choice of their own time for pacific negociations.

A circumstance that had greatly indisposed the mercantile and trading classes against ministry, was, the refulal to permit the Dutch people of property, to deposit their money and effects in England, without paying the customary duties. Had this permission been granted, upwards of twenty millions of specie, and other treasure, would, it was said, have been brought into this country. The reason alleged, for denying the request of the Dutch merchants, was, that if they were allowed to transport their effects into England, it would operate as a difcouragement to their countrymen, and prevent them from acting with vigour against the French, who, having subdued the Austrian Netherlands, were then preparing to carry their victorious arms into the United Provinces: but the reply to this allegation was, that the French party was so powerful in Holland, that it was easy to foresee that all refistance would be vain. It would have been good policy, therefore, to have encouraged the moniedmen, in that country, to have lodged their property in England; as most of them were manifestly inclined to do, in order to preserve it from the rapacity of the French, whose wants were fuch as would infallibly induce them to supercede all confiderations, in order to provide for them as foon as they should find themselves in possession of a country, the wealth of which was competent to supply them with what they needed.

3 [B 3]

This refusal, on the part of the British administration, was generally deemed a very unseasonable oversight. It threw into the hands of the French an immense quantity of money and wealth of every denomination, which might evidently have centered in England, together with its owners. This would, in a very considerable measure, have compensated for the loss of Holland to the consederacy, and amply indemnissed Great Britain, by the prodigious accession of real property that must have been the necessary consequence of the emigrations of rich individuals from the United Provinces.

Another overlight, no less real, though lefs noticed, was an article in a treaty which had been agreed on with the American States, by which their trade to the British islands in the West Indies was restricted to vessels of an inferior fize. This, instead of diminishing their commerce thither, tended rather to encrease it, by adding to their number of feamen: whether in large, or in small vessels, this commerce was so profitable to them, that whatever obstacles were thrown in their way, would quickly be overcome by their industry and activity: the profits of trade would be more divided, but the number of hands employed in it would produce the double consequence, both of gradually extending it, and of augmenting the number of American seamen.

These various considerations contributed materially to displease the generality of people. The burthens of the war were so heavy, and such multitudes felt their weight, that discontents and murmurs abounded every where. The different motives assigned, at different epochs of the war, for its continuance, were also highly prejudicial to ministers, as they led many to think that the real motive was purposedly kept out of sight, and was of too invidious a nature to be frankly acknowledged.

Ideas of this nature were now universally current among the disapprovers of the war, and were asserted and circulated by them with considerable effect. But that circumstance which was the most unfortunate and alarming, in the midst of this general dislatisfaction, was, that it had arisen, in many, to such a degree of rancour at the authors and abettors of the war, that the attachment, which men naturally feel for their country, and its concerns, had given way to fentiments of the most violent hatred and hostility to government. It was no longer a simple disapprobation of the war; it was a fervent defire that it might terminate to the difadvantage of this country, and that the French might prevail against the English. So extraordinary and unvatural an antipathy arose, however, from other causes besides the war with France: the persuasion that no reforms would take place in the government, while it was able to maintain its ground against France, prompted the determined advocates of these reforms, to express, with marked anxiety, their wishes for the success of this inveterate enemy to England. They seemed unconscious, or heedless, of the confequences that must necesfarily follow, were the French to succeed in their defigns against this country, to that extent which they had projected, and which the generality of their well-wishers in England appeared to defire with no less fervour than themselves.

fortunate

But the animolities, produced by internal divisions, had, in truth, taken such unhappy possession of most men, that those who sought to reconcile them to moderation, became equally odious to both parties: no medium was allowed; whoever deplored the war, as pregnant with calamities that might have been avoided, was reputed a foe to his country; whoever pronounced it just, and necessary, was deemed a conspirator against its liberty, and an abeteur of arbitrary power.

In this unfortunate disposition of mind the nation continued during the whole year 1795. The summer, in particular, was marked by a variety of tumults and riots. Thele were occasioned by the methods practifed in the enlifting of men for the army: what with the general averseness of the common people to the war; what with the iniquity of the practice itself, those who were concerned in it became fuch objects of execration to the multitude, that their persons and dwellings were equally exposed to its refentment and fury. Several houses, either tenanted, or made use of, by those who are vulgarly known by the appellation of crimps, were demolished, or stripped of their furniture, and the owners put in danger of their lives. So great was the rage of the populace, that it was not without fome difficulty those riots were suppressed by the soldiery. Several of those who had been active in thele disturbances were executed; but the public highly disapproved the condemnation, to death, of mdividuals, guilty of no other offence than giving way to a fudden impulse of indignation at the violence offered to their fellow fubjects.

Such was the temper of the commonalty, previous to the meeting of parliament, about the close of October, 1795. A fermentation of the most alarming kind scemed to pervade the whole mass of the people. The various associations of individuals, united for the purpose of obtaining a parliamentary reform, were, at this period, peculiarly noticed for their boldness and activity. That which was known by the name of the corresponding society, distinguished itself, by the refolute speeches of its principal members, at the feveral meetings that took place in the course of the year. That which was held near Copenhagen-house, in the neighbourhood of Illington, was the most remark-The numbers that attended, either through zeal in the cause, or through curiofity, were computed at about fifty thousand. Some very daring addresses were made to the multitude: the conduct of ministers was arraigned in the most unqualified language, and a remonstrance to the king, on the necessity of peace, and of a reform in parliament, was univerfally agreed on.

[B4]

ciety,

The proceedings, in these assemblies, were highly offensive to ministry. As they consisted of individuals void of all hopes of rifing by interest or favour; and who, to a man, were inimical to the measures of government, they condemned them with a freedom of speech that knew no bounds. Often times too, those meetings were attended by persons of parts, who seized those opportunities of venting their difcontent at the system of the times, and of representing administration in the foulest colours, and imputing to them the most flagitious designs. Nor were there wanting, among the members of those focieties, though almost entirely composed of the commonest classes, individuals, who, though deficient in education, had received talents from nature, which frequently shone through coarse and vulgar language. The avowed aim of the divers institutions of this nature was to oppose government, and to bring about the two great objects, at this time, in general contemplation; a peace with France, and a reform in parliament. These two objects being incompatible with the views of ministry, the point at issue between these, and the various associations that were increasing in every part of the kingdom, was clearly this, that either the latter would overturn administration, or that administration would overturn them.

Prompted by this consideration, the principal heads of government had, it was rumoured, come to a determination, to take the first plaufible opportunity of putting an end to the meetings of these societies, which they represented as wholly made up of the lowest populace, ready to imbibe every notion offered to them by evil-defigning men, and to break out into the most dangerous excesses of sedition. Under the pretext of instructing them in their rights, the disaffected availed themselves of their ignorance, to misrepresent the conduct of government, and to excite them to hold it in hatred and contempt; but a circumstance, still more alarming, was, that among those who took such pains to inflame the passions of the multitude, there were emissaries from France, who, though natives of Great Britrin, or Ireland, had thrown off all attachment to their country, and were become its most violent and rancorous enemies. The danger accruing from fuch characters was obvious; the difficulty of detecting individuals connected with our foes, enabled them to assume the appearance of patriotism, and to delude, with facility, the majority of their hearers, into a persuasion that they spoke and acted from principle, and had no other intention, than to expose abuses, and to induce the people, at large, to affert their rights.

Such was the description, given by the adherents to government, of the numerous assemblies, and associations, that had been instituted in opposition to its measures. It was not on the other hand denied, that the outrages, still adopted in most of the popular meetings, was an object that called for suppression. warmest friends to the principles inculcated by them, did not deny the impropriety of attacking the ruling powers with such acrimony of speech, and prognosticated, that, through want of moderation in their invectives, these meetings exposed themselves to certain dissolution, as the powerful adversaries they were continually provoking, would certainly labour to filence them, and probably find the means of doing it.

the

To the agitation occasioned by political disputes, another was, at this period, superadded of a still more dangerous consequence. icarcity prevailed throughout the kingdom, and was weefully felt by the poorer fort, feveral of whom perished for want. The means of procuring fustenance were narrowed from various causes; but the discontented attributed this evil to the war; and the sufferers, through defect of employment, were ready enough to believe those who repreiented all the calamities that afflicted the nation, as proceeding chiefly, if not folely, from that cause. prepared them for the commission of those excesses, to which men are fo prone, when they find themselves aggrieved, and imagine they are punishing the authors of their grievances.

The state of the nation, from these various circumstances, appeared so critical, that it was judged necessary to call parliament together at an earlier period than usual. It met, accordingly, on the twenty-ninth of October, a day that will be long remembered, on account of the events that attended it, and of the confequences that followed them, and of which they were the immediate cause.

A report had been spread, that an immense multitude, of discontented people, had agreed to take this opportunity of manifesting their fentiments to the king in person. This, of course, excited the curiofity of the public, and the park was crowded in a manner unprecedent? ed fince the king's accession to the throne. In his way to the house of lords, which lay through the park, his coach was furrounded, on every fide, by persons of all descriptions, demanding peace, and the dismission of Mr. Pitt. Some voices were even heard exclaiming no king, and flones were thrown at the state-coach as it drew near to the Horse-guards. In passing through Palace-yard, one of the windows was broken, it was faid, by a bullet, discharged from an air-gun. These outrages were repeated on the king's return from the house, and he narrowly escaped the fury of the populace, in his way back from St. James's Palace to Buckingham House.

All reasonable people were deeply affected at this treatment of the king. They were duly sensible that it would produce effects highly disagreeable to the public, and, instead of answering the purposes proposed, by those who were so missed as to approve of it, that, on the contrary, it would tend to strengthen the hands of ministers, by enabling them to bring forward such restrictive measures, as would considerably abridge the freedom of speech and action, hitherto enjoyed by the people at large.

The

. The speech from the throne; was,in the mean time, allowed to be as well appropriated to the circumstances of the time, as any that had been delivered fince the commencement of the war. It mentioned the disappointment of the French in their attempts in Germany, and the internal difficulties under which they continued to labonr. Their present situation asforded a well-founded prefumption, that they would listen to equitable and moderate terms of peace. order to obtain such terms, it would be necessary to shew that Great Britain was able to maintain the contest, till such a peace ensued, as accorded with its dignity and interest. The other particulars of the speech referred to the preparations for a vigorous continuance of the war, the treaties concluded with foreign powers, the prosperous state of commerce, and the means of providing against the present scarcity.

Lord Dalkeith- moved the address, and was seconded by Mr. Stuart: thé latter gentleman dwelt chiefly on the exhausted situation of France, and the oppressive methods it was reduced to adopt for the raising of supplies. The situation of this country was the reverse: whatever money was demanded was instantly found, without oppressing the subject; the confidence of monied men in government keeping pace with all its exigencies. Much had been faid of the conquest of Holland by the French, but they were obviously indebted much more to fortunate casualties, than to their own prowefs, and could place little reliance on the attachment of the natives, who were now convinced of their imprudence, in trusting to the friendship of the French.

Mr. Sheridan was extremely fevere in the reply which he made on this occasion. Among other invectives, he reproached ministers for their unskilful management in the West Indies, where the force employed was totally inadequate to the objects proposed, and numbers of the men had been lost through negligence, and want of medical affistance, in that unwholesome climate. He accused ministers of defigning to restore despotism in France. He called upon them to act as Spain and Prussia had done, by treating with those persons whom the republican armies looked upon as entitled to their obedience. He advised ministers to beware of a connection with the house of Bour-It was through such connections that the Stuart's had been expelled. The Bourbons had invariably proved the enemies to Great Britain; and this enmity would revive, were they to be re-established on the throne of France. The rash, and fruitless, attempts to restore that family ought, therefore, to be totally relinquished, and government should declare itself willing to treat with the French republic.

He was replied to by Mr. Jenkinfon, with the many arguments, fo frequently repeated, in justification of ministerial measures. He added, that the retention of the United Provinces, by the French, rendered all treating with them inadmissible. It was necessary, therefore, to compel them to abandon this new conquelt, or to make such acquisitions as might counter-balance it, and induce them to give up the possession of that country. the members of the coalition acted with fidelity to the cause they had espoused, the French would, by this time,

time, have been forced to abadon their lofty pretentions.

In answer to this, the prospect of affairs was represented, by general Tarleton, as very diladvantage-The numerous army, with which the French had lately obliged the king of Spain to come into their own terms, would now be employed in the invation of Italy, while our efforts against the French possesfions, in the West Indies, would probably be frustrated, as they had been on the coast of France, through misconduct on our side, and the difficulty of the very attempt itself. It was vain to repeat exertions that had been so successively soiled. Ministers were no longer deserving of confidence; their evident incapacity required their immediate dismission, and the trial of new men, as well as of new measures.

He was followed by Mr. Fox, who inveighed, with great animation, against the assertions made by ministry, as fallacious and delusive. Instead of the flattering description they had given of the fituation of - this country, the fact was, that one hundred millions had been added to the national debt, and four millions a year to the standing taxes. In lieu of reducing the enemy within his former bounds, he was master of all the Austrian territories on the west of the Rhine; nor was there any well-grounded hope of our recovering them. He was preparing to invade Italy with a great and victorious army. The scarcity that afflicted the kingdom had been forctold; but ministers disdained to listen to the warning, though enforced from the most respectable quarter. The propriety of persisting in the war was argued from the distress to which France was reduced by the depreciation of its paper currency: but was this an argument proper to be adduced by men acquainted with the transactions of the American war, and who must be conscious of the futility of pecuniary calculations, when people were determined to fuffer every hardship that human nature could bear, and to try every expedient that necesfity could fuggest, rather than admit the idea of submission? It was time to abandon so hopeless a cause as that of the royal family of France. The opinions of so mighty a nation were not to be subdued by force of arms. When pressed to listen to pacific language, ministers alleged the incapacity of the French government to maintain the ulual relations of harmony between different states: but had such objections held good in the cause of Spain, Prussia, and even the king of Great Britain himself, in the quality of elector of Hanover. Had not this far-fetched and abfurd obstacle vanished before the reasonableness of putting an end to the calamities of war? It was ridiculous to infift upon danger from treating with the French, because they had subverted their former, and adopted a new constitution: the permanence of a treaty depending on its equitablenels, and correspondence, with the reciprocal interests of the contracting parties. become nugatory to talk of our allies: we had, indeed, mercenaries in our pay, whom we could only retain by excessive bribes, and who were, every moment, hefitating, whether to accept of them, or of the terms proffered by our enemies, to detach them from this country. Adverting to the scarcity soheavily complained of, Mr. Fox obferved, that war, and its fatal concomitants.

comitants, tended, undensably, to impede cultivation, and to desolate the countries where it was waged: the most fertile parts of Europe having lately been the continual scenes of this destructive war, the productions of the earth had been necessarily diminished, and it was unreasonable to deny that the war was, in a very considerable degree, the cause of a desiciency in the necessaries of life. He concluded by moving, that such conditions of peace should be offered, to the French, as would consist with the safety and dignity of Great Britain.

The ideas of peace and fecurity, were, in answer to Mr. Fox, reprefented by Mr. Pitt, as incompatible with the situation of this country respecting France. Every motive militated for a perseverance in the contest. The enemy felt his increating debility, and, notwithstanding his fuccesses in the field, betrayed a consciousness that his strength was materially diminished. Hence it was that he had latterly shown a dispofition to peace. But the interest of this country required a deliberate consideration of the state of France, in order to judge of the expediency of entering into negociations at the present moment. Such was the fall of the French paper in circulation, that it was now funk to one and a half for every hundred of nominal value. Seven hundred and twenty millions sterling had been sabricated and made current, and this enormous quantity was still on the increase. Was it credible that a nation, reduced to such straits, would be able to make head against the formidable enemies that were preparing to assail it with redoubled vigour, and whose situation was so much more advantageous in point of pecuniary resources? However fuccessful on their frontiers, through military efforts, and the chances of war, the system of the French was so radically heinous, that it could not last. Were the European powers' to reunite against them, they could no longer stand their ground. The interior parts of that large kingdom were in a state of the utmost wretchedness. Trade and commerce were annihilated, and industry found no occupation. Hence proceeded the facility with which the French recruited their armies, and the delperate spirit, that animated men, who could procure no fustenance but at the point of their fwords. But energies of this kind were not in their nature durable, and would certainly terminate in a short lapse of time. So great was the difficulty of procuring specie for the most urgent demands, that necessary articles, in kind, were given in payment, and people were glad to accept of any thing that bore the Would it not, femblance of pay. therefore, be the height of imprudence, after reducing them to fuch a fituation, to pals by so favourable an opportunity of reducing them still lower, and of securing, to ourfelves, the advantages refulting from their evident and undeniable depref-After adducing farther arguments, in vindication of his conduct, a division took place, when two hundred and forty voted for the address, and fifty-nine for the amendment, moved by Mr. Fox.

On the next day, which was the thirtieth of October, the address was moved, in the house of lords, by lord Mountedgecomb, who supported it with much the same reasonings that had been used in the house of commons. He was seconded by lord Walsingham, ly on the dangerous confequences of a precipitate peace, which would be throwing away the advantages we had gained by our perfeverance in this arduous contest, and yielding to delpondence, at a time when we ought to make the most of the difficulties our enemies had to contend with, and were not likely to furmount, if we continued to act with the resolution that had hitherto characterised our measures.

He

In reply to these affertions, it was observed by the duke of Bedford, that it was more confident with the dignity of a British parliament, to frame an address of its own, than to copy the speech of the minister, though delivered from the throne. His fentiments differed materially from the ministerial language he had heard. It represented the French as on the verge of ruin; but the truth of facts, opposed to the illusion of words, was that they were hitherto superior in the contest, notwithstanding the constant predictions of the minister and hispartifans, during the three preceding years, that they had not fufficient resources to prolong it another The duke adverted campaign. with great severity to the reiterated allegation, that the French government was incapable of fulfilling the cultomary duties and relations of amity and good understanding with other states. He reprobated with equal asperity the fruitless de-Itruction of men in the Well Indies, and the ill-fated expedition to the coast of France. These, and the other evils of the war, particularly the scarcity that afflicted the nation, he imputed to the milconduct and incapacity of ministers. It was therefore the duty of parliament to Waltingham, who dwelt particular- lay these grievances before the sovereign, and to supplicate him to relieve the fufferings of the nation, by contenting to a negociation for peace, which was the only effectual remedy for the many calamities under, which the people laboured, in consequence of this unfortunate war.

The observations of the duke of Bedford were warmly controverted by ford Grenville, who infifted that the fituation of this country was evidently superior to that of France in every point of view. Our luccelles at lea were far more conducive to the internal prosperity of the kingdom, than the dear-bought victories of the French had, or could ever prove to the people of France. The depreciation of the paper currency in that country, was, in his opinion, a circumstance to its detriment, and in our favour, that fully deferved the reiterated notice that had been taken of it. The most judicious of the French financiers were deeply sensible of the estects it would ultimately produce, and strongly deprecated the farther issue of any notes, and the withdrawing of no less than ten parts out of thirteen from circulation. With fuch glaring proofs of the pecuniary distresses of the enemy, was it prudent or reafonable to advile pacific mealures, when with a moderate degree of patience on our fide, he would probably be foon compelled to liften to more reasonable terms of peace, than the pride resulting from his late fuccesses would now permit him to accept. He concluded, by representing the failure of the expedition to the coast of France as occasioned by the treachery of those French corps, that had been too confidently relied upon.

He was replied to by the marquis of Lansdowne, who pointedly animadverted on the prosperous situation wherein ministers asserted the country flood at the prefent mo-What he had foretold was come to pass; our allies had deserted us, and our enemies were every The trite arguwhere victorious. ment of their ruined finances was still revived; but in what state were our own? were they inexhaustible? were they equal to the support of ourselves, together with the weight of those pretended friends who had taken our money, and converted it to purposes entirely foreign to those for which it was granted, and who were waiting with their accustomed avidity for fresh grants. Taxes could only be carried to a certain length: beyond which they would in this country, as in all others, become intolerable. But money alone was no fecurity for fuccess; sagacity was of far greater confequence. The ministerial projects and enterprizes displayed little of this essential requisite; failures and disappointments continually attended them. This however was not furprifing, as their attempts against the foe were glaringly marked with imprudence. The expedition to St. Domingo, for inflance, was an unpardonable act of temerity; here the French were insurmountable: it was the capital feat of their firength in the West Indies; of this the great lord Chatham was fo well convinced that he wifely forbore, even in the midst of his successes, to make it an object of attack. French, it was true, were straitened for money, but they had that which was better; they had good foldiers and excellent commanders; those they chiefly depended, and fortune had favoured them. Courage was inexhaustible, but wealth had its limits: and the example of France ought to warn us of the danger of stretching the pecuniary resources of the nation beyond their natural bearings. The war had tried them to fuch an extent, that it was time to cease the experiment how far they would go, and to make negociation take place of hostilities.

The earls of Mansfield and Darnley spoke in favour of the address, and the duke of Graston and the earl of Lauderdale against it. latter inveighed bitterly against minilters for the assurances they had given to the public in the former fessions, that such was the superior might of the confederacy, that France would be utterly unable to refist it; but how different the reality from the fair appearances. they had held out! defeat and defertion had characterifed those allies in whose name such losty promises had been made; and to complete the picture of the national calamities, we were now visited by a carcity, undeniably owing to the improvident conduct of those at the helm; yet ministers boldly asserted that our condition was improved, and that of the enemy worse than ever. But did not sacts give the strongest denial to those shameful affeverations? was not the enemy in possession of all we had conquered, and preparing for new conquests? was not the coalition broken and dissolved, and some of its principal members in treaties of peace and amity with the French? could any man of fense and integrity interpret fuch things as improvements in the fituation of this country? did they entitle us to expect that the French

French should be the first to sue for peace, as ministers presumptuously afferted?

The amendment brought forward by the duke of Bedford was strong-, ly opposed by earl Spencer, who contended that in fo extensive a war, waged in almost every part of the globe, it could not be expected that the mercantile shipping of this country would always escape the vigilance of an enemy, whose only and perpetual object at feat was depredation. It was indeed more furprising that his captures were so few, when it was confidered that we carried on nearly the whole trade of Europe. He gave a fatisfactory account of the naval transactions during the peceding feason, and made it appear that the mifchances which had befallen the commercial fleets were owing to unavoidable accidents, and not to misconduct. He justified the employment of Mr. Puissaye, as a perion through whose means the principal communication was kept up with France; where he headed a confiderably party of royalifts. ""

The duke of Norfolk spoke for the amendment, and the lord chancellor in opposition to it. The duke of Bedford in resuming that, subject recurred to the expressions used by lord Grenville, which were, that "in case the constitution now offered to the people of France, should be found likely to establish itself in such a form as to secure a government that might preserve the relations of peace and amity, his objections to treat with them would be entirely removed."

The substance of what had been spoken by lord Grenville, was confomable to the words taken down by the duke of Bedford; but the former declared himself of opinion, that it was not parliamentary to make the words of a peer, uttered in the course of the debate, a sormal ground of proposing or of recalling a motion. Hereon the duke confented to withdraw his amendment: refusing however his approbation to that part of the address which afferted an improvement in the situation of public affairs. The address was then finally moved, and carried in the affirmative.

CHAP. III.

A Proclamation offering a large pecuniary Reward for the Discovery of any Persons guilty of the recent Outrages against the Person of the King.—Conference between the Lords and Commans on this Subject.—A Bill for the Sasety and Preservation of the King's Person and Government.—Debates thereon in both Houses of Parliament.—A Bill for the Prevention of Seditions Meetings.—Debates thereon.—The two Bills under Discussion in Parliament occasion a general Alarm, and much Opposition without Doors.—In this Opposition the lead was taken by the Whig-Club.—Which was sollowed by the Corresponding Societies and other Associations.—As well as different Bodies legally incorporated.—The Ministry still persevere in their Measures.—Debates on the numerous Petitions against the two Bills now pending in Parliament.—General Indignation against the Principles and Objects of these.—The two Bills passed into Laws.

N the mean time the indignities A offered to the king were a fubject of univerfal discourse, and highly reprobated by the prudent and moderate, as procurfory of far greater evils than had hitherto been experienced by those who vented their discontent in this outrageous manner. On the last day of October, a proclamation was issued, offering a thousand pounds for the discovery of any person guilty of those outrages. On the fourth of November it was followed by another, wherein it was faid, that previously to the opening of parliament, multitudes had been called together by hand-bills and advertisements, who met in the vicinity of the metropolis, where inflammatory fpeeches were made, and divers means used to sow discontent and excite feditious proceedings. These meetings and discourses were followed three days after by the most daring insults to the king, by which his person had been imminently endangered. Rumours had also been spread, that assemblies were to be held by disassected people for illegal purposes. In consequence of those proceedings, it was enjoined by the proclamation to all magistrates, and well assected subjects, to exert themselves in preventing and suppressing all unlawful meetings, and the dissemination of seditious writings.

So great had been the alarm and indignation, created by the treatment of the king, that as soon as he had gone through the reading of his speech, and had left the house, it was immediately ordered to be cleared of all strangers, and a confultation held by the lords, in what manner to proceed upon so extraordinary an occasion. An address to the king was resolved upon, and a conference with the house of commons to request their concurrence therein. The majority agreed in this measure; but the marquis of Lansdowne accused the ministers of intending to leize this opportunity to work upon the passions and fears of the people, and to lead their representatives into concesfions derogatory to the public liberty, and debasing to their character, in order to confirm their own power at the expence of the constitution.

A conference with the commons was held accordingly in the course of the day, and witnesses were examined in relation to the outrages committed. Their evidence was communicated to the commons, and both houses unanimously concurred in the addresses proposed.

On the fixth of November, lord Grenville brought forward a bill, for better fecuring the king's person and government. The motive he alleged, was the necessity of preventing abuses similar to those that had taken place on the opening of the fession. He explicitly attributed them to the licentious language and maxims held forth in the audacious meetings, which had been to long fuffered, without due notice on the part of the legislature, but which were now arrived to such a degree of infolence, that they required im-He would remediate restriction. cur on this occasion, he said, to precedents framed in approved times, the reign of Elizabeth, and the commencement of the reign of Charles II. He entertained no doubt that the house coincided with his opinion, that a remedy ought instantly to be applied to the danger that threatened monarchy, in the attack fo daringly made on the king's person. In order more esfectually to obviate so great an evil, be would move the passing of a bill, Vol. XXXVIII.

which he produced, and which was entitled "an act for the fafety and. preservation of his majesty's person and government against treasonable and feditious practices and tempts."

The bill introduced by lord Grenville was represented by the earl of Lauderdale, as creating new crimes and treasons, in addition to those already contained in the criminal code of this country. tended materially to enlarge the laws respecting treason, and would effect an alarming alteration in the very nature and spirit of the con-There was no evidence stitution. that the infults offered to the king originated in the meetings of the people in the fields near Islington, or in any other places. medings had been remarkably peaceable, and those who harangued the crowds that reforted to them from all quarters of the metropolis, were particularly careful to warn them against all riotous proceedings, lest ministers should avail themselves of that pretext, to put an end to all assemblies of the people. So harsh a measure as that proposed had not therefore the least foundation in the unruly behaviour of those meetings, and were it to pass into a law, the liberty of conferring together, for long enjoyed by the English, and which they justly considered as their indubitable right, would be radically destroyed, and with it the firmest support of public freedom. The intent of ministers, in adopting so unprecedented a measure, was clearly to filence the complaints of the nation against a war that had involved it in fo many calamities, and which they were determined to carry on in defiance of the general inclination to peaces [C] vast acquisition of power, that would accrue to ministers from sucha law, would enable them to strain the words and actions of individuals into treasonable meanings, whenever they were inclined to exercise ' vengeance on those who were obnoxious to them. For these reafons, whoever valued the constitution of this country, must consider this bill "as one of the feverest and most dangerous to the rights and liberties of the people that had ever been introduced."

It was afferted in reply by lord Grenville, that it was owing to the firmnels of parliament, that the leditious principles imported from France, and industriously propagated in England, had been fuccefsfully refifted, and the conflitution protected against the malevolent designs of its When the prodomeitic enemies. vitions of the intended bill came into examination, the necessity of adopting it would be rendered manifest; nor would it prevent the people from holding legal meetings. None but evil-disposed persons could fuffer by the enacting of fuch a law.

In answer to these allegations, the duke of Bedford, after declaring his disapprobation of the bill, expressed in strong terms his persuafion, that while it still remained in their power to meet together, the people would every where attemble to testify their averseness to so glaring an infringement on their freedom, in so explicit and resolute a manner, that he could not think the house would consent to a bill so visibly repugnant to the feelings of Englishmen.

It was observed on this occasion by lord Radnor, that if in the old statutes of the reign of Edward III.

relating to treason, certain offences had been omitted that ought to be contidered and punished as such, they ought in fuch case to be declared and enacted to come within that meaning, in order to put men on their guard, and prevent them from committing what they would then know to be criminal. The question was then put, and carried for the printing of the bill.

On the tenth of November, the fecond reading of the bill was moved by lord Grenville, who obferved, that the feditious speeches and treasonable libels, circulated in the meeting that had been held near Copenhagen-house, three days only before the opening of the prefent fessions, had, in the opinion of all reflecting people, prompted that audacious spirit which insulted the person of the sovereign, and bid defiance to the legislature. The purpose of the bill, he said, was to protect the king from fimilar outrages, and to punish treasonous proceed-No punishments would be enacted by the bill for crimes not already acknowledged deferving of them; its fole intent was to include treasonable publications and discourses among them, as being no less criminal in their consequences. It was high treason to devise the king's death; to conspire against his person and government, as specified in the bill, amounted therefore to a degree of criminality that evidently merited the severest chastilement, whether such conspiracy confisted in levying civil war against him, or in encouraging foreign enemies, by publications, writings, or speeches. The provisions of the bill were conformable to the principles admitted in the acts of Elizabeth and Charles II. and were as fimilar as circumstances would permit. Difficulties having arisen in the construction of the laws relating to treason already in force, the intent of this bill was to explain and fix the meaning of those laws. would not prohibit any act or meeting, allowed to be legal, but only provide a more suitable punishment according to the degree of criminalty, than that ordained by the laws in force, as in various cases, notwithstanding criminalty was evidently proved, an apposite punishment had not been enacted. these grounds he moved the second reading of the bill.

It was acknowledged by the duke of Bedford, that every man ought, in duty, to abhor the treatment offered to the king, and earnessly desire the punishment of the guilty; but the bill before the house did not tend to procure more fafety to the person of the fovereign, than the laws already existing. There was no sufficient proof that the outrages committed were connected with the meetings to which they were attributed; and though ministers declared themdelves convinced of this connection, that was not fufficient to induce the house implicitly to coincide with their conviction. When the habeascorpus-act was suspended, a select committee was appointed to inveftigate the necessity of such a meafure, and the proceedings on that occasion gave them at least an appearance of deliberation; but the present measure required certainly much more confideration. not the temporary suspension of an act. It was the enacting of a law entirely new to the spirit of the constitution, and which was undeniably an abridgement of the liberty of the subject. Before to dangerous an innovation should be suffered to pass, parliament ought feriously to weigh its certain confequences against the mere allegations of its necessity. The pretence of the bill was the security of the king's person; but, were the laws in being any ways deficient in that respect? The duke then adverted to the times, from which the ministry had borrowed their present proceedings, the reigns of Elizabeth and Charles II. but was it not an infult to the understandings of Englishmen, to speak of such times as models fit to be copied; but even the precedents alluded to in those times would not authorife ministers to follow them. Those enacted in queen Elizabeth's reign were directed against the bulls issued by the Pope, and those that were adopted under Charles II. passed immediately after the restoration, when it was thought indispensible to protect him by the strongest fences against the fanatic rage of those who had opposed it.

The duke of Bedford was warmly seconded by the earl of Lauderdale, who represented the actual sufferings of the people, as the causes of the outrage offered to the king. It was not aftonishing, he said, that, among a hundred thousand individuals cafually affembled, forty or fifty of them should be prompted, by the feelings of distress, to express them in that outrageous manner. Oppressive and cruel laws were contrary to the disposition of the people of this country, and tended to render them averse to the government that framed them. The statutes of Edward III. were made at a time when the power of the crown was very great; yet the definition of what was to be accounted treason, was much clearer and precife than in the words of the prefent bill, which contained words and phrases, the meaning of which might be so construed as to create new crimes at the option of ministers. There were times, he laid, when refistance on the part of the people was justifiable, and even confidered as a duty, by great and well-known authorities. heads of the law should not therefore be entrusted with a discretionary power of extending, or interpreting the laws, as thereby the freedom of individuals could never be fecure; and as the fense of such a state of insecurity might justly rouse them to such exertions, for the recovery of their rights, as might throw the realm into the most fatal diforders.

[C2]finition

The statute of Edward III. was represented by lord Mansfield, in reply, as too lax and imperfect; it was not explanatory in various cases fimilar to that which was now under confideration; it was not fufficient therefore to prevent or to punish adequately delinquencies of this nature. The statute against treason in the reign of Elizabeth ferved as a precedent to that under queen Anne, and ought not to have been spoken of as unfit to be imitated. The laws enacted to the fame purpose under Charles II. were pointed at the republican party at that day, which, like the same party at the present, consisted of sworn enemies to monarchy, and of confequence to the fovereign that wore the crown: if it was deemed necesfary then to protect him from their fury, it was no less indispensible now, that principles of the most rebellious nature were openly circulated in defiance of all law and government. He justified the wording of the bill as sufficiently clear and intelligible, and was of opinion that seven years transportation was not too severe for the offence on which the bill inflicted it.

The duke of Norfolk took this occasion to assert, that to the principle of refistance the family of Brunswick owed its exaltation to the British throne; this principle ought therefore never to be forgotten by the friends of liberty. Though they should be careful not to misapply it, yet occasions might arile, as they had formerly arisen, when the application of it would become as necessary as at the periods to which he alluded. the evidence relating to the infult offered to the crown, he was perfuaded that measures might easily be adopted to prevent such outrages in future; but he thought himself bound to reject the bill produced by ministers in its present form, as invading the liberty of the subject in a variety of respects, and placing it too much at their difpolal.

After other peers had delivered their opinions on the subject, the duke of Bedford concluded it, by faying, that the reasonings against the bill had met with no adequate answers; they stood upon constitutional ground, and though they might be out voted, they could not be refuted. The bill added nothing to the personal safety of the king, but increased the power of the crown in a most unconstitutional degree; he would therefore oppose it, as a direct attack on the liberty of Englishmen. Should it unhappily pass into a law, it would prove so fatal an infringement on the confli-tution,

dency to disturb the peace of the kingdom." Mr. Fox hoped that the people would perceive the danger that threatened their freedom, and meet together, while it still remained lawful, to confult in what manner to preferve it from the infringement defigned in the bill proposed, and to express their detestation of it. He had seen and heard of revolutions, but experience had shewn they were not owing to the freedom of popular meetings, but to the tyranny exerted The French revoto enflave men. lution arose from ministerial oppressions, and the arbitrary proceedings of a despotic government that held the people in continual dread, and filenced their very fears by the terror of those punishments suspended over those who dared to utter their fentiments. If the people's complaints were groundless, the less they were noticed, the sooner they would cease, as false Jurmiles would very foon be difcovered and lose their effect; but, if well-founded, the efforts made to repress them must terminate, either in a bale minded submission of the people, or in a refistance fatal to their rulers as well as to themselves. Were the introduction of fuch a bill infifted on, he thought himself bound, previously to any farther discussion, to move for a call of the

Mr. Fox was supported by Mr. Stanley, who explicitly affirmed, that if the bill should pass, he should consider this country as on the eve of a revolution. He reminded ministers of the well-known affertion of Montesquieu, that a numerous increase of penal laws was a sure prognostication of a state's verging to its decline. This alone

appeared to him a sufficient motive for opposing so oppressive a bill. There existed laws adequate to the suppression of unlawful meetings; but the bill was, in fact, the severest libel on the good sense and attachment of Englishmen to their constitution; it represented them as insensible of its worth, incapable of enjoying liberty, and deserving, for that reason, to be deprived of it.

In answer to these arguments, sir William Pultency admonished the opposers of the bill to consider it impartially, before they described it in fuch odious colours. It by no means prevented free discussion, that of the press particularly, which he viewed as fully adequate to the support of that public spirit, and those popular maxims on which the constitution rested. The press was the strongest pillar of liberty, the latitude with which every political lubject was allowed to be treated: while this remained untouched, the public was in no danger of ever seeing the constitution subverted, and it was a privilege which he would never confent to part with; but it could not exist in a democracy any more than under an arbitrary government, nor, in truth, any government but a limited monarchy like our own. great danger of popular meetings was, that they heard only one fide of the question. Uninformed multitudes were easily deluded by the specious and inflammatory speeches of defigning perfors, who well knew, that in fuch meetings they would have little, or rather no contradiction, to encounter, and find their audience ready prepared to acquiesce in whatever they might think proper to deliver. [C4] in the act, the real family of the house." So alarming a restriction occasioned an immediate cry of hear him, on the opposite side, but Mr. Pitt persisted in his determination, and moved for leave to introduce a bill for the prevention of feditious meetings.

The motion being read, Mr. Fox began a long and animated fpeech, by declaring his abhorrence of the treatment offered to king, but professed himself no less offended at the discourse he had just heard. An attempt had been made to found the necessity of traming the bill proposed on the proceedings of the assemblies so highly reprobated by ministers, who contended that they struck at the existence of parliament itself; but if such were the real case, were not those who broached these rebellious tenets amenable to the law, and liable, on conviction, to condign punishment? There was no evidence that the late outrages, though justly complained of, originated in the meetings alluded to. Proclamations were no evidence; they were the fabrication of ministers, frequently to serve the worst purposes. Public discussions, on national subjects, were not only legal, but the very life of the English constitution; without these no liberty could subsist. The bill, it was faid, would not prevent, but only regulate them. "But attend, faid Mr. Fox, to the regulation; I thought, he continued, that I knew the rights of men, and the rights of Englishmen." A great cry arising of hear him: "What, faid he, do you suppose it a slip, and that the rights of man is a fentence without a meaning? have men no natural rights? if so, Englishmen's rights can have no existence. The rights of man, I say, are clear: man has natural rights, and he who denies it is ignorant of the basis of a free government: he is ignorant of the first principles of ours, for these rights are connected with the best parts of the history of our country." The people, Mr. Fox continued, had an inalienable right to deliberate on their grievances, and to demand redress from the legislature, but were forbidden by this bill to exercise these rights without the attendance of a magistrate, and previous notice to him of their intention. He was empowered to arrest any one prefent, whose words he might think proper to call feditious, and even to diffolve the meeting at his own pleasure. "Say then at once, Mr. Fox exclaimed, that a free constitution is no longer suitable to Conduct yourselves at once as the fenators of Denmark did: lay down your freedom, and acknowledge and accept of despotism, but do not mock the understandings and the feelings of mankind, by telling the world that you are free. Can a meeting, under fuch restrictions as the bill requires, be called a meeting of free people? is it possible to make the people of this country believe that the plan is any thing but a total annihilation of their liberty." After some strictures on the number of persons to whom the bill limited henceforth all meetings; " behold, pursued Mr. Fox, the state of a free Englishman; before he can discuss any topic which involves his liberty, or his rights, he is to fend to a magistrate, who is to attend the difcussion; that magistrate cannot prevent the meeting, but he can prevent their speaking, because he can allege that what is faid has a tendency to disturb the peace of the kingdom." Mr. Fox hoped that the people would perceive the danger that threatened their freedom, and meet together, while it still remained lawful, to confult in what manner to preferve it from the infringement defigned in the bill proposed, and to express their detestation of it. He had seen and heard of revolutions, but experience had shewn they were not owing to the freedom of popular meetings, but to the tyranny exerted to enflave men. The French revolution arose from ministerial oppressions, and the arbitrary proceedings of a despotic government that held the people in continual dread, and filenced their very fears by the terror of those punishments suspended over those who dared to utter their fentiments. If the people's complaints were groundless, the less they were noticed, the sooner they would cease, as false Jurmifes would very foon be discovered and lose their effect; but, if well-founded, the efforts made to repress them must terminate, either in a base minded submission of the people, or in a refistance fatal to their rulers as well as to themselves. Were the introduction of fuch a bill infifted on, he thought himself bound, previously to any farther discussion, to move for a call of the

Mr. Fox was supported by Mr. Stanley, who explicitly affirmed, that if the bill should pass, he should consider this country as on the eve of a revolution. He reminded ministers of the well-known assertion of Montesquieu, that a numerous increase of penal laws was a sure prognostication of a state's verging to its decline. This alone

appeared to him a sufficient motive for opposing so oppressive a bill. There existed laws adequate to the suppression of unlawful meetings; but the bill was, in fact, the severest libel on the good sense and attachment of Englishmen to their constitution; it represented them as insensible of its worth, incapable of enjoying liberty, and deserving, for that reason, to be deprived of it.

In answer to these arguments, sir William Pultency admonished the opposers of the bill to consider it impartially, before they described it in fuch odious colours. It by no means prevented free discussion, that of the press particularly, which he viewed as fully adequate to the support of that public spirit, and those popular maxims on which the constitution rested. The press was the strongest pillar of liberty, by the latitude with which every political subject was allowed to be treated: while this remained untouched, the public was in no danger of ever seeing the constitution subverted, and it was a privilege which he would never confent to part with; but it could not exist in a democracy any more than under an arbitrary government, nor, in truth, any government but a limited monarchy like our own. great danger of popular meetings was, that they heard only one fide of the question. Uninformed multitudes were easily deluded by the specious and inflammatory speeches of defigning perfors, who well knew, that in fuch meetings they would have little, or rather no contradiction, to encounter, and find their audience ready prepared to acquiesce in whatever they might think proper to deliver. [C4]

and circumstances called for regulations apposite to the dispositions of men at different periods. The preient temper of men was malked by precipitation and temerity, aught to be repressed accordingly. Proceedings that bordered on fedition ought certainly to be opposed with firmnels and diligence. Were magistrates, in such cases, to exceed their powers, they would certainly be called to a severe account, in a country where juries had shewn themselves so tenacious of the liberties of their fellow-subjects, and where the spirit of liberty animated, to manifestly, the legislature itself, as to induce it to declare those very juries competent judges whether a publication should be deemed a libel.

Mr. Halhed acknowledged the propriety of the first proclamation, offering an ample reward for the discovery of those who had insulted the king, but totally disapproved of that proclamation, in coincidence with which the bill had been brought into the house. The misbehaviour of the populace, he affirmed, proceeded from the lense of their feelings, and ought not, in equity, to be attributed to that meeting of the people, three days before, which had not exhibited the least sign of a riotous disposition, and had parted as peaceably as it had met. The miserable situation of the rioters, though not a justification, ought to weigh with those who reflected to what irregularities men might be driven, when they wanted bread. But the inveteracy of ministers to men who had opposed their measures, with such constancy and determination, was the real motive that prompted them in the formation of this bill. They proposed by it to infuse such terror into the focieties fo long obnoxious to them, as would deter them, at once, from ever daring to relume the profecution of their defigns, and thus to crush, at one blow, all attempts and ideas to effect any reform in parliament, or to remedy any of the abuses and grievances so long complained of by the nation at large.

The bill was opposed by Mr. Maurice Robinson, as separating the interests of the king from those of the people, and fetting them, as it were, in opposition to each other. The king, as father of his people, was in justice bound to treat them with paternal care, and not to permit ministers, on the pretext of consulting his personal dignity, to render their condition worse than ever it had been, by punishing the many for the offences of a few, hurried into the commission of their delinquencies by the pressures of hunger and want. No evidence had been produced to countenance the ministerial assertion, that the riots were caused by the popular assemblies, held in the vicinity of The clear and the metropolis. well-known purpose of these meetings was to petition for peace and reform, the endeavours to obtain which could not, by any legal construction, be deemed acts of sedi-

The bill was supported by Mr. alderman Lushington, as a measure, without which the person of the fovereign would be continually exposed to the infults of the vilest populace, who would become the more daring and outrageous when they faw that parliament passed by unnoticed the criminal insolence of which they had been guilty.

the

the bill to be rejected, the confequences would quickly prove how necessary it was for the preservation not only of the king but of every well-affected subject, as well as of the good order and peace of the community.

The attempt of ministry to enact fuch a law as that, purported by the bill, was represented by Mr. Curwen as the most flagicious innovation. Its direct and visible aim was to strip the subject of his most valuable privilege, that of speaking his mind on every matter relating to the public. Herein confisted, in fact, the very essence, not only of English, but of all real The movers of the bill had reason to wish themselves authorized to impose silence on the people, who had so much reason to be displeased at their conduct. The voice of that people had occafionally prevented them from profecuting their imprudent schemes, and constrained them to listen to disagrecable admonitions. folutely was he determined to prefer this voice to that of ministers, that he did not scruple to avow himself ready to support it at the risk of his property and his life. It appeared to him immaterial, whether the constitution fell by insurrection or by despotism. The bill proposed would effect it as certainly as any of the tumultuous proceedings of an enraged people. But this fatal bill was obvioully dictated by ministerial resentment at the opposition it had met with, both in and out of parliament. He did not, however, imagine, that, when the inimical intentions it difplayed against public liberty were duly perceived, the people of England would remain to heartless and supplies as not to result it with the vigour and spirit of their ancestors.

The principle of the bill was decidedly approved by Mr. Wilberforce, as tending to check the licentious disposition, among the common people, introduced by the doctrines imported from France. The ideas of that people, on religious as well as political matters, had lately made an alarming progress in this country, and it was the duty of the legislature to discourage them by all prudent and legal methods. He did not confider the bill as an invasion of public liberty, which, he was persuaded, would rather be strengthened, when popular discussions upon national affairs, and meetings called for that purpose, were duly regulated. He concluded, however, by acknowledging, that he fincerely wished there had been no occasion for fuch a bill, to which his affent was extorted by the necessity of choosing, among a variety of difficulties, that which appeared the least productive of evil. meetings of individuals, to debate upon national affairs, had certainly been attended with fuch improper freedoms, that they well deferved to be restrained. The only assembly, to which the people could refort with well-grounded confidence of meeting with friends to listen to their grievances and to redress them, was the house of commons; it was the shield of public liberty, it was truly a popular meeting, wherein the nation would alway find able and resolute desenders of its constitutional rights; it was a tribunal, before which its cause would be pleaded with efficacy, and where its complaints, when justly founded,

would never be refused an attentive

hearing.

Mr. Sheridan severely animadverted on the motives affigued by Mr. Wilberforce for supporting the bill. Instead of strengthening public liberty, it went directly to destroy it, by filencing every voice that might have heard in its defence. Ministers had boldly afferted, that one of the fortunate confequences of the war, was the eradication of French principles; but the fallehood of this affertion was evident, from their gradual increase throughout the multitude. The discussions of the people would now, he observed, be wholly at the disposal of ministerial dependants and agents, either to permit, or to forbid, as they thought proper, or, more probably, as they were directed. in fact, that liberty of speech, upon which Englishmen were wont to value themselves, they would hereafter hold barely upon sufferance. Were the bill to pass, he should confider the house of commons as no longer able to express the real fentiments of their constituents, who, when restrained, by terror, from the manifestation of their thoughts, would not have it in their power to lay them before their representatives, between whom, and themfelves, that free communication of ideas, on the national business, must cease, which constituted the principal basis of English liberty.

The bill was opposed also by Mr. Martin, who explicitly charged the minister with having seized the opportunity of the late riots, to raise an alarm throughout the nation, that might be converted to the support of the ruinous measures in which he was still resolved to persist. War, alone, was now become the object of ministers. They studied to propagate the like infatuation in every part of the country, which now exhibited endless scenes of military parade. The bill tended, as other ministerial measures, to introduce an arbitrary system of government. This was evidently the project which he must have formed, by accompanying it with so many restrictions on the personal freedom of individuals. There was a time, when the people of this land would not have borne such an audacious attempt on their liberties, nor any minister have dared to try the experiment.

Mr. Windham sharply contended in favour of the bill. He observed, that loud affeverations, of the loss of liberty, were heard from the oppofition in the house, and the popular meeting; a marked unanimity of fentiments subsisted between them. But it was time to suppress these fentiments, wherever they took occasion to manifest themselves, by punishing, with merited severity, their propagators and abettors. It was abfurd to affect an ignorance of the designs in agitation at the meetings of the commonalty, and of the focieties, that pretended to have no other object in view, than peace and reform. Their object was to concert the methods that were most likely to embarrass and subvert the prefent government, and to substitute another more confishent with their own notions, which were, in fact, those adopted in France. This was the country of their predilection, and to the arms and councils of which they notoriously wished every possibe success against the machinations of fo dangerous a party, existing in the bosom, as it were, of the nation, and firiting, with indesatigable efforts, to infule into it the

poilon

vember, the bill for the safety of the king's person, and government, was formally read, and produced long and spirited debates on its various clauses. The duke of Leeds moved, that, instead of the word, government, in the second clause, the words, consisting of king, lords, and commons, should be substituted, as defining, more specifically, the constitution, than the word, government.

an usurpation of national rights, and aristocracy an oppressive institution: they boldly gave the public to understand, that both these branches of the constitution ought to be lopped away, and democracy alone to remain; threatening, at the same time, to lose no opportunity of carrying those purposes into execution. Were such flagitious designs, said the lord chancellor, permitted to be avowed, in the undisquised, insult-

The lord chancellor, and lord Grenville, were of a different opinion; but lord Thurlow afferted the difficulty of defining, with exactness, the terms, government and constifution; the penalties enacted by the second clause appeared to him unduly fevere. Was it equitable to criminate a man for faying it was an abuse, that twenty acres of land, near Old Sarum, should send two members to parliament? The laws in existence were, in his judgement, amply sufficient to punish every crime, and misdemeanour, therein alluded to, without needing its assistance. He reprobated the lystem of adding new laws and penalties to those already enacted, and condemned the whole of this clause, together with the following one, by which ministers were empowered to profecute discretionally.

Much surprize was expressed by the lord chancellor, at the opinion delivered by lord Thurlow. The enormity of the offences, at which this clause was pointed, must, he said, be acknowledged by all who read the publications of the day: they were, in every sense, directed against the existence of the government, and the constitution: they explicitly told the people, that they were in no wise bound to submit to their rulers: that monarchy was aristocracy an oppressive institution: they boldly gave the public to understand, that both these branches of the constitution ought to be lopped away, and democracy alone to remain; threatening, at the same time, to lose no opportunity of carrying those purposes into execution. Were such flagitious designs, said the lord chancellor, permitted to be avowed, in the undifguited, infulting, manner they had to long been, to the aftonishment and indignation of the fenfible part of the public, what must become of the authority of the state, and of the safety of all its component members? Was it not evident, that all the evils which had afflicted this nation, in the last century, and all those experienced by France, at the present hour, would be renewed in this country, did not the legislature proceed with expedition and spirit to put a stop to the diffemination of those principles that tended, fo manifestly, to produce such calamities?

The lord chancellor was supported by lord Mansfield, and oppoled by lord Lauderdale, who noticed, that instead of encountering the arguments of lord Thurlow, he had described the pernicious ten-dency of the writings circulated by the democratic faction, which had not been denied, and which were no less deprecated by the parliamentary opposition to ministry, than by ministers themselves. But the fact was, that we lived in times, when the partiality to one branch of the constitution, was such, that revilers of the others might go unnoticed and unpunished, while that alone would be fenced and protected by clauses and penalties against those that spoke, or wrote, of it disre-· fpectfully.

would never be refused an attentive

hearing.

Mr. Sheridan feverely animadverted on the motives affigned by Mr. Wilberforce for supporting the bill. Instead of strengthening public liberty, it went directly to destroy it, by filencing every voice that might have heard in its defence. Ministers had boldly afferted, that one of the fortunate consequences of the war, was the eradication of French principles; but the falsehood of this affertion was evident, from their gradual increase throughout the multitude, The discussions of the people would now, he observed, be wholly at the disposal of ministerial dependants and agents, either to permit, or to forbid, as they thought proper, or, more probably, as they were directed. in fact, that liberty of speech, upon which Englishmen were wont to value themselves, they would hereafter hold barely upon sufferance. Were the bill to pass, he should confider the house of commons as no longer able to express the real fentiments of their constituents, who, when restrained, by terror, from the manifestation of their thoughts, would not have it in their power to lay them before their representatives, between whom, and themfelves, that free communication of ideas, on the national business, must cease, which constituted the principal basis of English liberty.

The bill was opposed also by Mr. Martin, who explicitly charged the minister with having seized the opportunity of the late riots, to raise an alarm throughout the nation, that might be converted to the support of the ruinous measures in which he was still resolved to persist. War, alone, was now become the object

pagate the like infatuation in every part of the country, which now exhibited endless scenes of military parade. The bill tended, as other ministerial measures, to introduce an arbitrary system of government. This was evidently the project which he must have formed, by accompanying it with so many restrictions on the personal freedom of individuals. There was a time, when the people of this land would not have borne such an audacious attempt on their liberties, nor any minister have dared to try the experiment dared to try the experiment.

Mr. Windham flarply contended in favour of the bill. He observed, that loud affeverations, of the loss of liberty, were heard from the opposition in the house, and the popular meeting; a marked unanimity of ientiments subsisted between them. But it was time to suppress these tentiments, wherever they took occafion to manifest themselves, by punishing, with merited severity, their propagators and abettors. It was abfurd to affect an ignorance of the defigns in agitation at the meetings of the commonalty, and of the focieties, that pretended to have no other object in view, than peace and reform. Their object was to concert the methods that were most likely to embarrass and subvert the present government, and to substitute another more confistent with their own notions, which were, in fact, those adopted in France. This was the country of their predilection, and to the arms and councils of which they notoriously wished every possibe success against the machinations of fo dangerous a party, existing in the bosom, as it were, of the nation, and striving, with indesatigable efforts, to insule into it the poison of their detestable opinions. Was it not the duty, as well as the interest, of the legislature, to arm itfelf with every precaution? Every man that valued his country, and its constitution, would, on this occafion, come forward, and join, with heart and hand, in its preservation from the calamities that must befall it, were the French, and their English adherents, to succeed in their defigns against this country. It was against those united enemies the present bill entirely militated: it was inimical to no Englishman that loved his country. In the actual circumstances of affairs, it was the only remedy applicable to the mifchiefs meditated by our foes abroad and at home, who, if not impeded in their plans, by the measures so judiciously proposed, would continue to carry them on, till it might become highly difficult to frustrate These plans were, undeniably to overturn every political institution differing from that established in France, which they boastingly aslerted was the only just and lawful one in Europe. He would alk every man of spirit and patriotism in that house, and in the whole nation, whether such presumption were supportable? Could it be deemed unjust to take up arms against so asfurning and arrogant a people, or to frame acts for the counter-acting of thole among ourselves, who were either so weak, or so wicked, as to abet them? The bill he allowed to be of a nature hitherto unknown, and new to the ideas of the pcople of this country; but extraordinary cases required extraordinary treatment. Enormities, uncommonly atrocious, must be encountered by laws adequately fevere. Such was the rage that acquated the enemies to government, that they had cire. culated opinions and fentiments tending, unequivocally, to affect the king's life. Could the legislature, confistently with its professed attachment to the fovereign, and, with its own reputation and dignity, pass by, unpunished, so execrable a violation of all principles on which the constitution of the land, and the peace of the public, was founded? ever any government fuffer individuals, of this character, openly to meet and confult together in the face of day? They had too long been tolerated, and it were a difgrace to parliament, and would argue pufillanimity, to allow them to meet any more. No fuch meetings were permitted by the new constitution lately adopted in France, however the rulers, in that country, might be ready to avail themselves of our imprudence, in having fo long, and fo unpardonably, connived at

poilon

In reply to these allegations, it, was observed, by Mr. Grav, that ministry, after exulting in the extinction of democratic principles, operated by their rigilance, now came forward with a bill, which they founded on the necessity of obviating the alarming progress they had made, and were daily making, throughout the nation: to which of these affertions were we to give If those principles were not extinguished, ministry had been deceived, or had endeavoured to deceive the public. If they were, in reality, extinguished, the bill they proposed to pass against them origipated from other motives; and those could be no other, than to filence the complaints of the people, enraged at their misconduct, and, chiefly, at their perfifting in it, notwithflanding withstanding the admonition of con-Stant experience, daily proving, in the face of Europe, that they had undertaken what was impracticable, or, at least, what they had not abilities to execute. The connection between the meetings, and the infult offered to the king, instead of being supported by the least evidence, was totally disproved by every circumstance. But ministers wanted a pretence for depriving the people of that privilege which they most dreaded, that of exposing their incapacity, their imprudence, or their evil defigns. Which of those imputations lay heaviest on ministry it was hard to decide; but the public, at large, loudly charged them with every one of them. The standing laws were of fufficient energy to reach and to punish conspiracy and sedition. To what end were additional ones to be enacted, unless to arm ministry with powers unknown to the constitution; and which, from their incompatibility with its nature, must unavoidably affect its destruction. It was, therefore, incumbent upon every friend to the constitution to oppose the bill with the firmest perseverance, as the pasfing of it would prove the furest step towards that uncontroulable fituation, wherein ministers had so long, and fo vifibly, made every effort to place themselves. After a few other remarks, on each fide of the question, the motion for bringing in the bill was carried by two hundred and fourteen against forty-

The propriety of a call of the house, previously to the decision of fo weighty a matter, being infifted on by Mr. Fox, he was told, by Mr. Dundas, that he had so little objection to his demand, that, unless it could be made apparent, that a plurality of the people sided with ministry on this occasion, the bill ought certainly not to pass, but he was fully fatisfied of its being generally approved. He had, he said, " been besieged in his office, for months past, with applications for fuch a bill." It was in concurrence with the defire of a great number of persons of weight with ministers, that they had been persuaded to bring it into parliament.

The speech of Mr. Dundas gave occasion to Mr. Sheridan of making fome pointed observations. Ministers, he said, had, in the first instance, grounded the necessity of the bill upon the outrageous behaviour of the populace; but the force of truth had now compelled them to acknowledge, however inadvertently, that this bill had long before been resolved upon: thus the professions of ministers were unworthy of credit, and their arguments stood upon no justifiable grounds; they made the first in defiance of truth, and they used the second with undeniable consciousness of their impropriety. Mr. Sheridan concluded by intimating that ministerial refentment, at their disappointment in the trial of Hardy, and the other members of the corresponding society, had, ever fince, been brooding over the means of obtaining re-

Mr. Maurice Robinson, and Mr. Grey, seconded the motion of Mr. Fox for a call of the house, before a final decision took place in a business of such universal concern to the nation: the motion was agreed to accordingly, and the call appointed for that day fortnight.

In a committee of the whole house of peers, on the eleventh of November, the bill for the safety of the king's person, and government, was formally read, and produced long and spirited debates on its vari-The duke of Leeds ous claules. moved, that, instead of the word, government, in the fecond clause, the words, confisting of king, lords, and commons, should be substituted, as defining, more specifically, the constitution, than the word, government.

The lord chancellor, and lord Grenville, were of a different opinion; but lord Thurlow afferted the difficulty of defining, with exactness, the terms, government and constitution; the penalties enacted by the second clause appeared to him unduly fevere. Was it equitable to criminate a man for faying it was an abuse, that twenty acres of land, near Old Sarum, should fend two members to parliament? The laws in existence were, in his judgement, amply sufficient to punish every crime, and misdemeanour, therein alluded to, without needing its assistance. He reprobated the fystem of adding new laws and penalties to those already enacted, and condemned the whole of this clause, together with the following one, by which ministers were empowered to profecute discretionally.

Much surprize was expressed by the lord chancellor, at the opinion delivered by lord Thurlow. enormity of the offences, at which this clause was pointed, must, he faid, be acknowledged by all who read the publications of the day: they were, in every fense, directed against the existence of the government, and the constitution: they explicitly told the people, that they were in no wife bound to submit clauses and penalties against those

an usurpation of national rights, and aristocracy an oppressive institution: they boldly gave the public to understand, that both these branches of the constitution ought to be lopped away, and democracy alone toremain; threatening, at the same time, to lose no opportunity of carrying those purposes into execution. Were such flagitious designs, said the lord chancellor, permitted to be avowed, in the undifguifed, infulting, manner they had to long been, to the aftonishment and indignation of the sensible part of the public, what must become of the authority of the state, and of the safety of all its component members? Was it not evident, that all the evils which had afflicted this nation, in the last century, and all those experienced by France, at the present hour, would be renewed in this country, did not the legislature proceed with expedition and spirit to put a stop to the differination of those principles that tended, fo manifestly, to produce fuch calamities?

The lord chancellor was supported by lord Mansfield, and oppoled by lord Lauderdale, who noticed, that instead of encountering the arguments of lord Thurlow, he had described the pernicious ten-dency of the writings circulated by the democratic faction, which had not been denied, and which were no less deprecated by the parliamentary opposition to ministry, than by ministers themselves. But the fact was, that we lived in times, when the partiality to one branch of the constitution, was such, that revilers of the others might go unnoticed and unpunished, while that alone would be fenced and protected by to their rulers; that monarchy was that spoke, or wrote, of it disrefpectfully.

specifully. The crown, for instance, might be represented as the power paramount to lords and commons, and totally; by right, independent of their controul; and the man that had made fuch an affeveration, might, instead of rebuke and punishment, meet with approbation and reward, while he, that dared to infinuate the contrary, would expose himself to the wrath of government. A time, indeed, might come, when the principles that feated the house of Brunswick on the British throne, might be reprobated; and held forth as proofs of difloyalty in those who maintained them; while those who pleaded the cause of the prorogative, would be abetted by the whole authority and strength of govern-

The duke of Bedford was particularly severe on that clause of the bill, which condemned, to a transportation for feven years, any perfon convicted of having offended, a fecond time, against the purport He thought the peof the bill. malty far exceeded the offence, and spoke, he said, as a man that felt himself liable to incur it. this occasion to condemn, in bitter terms, an expression that had fallen from bishop Horsley in the warmth of his antipathy to writings published on parliamentary reform. The bishop's reply to the duke's animadversions was, that the bill referred only to those seditious meetings where the discussion of laws was attempted by persons incompetent to judge of their propriety; nor did he know, "what the mass of the people, in any country, had to do with the laws, but to obey them."

An observation of this nature, drew, from the duke of Bedford, and the earl of Lauderdale, the utmost abhorrence that words could utter. The earl, in particular, as-firmed, that had a Turkith musti made such a declaration, in his presence, he should have imputed it to his ignorance; but to hear it from the mouth of a British prelate, excited his surprise no less than his indignation:

It may not be out of place to remark, that these words of the bishop did him considerable disservice; not only with the public, but with the ministerial party, who were abundantly sensible how much their cause was injured by such immoderate zeal, whether sincere or assected.

The bill, on the division; was carried by forty-five votes against three.

The third reading of the bill took place on the thirteenth of November, when the earl of Lauderdale proposed to extend the operation of it to Scotland, and to substitute it to the laws provided there against the like offences; observing, in support of his proposal, that more severity could not be requisite in Scotland, where the people were peaceably inclined, than in England, where a strong party was sormed against the existing government. But his proposal was immediately negatived.

The bill was again opposed, with great vigour and animation, by the duke of Bedford. He felt, he said, a solicitude and anxiety on this subject, that compelled him to call forth every exertion, of which he was capable, to bear witness of his abhorrence of that bill, which he considered as a mortal stab to the English constitution, given, in despite of every remonstrance, by a ministry, determined to strike at every thing that stood in the way of their proceedings, however the voice of the public might reprobate them, or experience prove them contrary to the welfare of the nation. It was become usual, he said, to draw precedents from France, by the supporters of ministerial mealures. He too could, with equal propriety, cite the example of that country in admonition to those who were become the rulers of this. What was it, he asked, that plunged France into those diforders and confusions that brought about the revolution? Surely not the field-meetings of the people, nor the discussions in private clubs, but the profligacy of a vicious court, and the licentious lives of the heads of the French nation, whole immoral characters lost them the esteem and respect of their countrymen; but the cause which principally accelerated that event was the iniquitous conduct of their government, and the corrupt subserviency of successive ministries to the wicked ambition of those who, unhappily for that kingdom, poffessed the confidence of weak sovereigns, and involved them in contests and wars that drained the refources of the nation, and reduced the people to misery. These, together with the intolerable oppreffions exercised upon the commonalty, excited that refentment of their wrongs, and that refolution to oppose tyranny, which produced the revolution. True it was, that the personal character of the moparch, on the British throne, was highly respectable and exemplary; but the perverseness of his ministers, in forcing his people into a war, neither of their choice nor to their interest, in lavishing their money for its profecution against their repeated wishes for its termination, in creating places and emoluments for the abettors of this ruinous system, and in adopting the severest and most unconstitutional measures against all who had the spirit to oppose them: these and other instances of obstinacy, arrogance, and contempt of the people's rights and interests, sully justified him in calling their conduct unconstitutional and corrupt.

3

The duke was answered by lord Grenville, who went over the fame grounds of arguments already urged in support of the bill. He did not deny the duke's affertions respecting the corruption of the French court and government previous to the revolution, the commencement of which had excited the expectation of the people of this country, that the French would benceforth enjoy the happiness of a constitution similar to their own. But the horrible events that enfued owed their caufes to the lawless principles maintained in the clubs and disorderly affociations that took place in that unhappy country, and filled it with murder and desolation. Clubs, it was well known, had been instituted in England, in imitation and upon the lame plan as those in France. Like them, they taught principles utterly subversive of ancient laws and confritutions, and inimical to the moral and religious order of things established for centuries. These were certainly most dangerous innovations, and tended evidently to throw this, and any country, into the most satal disor-They ought, therefore, to be refisted, and it would argue fear or imbicillity not to oppose them in the firmest and most effectual manner, by holding out the severest chastifements to those who endeavoured to disseminate principles of so pernicious and destructive a tendency.

It was with much animal vehemence infifted on by the earl of Lauderdale, that the fafety of ministers was much more consulted by this bill than that of the king. They were conscious, that if the people were suffered to meet together, their reiterated remonstrances could not fail, at last, to make fome impression to their prejudice. The privilege of discussing parliamentary transactions had never yet been called in question or thought dangerous. The more important the question brought before the legislature, the greater was the propensity as well as the interest of the public to examine and scrutinize it. If this privilege was allowed in matters of little importance, it ought, indubitably, to hold good in affairs of great and weighty concern to the nation. Ministers had tried how far the law would bear them out in their endeavours to establish the doctrine of constructive treason; but the attempt was so odious, that it failed; the present, however, was an attempt far more invidious, and he doubted not, that if the people of England viewed it in that light, they would exert themselves so powerfully as to frustrate it, notwithstanding all ministerial arts and efforts in its favour. The debate finally concluded by fixty-fix votes for the passing of the bill and seven against it. The duke of Bedford and the earls of Derby and Lauderdale entered a very folemn and spirited protest in opposition

In the house of commons, the same influence prevailed as in the house of lords. A message from these was brought to the commons, on the 16th of November, informing them, that they had passed the bill for the king's better fafety, and requesting their concurrence. Pitt, in consequence, moved its first reading, which was carried by one hundred and feventy votes. against twenty-fix; the second reading was voted by one hundred and fifty-one against twenty-five.

It being observed by lord Eardley, that a public meeting had been held on Sunday by persons who opposed the bill, a transaction which he looked upon as too much in the style of French principles, Mr. Sheridan observed, that the meeting was justified by its object. which was to prepare a hand-bill to dissuade the people from tumult and riot.

In conjunction with Mr. Fox, Mr. Grey, and Mr. Lambton, Mr. Sheridan proposed, that, previously to the discussion of the bill, a committee should be appointed to inquire into the particulars of the infult offered to the king. was opposed by ministry as difrespectful in the first stage of a bill, framed for the security of the sovereign, and laid before them by the house of lords; but Mr. Sheridan infifted, that no proofs had been adduced to authorize so harsh a measure, and that ministers had no right to bring forward such a bill without the clearest proofs of its necessity. Ministers were bound, in their own justification, to make it appear to the public that they acted ingenuously and upon fair grounds, the case being of such importance and magnitude, that no Juspicions suspicions ought to be against ministers for undue compliances, of which, if guilty, they should not be suffered to escape the punishment annexed to their responsibility. It was equally abfurd and unconstitutional to build any argument on the proclamations which were well known to be fabricated by ministers, and to deserve no more credit than the informers, reporters, and spies, employed by them in the profecution of those whom they were compelled to release for want of better evidence. The doctrine of king-killing had been imputed to the meeting at Copenhagenhouse; but, had such an imputation been founded, "profecutions" faid Mr. Sheridan, "must have taken place against the guilty, or else there must have been great neglect in the magistrates and the executive government;" but this being highly improbable, neither was the charge itself to be credited. these premises he moved, "that a committee should be appointed to inquire into the existence and extent of the danger of seditious meetings, as referred to in the king's proclamation."

name

The notoriety of the inflammatory and feditious language, spoken at the popular meetings, was such, answered Mr. Powis, that no other evidence could be needed to justify the strong measures in contemplation, which were evidently necesfary to check the turbulent difpofition that had gone forth. It did not amount to absolute treason, but it approached so nearly to it as to call not only for immediate reftriction but for adequate punishment; none being provided by any law in force, an act ought to be passed, both to restrain and punish the offenders in future. The proceed-Vol. XXXVIII.

ings of the various assemblies of the people, both in England and Scotland, were invariably conformable to thole of the clubs in France, and breathed a decided enmity to the constitution of this country.

Mr. Fox, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Curwen, and Mr. Jekyl, vigouroully supported the motion for an inquiry, and afferted the fufficiency of the existing laws for the suppression of conspiracies against the state, and that if they were not enforced the ministers themselves were to blame. Their representations of the state of things merited no attention; they were framed to deceive the public, and had neither truth nor even plaufibility; they contradicted each other in the most perceptible manner, and could not therefore be relied on; the loyalty of the people and their attachment to government were one day infifted upon, and the next they were charged with factiouthers and democratic principles. Was this a ftyle of speeking becoming men at the head of the nation, and who were bound, by the exaltedness of their fituation and the means of information it afforded, to be well acquainted with the temper of the nation, and ought therefore to be above the meanness of militepretenting it to the fovereign, or of endeavouring to conceal it from the legislature? Mr. Fox, on this occasion, expressed particular indignation at the behaviour of fome individuals employed by administration in the capacity of tpies. order to different the defigns of those they were commissioned to watch over, they affected to enter into their fentiments, and excited them to use words and to adopt propolals, far more reprehensible than they first intended. [D]

name could be affixed fufficiently. descriptive of so vile a character? He cited the case of those informers at the Old Bailey, who fall under this description, and he reminded the house of the cruel treatment of Mr. Walker, of Manchester, who. though liberated on the proof of perjury in his accuser, received however no compensation for his The depravity of milufferings. nisterial agents required indubitably to be checked, no less than the misdemeanours of those whose conduct they were employed to inspect. With forrow, faid Mr. Fox, he found himself compelled to bear witness to a melancholy truth, which was, that the freedom of the subject had been considerably abridged fince the commencement of the present reign. It was vain to deny the discontent of the people at the conduct of ministers: whereever popular meetings were held, this conduct was warmly and unanimously reprobated, as the cause of public calamities. He had, Mr. Fox faid, been strongly impressed with the reality of this persuasion throughout the generality, by the unanimous marks of approbation he had met with that very morning from an allembly in Westminster, confishing of thirty thousand individuals at least, whom he had addressed to the same intent for which he was now speaking to the house, and who were apparently, almost to a man, convinced that he spoke the sense of the nation at large.

The motion for an inquiry was opposed by Mr. Pitt and the attorney-general, as creating a delay that might be productive of much danger. The tranquillity of the public required the promptest meafures. The latter expressed great folicitude in vindicating his conduct at the late trials: he infifted on the propriety of the bill in question, which, he said would, at the worst, prove the adoption of a lesser evil, to prevent a greater. The present laws of the land were, in his opinion, inadequate to prevent the appearance of fuch publications as he had read, and of fuch meetings as had been held; new laws were of consequence necessary. The debate closed by twenty-two votes for Mr. Sheridan's motion, and one hundred and fixty-feven against it.

The second reading of the bill took place on the feventeenth of The liberty of speech November. was acknowledged by the folicitorgeneral to be a peculiar bleffing of the English constitution, but it had lately been perverted by ill-defigning men, in so glaring a manner, that the fafety of the state required it should be so regulated, as to prevent the mischiefs wherein they were aiming to render it instrumental. So far, in his judgement, were the provisions of the bill sufficiently restrictive, for the purpose of curbing the licentiousness of the people, that they demanded additional restraints on the intemperance of speech, daily increasing among the commonalty. The provisions enacted by the bill would, he afferted, confine the people within the falutary limits of lawful difand effectually obviate those riotous proceedings, that were the inevitable refult of affemblies held by the vulgar classes, without fome reftraint to keep them in order. The prefence of a magistrate would completely effect this, without entrenching on their privilege to meet for the purpose of laying their grievances before the legiflature, and petitioning for redrefs. While this right remained untouched, and was only subjected to regulations for its more beneficial exercise, it was unreasonable to complain of its being extinguished. The folicitor, speaking of the purity and independence of the British parliament, took this occasion to condemn the fystem adopted by the French, of allowing falaries to the representatives of the nation. Hence, he afferted, arose the calamities of France. It was a practice which had long been relinquished by this country, and which denoted the prudence of the people and He also advanced government. another maxim, which was, that revolutions were always the work of minorities: these usually consisted of spirited and active individuals, who were not deterred by difficulties, and whose resolution and perleverance rendered them indefatigable, and enabled them finally to overcome the majorities that opposed their designs. These majorities being composed of the peaceable and well-affected to government, though acting with loyalty, did not exert themselves with a fervour equal to that of their antagonists, whose vigour and animation in pursuing the objects for which they were contending, infpired them with exertions too violent to be refisted by men, who had only ordinary motives to influence them, while the others were prompted by that multiplicity of passions which actuate men who are striving to exalt themselves above others, and to expel them from the feat of power, in order to occupy it themselves. From the various reasonings that had been used in support of the bill, he inferred, that as the laws in force did not sufficiently apply to the numerous meetings and affociations, where the seditious principles complained of were encouraged, laws that might clearly be directed against them, ought of course to be enacted.

In reply to the folicitor-general, Mr. Erskine positively denied the bill's confistency with the principles of the British constitution. Neither in the reign of Charles II. nor of William III. nor in those that sollowed, though two of them were marked by 'rebellions, had the ministry dared to attempt such an infringement on the liberty of the subject; and yet the first of these reigns was immediately after those commotions that had brought a king to the scaffold: the second was noted for the obstinacy with which the adherents to a dethroned monarch exerted themselves in his cause, even to the attempting the very life of the prince upon the throne. In the height of the rebellion of 1745, no minister had ventured to fetter the nation in the manner proposed by the present bill. Even the very framers of it, when they fufpended the habeas-corpus-act, and were preparing their materials for the late trials, had abstained from this glaring invasion of national freedom. No plots had fince arisen, corroborated with any proofs, to arm ministers with a just pretence for so outrageous an attack on the constitution; the fundamentals of which were so materially affected by it, that the right to petition, on which the fecurity of the people against oppression essentially depended, would be utterly destroyed. The bill forbad all discussion that was not fanctioned by a magistrate. Did not fuch a clause empower migiftrates appointed by, and removable at the will of the crown, to be judges of the nature of the petitions of the people? was it presumable that fuch persons would permit a petition, militating against any ministerial measure, to be brought forward in a popular meeting? but whatever the favourers of absolute powers might advance in support of fuch a bill, it took away at once the right inherent in the people to refist a tyrannical government. The public meetings had been charged with speaking bold language; but there were occasions that warranted the boldest language. The people of England had inalienably the right to defend their liberties to the last extremity: fuch were the fentiments of the great lord Chatham, and fuch were his own. fituation would be defert that cause, and was determined never to die a flave. It was, in the mean time, with the heaviest concern, that he observed a circumstance pregnant with much calamity: this was the estrangement of the higher classes from the lower: this had been the radical cause of the evils that had befallen France. Previously to the revolution there were but two orders of fociety in that country, a haughty and domineering nobility, and a wretched oppressed multitude. Hence arose the resentments of the lower classes, who beheld themfelves tyrannifed over by a profligate court and government, to which, for that reason, they did not conceive themselves bound to submit. Arguing from this weighty precedent, Mr. Erskine warned the posfesfors of power, and the owners of great property in this country, to be ware of the fatal examples before them, and not to abet a law by which the people's liberties must necessarily be abrogated, and a spirit of revenge excited in them which would inevitably break forth foon or late. Compulsion, and the dread of force might induce them to fubmit awhile to their oppressors; but it would be a fullen submission, and though it might even last a few years, the remembrance of liberty would still furvive, and prompt them in an evil hour for the destroyers of their freedom, to resume it on some auspicious opportunity, and to take the most signal vengeance upon its enemies. roboration of his fentiments, Mr. Erskine referred to the speech of the chief justice, at the late trials for high treason at the Old Bailey. "Among the objects of the attention. of freemen, faid the chief justice, the principles of government, the constitutions of particular governments, and, above all, the constitution of the government under which they live, will naturally engage their attention, and provoke speculation. The power of communication of thoughts and opinions is the gift of God, and the freedom of it is the fource of all science, the first fruit, and the ultimate happiness of society; and therefore it feems to foblow, that human laws ought not to interpose, nay, cannot interpose to prevent the communication of fentiments and opinions in voluntary affemblies of men." So dangeroufly was the bill framed, that it was in the power of any one individual prefent at a meeting to occasion its diffolution, by fpeaking a few feditious words, that would instantly authorise the prefiding magistrate to put an end to it on that pretence; but was it not clear that for a paultry gratification, a hireling might be found to afford this pretence to a ministerial justice for executing the mandates of his employer? It was false that no law existed to prevent seditious proceedings: a magistrate had it always in his option to diffolve a disorderly affembly, when it was evidently accompanied by a breach of the peace; and by the riot-act he was explicitly empowered to disperse meetings held on unlawful purpoles. Mr. Erskine next proceeded to expose the change of Tentiments in the English on matters of government. Mr. Burke had, he faid, already taken notice of this alteration so long ago as the Ame-"We begin, his words rican war. were, to acquire the spirit of domination, and to lose the relish of honest equality: the principles of our forefathers become suspected to ns, because we see them animating the present opposition of their American descendants. The faults which grow out of the luxuriance of freedom, appear much more shocking to us than those vices which are generated from the rankness of servitude." Thus, said Mr. Erskine, neither the idea, nor the term of equality, were strangers to our language till lately, as some time fervers would infinuate. were wifer in the higher ranks to cherish this idea, than to affect a fecession from the commonalty, and to hold it beneath their dignity to make one common cause with them. The great ought feriously to weigh the consequences that must certainly enfue from a contest between them and the little. would indicate a spirit of disunion in this country, of which the French would not fail to avail themselves; far worle would be the conditions of a treaty with them in such a case, than if they found us united in disposition and interests. Mr. Erskine, reverting to the motives alleged in support of the bill, said, because, while the sovereign was going to parliament, at a time when a complication of calamities had rendered the poor desperate, a sew wretches were guilty of outrages to him, for which they might have been punished by ftatutes long existing, the whole nation is at once to lose the privilege on which it justly sets the highest value. statute enacted in the thirteenth of Charles II. was, he observed, the acknowledged precedent of the present bill: by the tenour of that statute one hundred thousand individuals might affemble in order to concert together a petition: the only prohibitions contained in that act, were, to hawke the petition about for those to sign, who might not know of the grievances complained of, and that more than ten persons thould present the petition to the king. It also empowered magistrates to interpole their authority when overt acts of tumult took place, and to require security against any breach of the peace; but no meeting nor communication of thoughts were forbidden: tumultuously petitioning was the only thing forbidden. How different, exclaimed Mr. Erskine, was this act from the bill now depending, which even prevented men from petitioning. He concluded by animadverting on the language once used by Mr. Pitt himself, on the fubject of parliamentary reform. "We had loft America, were the. minister's words, through the corruption of an unreformed parliament, and we should never have a wise and honourable administration, nor be freed from the evils of unnecessary war, nor the fatal effects of the funding fystem, till a radical reform was obtained." But the man who had spoken these true and memorable words was the fame who now charged with fedition all [D3]

| D2 |

those who thought and spoke as he had done, and who reprobated the measures, which, after he had so bitterly complained of them in that speech, he had now thought proper to adopt.

A reply was made to Mr. Erskine by Mr. Anstruther and lord Mornington. The first repeated the various arguments adduced in savour of the bill, and the second produced a variety of passages out of several publications, in order to prove its propriety. The latter was violently arraigned on this account by Mr. Sheridan.

The bill was defended by Mr. Dundas, who took occasion to obterve, that no member of that house had so frequently distinguished himself by appeals to the people as Mr. Fox, combating ministers in popular meetings one half of the day, and attacking them with equal fervour in parliament during the remainder. He had acted the fame part during the American war to as little purpose, however, as it would appear he had done at prefent. Mr. Dundas inveighed, with great asperty, against some particu-Jars in his political conduct and connections, which he exerted himself to describe in the most disadvantageous colours.

These reproaches drew a severe answer from Mr. Fox, who pointedly reminded him of the maxim held forth by his coadjutor Mr. Pitt, that popular harangues were "the best and most useful duty, which representatives in parliament could discharge to their constituents." In appealing to the public he had done no more than his duty, which enjoined him, whenever the conduct of ministers appeared in a questionable light to inform the people of his sentiments relating to their defigns. The bill he explicitly defined, a daring attempt to overthrow the fundamental principle on which the conftitution stood; the universal freedom of difcussion. With regard to the inefficacy of his remonstrances against the American war, he readily admitted that he had uniformly, and on all occasions, condemned that war from first to last, and that all his remonstrances against it, as the honourable gentlemen had justly observed, had been to no purpose. But whether this ought to be made matter of shame or reproach to himfelf, or of triumph to the honourable gentleman, he left the house, the world, and even the honourable gentleman, to judge.—A deep filence at thele words took place for a few moments on both fides of the house, and every eye was turned on Mr. Dundas, who, contrarily to his ulual manner, discovered, or at least was thought to discover, symptoms of discomposure. The debate closed with two hundred and thirteen votes for the fecond reading of the bill, and forty-three against it.

The second reading of the bill, for the better security of the king's person, was moved in the house of commons on the nineteenth of November; when the question being put, Mr. Fox opposed it on account of the absence of many members; but the motion passed by sixty-sour against twenty-two.

In the mean time, the public was no less occupied than parliament itself, in the discussion of the two bills pending in both houses. The novelty of the measures proposed, their inimical tendency to the long established usages of the nation, their direct aim at its liberty, and the daringness of ministers in bringing forward so undeniable an infringement of rights, that had been respected by all preceding administrations: these combined motives excited an alarm, which was felt in every part of the nation. people, without exception, cordially avowed their loyalty to the fovereign, but as vehemently protested against the passing of the two bills, as unconstitutional, and clearly subversive of the main foundation of English liberty, the right of the people to assemble and to communicate their fentiments' reciprocally upon those subjects, which they. thought necessary to bring into discussion, and to frame petitions upon them to the king and the legislature. The determinate steadiness perseverance of the public on this critical occasion was the more remarkable, that every effort was used by the ministerial party to prevent those popular exertions against the defigns in agitation; but these were viewed with fo fuspicious an eye, that every argument in their justification vanished before the discontent they feemed to have univerfally Numbers even of those excited. who did not disapprove the conduct of ministers in other respects, could not bring themselves to approve the two bills in contemplation, Those even who supported them, as requifite during the fermentation at prefent pervading all classes, frankly acknowledged them to be contrary. to the principles of the English constitution, the freedom of which, however, unless restrained by some temporary regulations, threatened to become licentiousness, and to precipitate the public into all those miseries that had been so woefully experienced by their unhappy neighbours, the French. But thole who thus maintained the necessity of these bills, pleaded only for a were indubitably an abridgement of national liberty, they ought, it was strongly afferted, to last no longer than the occasion that gave rife to them. When the disputes of the day, and the feuds they produced were at an end, they ought instantly to be repealed, and the sull exercise of the ancient liberties of the nation, to be restored without the least diminution upon any pretence. Thus argued the majority of those who savoured the bills.

fringement

· But a far superior majority would admit of them on no pretence whatever. They were, it was indignantly affirmed, the component parts of a system that began to unfold itself in too visible a manner not to be perceived, and too alarming a one not to be refisted by every real friend to the liberty of his This refistance was incountry. deed proposed by some to be carried to the most resolute extremity; and had not the immense power of govenment been prudently weighed, the proposal would, in the opinion of numbers, have been carried into execution: but though a refiftance of lo dangerous a nature gave way to the cool reflections of the better advited, every other species of opposition took place against the two bills in question. Meetings and confultations, both private and public, were held every where. and affociations were formed for the purpose of opposing them by every method not liable to the cognizance Never had there apof the law. peared, in the memory of the oldest man, so firm and decided a plurality of adversaries to the ministerial measures as on this occasion: the interest of the public seemed so deeply at stake, that individuals, not only of the decent, but of the [D4]

most vulgar professions, gave up a confiderable portion of their time. and occupations in attending the numerous meetings that were called in every part of the kingdom, to the professed intent of counteracting this attempt of the ministry.

The whig club, comprising not a few individuals of the first rank and property in the kingdom, led the way in this celebrated opposition. It met on the eleventh of November, and was prefided by the duke of Bedford. All the members of both houses of parliament belonging to the club attended on this occasion. The speeches and opinions delivered were uncommonly spirited and refolute. After mature deliberation, it was unanimously resolved, that they would give every aid to the civil magistrate in detecting, and bringing to punishment, the persons concerned in the daring attack made upon the king, in his passage to parliament, on the first day of the deffion: that, lamenting, as they did, thi nefarious act, they faw, with the utmost concern, that it had been used as a pretext for introducing into parliament a bill, striking at the liberty of the press, and the freedom of public discussion, in substance and effect destroying the right of the subject to petition the branches of the legislature for redress of grievances, and utterly subversive of the genuine principles of the constitution; and for proposing another measure, calculated to produce similar effects, by means still more exceptionable. That it was therefore highly expedient, that meetings of the people, in their respective districts, should be immediately called, to consider this important subject, and for the purpose of petitioning parliament against the said bill, or any other measure which nistry, who circulated clandestinely might tend to infringe the just rights of the people of Great Britain.

The corresponding society's numerous members, together with an immense multitude of their adherents and well-wishers, assembled on the twelfth of November, in the fields near Copenhagen-house. Here they folemnly denied all intentions of raising commotions, and disproved, by the strongest arguments they could adduce, the charge brought against them by ministry, of being concerned in the outrages committed against the king. framed three petitions, one to the king, and the two others to the lords and commons; stating them to be the unanimous petitions of nearly four hundred thousand British subjects, met together to communicate their fentiments, and express them freely, as authorifed to do by the bill of rights, on the measures of ministry, which tended to invade the liberties vested in them by the They supplicated, conflitution. therefore, the king to exert his royal authority, in the preservation of his people's rights, directly threatened by the two bills brought forward by his ministers; and they requested the two houses to interfere in behalf of the public, against the ministerial attempt to procure their passing.

The livery of London, the clectors of Westminster, and the freeholders of Middlefex, agreed to remonstrances and petitions of the like nature, and were followed by a number of counties, and almost every town of note in the kingdom. In the public meetings, held for those purposes, people were nearly unanimous in their opposition to the bills: but they were fecretly counteracted by the agents of mi-

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

counter-addresses in their favour. It was strongly afferted, at the time, that these were signed-by none but ministerial dependents, fuch as officers of the cultoms and excise, and military men. So great was the repugnance of the people at large afferted to have been, that the fignatures of youth at school was reforted to. But with all these exertions, the petitions, on the fide of the ministry, did not exceed fixtyfour fubicribed by about thirty thoufand individuals of the above description, while the addresses against the bills, amounted to near one hundred, and the subscribers to upwards of one hundred and thirty thousand.

Among those who signalized their adherence to ministry, were the members of the association, formed, with the countenance and aid of government, by Mr. Reeves, at the close of 1792, and the commencement of 1793, against republicans and levellers. They stood forward on this occasion, with extraordinary zeal, in support of the two bills, of which they expressed the highest approbation in the address which they prefented to the king. But, notwithstanding the disproportion of numbers against them, ministry persisted, with unremitting refolution, in carrying forward their defigns. However, opposed by the majority of the nation, they were fecure of a support in parliament, that would enable them to compais the point proposed. The popular opinions were, in the mean time, represented by those who argued in defence of the bills, as the mere ebulitions of party zeal, and dictated to the people by the leaders of parliamentary opposition, who hoped to excite fuch complaints and clamours against the conduct of government, as might deter it from the profecution of its plans. These, they asserted, were, in the opinion of the judicious and the more respectable part of the community, necessary for the internal tranquillity of the kingdom, and could only be disapproved by those sactious and disafsected people, who sought, for malicious purposes, to throw the country into consusion.

While the nation at large was thus agitated, its representatives were taken up with no less violent debates on the petitions now prelented to them from every quarter. That from the corresponding sqciety was laid before the house on the twenty-third of November, by Mr. Sturt, who warmly exculpated that fociety from the imputations of treason or sedition. In order to shew at the same time, the malevolent intentions of ministry, and its partizans, he produced a performance, attributed to Mr. Reeves, the framer and prefident of the affociations against republicans and levellers, wherein it was unequivocally maintained, "that the government of England was a monarchy; that the monarch was the ancient stock from which have sprung those goodly branches of the legislature, the lords and commons; that thefe, however, were still only branches, and that they might be lopped off, and the tree be a tree still, shorn indeed, of its honours, but not, like them, cast into the fire."

So flagrant a violation of the fundamental principles of the English conftitution, excited the indignation, not only of the opposition, but of many of the members friendly to ministers. The public loudly proclaimed it, a stab aimed at the vitals of the constitution, and loaded the author with the most opprobrious epithets. So univerfal was the detestation of the principles contained in this performance, that it was judged requisite, in order to appeafe the public, formally to vote it a libel on the constitution, and to direct the attorney-general to profecute the author. But so weak and faint was the profecution, in the opinion of the public, that they digmatised the prosecutors, as acting knowingly under the controll of directors, who certainly would not fuffer so valuable an instrument of their defigns, to fuffer an injury for having acquitted himself so much to their latisfaction.

On the twenty-fifth of Novemher, a motion was made, by Mr. Curwen, to postpone, one week, the discussion of the two bills. He spoke, with marked vehemence, against the bill for preventing feditious meetings, as tending, in its infallible effects, to change the whole conftitution. It was only in popular meetings, he observed, that the real fentiments of the people could be manifested; and these sentiments. thus freely expressed, had hitherto, though affectedly flighted by ministers, proved an effectual restraint on their power, and stemmed that torrent of corruption with which they endeavoured to overwhelm all refistance to their measures. this strongest, and almost only remaining, bulwark of the constitution to be demolifhed, all opposition must fall with it, both within, as well as without, the house; as the commons, when no longer supported, by the concurring voice of the people, would quickly experience a diminution of their own consequence, which, they must be conscious, rested entirely on the conseq uence of the people. Were these to be filenced, how could their representatives, consistently, presend to deliver the opinion of their con-The influence of the itituents? crown had, of late years, overweighed all the importance of the democratic part of the constitution, by depriving it of so alarming a proportion of its property, and annexing it to the arittocracy, through the creation of fuch a number of If the remaining friends to ' the democracy valued its existence, and confidered it as the only folid foundation of liberty, a truth not to be denied, they would rally around it, without delay, and exert their whole strength to preserve it from the ruin with which it was now menaced, more obviously, and more dangerously, than ever.

In the course of the memorable fpeech, which he made on this day, Mr. Curwen took occasion to bring, to the recollection of the house, an expression that had fallen, two days before, from Mr. Windham, in a debate on the bill, for fecuring the king's person against popular in-This gentleman, in answering a speech of Mr. Fox, had given him to understand, in explicit terms, that ministers were determined to exert a vigour beyond the law. fingular an expression did not fail to strike the whole house with asto-By the enemies to mininishment. stry, it was construed into an inadvertent avowal, that they were refolved to pay no regard to the laws in the execution of their projects, and would destroy such as stood in their way; and it was, in fact, blamed by both fides of the house, as equally imprudent, and intemperate.

Mr. Curwen's animadversions, on these words of Mr. Wyndham, were extremely spirited and severe. rebuked him, forcibly, for prefuming, that the many men of intrepidity, with which the parliament and nation abounded, would tamely permit him, and his affociates, to trample on their rights, and submit to become the passive instruments of their violation. Mr. Wyndham replied only by a smile. Mr. Curwen's motion was, nevertheless, outvoted by two hundred and sixty-nine against seventy.

On the twenty-seventh of November, the house went into a committee on the bill for preventing seditious meetings, when Mr. Fox, Mr. Grey, Mr. Whitbread, Mr. Lambton, and all the other members of the opposition, Mr. Sheridan excepted, left the house. Even Mr. Sheridan declared, that he did not remain, for the end of proposing any alterations in the bill. To do justice to the public, it ought, he said, to be negatived in every part of its contents.

The fecession of the minority underwent a variety of discussions on its propriety Many were, indeed, of opinion, that well knowing their presence could be no impediment to the passing of the bill, a formal fecession from an assembly, that was, in their judgement, resolved to destroy the liberty of the nation, would make a greater impression upon the public, than if they were to continue fitting in the house, and opposing the ministers, as usual, to no purpole. But many were of a different opinion, and thought, by their prefence and relistance, notwithstanding that the bills would have past, they must have been divested of much of the feverity with which they were accompanied, and that it became them, at all events, to dispute every inch of the ground, of which, by their retreat, the ministry would now become undisturbed possessions.

The bill was, of course, carried through the house without opposition, and without any other modifications than its supporters thought necessary to render it less odious to the public. It was proposed, by the folicitor-general, on reading the third clause against the meeting of more than fifty persons, that if twelve of them remained together, one hour after being ordered to disperse, it should be adjudged death, without benefit of clergy. But an amendment was moved, making it only punishable as a misdemeanour. This was feconded by Mr. Wilberforce, Mr. Stanley, Mr. Banks, and Sir W. Dolben: but the feverity of the folicitor-general prevailed, and his motion was carried by eighty votes against only thirteen; so completely was the house devoted to the inexorable disposition of the framers of this bill.

This was evinced no less glaringly, on discussing that clause which empowered the magistrate present at any popular meeting to disolve it immediately, should he be of opinion, that any subject brought forward were unlawful, or of a seditious tendency. The clause was confirmed, and the magistrate also authorized to seize and commit the person whom he judged guilty of such offence.

The last clause respected the duration of the bill. The solicitor-general, consistently with the severe system he had embraced, moved that it should last three years. Mr. Stanley endeavoured to reduce it to one, or at most to no more than two, but the majority continued immoveable in its compliance with the solicitor, and the term of three years was voted by forty-six against only two.

The

The bill was read a third time, according to form, on the third of December, and carried up to the house of lords on the same day.

The bill for the fecurity of the fovereign, was, on the thirtieth of November, taken into confideration by a committee of the whole house of commons, when Mr. Erskine opposed it by a variety of reasonings. He observed, that the bill diminished the liberty of the subject, without adding to the fafety of the king's perfon. It was a political maxim of long standing, that the best government was that which produced the greatest security with the sewest reitraints, and that the worst was that which increased penalties without undisputed evidence of their propriety. Another maxim, of equal force, was to preferve ancient laws in their primitive simplicity, till experience had proved them inadequate to their intended purposes. The statute of Edward III. concerning treason, had not been proved, but merely affertcd, to be unequal to the punishment of the outrages referred to in the two bills. In the opinion of one of the greatest luminaries of the law in this country, the lord-chief-justice Hale, that important statute had been enacted, as a remedy against former oppression, and to secure the subject against illegal prosecution. To compais, or even to imagine, the death of the king, was, by that statute, declared high treason: could words be found of stronger import, or of plainer meaning? To levy war against the king, or to grant comfort and protection to his enemies was, by that statute, made equally criminal; but it did not make_the compaffing to levy war against him high treason, because the legislators of that day did not confider a conspiracy to levy such a war as more than a mildemeanour; which, like many others, might not deserve material notice, while no clear and overt act could be adduced to prove it, and without which act no treatonable intentions could lawfully be prefumed. Mr. Erskine argued, from the decision of lord-chiefjustice Holt, that overt acts alone, properly established, ought to be admitted as proofs of guilt in trials for high treason. The bill in contemplation would, he explicitly affirmed, extend the crime of high treaton to such a multitude of trivial cases, that every petty misdemeanour might be brought within its construction. After a variety of other arguments had been used on both fides, the debate closed by two hundred and three votes, for the commitment of the bill, against forty.

On the third reading of this bill, the tenth of December, it was opposed in the same manner, and maintained with the fame reasonings as antecedently, but it passed, with all its clauses, after some ineffectual objections to that in particular, which enacted its duration till the demife of the king.

The bill to prevent seditious meetings was read a first time on the third of December, and its fecond reading took place on the ninth, when lord Grenville urged a multiplicity. of reasons in its favour. He declared it necessary for the preservation of the lives and property of individuals, and for the fecurity of the constitution, and liberties of the people, for which he alleged that the laws in being had not fusficiently provided.

The marquis of Lansdowne, and the earls of Moira and Derby, strenuoully opposed it. They particularly reprobated that clause which authorized the magistrate to commit to immediate imprisonment whomever they thought proper to charge with leditious language, or behaviour, in any popular meeting. This they afferted was to conflitute them, at once, judges and jury. The carl of Moira took pointed notice of an expression that had been used by the earl of Westmorland. The words of that nobleman were "fend the people to the loom and to the anvil, and there let them carn bread instead of wasting their time in feditious meetings." This, faid lord Moira, was degrading men below the condition affigned to them by the Almighty, who certainly could not have intended that any part of mankind should be doomed merely to work and cat like the beafts of They too were endowed the field. with the faculty of reasoning, and had certainly the right to use it.

Strong and cogent arguments were produced by lord Thurlow, to prove that the government of England could not, in justice to the faction, fetter it with new laws, merely to prevent the possible continuous, in this country, of those

, in this country, of those the importation of which, was apprehended. Afeg his general disapprore bill, he pointed out s from the provisions of harles II. and George 1. ditious proceedings. By nown by the name of the ple unlawfully affembled vever, expole themselves punishment, unless they n acting in a diforderly 'tuous manner during a er after the act had been iem. But, by the prefent ople were assembled, in orkes fill-A releting to the , and continued together, however peaceably to the number of twelve perfons, an hour after proclamation made, they were adjudged guilty of felony, without benefit of clergy; and the prefiding magistrate was authorized to use violence, even to death, in apprehending them. This clause was to unjutifiable, that he thought himfelf bound to oppose the bill, were it solely from this motive.

The lord chancellor made a long and elaborate reply to lord Thurlow's objections, without advancing, however, any thing new in support of the bill. The question for its going into a committee was carried by one hundred and nine votes against twenty-one.

The house of lords went, accordingly, into a committee upon the bill, on the eleventh of December, when the duke of Norfolk oppoted the clause extending the operation of the bill to three years, and moved that it should be limited to one. He was seconded by lords Scarborough, Darnley, Radnor, and Ronney. But the term of three years was supported by lords Grenville, Spencer, and Mulgrave, and voted by forty-tive to eight. On the sources of December, 1795, the bill was read a third time and finally passed.

No law, enacted by the British legislature, was ever received by the nation with such evident and general marks of ill will and disapprobation as these two cell brated bisis, on which the public bettowed the appellation of the Pitt and Grenville acts, in order to set a mark upon their authors, and hold them out to the odium of the people.

These two acts were considered the most restrictive of any that have been passed by an English parliament since the reigns of the Tudors; a samily of which the remembrance

membrance is far from being agreeable to the people of England; notwithstanding that it produced an Elizabeth, whose tyrannical disposition and maxims tarnished the lustre of all her great qualities. The despotism of that house was indignantly recalled to notice on this occasion, and the severity of the two acts in question, compared to the most arbitrary and oppressive proceedings of the sovereigns of England, previous to the commencement of the seventeenth century.

It was owned, at the fame time, by every candid mind, that if, on the one hand, there was danger to be apprehended, from measures tending to despotism, there was on the other, danger in allowing an unrestrained freedom of haranging the populace; a freedom that tended to anarchy and confusion. If, on the one hand, it be the nature of power to mount, with hafty steps, into the throne of despotism, it seems to be inseparable from liberty, on the other, to push its claims beyond a just and reasonable degree of freedom. Amidst a scarcity of grain; an accumulation of taxes; an unfuccessful. not to fay unnecessary, war; difficulties abroad; distresses at home: when the elements were froubled, and a storm to greatly threatened, filence was imposed on the ship's crew, and each man was fixed to his particular station.

The danger to be apprehended from the operation of those laws did not consist so much in any immediate restraint they might impose on a reasonable freedom of discussion, and presentation of petitions to the legislature, whether for the redress or the prevention of grievances, as in the tendency they had to enervate the spirit of liberty. The consequences of many, nay most, innovations are not prevented at first: otherwise they would, in many instances, be immediately refisted. By the time that pernicious innovations are perceived, custom and habit have rendered them less odious and intolerable. Precedents, growing into authorities, rife into absolute dominion, by flow degrees: by accessions and diftant encroachments, each of which, fingly confidered, feemed of little importance. The vanity of resistance at last breaks the spirit of the people, and disposes them to unre-Their political terved tubmission. importance being wholly gone, they are degraded, more and more, and subjected to greater and greater oppressions and insults.—It was obferved by many, even of those who were disposed to admit the temporary expediency of the two unpopular and odious acts, that the greater part by far of our new laws have a reference, either to public revenue or to the fecurity of the monarchical part of the constitution: and that few, of any extensive operation, are of the class that may be denominated popular and paternal.

The only alleviation that accompanied the two acts, was the time limited for their duration. This kept up the spirits and hopes of the people, that however their representatives might have been prevailed upon to suspend the exercise of those privileges, on which the national freedom depended, they were too wife, as well as too honest, to trust them in the hands of the executive power, any longer than they might be convinced was requisite for the fermentation of the times to subside, and for the people to revert to their former temper.

CHAP. III.

In the House of Commons, Regulations respecting the Sale of Flour, and the Making of Bread.—Motions by Mr. Lechmere and Mr. Whithread, respecting the Causes of the Scarcity of Wheaten Flour, and the Hardships incident to the Labouring Poor -Negatived.—Bill for Encouraging the Cultivation of Waste Lands .- Motions for the Support of the Land and Sea Service.—Strictures on the Conduct of Ministry in the War Department.— Replied to by Mr. Wyndham.—Debates on the Ercclion of Barracks.— A Statement of the Expences of 1796, amounting from twenty-feven to twenty-eight Millions sterling .- Debates concerning the Terms of the Loan. -Vote approving the Conduct of the Minister on this Subject.- New Taxes.—Debates thereon.—Message from the King, intimating his Difposition to enter into a Negociation with the present Government of France. —An Address moved, expressing the Readiness of the House to concur in fuch a Meafure.—Amendment thereon, moved by Mr. Sheridan.—This rejected, and the Address carried.—Motion for Peace, by Mr. Grey.— Negatived.

DURING these parliamentary and popular agitations, the houses were not unmindful of the critical state of the country, through the alarming scarcity of corn that had prevailed for some time. On the thirtieth of October, 1795, the second day of the session, Mr. Pitt moved, that the bill, allowing the importation of corn, duty free, should be extended to another year. He proposed at the same time several regulations relating to the sale of slour, and the making of bread.

It was observed by Mr. Lechmere, that no remedy could be applied to the security without investigating its causes; the principle of which he believed to be the monopoly of sarms,* and the jobbing in corn. Public granaries ought, he said, to be erected, where every one

It is one of the most pleasing as well as important tasks imposed on the journalist to record, with due approbation, and point out as much as possible, such public counsels and actions as originate in sound patriotism, and are eminently conducive to the public good. We wish that Mr. Lechmere's observation on the baneful effects of monopolization of land had met with more attention, and been made a subject of parliamentary inquiry and regulation. It is with great satisfaction that we notice the efforts of feeling and enlightened men, who, whether by speaking or writing, recommend attention to the labouring poor. Whoever peruses "Mr. Newte, of Tiverton's Tour in England and Scotland," and "An Essay on the Right of Property in Land," ascribed to professor Ogilvie, of Aberdeen, will be abundantly satisfied, that by a due encouragement of agriculture and the sisheries, which may be considered as a species of agriculture, sources of unsailing prosperity might be opened to this island, amidst all the possible veerings one might purchase without the therefore moved for an inquiry into intervention of corn-dealers. He the causes of the scarcity.

48] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

veerings of commerce, and even under progressive taxes. But the best stimulant to agriculture, according to the just observation and reasonings of the very worthy, as well as ingenious and well-informed authors just mentioned, that could possibly be devised, would be to invent some means, whereby the actual labourer might be animated with the hope of rifing to the fituation of an actual cultivator of the foil; fuch as restraints on the excessive monopolization of land; long, and in some cases perpetual leases; a judicious distribution of waste lands, and various contingencies improveable by the legislature in favour of the peasantry of this country, without injuring the great proprietors of land, but even promoting their interest in particular. That this is practiable has been experimentally proved by the duke of Bedford, the earl of Winchelsea, the earl of Suffolk, and other real patriots and benefactors to their country. There is a strong temptation to throw different farms into one, in the circumstance, that by this means the landlord avoids the expence of keeping up different farm-steads. order to counteract this inducement, to the excessive enlargement of farms, it was wisely enacted, in the reign of king Henry VIII. that the landlord should be at liberty to dispose of his lands as he pleased, but that he must nevertheless keep up in good repair all the ancient mansions and farm-steads. The preamble to this law, which has now unfortunately become obsolete, is worthy of serious attention at the present day.

It is a melancholy confideration, that the most prosperous career of arts, manusactures, and commerce, in any individual nation or empire, (not their migration into different countries,) carries in itself the seeds of corruption. Mechanical arts and manusactures, bringing together great crowds of people into sactories and great towns, confining their bodies to close and narrow spots, and their minds to a very sew ideas, are prejudicial to the health, the morals, and even the intellectual powers of a people. There is more strength, self-command, natural affection, and general knowledge and contrivance among tillers of the ground, pastoral tribes, and even savage nations; all of which conditions of men are accustomed to employ their cares, and to turn their hand to a vast variety of occupations.

While the wants of men are encreased by luxury, their natural resources are diminished: they become inactive and slothful, less and less fitted to bear up under hardships, and to adapt their labour to different exigencies and circumstances. They know but one art. The manusacture in which they are employed fluctuates with the artificial state of society, out of which it sprung. The enervated artisan is thrown on the mercy of the public. A similar ratio holds with regard to nations; each succeeding generation becomes more luxurious than the last; each becomes less capable of exertion. There is for a long time a curious struggle between the wants and exertions of men and of nations: but the exertions at last yield to the enervating influence of luxury, and hence we may say of the reign of the arts, what Saliust observes of political empire, "that it is in the course of things always transferred from the bad to the good." The immensity of our national debt, which imposes on the hand of industry the fetters of immoderate taxation, added to all these considerations, casts an air of melancholy over our political horizon.

This gloom, however is not a little brightened up by three circumstances.

First, there is yet a very large scope in this island for the extension and improvement of agriculture, which breeds a race of men innocent, healthy, and hardy.

Secondly, there is still a greater scope for the extension and improvement of our fisheries and navigation, which nourish a hardy race of mortals, maintaining great activity and virtue, amidst occasional excesses.

While any land remains to be cultivated, cultivation is better than manufactures, not only in respect of the health, happiness, and morals, of the people, but of public revenue. This reasoning is confirmed by the wise economy of America; by the economists of France, and the writings of their disciples in this and other countries. See particularly "The Essential Principles of the Wealth of Nations, illustrated in opposition to some False Doctrines of Dr. Adam Smith, and others."

After

After a long discussion of the causes of the scarcity, they were sound to be of so complicated a nature, that it proved difficult to remove them. A bill was however brought in to prohibit the manufacture of starch from wheat and other grain; to lower the duties on its importation, to prevent the distilling from it, and all obstructions to its free transportation through every part of the kingdom.

It appeared, in the mean time, from the information laid before the committee of inquiry into the high price of corn, that, with an exception to wheat, the harvest had been very productive: thus by mixing flour of different grains good bread might be made; a measure the more indifpensible, that from a variety of causes no sufficient supplies of corn could be expected from abroad; a bounty of twenty shillings was however agreed to for every quarter imported from the Mediterranean, until the importation amounted to three hundred thousand; a bounty of fifteen fhillings a quarter upon that from America, till it amounted to five hundred thousand; and five fhillings a quarter on Indian corn, till it amounted also to five hundred thousand.

The hardships incident to labourers, tradefmen, and manufacturers, were, on the twenty-feventh of November, brought before the confideration of the house by Mr. Whithread, who observed, that the highest extent of wages to hulbandmen was fixable by the magistrate, but not the lowest. On the ninth of December he brought in a bill to authorife justices of peace to regulate the price of labour at every quarter fession. Herein he was supported by Mr. Fox, Mr. Jekyll, Mr. Honeywood, and other mem-Vol. XXXVIII.

bers; and opposed by Mr. Burdon, Mr. Buxton, Mr. Vansittart, and Mr. Pitt. The latter was of opinion, that in a matter of this kind the operation of general principles ought to be attended to, preferably to uncertain and precarious remedies. It was dangerous to interfere, by regulations, in the intercouse between individuals, engaged in the various businessess of society. Many of the distresses complained of originated from the abuses that had crept into the execution of the laws relating to the poor, which required much amendment. They did not fufficiently discriminate between the unfortunate and the idle and diffipated. All application for relief should be founded upon unavoidable misfortune, and, if possible, the relief should consist of employment, which would not only benefit the individual applying, but the community itself, by an increase of labour and industry to the common He recommended the institution of friendly focieties, to relieve poor families proportionably to the number of their children, and the loan of small sums, payable in two or three years. After a laborious discussion of this subject Mr. Whitbread's motion was negatived, as well as that which had been made for the benefit of the actual labourers, or cultivators of the foil, by Mr. Lechmere.

The opinion of the public did not coincide with that of ministry. The wages of labourers and of workmen in all fituations ought, it was universally affirmed, to bear a due proportion to the price of the necessaries of life. This alone would prevent distress, and ultimately diminish the number of poor to be provided for according to law. In order to alleviate the wants of the indigent classes, numbers of the ministerial people agreed to diminish, by one-third, the use of wheaten bread in their-families; a bill also was brought in, by sir John Sinclair, to encourage the cultivation of waste lands, pursuant to the recommendation of the board of agriculture, established for that purpose, and the more effectually to obviate the evil

El

:laifes

After these consultations, in what manner to provide for the immediate exigences of the country, the next object that occurred in parliament was the maintenance of the fleets and armics, requisite for the continuance of the war. To this end, lord Arden moved, on the fourth of November, that one hundred and ten thousand seamen, including eighteen thousand marines, should be voted for the sea-service of the year 1796, and Mr. Wyndham moved also, that two hundred and seven

General Macleod took this occafion to censure heavily the conduct of administration, in passing by officers of experience, and promoting to rank and command youths and others who were not properly qualified for military employments. General Tarleton disapproved, at the same time, the statement of expences laid before the house, as highly exhorbitant: from the year 1792 to the close of 1794, they had increased, he said, from one to eleven millions.

thousand men should be employed for the fervice at land.

Ministers were particularly reprehended, by the former, for their inadvertence in not furnishing the troops, sent to the West Indies, with a sufficient quantity of medical stores, and for maintaining at present, without necessity, no less than a thousand staff-officers. The numbers to which the fencible cavalry amounted, he attributed to the ministerial plan of keeping the people in subjection and dread; the regular cavalry, he said, was equal to every just and proper purpose, without loading the public with so much additional expence.

In answer to these, and other strictures, Mr. Wyndliam stated, that men of distinction and oppulence had been preferred to commands, in their respective counties, as more able to procure levies than others. The expences accompanying the fencible cavalry were confiderably less than those of the regulars, as. neither bounties nor half-pay were allowed them. An ample supply of medicines had been dispatched to the West Indies, but had unhappily fallen into the enemy's hands; an accident which was remedied with all possible diligence. The great expences of the war had necessarily been augmented, proportionably to the greatness of the national exertions; and the number of staff-officers. did not exceed that which was wanted for the duly conducting of the bufiness of army and military affairs. To an observation made by general Smith, that the quantity of subalterns had been out of all proportion in fome regiments, Mr. Wyndham replied, that the men being raised in the heat of the campaign, it had been found impracticable to provide a timely supply " in the place of those that had been killed off."

This particular expression was taken up with violent acrimony both in and out of parliament: it was represented as denoting no sense of feeling, in the speaker, for the calamities of war, and the loss of so many individuals sallen in battle. This and some other expressions, uttered

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

uttered in the warmth of debate, and produced probably by hurry and inadvertence, and not from a defect of humanity, however, drew upon this gentleman a heavy load of centure, and rendered him extremely unpopular.

His statements, on this occasion, were warmly controverted by thole in answer to whom he had made them. Members of parliament had, it was afferted, been placed at the head of the new raised regiments: this was creating a patronage of the most corrupt and unwarrantable kind, as many of the officers thus promoted were shamefully ignorant of their duty, and yet were allowed unconscionable profits. A variety of other objections was brought forward by the opposition, and replied to by ministry: after which, the resolutions relating to the fleet and army, moved by lord Arden and Mr. Wyndham, were put and carried.

Other strictures were then passed upon the conduct of ministry, in other particulars: that concerning the erection of barracks underwent the most remarkable centure. expensive and unconstitutional nature of this measure was afferted by Mr. Fox, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Whitbread, Mr. Courtney, and others; and its propriety no less vehemently supported by Mr. Pitt, Mr. Wyndham, and Mr. Dundas. In the course of this discussion, Mr. Whitbread moved to omit, in the estimate of necessary expences, the fums appropriated to the confiruction of barracks: but the motion was negatived, by feventy-four to twenty-eight.

This business was not resumed till the eight of April following, when general Smith moved for a committee to inquire into the expenditure arising from the barracks, and upon what authority the erection was founded: he affirmed, that one million four hundred thousand pounds had been employed upon them. The patronage accruing from them to ministry was the appointment of no less than fifty-fix officers for their management, with confiderable falaries. The number of barracks already confiructed were fufficient for the reception of thirtyfour thousand men, which were more than a peace-establishment by fourteen thouland. Did not such a measure tend to impress the clearest and strongest conviction upon the public, that ministry were determined, in the words of one of their principal members, to exert a vigour beyond the law?

Mr. Wyndham admitted the expences of the barracks to be great, but the importance of the object in view required them: their intent was to exonerate publicans, and people of that description, from the heavy charges to which they had fo long and fo unreasonably been liable, and of which they had so often and so justly complained. The necessity of procuring public-houses for the reception of foldiers on their march occasioned fundry inconveniencies, which these barracks were calculated to remove: they would afford thelter, and a temporary stay, when necessary, without producing trouble and expence to innkeepers, others, who kept places of accom modation on the roads. event of a peace, they need not contain any larger numbers than would be requifite for the usual establishment; but while the war lasted, the indispends le necessity of holding men in readiness, in such critical times as the present, and the lesser expence at which they were kept together, with much more comfort and convenience to themselves, and utility to the public, than by the former method of quartering them, were, he presumed, sufficient arguments in favour of barracks; nor would he omit the propriety of removing soldiers from the danger of being contaminated by the seditious disposition of the lower classes.

[E2]

It was observed, in answer, hy Mr. Taylor, that a total separation of the soldiery from the commonalty, were it practicable, would obliterate that union of character which rendered military men citizens as well as soldiers, and endeared both classes to each other: when consciously united in one common interest, their reciprocal attachment would produce the most signal advantages, through the spirit and considence they would act with, and the continual proofs of good will that would mutually arise between them.

Mr. Fox argued, with uncommon strength, against the system of barracks, as tending directly to inculcate the blindest and most abject obedience in the foldiery. plicitly afferted, that unconditional obedience was neither the duty of an English citizen, or an English foldier: the constitution of England refted on the mixture of citizens and foldiers in all the habits and occurrences of life; to part them from each other, in the manner proposed, by lodging the troops in harracks, would be to divide them into diftinct people, who, from various causes, would quickly become inimical to each other. True it was, that barracks had been erected in England before this time, but they were few and inconfiderable; not constructed, as now, with the manifest intention of secluding the whole army from the nation, and cutting off, as much as in ministers lay, all intercourse between soldiers and citizens. To dissolve a connection, so indispensible in a land of liberty for its preservation, was a deed wholly unjustifiable, and shewed, without the necessity of any farther argument, the real designs in agitation.

These affertions were, by Mr. Pitt, represented as totally unfounded. The fystem of barracks was neither new nor unconstitutional; it was of long standing, and only of late enlarged, on the mere prine ciple of placing the troops upon a more convenient and uleful footing. Parliament had given it a decided function; it had been carried on with all due diligence and economy, and could produce nothing that did not appear beneficial: foldiers would be better quartered, at a smaller expence, and kept in more order without confining them from fociety in any cases but those of confusion and tumult.

Mr. W. Smith, and Mr. Courtenay, spoke in very adverse terms of the case in question: the former reprobated the system of barracks, as incompatible with the genius and constitution of the people of this country, and sit only to prove that was despotically governed. The latter in a strain of humour and pleasantry, exposed all those circumstances relating to the business, which could render it odious under the appearance of ridicule.

Mr. Grey censured the system with great severity. He demanded whether an addition of thirty-sour thousand men was to be made to the peace establishment in suture, as the old barracks would contain twenty twenty thousand, and the new ones the preceding number. If the barracks were not to be filled in this manner, why had such an expence been incurred to construct so many?

J

He was answered by Mr. Steele, that, notwithstanding the exaggerations of those who affected such an apprehension of barracks, the whole of them, when completely finished, would not contain more than twenty-five thousand men; a number so little above the usual complement of the army, that no man could, with the least degree of ingenuousness, insinuate that ministers harboured finister designs. The money, stated to have been laid out on the barracks, was alleged by the oppofition, to be unfairly accounted for: but Mr. Pitt replied, that no flaws would be found in the statement of the expence on due examination. The debate concluded with a division of ninety-eight for ministry, and twenty-four against it.

On the feventh of December, Mr. Pitt laid before the house an estimate of the expences of the approaching year. They amounted to twenty-seven millions five hundred thousand pounds, including a loan of eighteen millions. He gave a very favourable account of many branches of the revenue, particularly of the permanent taxes, which he stated to be adequately productive to the extent of the fums expected from them. The interest of the loan would amount to eleven hundred and twelve thousand pounds, for the payment of which, he would propole the following taxes; two per cent on all legacies above a certain extent, to the first collaterals; three per cent. on first cousins; sour per cent, on second cousins; and six per cent. on the remoter relations, Calculating the and strangers. landed and personal property of the kingdom, as it stood at the commencement of the present century, previously to its union with Scotland, its value amounted to thirteen hundred millions, of which fix hundred were in land, and seven hundred personal. From authentic documents it appeared, that about one-third of the latter was devised by will to collateral branches, and of the former about one-fifth. The probable estimate might be formed, by taking the fourth as a medium, which would give a tax of two hundred and ninety four thousand pounds. From this fum, by deducting the standing tax upon legacies; two hundred and fifty thousand pounds would remain. He next proposed ten per cent. on the already affeffed taxes, which would produce one hundred and forty thoufand pounds: one pound upon every horse kept for pleasure, which would yield one hundred and fixteen thouland pounds: and two shillings on every horse kept for the purposes of labour, which he computed at one hundred thouland pounds: an additional tax on tobacco would produce one hundred and feventy thouland: and another on printed linens would bring one hundred and thirty-five thousand: a duty upon falt thirty thousand: and the reduction of the drawback on fugar, one hundred and eighty thousand. The total of these various sums would amount to eleven hundred and twenty leven thouland pounds, which was more than fufficient for the proposed interest.

Mr. Pitt took particular notice, at the same time, that in the fourth year of a most expensive war, such was the prosperity and opulence of this country, that it was able to command the immense loan in question, at no more than four and a half per cent. He also assigned the reason for his raising it without having recourse to his usual method. of competition, which was, that the persons concerned in procuring the last loan, had not yet received the latter instalments due to them upon it. He had, however, so far consulted the good of the public, that the interests to them, would not prove more than four pounds five shillings and three pence in the hundred.

was

[E 3]

This affertion gave birth to a long and tedious discussion, uninteresting to those who were unconcerned in the business itself, or who did not think themselves authorised to call him to a strict account for his proceedings in this matter.

In reply to the elaborate justification of his conduct, made by Mr. Pitt on this critical occasion, the principal speakers in the opposition exerted themselves to refute his arguments and calculations, with uncommon acuteness and fervour. They controverted his various positions and inferences, and laboured with the utmost industry to establish their own. The point, at which they chiefly aimed, was to prove that he had acted erroneously, and even difingenuously, in putting the business of the loan into the hands of Mr. Boyd, to whom it had been given the preceding year, and that no substantial and valid reason subfifted for fuch a conduct, which they branded with many odious epithets, and represented in many of the circumstances attending it, as unwarrantable and corrupt.

In the course of the fatiguing and acrimonious debates upon this fubject, severe animadvertion was pasfed by Mr. Fox upon the affair of the Hamburgh bills. They had, it seems, been drawn not really in London, but ficilt oully at the former place, by Mr. Boyd, to the amount of two millions five hundred thoufand pounds, on treasury-bills, for the service of government. Fox established on this transaction, which he described as highly uncreditable, the preference and partiality, which he represented as having manifelly been exercised by the minister in favour of that gentleman.

After altercations, marked with much bitterness and animosity, the question was decided in favour of the minister, by a majority that passed a vote of entire approbation, relating to his conduct on the business of the loan; and, on the twenty-ninth of the ensuing February, the affair of the Hamburgh bills was also approved of, by putting a negative on the resolutions moved against them.

The motives alleged in his justification, by his friends and adherents, were, the very difficult circumstances that urged him to have recourse to the assistance of these bills, and the confequent propriety of acknowledging fo important a The public in general was duly fensible of the ministerial embaraliments respecting both these cases, and was willing to suspend its feverity on the transactions themlelves, in confideration of the causes that produced them, and that left the minister a choice of difficulties, from which he found no readier a method to extricate himfelf.

While

While these matters were pending, the vote of credit for the fum of two millions and a half, brought in and already twice read, was stopped in its progress by Mr. Grey, who contended, from what had passed, that the house ought to be on its guard against the appropriation of money at the will of the minister. A vote of credit, he oblerved, was to enable the executive power to meet expendes untoreteen and unprovided for, but not to discharge debts already contracted, without the fanction of parliament.

Mr. Pitt replied, that the vote of credit having been specified in the estimate of ways and means, its application was subject to the investigation of parliament. It constituted a fund ready at hand for exigencies, without encumbering the expences of the ensuing year.

Mr. Fox observed, that the money voted by a bill of credit was not issuable till an exigency appeared, whereas the money voted upon estimate of the expence was immediately provided. Votes of credit were not intended to supply the desiciency of estimates, but merely to answer unforeseen occurrences in the absence of parliament. The bill, after some additional remarks of the same nature by Mr. Sheridan, went through a third reading, by a majority of seventy-seven.

It underwent a similar opposition in the house of lords, where the duke of Graston and the earl of Lauderdale used much the same arguments against it as in the commons, and took occasion, at the same time, to express their disapprobation of the Hamburgh bills, but it passed in the affirmative.

Some of the new taxes were also opposed in the lower house. That upon tobacco was represented as bearing too heavily upon the lower chiles. Through general Tarleton's interference, the foldiers on board were allowed to be supplied with it, duty free. horle-tax was allo taken off those employed in the yeomanry cavalry. Free-holders, from ten to fifteen pounds a year, and people holding farms of feventy, or freeholds of thirty-five pounds a year, were also exempted from it; and the tax on printed cottons was intirely given up.

The duty imposed on legacies met with a strong opposition. It was objected to by Mr. Newnham, as of too inquisitorial a tendency into the affairs of samilies, and particularly of commercial people; it would prejudice illegitimate children, saithful domestics, and old friends. He was ably seconded by Mr. Fox, who enlarged considerably on all his arguments.

They were replied to by the folicitor-general, who observed, that the principle of the bill was founded on a law of the same import already in force. The tax took nothing from actual possession, and its bringing private property to light was no valid objection, as private credit would thereby be confirmed.

The tax was strongly supported by the attorney-general. He particularly noticed the case of illegitimate children, who, instead of being injured by it, were, if acknowledged by the testator, intitled to the exception allowed by the act to lineal descent. The bill, after some farther discussion, passed by a majority of seventy-eight.

[E4] In

In the house of lords it was vehemently opposed by lord Lauderdale, as tending gradually to diminish the importance of that house, by lessening the opulence of its members, fuch numbers of whom came to their honours and fortunes through collateral fuccession. instanced the duke of Norfolk, who must, if such an act had subsisted, have been a loser by six hundred thousand pounds, taken from the family which he represented. bill, however, was carried.

The tax on collateral fuccession to real estates was more successfully opposed in the house of commons, where it evidently appeared so obnoxious, that Mr. Pitt found himfelf under the necessity of totally relinquishing it.

On the eight of December, a message was delivered from the king to the house of commons, informing them of his disposition to enter into a negociation for peace with the present government of Mr. Pitt thereon moved France. an address, expressive of their readiness to concur in such a measure.

Mr. Sheridan avowed himfelf of opinion, that the intention of the minister was to frustrate the motion for peace of which Mr. Grey had given notice. What other motives could induce the minister to this change of language respecting the French, whom he had fo lately reprelented as unable to continue the war, and on the brink of destruction. The men who governed that country were the lame who had put the king to death, and with whom, our ministry had declared, no fettled order of things could ever take place. But, whoever were the governors of France, Mr. Sheridan infifted, that no reason of that fort ought to prevent an accommodation, and he moved an amendment to the address, to fignify the concern of the houle, that any form of government in that country should induce the king to be averse to peace; and to request that, setting afide all confiderations of that nature, he would direct his ministers to treat with the enemy on lase and honourable terms. He was lecond-ed by Mr. Grey, who advanced a variety of facts and reasonings upon them to prove the propriety of treating.

Until the present opportunity, Mr. Pitt replied, none had offered to encourage ideas of peace, which, however, had not been prevented by the mere existence of a republic in France, but by a total ablence of any species of regular governa The change now was man nifelt: the new constitution was contrary to the doctrine of univerfal equality; the French had now a mixed form of government, admitting of distinctions in society a and their legislature was not conitructed on a pure democracy. fully authorized ministry to consider them in quite another light than formerly; but did not furnish any pretence for depriving ministers of their right to act in the name of the executive power, without undue interference, which must certainly be the case, were the amendment to be adopted.

Mr. Fox severely reprehended ministry for pretending that, till now, the government of France was incapable of maintaining the relations of peace and amity with other nations. They had maintained them fuccessively with every power they had treated with; nor was the character of the present

thiets'

rulers of that country more favourable to the preserving of such rela-Ministers ought, in the mean time, to be reminded with what powers they had not scrupled to enter into treaties of amity, and of what deeds they had, in confequence, been the abettors. Fox reviewed the events of the war with great accuracy and precision, with a view of shewing the ill management of those who had conducted it. He ridiculed the idea, that the French were more deferving of confidence on account of their new constitution; their principles were still the same, though they had adopted another mode of ruling. But neither those principles, nor their antecedent government, ought to have been made the pretext for waging a war of extermination. It was time to end it on any conditions, not derogatory to the dignity of this country; and ministry ought no longer to be fuffered to protract the war, on the pretence they had so continually, but falfely, alleged, of incapacity in the enemy to maintain a good understanding.

The fentiments of Mr. Dundas were, that to offer terms of peace to the enemy would be attended with no difgrace, but that ministers, in such case, should be left to act discretionally, and not to be compelled to make a peace of which they disapproved. The amendment, for that realon, was inequitable, as it fettered their operations against all experience and precedent. He denied the object of the war to be the reftoration of despotilm in France, or that this country could have indulged the hope of an advantageous peace till the present period. Lefs than a year before, the successes of the French had rendered them untractable, and it was only fince their late defeats that reasonable men had begun to hope for equitable conditions. before had they, during the whole of this war, condescended to express the least willingness to recon-The king's message could not have been delivered at a fitter opportunity: the supplies for the continuance of the war had been granted, and the nation had proved itself able and willing to maintain This was exactly the the contest. fituation in which we should appear to the enemy, upon whom it would doubtless make that impression which was intended. It would convince the French. that, however we might be desirous of peace, we were ready for war, and not difpoted to treat on dishonourable The debate closed by rejecting the amendment and carrying the address. A similar one to this was, on the next day, tenth of December, proposed and passed in the house of lords,

On the fifteen of February, Mr. Grey introduced his motion for peace by a speech, wherein he obferved, that, contrary to general expectation, the ministry, in lieu of a negociation for peace, were making preparations for a continuation of the war. But with what well-grounded sope of fuccels could they perfift in this unfortunate fyf-There was no confidence nor unity of views in the remaining parts of the coalition; and yet this country was to bear the weight of this pretended alliance in favour of the common interest of Europe. The public was exhorted to rely on the difcretion of ministers: but were they worthy of any trust, after being deceived in their allies in the most material points, and still expressing a forwardness to depend on promises so frequently reiterated and so repeatedly broken, whenever induced by the flightest intereft to falfify their word, French, it was now acknowledged, were in a fituation to be treated with; we ought, therefore, longer to stand aloof. He would confequently move for an address to the king, requesting him to communicate to the executive government in France his readiness to embrace any opportunity of coinciding with them in mutual endeavours for the re-establishment of peace.

The fituation of affairs, it was replied by Mr. Pitt, was fuch, that it could be no humiliation to this country to be the first in proferring peace; but the conducting of a negociation, and when to time it, belonged folely to ministers. If they were deemed unworthy of fuch a trust, their opponents ought to petition for their removal; but while they continued in office, they alone could be the proper agents in fuch a tranfaction; they ought, on this principle, to act unitedly, not only among themselves, but with the allies of this country, to whom no cause should be given to suspect us of duplicity, and of not acting in the fincerest conjunction with them. If they remained entire, to powerful a confederacy could not, in the nature of things, fail, by perseverence and unanimity, to obtain, finally, an advantageous peace; but this defirable object depended on the moderation of the enemy. All had been done, confishently with honour and interest, to bring him to this issue; but neither of these would be facrificed. Confidering the temper of our enemies, and how much they were inflamed by the pressure of circumstances, to give up their inordinate pretentions, peace would probably depend on the difficulty they would find to profecute the war, and the profpect of it might not, of course, be so near as wished or expected.

Whatever fuccels our arms might have in future, still we ought not, laid Mr. Fox, to prefume that a better feason for treating than the present There was a time would occur. when the enemy could not stand before the confederacy, and was driven from every place he had occupied abroad, and forced to retire dor fhelter into his own country. What fituation could be more prosperous for the coalition? But it did not think the French fufficiently humbled and depressed, and lost an opportunity that would never return. complained of that decree of the convention, by which they threatened interference in the affairs of other countries; but as they had folemnly rescinded it as offensive, to us, why did not we disclaim all interference in their own concerns? why had no steps been taken towards a pacification, as the public had been given to hope they would certainly be popular in this country and not displeasing to our allies nor to all Europe, which looked anxioully for fuch an event. great obstacle to peace was the animofity between the French and their enemies. This should be removed preferably to all other obstructions. This might be done by offering them reasonable conditions, which would disarm an enemy much fooner than violence and obstinacy. It was not furprizing the French should be exasperated, when we fpoke spoke of them so contemptuously, and even sent an ambassador to the person who called himself their king. It was illusory, in the mean time, to buoy up the spirits of the people, by telling them to look at the distresses of the French, as if they were any mitigation of their own. These were no arguments to lay before men who had suffered so much for the profusion and illusces that had so usually accompanied ministerial measures. The opponents to these were arrogantly admonished, that it was the royal prerogative only to decide of peace and when to conclude it: but ministers also should be reminded, that it was no less the prerogative of the commons of England to interpose their advice, both as to the time and the conditions that were seasonable. On closing the debate, fifty divided for the motion, and one hundred and ninety against it.

C HAP. IV.

Free Negroes in the Island of Jamaica.—Hunted by Blood-Hounds.—Motion, by Mr. Grey, in the House of Commons, for an Inquiry into the State of the Nation.—Negatived.—Farther Taxes.—For paying the Interest of an additional Loan.—Mortality umong the Troops sent against the French West-India Islands.—Neglect and Distresses of the Troops.—Motion, for Documents on these Subjects by Mr. Sheridan.—Debates thereon.—Mr. Sheridan's Motion agreed to.—Motion, in the House of Peers, for the Production of Papers respecting a Vote of Parliament, in 1783, recognizing the Necessity of certain Public Reforms.—Debates thereon.—The Metion negatived.—Report of the Committee of Supply on the Resolution for granting a Subsidy to the King of Sardinia.—Conversation on that Subject, -Charges laid against Ministry, by Mr. Grey, as Ground of Impeach enent; and a Motion on that Subject .- Negatived .- Motions, in both Houses of Parliament, against the Continuation of the War.—Negatived.— Motion, by Mr. Wilberforce, for the Abolition of the Slave-Trade, on a certain Day.—Negatived.—The Seffion of Parliament closed by a Speech from the Throne,

HE hostilities against the free negroes, in the illand of Jamaica, known by the denomination of maroons, had been carried on a long time without effect. The force employed against them amounted to five thousand men; but the difficulty of coming at their recesses, and frequently of discovering them, had frustrated the repeated attempts of this force, though it had omitted nothing that valour and perseverance could suggest: and yet, those maroons were but a handful of men, hardly confisting of fix hundred bearing arms. The improbability of compelling them to submit, by the usual methods of fighting, induced the government of Jamaica, as stated in our last volume, to have recourse to the mode adopted by the Spaniards in fimilar cases. applied to the Spanish inhabitants of the island of Cuba, and obtained from them a hundred blood-hounds, with twenty men, expert in the training and conducting of them. With this supply, the military penetrated into the interior parts of the mountainous and woody country, occupied by the maroons, and compelled them to surrender. They were transported to the British provinces in North America.

Though, as afterwards fully appeared in the subsequent session of parliament, the government of Jamaica had not incurred the guilt of either barbarity or breach of saith, yet an erroneous conviction, that the blood-hounds had been employed, not only to track out the maroons, but to tear and mangle them, excited a pretty general outcry. No degree of political expediency could justify the adoption of such a measure.

Spanish

Spanish cruelty, it was said, afforded no precedent or excuse for Englishmen.

General Macleod brought this subject into the house of commons, on the twenty-fixth of February, and complained of the diffrace attending such a measure. He was answered, that it was a matter of necessity, and not of choice; that the maroons madacring, without mercy, every one that fell into their hands, they could be confidered in no other light than murderers, and dederived extermination by any means that could be employed to that purpole.

The general moved, however, on the twenty-first of March, for an address to the king, requesting he would direct the papers, concerning the maroon-war, to be laid before the house. He grounded his motion on a letter from Jamaica, stating the facts above-mentioned: he described the maroons as a free people, proprietors of the country they He mentioned it, as inhabited. customary among the Spaniards, in Cuba, to feed their blood-hounds on human flesh, in order to render them terocious: but could a British parliament, he laid, connive at such atrocities, and encourage so inhuman a spirit in British officers and foldiers?

Mr. Dundas replied, that the maroons had commenced hostilities against our people, at Jamaica, without any reasonable provocation, and had exercised great barbarities in profecuting them. It was their practice to fally forth from their fastnesses in the night, and to surprize the planters; multitudes of whom they maffacred: after which, they retreated to the woods and mountains, the passes to which were inacressible. In such circumstances our people could not be blamed for employing the necessary means to fecure themselves, and to annoy so ferocious an enemy. The motion, therefore, he faid, was not fufficiently grounded, to comply with it, without an accurate inquiry into parti-The mere rumour, however, he acknowledged, had induced ministry to fignify its disapprobation of fuch a measure to the government at Jamaica.

On Mr. Dundas's affuring the general that dispatches of this tenor had been sent, he withdrew his motion: not however till Mr. Sheridan expatiated on the subject, in answer to Mr. Barham, who had represented the maroons as rebels; but whom the former justified, in their refentment of the punishment inflicted upon one of their people, who ought, according to treaty, to have been delivered up to his countrymen, to be tried and punished by them for the mildemeanour of which he had been guilty.

In the mean time, a report was daily gaining ground, that the plans of nanistry embraced such a multiplicity of objects, that new demands would shortly be made of means to carry them into execution. Their opponents thought it expedient, for that reason, to call the attention of the public to the fituation of the national finances, in order that a just idea might be formed of the conduct of ministers in this essential department. the tenth of March, this subject was brought into the house of commons, by Mr. Grey: who observed, that, in whatever circumstances the country might be placed, whether of war or of peace, the strictest economy was become more dispenfible than ever. France would indubitably aim at the formation of a respectable marine, and so would every power that could in any degree maintain its confideration at tea. Our incontestible superiority on the ocean rendered us an object of universal envy and dread; and these were cogent motives with all the Europeans to feek for our depreflion: but they were no less urgent to induce this country to preferve that superiority, without which our internal fecurity was evidently precarious; but, had we been fufficiently attentive to the means of preferring it? Had we not lavished, with scandalous profusion, immense sums, for which no adequate fervices had been performed? Seventy-feven millions had, in the course of the last three years, been added to the public debts; to pay the interest of which, taxes had been laid, amounting to two millions fix hundred thousand pounds. The expences of former wars, however great, did not equal those of the prefent; and yet those wars were more extensive and important in their object than the present. In the contest that lost us America ministerial profusion was notorious; the debt contracted did not, however, exceed fixty-three millions, notwithstanding the duration of that fatal quarrel was twice what this had now been; and we had all Europe to contend with. When the present war began, the minister engaged, in a solemn manner, to obviate, by every possible means, extraordinaries of all kinds; but how had he kept his word? notwithflanding the most liberal grants that ever minister had experienced, the extraordinaries of the navy smounted to thirteen millions feven hundred thouland pounds, while the commerce of this country had suffered more from the enemy than in any preceding quarrel; the extraordinaries of the army were nine These were uncontaionmillions. able expences, as, notwithstanding the advance of price in all articles of public or private demand, they had not rifen to such a height as to justify the difference between the cost of the present and of former wars. The extraordinaries of the nine years war, from the revolution to the peace of Ryswick, in 1697, were twelve hundred thousand Those of eleven years pounds. war, in the reign of queen Anne, were two millions. They did not together amount to one-half of the extraordinaries of the present year: the cause of this increase of expence was not fo much the difference of price in necessary articles, many of which continued the same in this respect as at that day, as the addition of unnecessary expences. The extraordinaries and the votes of credit, in 1778, 79, and 80, were less by three millions two hundred thousand pounds than the present: in the ordnance, the extraordinaries arose to near three ' millions. These augmentations in the national expences were obvioufly unconstitutional, as they were made without parliamentary fanc-The total of the money thus expended was upwards of thirtyone millions; and together with that voted by the parliament amounted to fixty-fix millions eight hundred thousand pounds. This immense fum had been expended in three years of an inglorious and ruinous war. Another unconstitutional proceeding, of a most alarming nature, was the erection of barracks. These were justly, by judge Blackstone, fiyled inland fortresses, and were undeniably intended to separate the military from the civil classes, and to keep the latter in awe by means They had been of the former. erected too without confulting parliament, and had cost, since the year 1790, eleven hundred thousand pounds, and more was now demanded for their completion. nisterial demands of loans from the bank were also become, of late, enormous, and intirely repugnant to the primitive motives of its institution, which were to assist the mercantile transactions of the kingdom, and to maintain its commercial credit: but it had, in many respects, degenerated into an engine of state: it was now near twelve millions in advance to government. Mr. Grey entered into other particulars, to flew the irregularity prevailing in the financial departments. He concluded by affirming, in confequence of farther details, that the national revenue fell short of the peace-establishment by two millions and a half, the latter being twentytwo millions, the former only nineteen millions five hundred thousand pounds. Thus we should be loaded with farther taxes to supply that deficiency, even were a peace to en-On these premises, he moved that the house should resolve itself into a committee, to inquire into the state of the nation.

The positions of Mr. Grey were controverted by Mr. Jenkinson, who maintained, that the commercial situation of Great Britain, notwith-standing the weight of so great a war, was more prosperous than at any antecedent periods. The average of exports, during the three last years of peace, the most slourish-

ing ever known in this country, was twenty-two millions five hundred and eighty-five thouland pounds; and the fame average for the laft three years of war was twenty-four millions four hundred and fifty-three thousand. The advantage in the borrowing of money, at prefent, was one and a half per cent. greater than during the American war. close of the war in 1748 the national debt was eighty millions, in 1762 one hundred and forty: but had the present system, of appropriating a million annually to the extinction of that debt, been fortunately adopted at the first of these periods, that heavy load would now have been totally thrown off the nation. expenditure of this war was, doubtless, immense; but the exertions, to which it was applied, were of no less magnitude. Never was the energy of this country so astonishingly displayed, nor its resources so wonderfully proved: our fleets and armies were in a far fuperior condition, both as to numbers and equipment, to those maintained in the American war. It was unfair to complain of increating expences. The augmentation of price in all the articles of life and focial intercourfe, added, of confequence, the fame proportion of increase in military expences; nor ought the fubfidies to our allies to be, reputed extravagant, confidering their utility to the common caule, by enabling these to act much more effectually against the foe, than if they were leit to their fole exertions. pressures of the enemy snewed how wifely the treasures of this country had been employed in firengthening the power of his continental adversaries, while our successes at fea had reduced him to the lowest lacious and illusory accounts, and to investigate the ministerial statements with the leverest strickness: this would snew, that in many circumstances, they were not to be relied on. Mr. Grey went into a variety of particulars, in proof of his own affertion. Notwithstanding the Joan of twenty-five millions, interest had not, he said, been provided for the outstanding debts. He warned the house to be ware of giving credit to the affeverations, so regularly brought before it, of French distress, and incapacity to maintain the contest. fuch delution the war was owing, together with its fatal protractions. He concluded, by afferting, that if a fair investigation was made, by a committee of inquiry, it would appear that provision had not been made, as stated, for the interest of the public debt.

After an answer from Mr. Pitt, justifying his affertions and statements, and controverting those of Mr. Grey in the most essential particulars, Mr. Fox took up the fubject with great animation. He coincided with the affertions of Mr. Grey, and treated, with marked afperity, the idea, that a people plunged, as the French were described, in the gulph of bankruptcy, should compel the British ministry to demand such endless supplies of money, and call upon the people of this country for so enormous a fum as twenty-five millions within little more than a year. He noticed, with equal feverity, the arrears due in a variety of departments, particularly the retention of the small allowance to the emigrants, who had shewn such confidence in our generofity, and who had no other means of sublistence.

Other members spoke on each fide of the question. On putting the resolutions moved by the minister in favour of the new loan, and additional taxes, they were carried without a divifion of the houfe.

The mortality that had to fatally prevailed among the British troops in the West Indies, and the inadequateness of the fuccesses obtained there, to the expectations formed from the fums expended on ... the expeditions against the French illands, were topics of general converlation and complaint. Opposition ascribed the disappointments that had happened in those parts to the incapacity, or ill conduct, of ministry, and demanded the production of the papers relating to those expeditions.

On the 21st of April, Mr. Sheridan, after many firictures on the conduct of ministry, moved for a return of the men carried off by disease and fa-, tigue in those countries. So shameful, he afferted, was the neglect of the troops, that, on their arrival in that destructive climate, they were destitute of shoes and stockings. Had not discases ravaged the enemy's forces, our own must have fallen an, cally prey into their hands. holpitals were crowded with the fick and wounded, for whom neither medicines nor bandages were pro-Such was the inhumanity they fometimes experienced, that ninety, or a hundred, of these unhappy men, were once lest to pass a whole night on the beach, in consequence of which only seven es eight furvived. With fuch motives for an inquiry how could it be declined? He required it, together with an account of the force employed under lord Moira in 1791 and 1795, and which ought to have been dif-

patched

patched to the relief of the troops in the islands, and not kept inactive at home. He would also require a list of the officers and soldiers lost, specifying the loss of each regiment. Such information would shew what a drain these expeditions had proved from the population of the British islands, and how much they tended to weaken them. Accounts ought, by the same reason, to be laid before the house, of the numbers carried off in the ports of Southampton, Portsmouth, and Plymouth, were it only to make known the iniquitous neglect of those who could leave troops confined feven months on board, exposed to the infallible effects of such a close imprisonment, notwithstanding the remonstrances made to government. He moved, at the same time, for the production of other documents of the fame nature, by which he pledged himfelf to prove the misconduct of ministers; adding, that unless they felt a consciousness of the rectitude of his charges, they would gladly leize the occasion, now offered them, of vindicating themselves from the imputations so loudly and generally laid to them by the public.

The difficulty of the minister's fituation was strongly represented by Mr. Dundas. Papers and documents were demanded from them, of which official fecrecy prohibited the communication to the public. The time would certainly come, when they would gladly meet the strictest scruting of their conduct, fure that it would stand the severest telt. All had been done in the West Indies that circumstances would permit, and reinforcements and fupplies of all kinds had been transmitted without delay, on the first notice of their being wanted.

In the course of this debate, the transactions, under fir C. Grey, came into discussion. Mr. Fox, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Francis, and general Tarleton, inferred, from words spoken by Mr. Dundas, that he meant to inculpate the conduct of that officer; but both he and Mr. Pitt bestowed the highest encomiums upon him. Mr. Grey, the member, declared, however, that fir C. Grey was earneftly defirous to give every elucidation respecting the business with which he had been entrusted.

On the twenty-eighth of April, a violent debate took place on those Mr. Dundas entered into lubjects. a minute and elaborate recapitulation of the conduct of government, respecting the West Indies. carefully detailed the forces of the kingdom, and what had been detached from them, on expeditions to those parts. He gave a circumstantial account of all that had happened there, and exerted himself to shew that the disasters and disappointments, that had befallen us, arose from accidents that were wholly unavoidable: the conduct of our commanders had been judicious, and that of ministry irreproachable.

This apology did not prove fatisfactory to the opposition. The imputation of having neglected the troops, in the West Indies, was reafferted, by Mr. Sheridan, with much positiveness, and the distribution of the forces affigned to the various fervices that took place at that time, improbated as ill-judged; and fome of the fervices themselves, reprefented as unseasonable, and interfering with the others. The troops destined for the West-India expedition were also described as unworthy the name of foldiers: they con-

y the name of foldiers: they confifted

fisted of elderly men, and mere boys, with raw youths at their head. This certainly was no better than mockery and parade. Mr. Dundas having expressed, with much warmth on this occasion, his hope that the Cape of Good Hope would never be reflored to the enemy, Mr. Sheridan took notice of the mortifying impression that such a declaration must necessarily make on the studtholder, who could not fail, thereby, to perceive, that what we took from the Dutch we were determined to The stadtholder, in his retreat at Hampton, had, indeed, the fatisfaction of seeing his fleets, and foreign possessions, falling, not into the hands of his enemies, but those of his friends; yet, as these friends dragged him into the war, under the assurance of protection, he might well fay, with the Roman poet, Pol me occidistis Amici, non servastis!*

HORAT.

The refult of this debate was, that ministry acquiesced in the motions made by Mr. Sheridan, which were for accounts of the number of men destined for the expedition to the West Indies, under fir C. Grey, in 1793; for accounts of the number withdrawn from that fervice, to form an expedition against the coast of France under lord Moira, and of the numbers, who, after the conquest of Martinico, St. Lucia, and Guadaloupe, were detached to St., Domingo. But the other motions, made by Mr. Sheridan, for a variety of official papers, relating to the circumstances of other armaments and intended expeditions, were negatived, on Mr. Dundas engaging to give explanatory answers to the questions upon those subjects.

The expedition to Quiberon, in the fummer of 1795, and its unfortunate issue to numbers of the French emigrants embarked in it, had been a subject of universal discussion in this country ever fince it had happened, and had given occasion to the severest censures of those to whom the management of it had been entrusted. The person whose fall was most lamented was the count de Sombreuil, a French gentleman of a most amiable character, and highly respected for his many ex-He had, with cellent qualities. many others, fallen into the hands of the enemy, and, like them, was condemned to death as a rebel. On the eve of his execution he wrote a letter to Mr. Wyndham, wherein he alluded to two others, one written to fir J. B. Warren, the other to Mr. Wyndham; a copy of this last, was demanded by general Tarleton, as being of a public nature, and conformably to the defire of the count. himself, who had, in the letter to sir J. B. Warren, expressed a wish that Mr. Wyndham would publish it: but this gentleman alleged it was more of a private than a public nature. In the mean time it was publified in a daily paper, and Mr. Sheridan affirmed that he found it related to matters of public importance, and represented the expedition alluded to in a very unfavourable light to ministers. Mr. Wyndham, in reply, afferted that it concerned the count himself, who was distantisfied with the part assigned to him in that expedition. He did not, however, force it upon the count, who acted merely from his excessive zeal in the cause he' had embraced. This answer provoked another from general Smith, in which he represented Mr. Puislaye, who had the charge of that expedition, as unworthy of it, and as an emigrant of little consideration among his countrymen. Other members spoke on this occasion: but the debate ended by Mr. Pitt's moving for the order of the day; and Mr. Sheridan's motion for the latter was thereby negatived.

^{*} By G-, my friends, ye have not served, but ruined me, HORAT.

thereby negatived. Years had now elapsed since the famous declaration, made by the house of commons, during the Ame-Hean war, "that the influence of the crown had encreased, was still encreasing, and ought to be dimi-At that period feveral resolutions had also passed for the reform of various abuses. But though this falutary work had been proceeded upon, it had gradually been laid aside, and the public had long ceased to hear of any progress in the alterations proposed and promiled at that time. It was to recall these divers objects to notice, that the marquis of Lansdowne moved for the feveral papers relating to On the fecond of May he made a long and elaborate speech, in the house of lords, on the subject of their contents, urging, with great force, the propriety of taking them into confideration at a time when the purpole for which the regulations contained in them were framed, and which was the retrenchment of needless expences, demanded the attention of the legislature more The marquis entered than ever. into a number of particulars in order to corroborate his affection, that a useless and expensive augmentation of places and offices had taken place. The patronage thence arising to ministry had proved enormous: but the most dangerous was that derived from the influence they posfessed over the bank, of which the management was now become entirely their own, contrary to the spirit of its institution, and the safety of the constitution itself, which was manifestly endangered by so vast an accession of power to the executive branch of government. Who could have the face to deny that thefe were glaring abuses, and that they called for immediate remedies? He would, therefore, in this critical fituation of affairs, endeavour to procure the realizing of those meafures of reform, fo long refolved upon, and which ought, from every motive of duty and honour, to be no longer delayed. For this purpose he would move, that an inquiry should be instituted into the causes that had prevented the profecution of those reforms so solemnly fanctioned by the legislature, and io strongly recommended by those to whole wildom and integrity it had formally committed the inspection of that department most essential in all states, the revenue and finances of the nation, and all that was connected with this important object. He made other motions tending to the same end; and concluded, by renewing the disapprobation he had so often expressed of the war, as destructive of men, and wasteful of treasure, beyond all precedents.

The reforms alluded to were acknowledged by lord Grenville, in reply, to have been thought expedient by the commissioners who had been appointed to examine the public accounts; but it should not be thence inferred, that they were applicable to all times and emergencies. The proposal, for instance, to throw some of the revenue-offices into one was [F3] impracimpracticable, from the prodigious increase of business in each. same objection lay to others. Never had the public fervice required more labour, and never indeed had more been exerted by the respective incumbents in every office. The abolition of patent places, another subject of complaint, could not be always affected with equity; but still they were in a gradual course of being abolished. specting the system of barracks, so much reprobated; the old plan allowed them for twenty thousand men, to which the new one had, for confiderations well founded, added others for fifteen thousand The difficulty of a speedy adjustment of accounts, in time of war, was too well known to enlarge upon; but the ascertainment of all public expences occupied the attention of ministers to the fullest extent which their magnitude would permit, and they had not the least apprehension of being found defective in their accounts. With regard to the bank, the power vested in it was clearly independent of ministers, and the affistance it afforded to government was entirely optional. To the other observations of the marquis he made such replies as he thought justificatory of ministerial measures, and concluded by afferting, that when impartially reviewed, they would meet with certain approbation.

These answers, to the marquis of Lansdowne, were, by the earl of Lauderdale, represented as fallacious and unfounded. The immense amount of the debts, which ministry lest unfunded, shewed their ill-management and want of economy: the discount given occasionally on exchequer-notes was equally discreditable and alarming: the accounts relating to the barracks were confused and erroneous; and the reasons assigned for other measures were vague and unsatisfactory.

The difference between the pecuniary fituation of this country, in 1783 and that in 1795, was circumfantially investigated by lord Ankland, in order to prove the superiority of our finances at the present day. The revenue was then two millions below the peace establishment, amounting to sisteen millions, but was now actually three millions four hundred thousand pounds above that establishment; and, by adding the two millions then desicient, was in reality sive millions above it.

The lord chancellor, earl Spencer, and lord Hawksbury, opposed the motion, and it was farther supported by lord Moira, and lord Guildford, who gave the house notice of his intention to move an inquiry into the state of the nation. The marquis of Lansdowne's motion was rejected by one hundred and four votes against twelve.

The report of the committee of fupply upon the resolution, for granting a subsidy of two hundred thoufand pounds to the king of Sardinia, was presented to the house of commons on the third of May, when it was observed, by Mr. Fox, that circumstances were no longer the same respecting that prince, as when that fubfidy was first voted. He was then to act against France with the coalition; but it was now understood that he was about to forsake it, and to make a peace with the enemy. If such were the case, it was proper to know whether he thought himself at liberty to act in this manner, or whether indeed he were able to act otherwise, and minister

nisters had acceded to his desire for a separate peace.

Mr. Pitt afferted, that lately the king of Sardinia, in circumstances of great dissiculty, had consented to a suspension of arms with the French, provided it were in conjunction with the emperor, but on no other terms: the emperor not consenting, the armistice did not take place. The French had, in the mean time, offered him peace, if he would make a cession of their acquisitions in his country, and an alliance with them, but he had resulted their offers.

It was observed, by Mr. Francis, that the motives of action with that prince would originate in the pressures he was in. His fituation required him to consult the necessity of his assairs, rather than the magnanimity of his disposition; exclusively of which, history had long shewn, that no dependance could be placed on the stability of the princes of the house of Savoy. Mr. Pitt however being farther pressed upon this subject, put an end to it by declining to reply.

Three days after this discussion Mr. Grey brought several heavy charges against ministers, and moved them to be sufficient grounds of impeachment. They had, he faid, violated the act of appropriation, the main pillar of the pecuniary privileges of parliament, by diverting the grants of money to other purposes than those for which they were voted, and they had endeavoured to screen themselves by spurious accounts. He then detailed the particulars in proof of his accusation, adding, that if the necesfities of the times had compelled them to have recourse to such methods for procuring money, they ought, without disguising the fact,. to have applied to parliament for indemnity. The house of commons had, he faid, been notoriously faulty. in not setting limits to the extraordinaries during the American war; and the committee appointed to examine and digest the public accounts had particularly pointed out the ruinous consequences of such negligence. Mr. Pitt had cenfured it himself with peculiar severity, but had nevertheless been more guilty than any of his predecessors the ministry. So determined was the house to put a stop to these infractions of its rights, that it passed, in 1784, a resolution, that should parliament be dissolved before the act of appropriation had passed, to misapply the money granted should be reputed a high misdemeanour. An act had also been passed under the present minister, to obviate the bad consequences of balances remaining with the paymaster-gener ral, and to provide for the constant pay of the army; but this act had been notorioully infringed; the paymaster having actually in his hands a balance of eighty-three thousand pounds. Mr. Grey, after mention, ing other instances of misapplication, adverted to the dispositionpaper, a species of voucher first used in the prodigal reign of Charles II. and established at the revolution, as an authentic document, to inform parliament in what manner the fupplies they had granted had been expended. This paper he confidered as a mere deception; its contents represented the sums voted by parliament, as issued and applied conformably to its intent, which was contrary to truth. This he might be told was only a form; but the practice was in fact directly opposite [F4]

to the regulations enacted by the legislature, in order to preserve to itself the power over the national purle, against the attempts of ministers to dispose of the nation's money at their own discretion. On these various premises Mr. Grey iounded no leis than filteen resolutions, the last of which summing up the purport of the whole, stated, "that, in the instances mentioned, the king's ministers had been guilty of prefenting falle accounts, calculated to missead the judgement of • the house, of a flagrant violation of various acts of parliament, and of a gross misapplication of the public money."

The reply, made by Mr. Pitt, stated, that though ministers were bound faithfully to appropriate the public money to the purposes specified, yet there were a multiplicity of cases wherein that rule could not strictly be observed. Services of the most critical importance, and the most imperious necessity, often compelled them to deviate from the letter of the act of appropriation: but was that, or was any other, act to stand in the way of material services due to the nation by those who were entrusted with its safety and prefervation? These deviations were founded on wife precedents, and fanctioned as just, by long and repeated experience. Extraordinaries were the inevitable attendants of war, especially such an one as the prefent, which requiring unprecedented exertions, justified unprecedented methods of conducting it. Mr. Pitt adduced a number of facts to prove that he had acted conformably to the practice authorised in former wars. The very act of appropriation, he said, evinced the propriety of extraordinaries, by making good several millions expended under that head; and no objection was ever made to the principle itself. He vindicated, with great acuteness, the different parts of his conduct in the administration of the finances, and argued with great ability against the desects and misconduct imputed to him.

The speech of Mr. Pitt was answered by Mr. Fox, who enforced and enlarged upon the arguments that had been urged by Mr. Grey. Mr. Steele replied in justification of Mr. Pitt's maxims and measures, and closed the debate by moving the previous question, which was carried by two hundred and nine to thirty-eight.

The tenth of May was remark. able for a motion made in each house against the continuation of the war, and for offering terms of peace. That in the house of lords was made by the earl of Guildford; that in the house of commons by The same arguments, Mr. Fox. with little variation, were used by both speakers, that had so often been urged in the preceding attempts of this nature, and met of courfe with much the lame answers. The only matter of novelty was, the construction put on Mr. Wickham's commission, to inform Mr. Barthelemy, the French minister at Base, of the disposition on the part of this country, to enter into a negociation for peace, and that minister's reply to the British agent. Opposition treated the application former as far from calculated to conciliate the French, while ministry asserted that it was fully sufficient to induce them to treat, had they been fincerely disposed to meet us on equitable terms. This particular conflituted the principal object of debate, and exercised the abilities of both ministry and opposition: but after a long and animated contest, the motion was negatived in the house of lords, by one hundred and en against ten; and, in the house of commons, by two hundred and fixteen against fortytwo.

A repetition took place on the same day in the house of lords, of the discussion upon the state of the revenue, the taxes, the imports and exports, and the other financial circumstances of the nation at the close of the American war, and at the preient period. The earl of Moira combated the positions of lord Aukland in the preceding debate, and the latter exerted himself to maintain them. Numerous and intricate were the calculations on both fides. Lord Lauderdale zealoufly support-'ed the earl of Moira, and entered into a great variety of particulars to prove the justness of his researches and computations: herein he was seconded by the marquis of Lanfdowne, and opposed by lords Coventry and Hawkesbury, who took much pains to represent the statements of lord Moira as erroneous.

The same subject was resumed, on the thirteenth, by lord Lauderdale, who displayed great financial knowledge in his arrangement of the matter of debate. His supporters were the marquis of Lanfdowne and the earl of Moira; and opponents, lords Grenville, Hawkesbury, and Aukland. The inferences from the arguments and statements produced by the respec- the provisions made for repressing tive parties were contradictory in the extreme; the one representing the situation of this country as replete with the most arduous difficulties, and almost verging to ruin; and the other describing it as full of opulence and refources of every denomination, and able, with proper management, to encounter and furmount every obstacle; and to flourish with more lustre than ever.

Such were the most material transactions of parliament during this fession. An attempt was made, by Mr. Wilberforce, to enforce the decision of the house, that the abolition of the flave-trade fhould take place on the first day of the year 1796, but his motion was negatived by a majority of four, and his fubfequent endeavours to regulate the flave-carrying trade, by the proportion of tonnage, was lost for want. of numbers to constitute a house.

A bill for the relief of indigent curates passed in their favour, after fome opposition in the commons, on account of its originating in the house of lords. But a petition from the quakers to be relieved from imprisonment for non-payment of tythes, and for allowing their affirmation to be evidence in criminal as well as civil cases was rejected by the lords, after passing the commons. The humane effort made by lord Moira, in favour of persons confined for debt, met with no better fuccels.

The fession closed, on the nineteenth of May, with the customary speech from the throne. It informed the houtes of the intention to diffolve the prefent; and to call a new parliament. The happiest effects, it faid, had been experienced from fedition and civil tumult, and for restraining the progress of principles subversive of all established government.

74] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

The commons were thanked, in a more particular manner, for the liberal supplies they had granted, to meet the exigencies of the war. Peculiar notice was taken of the increasing resources, by which the country was enabled to support the great expences it required. The nature of the system introduced into France had, the speech said, afforded to that country, in the midst of its calamities, the means of exertion, beyond the exertion of any former time; but, under the pressure of the new and unprecedented difficulties, arifing from such a contest, the British constitution had, by the counsels and conduct of parliament, been preferved inviolate against the designs of foreign and domestic enemies; the honour of the British name asserted; the rank and station held hitherto by this country in Europe, maintained and the decided superiority of its naval power, established in every quarter of the world.

Such were the principal passages in the speech. It concluded with strong recommendations of unanimity and mutual considence between the king and parliament, as best promoting the true dignity of the crown, and the happiness of the subject.

CHAP. V.

First Cares and Employment of the French Directory.—Determination to keep alive the Martial Spirit of the French Nation.—And to Extend their Victories as far as possible.—But, at the same Time to make a shew of Pacific Inclinations.—Preparations for War on the Part of the Allies.—Attempt towards Negociation between the French and the Allies at Base, in Switzerland.—Rupture threatened between the French and Swiss Cantons.—Prevented.—Plan of Directory for Military Operations.—Manifesto of Charette.—Revival of the War in La Vendée.—New Complexion of this.—Total Defeat of the Insurgents.—Capture and Execution of Charette and Stoslet.—Manifesto of the Directory for Restraining the Cruelties of their Soldiers.—Lenient Measures.—Good Effects of these.

URING the first months that I followed the constitution settled in France towards the conclusion of 1795, the chief care of the government was to render it respectable, and to imprefs the minds of men with a persuasion, that this great change was calculated for the benefit of the nation. It was not difficult, indeed, to perfuade the public that any fystem was preferable to that uncertainty which had occasioned fo many confusions. From this consideration, people at large willingly acquiesced in the new arrangements, especially as they promised to restore internal peace, by arming government with fuch extensive power, to prevent the breaking out of disturbances. But the means to which chiefly the directory trufted for the stability of their honour was, to keep alive that martial spirit which had pervaded, with so amazing an efficacy, the whole mass of the French nation, and enabled it to perform féats of arms, of which no records afforded any precedent in their history. As these successes were attributed to that enthusiasin which animated them in the caufe of their country, and to the hatred which they professed for monarchy. it was the business of their rulers to perpetuate fuch a disposition, by affording it support and aliment; and this they faw would most esfectually be done, by representing the enmity borne to France as unextinguished, and that notwithstanding several of its enemies had openly laid down their arms, and agreed to conditions of peace, their rancour was still the same. They had defisted from hostilities, it was said, only from compulsion, after repeated defeats, and from the dread which they felt, that unless they complied with the requisitions prescribed by a victorious and invincible enemy, justly exasperated at their unpro-. voked aggression, he might give the fuller loofe to a revenge, which they were not able to relift.

In order therefore to imprint the deeper in the minds of those adverfaries, whom they had already so much humbled, the terror with which they were already inspired, the heads of the republic judged it expedient to extend the influence of their victorious arms, as far as fortune seemed inclined to favour them, and to compel their remaining foes to accept of the humiliating terms they had imposed upon the others, by reducing them to the like distress.

From ideas of this kind flowed the lofty language spoken upon all occasions, both by the directory and the two councils. As two-thirds of these were precifely the same men who had governed France under the name of a convention, during the three preceding years, it was not to be expected that their dispositions would alter with their new appellation; and the other third, though not altogether so violent in their conduct, were influenced by those republican principles, without which no man could be reputed a true Frenchman, and which, in truth, were indispensible to procure an individual either esteem or advancement in any post, civil or military.

Another view, it may be prefumed, that stimulated the members of the directory, who were all men of tried parts and courage, was the desire of proving to their countrymen the superiority of individuals placed at the head of the state, purely on account of their abilities, to persons promoted through favour, or the advantitious circumstances of birth and family.

But a motive still more cogent, both with them and the nation at large, was the earnest desire to repair the loss sustained, towards the close of the preceding campaign, on the borders of the Rhine. These losses happening so shortly after their prodigious successes in the low countries, and in Holland, had shewn that their enemies, however frequently defeated, had not decreased in valour; and that, when well commanded, they were still a match for all the enthusiasm of the French.

It was chiefly to recover this fuperiority of military prowefs, that the directory was folicitous to place the numerous armies of the republic on the most formidable footing. They had maintained, in the campaign of 1794, a contest with the bravest veterans in Europe, and had proved more than equal to them. By the same reason it might be expected, that, the same spirit animating them, they would renew their victorious career, which appeared suspended, through unforefeen causes, rather than terminated by a turn of fortune in favour of their enemies.

It was however necessary to make a shew of pacific inclinations, without which both their own people and foreign states would be justly authorised to accuse them of a wanton and lawless ambition, and more intent to gratify their private thirst of salse glory, at the expence of their country, than studious to restore the blessings of peace, now become the earnest wish of all parties.

While the rulers of the republic were thus employed, the allied powers were no less occupied in preparing for the renewal of hostilites, little hoping that any sincere efforts for the obtaining of peace were likely to proceed from the

French:

French; and convinced, that until they should experience farther reverses, they would still continue inflexible in the determination they had solemnly formed, to annex their acquisitions in the low countries, and on the lest-side of the Rhine, irrevocably to the dominions of the republic.

A resolution of this nature precluded at once all ideas of peace. The retention of those sertile and spacious provinces could not be submitted to without an evident alteration of the political system of Europe, of which France would possess a controul, that would perpetually disturb the peace, if not endanger the safety of all its neighbours.

The possession of Blgium by the various branches of the Austrian samily, during more than three centuries, had so far habituated the inhabitants to their domination, that, notwithstanding the oppressions they had occasionally exercised over them, they still retained a willingness to return to their obedience, provided they could have been secured in the enjoyment of their ancient customs and liberties.

The Austrian ministry was duly sensible of this disposition, and preferved, of course, the hope of recovering, by some fortunate casualty, this richest portion of its inherit-The British ministry was no less bent on the restoration of the Austrian Netherlands to their former owner. The accertion of such immense and valuable territories to France, in so close a proximity, and almost in fight of the shores of this island, was an object of serious alarm, and called up the attention of all men who reflected on the restless character of the French, their inveteracy to this country, and their readiness to engage in any attempt to its detriment, especially at the present period, when they were stimulated by the most violent resentment at the interserence of the British ministry in the affairs of their country, and its endeavours to restore the monarchy they had solemnly proscribed.

In this conflict of adverse projects, both the republic and its enemies were equally anxious however to appear inclined to peace, conformably to the loudly-expressed wishes of their respective people, and, in truth, of all the people in Europe, who, either directly or indirectly, selt themselves involved in the ruinous consequences of this satal contest.

The French, in the mean time, having, by the dint of negociations, as well as of their arms, brought some of the principal members of the coalition into their own terms, flattered themselves with the expectation of becoming equally successful with the others, and held out language promissory of equitable conditions, in order to allure them to treat.

Basse, a city of note, in Switzerland, was now become the centre of political transactions between the different powers, whose diplomatic agents had fixed upon it as the most convenient place of residence, on account of its fituation between the Belligerent parties, in a country allowed to be neutral. The principal negociator, on the part of the French, was the celebrated citizen Barthelemy, at that time in high credit with the directory, for the fervices he had rendered the government of France, in the treaties that had been confided to his management, nagement, and the iffue of which had been fo ad that ageous to the republic.

To this gentleman application was made, on the eighth of March, by Mr. Wickham, the British envoy to the Swifs Cantons, in order to found the real dispositions of the French government. The object in communicating the propositions directed to the French agent, was, to ascertain, by his answer, whether the directory were defirous to negociate with Great Britain and its allies, on moderate and honourable conditions, and would agree to the meeting of a congress for this purpose, and whether, at the same time, it would fpecify the conditions on which it would treat, or point out any other method of treating.

The answer received from M. Barthelemy, in the name of the directory, was, that it felt the fincerest defire to terminate the war on fuch conditions as France could reasonably accept, and which were specified in the answer; but one of these politively infifted on the retention of the Austrian dominions in the low countries; assigning, as a reason, their formal annexation to the republic, by a constitutional decree that could not be revoked.

A reply, founded upon an argument, which proved no more than in decided resolution never to part with these acquisitions, without alleging in fact any other motive than their will, displayed an arrogance in the directory, in the opinion of their enemies, that instantly put a stop to all farther attempts to negociate. No alternative, it was now faid, remained to these but to yield unconditionally to their demands, or to try the fortune of arms. Were this to prove adverse, they could hardly infift upon more mortifying terms, nor the allies be more disgraced.

The directory seemed at this period resolutely determined to act with a high hand, and to fet all the enemies of the republic at defiance. It intimated to the magistracy of Basse, that a rumour was spread, purporting a defign in that city and canton to favour the irruption of the imperialists through its territories, and that a great part of the helvetic body concurred in this defign; which was a manifest infraction of the neutrality they had engaged to observe between France and its aggressors. An explanation was demanded in fo haughty and peremptory a style, that the regency of Basse felt itself highly offended, and returned so spirited an answer to the directory, that they dispatched another message much more severe than the first, requiring an immediate explanation of the rumour in question, and accompanied with menacing infinuations, in case all hostile intentions were not disavow. ed. The cantons were so deeply involved in this business, that being unwilling to come to a formal rupture with fo formidable an antagonist as the French republic, they judged it prudent to give them the completest assurance of their determination to preserve the strictest neutrality. A minister of an acceptable character was deputed to Paris: this was Mr. Ochs, a gentleman of principles favourable to the revolution. He settled all differences to the fatisfaction of both parties; and Switzerland was delivered from apprehensions of hostility.

This transaction took place towards the end of March and beginning were preparing for the ensuing campaign, and feemed resolved to pursue the most active and vigorous measures against the remaining members of the coalition.

The directory had three objects in contemplation; an invasion of Germany, another of Italy, and the complete reduction of domestic infurgents. Of these last it entertained the greatest apprehension, from the desperate resolution they had hitherto displayed, and the unyielding perseverance with which they continued to oppose the repeated attempts to reduce them. The feverity exercifed towards all who were suspected of favouring them, instead of relaxing the attachment of their adherents, ferved, on the contrary, to increase it; and the unshaken fidelity they observed in concealing those designs and plans of the infurgents to which they were privy, and in which they co-operated with unabated zeal, affifted and animated their refistance to a degree that feldom failed to enable them to recover from their defeats and loss, and to take the field with fresh courage and resources.

Previously then to the great enterprizes meditated against Italy and Germany, the directory thought it indispensible to clear France of its internal enemies. Their connections with the most formidable and dangerous rivals of France, the English, made it evident, that while the royal party subsisted unsubdued, it would probably, as it had done in the preceding year, throw such embarrassiments in the military operations, intended against soreign enemies, us would clog and impede the plans preposed; and, aided by the fleets and forces of England, tie up the ginning of April, when the French hands of government from those exertions, without which the war on the frontiers of France could not be carried on with any decifive fuccess, and must probably be protracted in such a manner as might afford time and opportunities to the foe of recovering from his past disafters, and regaining the ground he had loft.

Fully determined to remain chiefly, if not entirely, on the defensive, until the interior of France should be wholly pacified, or the opponents of the republic effectually difabled, the directory pitched upon one of the ablest men in the commonwealth to carry this refolve into execution. This was the celebrated general Hoche, whose military talents and fuccesses were at that time inferior to those of no officer in the French service. He was invested with the chief command in the departments that were in a state of insurrection; and, happily for his employers, acquitted himself in a short space of time to their highest satisfaction.

The refistance of the infurgents was not conducted on their former plan: they had, as it were, confumed that flock of zeal and devotion to the royal cause, which had produced fuch amasing effects, and rendered them fo long the terror of the republican armies. cification concluded with the government of France by Charette, and the other chiefs of the infurgents, had deprived him in a great measure of the influence which he, with a number of refolute leaders, had exercised over them; and when they determined to excite another infurrection they found an alteration in the disposition of the commonalty, that foon made it apparent how feeble and ill-supported their exertions would prove, in comparison of what they had been on the first breaking out of the resistance to government. They had at that period introduced order and regularity among their people, and had exercised hostilities according to the rules of discipline. But those, on whom they now prevailed to join them, were no longer guided by the same spirit. The generality indeed did not feem inclined to embark in a cause for which they had so greatly suffered, and so vainly displayed the most surprising courage and efforts. The majority of those, who now followed their fortunes, were individuals long determined never to submit to the republic, and to feize the first opportunity of acting openly against They confisted chiefly of the ruined noblesse, clergymen expelled from their livings, and other perfons' deprived of their employments, either for adhering, or being fufpected of adherence to the royal cause. The mass of their followers was made up of deferters, peafants, and others of the lower classes, impelled, by the ill-treatment of the ruling party for their difference of opinion in matters of church and state, to fly from their homes, and betake themselves to the protection of those who were in arms against government, and whose numbers were thus encreased and constan ly recruited by fresh accessions of the discontented and ill-used.

fecble

Those who now presided over them were Charette and Stoflet, who appeared full determined to encounter new hazards, after having escaped so many dangers. The former of these had, in the course of the preceding year, renounced the engagements he had contracted with the republic, and published a manifesto, wherein he publicly charged its agents with having, under false pretences, inveigled him to lay down his arms and fubmit to government. They had, he faid, given him to understand, that the rulers of the nation had come to a fixed resolution of restoring royalty, and of replacing the family of Bourbon upon the throne, as. foon as fuch an event could take place with security; but the temper of the French, they infinuated, was to be confulted, and a due concurrence of circumstances waited for, before an attempt of fuch importance could be made. enumerated a variety of particulars tending to delude him, and concluded by accusing government of having violated its faith with his affociates; and, as a confummation of its iniquity, of having taken off, by poison, the innocent child of their murdered fovereign. It was, he faid, in consequence of these perjuries and enormities, that he had come to a determination to take up arms again, and never to lay them down till the heir to the crown was restored, and the Catholic religion re-established.

Such were the contents of this extraordinary manifesto, which appeared to strange and unaccountable to numbers, that they were led to doubt its authenticity.

In the mean time, the forces, difpatched by government to suppress this infurrection, met with various difficulties, from the nature of the warfare they were engaged in. The infurgents, conscious of their inferiority in the field, avoided all regular action; and, dividing themfelves into a multitude of imall bodies, occupied all the narrow passes and defiles throughout the country, and harassed the republican troops in their marches and The inhabitants in those parts, being generally in the interest of the infurgents, informed them of the most convenient places where to lie in ambuscade, and surprise their enemies. By these means they intercepted the communication between the republican troops, and often leized their convoys of provisions and stores, and reduced them to the extremest want of ammunition and necessaries. Whenever they found an opportunity of attacking them to advantage, they never missed it, and occasionally deseated them with confiderable flaughter. When these were too well situated, or too strong in numbers, as well as polition, to venture an engagement with them, the others kept within torests or fastnesses that were almost inaccessible, and where, on that account, they fucceeded in defending themselves. Their general mode of attack was with mulketry, never coming to close fight, and always placing hedges, pales, ditches, and other imepediments between themielves and the ioe, whom, as numbers of them were excellent markimen, they contrived by these methods greatly to annoy, in spite of their courage and discipline, and their eagerness to rush upon them through all obstacles, and to fight them under all disadvantages.

The chiefs of the infurgents were fo conscious of the impractibility of encountering the republican troops in any other manner, that their own people, losing all hope of renewing those brilliant successes they had formerly obtained, gradually abandoned all attempts of that Voz. XXXVIII.

kind, and gave themselves up to a predatory system of hostilities, accompanied with as many sanguinary executions of their enemies, as they thought requisite for the support of their own cause, and the intimidation of their enemies.

Such had been their plan of acting fince the fecond infurrection, which had broken out in the commencement of the foregoing fummer, and had continued with various success till the approach of The disappointment that had befallen the expedition to the coast of France from England, and the loss of so many emigrants, that had either fallen in battle, or been taken prisoners, and put to death, had to effectually terrified their adherents, that, from that day, they had manifested little inclination to venture into new dangers, without better grounds of hope, than promiles of affiftance wherein they had been so much deceived, and exhortations to loyalty, that only led them to ruin.

Disheartened by the severe and atrocious vengeance executed upon their country, and the dreadful flaughter and chastisement of its inhabitants, the Vendeans had not, as before, crowded to the royal standards erected among them. The amnesty published after the former pacification, and the lenient treatment they had experienced in consequence of their submission to the republic, had produced the effects that had been expected. The remaining majority of that unfortunate people had returned to their couns try, and refumed their former occupations, with the intent of never leaving them again for the rash enterprifes to which they had been prompted, by the vain prospect of being able to overturn the republic, and restore the monarchy.

But those, who had led them forth to this desperate attempt, did not despair to excite them to a second undertaking of the same nature. They held out every motive that had formerly been prevalent; attachment to their religion, love of their kings, hatred to the present innovations. Multitudes were induced accordingly to lift again under their banthers: but the greater part remained quiet in their habitations, and the flower of the infurgents was not, as antecedently, composed of the Vendeans, but of the mixed and numerous mass of the inhabitants of the feveral provinces of Britanny, Poitou, Maine, Anjou, and others lying on the banks of the Loire.

Those who chiefly figured among them, were that body of men known by the appellation of Chouans, and whose origin and primitive tranfactions and character have already been noticed. From thele, the whole infurrection now borrowed that denomination; and, as many of their actions had been marked with blood thirstiness, as well as rapacity, those who were united with them, incurred the like imputation; whence they became equally dreaded and abhorred, and acquired the general name of plunderers and murderers among the adherents to the republican party, of which their detestation was no less notorious, as well as their zeal and readiness to down its partifans to extermination.

This reciprocal disposition was of course productive of many atrocious The republican foldiery shewed them little mercy, considering them in hardly any other light han that of highway robbers. It became at last a war of reciprocal destruction, not only of men, but of whatever they possessed. Slaughter and conflagration went hand in hand, and the country round prefented a picture of death and detolation. No man nor family were late in their houles: the republican foldiers broke into them, and massacred all they found. The oppolite parties waylayed each other on the roads, and gave no quarter. Their whole attention was employed in framing and perpetrating thole horrors, and executing every icheme of public and private vengeance.

The pretext, for the commission of all those enormities, was the tame on both fides: the royalists charged the republicans with having violated the late treaty, and thefe retorted the accusation. The truth was, that neither party much approved of it, and had acceded to it, rather as a suspension of hostilities, than as an absolute pacification, intending to abide by the conditions agreed to, no longer than they found it convenient. Hence no confidence was established on either fide, and they both watched each others motions with equal suspicion of their malevolence.

After a long fluctuation of fortune between the contending parties, the principal commander of the royalists, the famous Charette, encountered a strong body of the republicans near Roche Suryan, on the twenty-eighth of December, 1795, and was totally defeated. His men were so completely routed, that he was unable to rally them. They fled from the field in various directions. and were so closely pursued, that they dispersed on every side, and he was never able again to embody them. He was compelled, for his own lafety, to disguise himself like a peafant. In this dress he wandered about the country without a companion, in hope of escaping his pursuers, and gaining the sea side, where he might find an opportunity of flying to England. But the fearch made after him was fo strict and incessant, that he fell into the hands of a patrole that was in quest of him. He was tried and fentenced to be fliot. His execution took place at Nantes on the twenty-eighth His affociate, the well of April. known Stoflet, who had also been made a prisoner, suffered death in the fame manner, about two months before him.

The fall of these two principal chiefs of the infurrection, especially the former, gave it a blow from which it did not recover. Neither the Vendeans, nor the Chouans who had joined them, feemed to have been overcome by despondency on this occasion, and they still continued to maintain their ground with as much obstinacy as ever: but whether none of their remaining leaders were of equal ability, or that their people did not repote the fame confidence in them, their defeats became continual, and fuch numbers were flaughtered, that the generality of the infurgents began to loofe courage, particularly after the losses of those who commanded them. No less than thirteen of their principal chiefs fell in battle, and ten others were taken and condemned to be shot.

The death of these officers proved an irreparable los: they were men of conspicuous resolution, and had long conducted the affairs of their party with remarkable skill and perseverance in the arduous trials they had so frequently experienced.— None at this period seemed capable of supplying their place; but what chiefly accelerated the submission of the infurgents, was the lenity with which the government came to the resolution of treating all those who laid down their arms. A proclamation had already been issued, during the heat of hostilities, inviting the infurgents to return to obedience, under a solemn promise of burying their revolt in oblivion, and of granting them every just concession they could require: the directory availed itself of the advantages it had obtained, to convince those who had been concerned in the infurrection, that the only use the government would make of the fituation to which they were now reduced, would be to deprive them of the means of exciting disturbances; and that, provided they acquiesed in the injunctions laid upon them, they would be placed on the fame footing with their fellows citizens, and enjoy fimilar rights.

So anxious was the directory to impress them with this persuasion, that it published a circular address to the commanders of the troops employed in suppressing the infurrection, strictly enjoining them to keep the intentions of the government in constant view, and not to exceed them by needless acts of feverity.

But the animofity of the republicans against the insurgents was such, that they occasionally exercised great rigour over them, to the serious concern of the directory, which reprehended, with marked severity, those who had been guilty of these excesses. It anxiously reiterated its orders to abstain from all harshness, and to receive all who submitted with a generous sorgiveness of the past; considering them as deluded brethren, whose attachment it was the duty of their conquerors to win

G 2] through

through mildness and conciliation, which were the only effectual means of restoring them to the bosom of their country, and converting them into good citizens.

In pursuance of these maxims, every district that surrendered its arms, and punctually conformed to the conditions prescribed, was immediately placed under the completest protection of the laws, and no infraction of these suffered to their detriment.

The meafures thus taken, by the directory, availed them more than military coercion would have done. The dread of punishment had kept feveral bodies of the infurgents together: but the moment they found that a pardon would be granted to them, on acceding to the terms of the proclamation that had fo long been circulated; and to which government was yet willing to adhere, they repaired in crowds to the head quarters of the republican generals, declaring their readiness to accept of the conditions proffered to them.

These submissions gradually took place in the course of March and April. By the close of this month, the infurrection was fo far quelled, that no apprehensions were entertained from the few straggling parties that remained, and which were looked upon as people determined to lead a predatory life, rather than in arms for the cause they had embraced, and of which no hopes any longer existed.

After fubduing this dangerous insurrection by force of arms, the next measure was to pacify the minds of those who had so obstinately perflited in it, and yielded at length only from the impractibility of any farther refistance. To this end, in addition to the punctual observance of the promises made to the infurgents, to induce them to lay down their arms, a number of publications, fuited to the capacity of those for whom they were defigned, were distributed in the districts where the infurrection had taken place: and those individuals on whose fidelity and attachment to republican principles the government could depend, were encouraged to take all possible pains to inculcate the propriety of uniting with the majority of their countrymen, and of unfeignedly abjuring those sentiments that had cost them so many lives, and plunged their families into fo much milery.

The necessity of acting conformably to this advice, became so apparent, that even the royalist generals thought themselves bound no longer to obstruct the submission of the infurgents, convinced that it was the only means left them to ef-A proclamation cape destruction. to this purpose was issued and signed by viscount Scepeaux, the principal in command in the western department. After lamenting the fruitless efforts to restore monarchy and the Catholic religion, it acknowledged that to perfift in this attempt would only be conducting the infurgents to the flaughter. horted them, therefore, to defift, and yield to superior force, in order to fecure their lives, and be permitted to dwell in fafety at their homes.

An exhortation of this kind did not fail to convince them of the inutility of any farther opposition: and, by the latter end of July, the country of the infurgents was fo thoroughly pacified, that martial law was repealed, and civil government reflored.

CHAP.

CHAP. VI.

Address of the Directory to the French Armies.—Determination to carry the War into Italy.—Difficulties to be encountered in carrying this Plan into Execution.—Buonaparte.—The French Army, under his Command, makes rapid Progress in Italy.—The Austrians, under General Beaulieu, constantly repulsed, yet not dispirited.—Various Actions.—Suspension of Arms agreed on between the French and Piedmontese Armies. - General Beaulieu re-crosses the Po, for covering the Countries to the North of that River .- At Paris, Negociation for Peace between the King of Sardinia and the French Republic.—Treaty of Peace between France and Sardinia ratified by the Legislative Bodies of France.—Exultation and Confidence of the French.—Improved by Buonaparte, for the Purpose of leading on the Army to farther Exploits.—Address to the Army.—General Object and Tendency of Buonaparte's private Conversation.—Homage paid to the Merit of Buonaparte and the Army, by the Directory.—Buonaparte puts his Army in Motion .- Crosses the Po, and leaves General Benulien to break up his Camp.—Armistice between the French Army and the Duke of Parma. -The French advance toward the Capital of Lombardy, -Battle of Lodi. The Austrians retreat to Mantua.—The French proceed to Milan, where the French General allows his People some Days of Repose.

X7HILE the armies of the republic were fuccessfully employed in suppressing those internal commotions, the directory was anxioully taken up with the plans that were to be profecuted, as foon as domestic difficuties were overcome. In the end of April, they thought themselves so completely delivered from all apprehentions at home, that they began immediately to turn their attention to those two undertakings, on the fortunate termination of which the future security of the republic would be established beyond the possibility of being shaken by any external force.

The events of the last campaign had been so different, from those of the preceding, that many people in France, as well as in other parts of Europe, began to confider the enthusiasm of the French as confiderably abated. But the sanguine disposition of the generality of the French attributed their deseats on the Rhine solely to the unskilful management of their generals; and still remained convinced, that, had they been judiciously commanded, they would have been victorious as before.

In order to encourage this perfuation, the directory published an address to the different armies, previously to their taking the field. It was conceived in very animated terms, and recalled to their notice the various exploits they had performed in the two foregoing years, the patience with which they had borne not only the hardships of the field, but the pressures of want, and the privation of every convenience and comfort, and the invincible fortitude with which they had persisted, amidst all these difficulties, to discharge the duties of brave foldiers. It exhorted them to persevere as they had done: fresh toils and victories were expected from them by their country, before its enemies would confent to reasonable terms It held out the most of peace. flattering hopes of fuccess; and that they were at the eve of terminating their patriotic labours, the issue of which would procure fafety to their country, and glory to themselves; who then would return to its bolom, to enjoy the love and gratitude fo justly due to them from their fellowcitizens, and so nobly earned by their fervices.

[G3]

This address was sent to all the military bodies of the republic, and read to them with great solemnity. It was received with much respect and satisfaction. The officers and soldiers formally renewed their assurances of sidelity to the republic, and their readiness to lay down their lives in its desence.

The object which the directory had now chiefly in contemplation was to carry the war into Italy. The Austrians were prepared to pass the Rhine in great force: the attachment of the Belgians to their French conquerors might waver; the sate of another campaign was uncertain; much was to be lost, nothing gained, in the Netherlands, by an appeal to arms, on a question, which, if the authority of the republic should be confirmed by the lapse of even a few years, they might. confider as already decided. In this fituation of affairs they determined to divert the energy and attention of the emperor from his Belgian territories, where his authority had been so often disputed, to his Italian dominions, where his will was a law, and from whence he drew still greater supplies. While they cut off the emperors resources in Italy, they would add to their own. They did not doubt of reaping immense, benefit from the possession of that country, the inhabitants of which were known generally to have little affection for their prefent fovereigns. The people of the duchies of Milan, Parma, and Modena, were peculiarly disaffected, and, the nobility and clergy excepted, feemed rather to defire, than to dread, a change of The commonalty, in the republics of Venice and Genoa, professed no attachment to their rulers. In Tuscany, and the papal dominions, there were numbers of discontented; and in the kingdom of Naples the number was still greater.

Among these multitudes there were fome individuals enough to declare their diffatisfaction at their respective governments, notwithstanding the perfonal dangers to which they exposed themselves by so daring a conduct. But what was more, some had the courage to entertain a private correspondence with France, and explicitly to folicit fome of the principal persons in the republic to invade Italy, where, they assured them, they would find more friends than foes among the natives, and meet with no opposition but from the Austrians, and their few adherents, among the possessors of places and employments in their fervice.

places

Induced by these various motives, the directory resolved to begin military operations abroad, with the attack of a country, where the princes, one excepted, the king of Sardinia, could place little reliance on the loyalty of their subjects; and where this prince had already lost such a portion of his territories, as greatly endangered the remainder.

Nevertheless, obstacles of a serious nature presented themselves. The undertaking was, indeed, arduous. Italy, proverbially the grave of the French, was viewed by the generality of people as unconquerable on the fide of France. roned by mountains, the passes of which were fortified with the utmost art, and guarded with numerous well-disciplined troops, it seemed calculated for an invincible relistance. The French, after reducing many forts and fortresses in the heart of the Alps, had not been able to make an effectual impression on Piedmont, without which an entrance into Italy appeared impracticable. The powers interested in the preservation of Italy, aware of the hoftile intentions of France, had made ample preparations for defence. The emperor's forces amounted to eighty thousand well-disciplined men, commanded by excellent officers and generals, and provided with every species of warlike necessaries. The king of Sardinia's army was fixty thousand strong, exclusive of mili-The pope and the king of Naples were occupied in embo--dying as many troops as their circumstances would permit; and the latter had dispatched two or three thousand horse to serve in the Imperial army.

Though the strength with which the French proposed to attack their enemies in Italy was much inferior in number to theirs, and far from being so well supplied, it was composed of hardy and resolute soldiers, filled with enthusiasm, and impatient to enter into action, and to indemnify themselves for the sufferings they had undergone upon the rocky and barren coast, to which they had long been confined, through want of reinforcements to enable them to move forward against the enemy.

The supplies of men and ammunition did not arrive till the beginning of April, when the French determined immediately to commence their operations. They were cantoned along the coast of that sea, called the river of Genoa, within three leagues of that city; and the Austrians and Piedmontese were posted on the mountains opposite to them.

The French were commanded by general Buonaparte, already noticed in the action between the conventional troops and the sections of Paris,* in October, 1795, a native of Corfica, born, as it were, a commander, and uniting the intrepidity of an ancient Roman, with the lubilety and contrivance of a modern Italian; and both these fortified and improved by a liberal, as well as military, education. Hardly thirty years of age, he had signalized his military abilities, not only on that but some other very decisive occasions, and acquired a reputation that had raifed him to the highest degree of esteem in his prosession.

The troops under his command were little more than fifty thousand men: but he possessed their entire considence, and was reputed equal to the arduous task he had ventured to undertake.

The Austrians were under general Beaulieu, an officer of great experience and talents, though he had been unfortunate in leveral actions with the French in the Netherlands. On the ninth of April heattacked a French post and forced it: on the the tenth he advanced upon them, and carried all their entrenchments but one. Here he was arrested by the obstinate bravery of the officer who commanded it. Rampon, chief of brigade, who conceived that the fate of the day depended on the preservation of this post, made his officers and soldiers fwear never to abandon it: They defended it accordingly during the whole night with fuch invincible firmness, that the Austrians were constantly repulsed. In the morning of the eleventh, Buonaparte, by a circuitous movement, fell upon the rear and flank of the enemy, who were completely routed, with the loss of fifteen hundred killed, and more than two thousand taken. This battle was fought at a place called Montenotta.

Eager to improve this victory, Buonaparte pursued the Austrians, who had retreated to a strong position at a place called Millasimo: but general Angereau forcing the passages leading to it, the Austrians retired to the ruins of an old castle, which general Provara, who commanded them, hastened to surround with an intrenchment, where he stood several attacks, and defended himself resolutely for five days. This afforded time to the Austrians to rally from the disorder into which they had been thrown. They advanced in confiderable force, and charged the French with great The dispute was long and vigour. bloody: the Austrians and Piedmontese made repeated efforts to liberate the troops in the castle, and directed their attacks on the centre of the French: but there stood their ground immoveably, while their two wings turned the right and left of the adverse army, the rear of which was affailed at the same time by another division. Surrounded in this unexpected manner, they fuftained a dreadful defeat; two thoufand were flain in the action, and upwards of eight thouland made prisoners, including the corps under general Provara, which had fo much distinguished itself by the defence of the castle. This great victory was obtained on the fourteenth of April. Among the killed were fome officers of high distinction; and of the taken one was a general, and near thirty colonels, beside inserior officers. Between twenty and thirty cannon fell into the hands of the French, with fifteen standards, and an immense quantity of stores and field-equipage. Two French generals, Banal and Quanin, fell in this battle, which cost the victors a number of their bravest men.

Though twice defeated in so decisive a manner, general Beaulieu was by no means dispirited: collecting as many of his scattered troops, as formed a body of seven thousand men he again attacked the French with great impetuosity, the next morning, and drove them from their incampment at a village called Dego, where they had expected to repose themselves after the satigues of the preceeding day. This unexpected attack, so far discomposed them, that they were thrown into disorder, and compelled to abandon their post, after having thrice endeavoured to retake it.

unex-

More than half of the day had Seen spent in these fruitless attempts, when Buonaparte, anxious to recover a post, without which, the advantages gained by his two victories, would have been frustrated, immediately gave orders for a large hody to form in front of the enemy, and occupy their attention, while another charged them on their left, posted at Dego. The intrepidity with which the French generals and officers headed their men, decided the fate of the day. After a vigorous defence, the Austrians were in their turn obliged to give ground, and leave the field to the French, with the loss of near two thousand men, of whom, about fifteen hundred were made prisoners: on the fide of the French, numbers also fell, and among thele general Causa, one of their best officers.

Thus, in the space of five days, no less than three battles were fought, in every one of which the French were victorious. The Austrian and Piedmontese armies had, in the course of these engagements, been separated from each other: which enabled Buonaparte to effect a junction with a confiderable body of his army, before which the Piedmontese division had retired, not daring to oppose it in combination with the corps under general Augereau who had joined it. After diflodging the Piedmontese from their redoubts, at Montezimo, this officer followed them to their camp before the town of Cava. It was strongly fortified, but Augereau attacked it with fuch vigour, that, after defending it the whole day with great courage, the Piedmontele withdrew in the night of the fixteenth, abandoning Cava, which furrendered to the French. After lome retrograde motions, wherein they were closely pressed by the French, who met however with some checks. a general engagement took place near Mondovi on the twenty-fecond. General Colli, who commanded the Piedmontese, had drawn up his army to great advantage; his centre being covered by a strong redoubt, which was resolutely defended for a long time against all the efforts of the French, who lost numbers in its attack. It was carried at length after repeated affaults: upon which general Colli thought it prudent to retreat. His loss amounted to about twelve hundred men, of whom a thousand were taken. Of these, three were generals, and four colonels. One general was flain, and eleven standards fell into the hands of the French, who lost also one of their generals, and a confiderable number of men.

The Piedmontese army, after its defeat, crossed the river Stura, and took a strong position between Coni and Cheraico. Here it was attacked, on the 25th, by the French, who compelled general Colli to retire from the post he occupied at Fossano. They made themselves masters of Cherafco, where they took a quantity of cannon and large magazines, and the Piedmontese withdrew to Carignano, in order to be nearer to Turin, for its protection against the French army, which was now advanced to within nine leagues of that city.

The defeat of his army, at Mondovi, had already determined the king of Sardinia to make overtures of peace to Buonaparte. General

Colli

Colli was directed to apply to him for that purpose, and proposed a suspension of arms, while the peace was negociating. But he resuled to suspend his operations, unless the king delivered two strong towns into his hands, as pledges of the sincerity of his intentions, and immediately dispatched commissioners to Paris.

The king's fituation was so critical, that he was obliged to comply with this requisition, and the French were put in possession of Cava, Coni, and Tortona. The Austrians, thus deprived of their ally, were obliged to fall back on the Milanese. In their march they attempted to sieze the town of Alessandria, belonging to the king of Sardinia, but the commandant prevented the execution of this design, and Beaulieu hastened to cross the Po, in order to cover himself and the country to the north of that river.

In the mean time, negociations for peace were carried on at Paris, between the king of Sardinia and the French republic, which imposed fevere conditions on this unfortunate prince. He was constrained to vield up Savoy, the patrimony of his ancestors for many ages, together with the city and territory of Nice, and a tract of land, which the conquerors entitled the Department of the Maritime Alps. A new arrangement was made of the frontiers on each fide, highly advantageous to France. He confented to stop and put an end to all prosecutions against any of his subjects for their political opinions, to withdraw himself from the coalition, and to apologife for his conduct towards the republic. Such were the principal terms of the treaty.

In this manner was the prince completely humbled, who had long been considered as the most secure of any, by his position, against the inroads of the French: his predecessors, though frequently hard presented by them, had never been reduced to such extremities, and new ver experienced such disgrace. By this treaty he was despoiled of all power and consequence; and though he retained the title of the king, he remained no more than the norminal sovereign of his dominions.

The reduction of the king of Sardinia was an event that changed at once the whole face of Italy. That prince was no longer master of the barriers that nature has fixed between that country and France, and from which he derived his principal importance. They were now in the hands of the French, and the Italian powers, deprived of this rampart of their dominion, faw themselves at the mercy of a people, who had, for many centuries, endeavoured to obtain a footing among them, with the manifest design of fubjecting them to their influence.

These assonishing successes could not fail to inspire the French armies, that had obtained them, with the highest degree of exultation: nor did their commander forget to improve the fentiments of felf applause and confidence, manisested by them, into that disposition of mind which would lead them on to those farther exploits he had in contemplation. He issued an address to them on the twenty-fixth of April, three days after the application for peace from the Sardinian monarch, wherein he recapitulated, in a truly classical and energetic style, the glory they had acquired, and reprefented that which lay still before

"You have precipitated yourselves, like a torrent, from the heights of the Appennines. have routed and dispersed all who have opposed your progress. Piedmont, delivered from Austrian tyranny, displays its natural sentiments of peace and friendship for France. Milan is ours, and the republican flag flies over all Lombardy. The dukes of Parma and Modena owe their political existence to your generosity. The army, which with so much pride threatened you, has no barrier of protection against your courage; the Po, the Tessin, and the Adda, have been unable to stop you a fingle day; those boasted bulwarks of Italy have been infufficient to delay your progress; you have furmounted them as rapidly as you passed the Appennines. So much fuccess has carried you to the bosom of your country: your representatives have ordained a sete, dedicated to your victories, which will be celebrated in all the communes of the republic. Your fathers, your mothers, your wives, your fifters, your lovers, will enjoy your fuccess, and boast with pride, that they belong to you. Yes, foldiers, you have done much; but does there remain nothing more to be done? Though we have known how to vanquish, we have not known how to profit of our victories. Polterity will reproach us with having terminated our course in Lombardy: but already I fee you run to arms; a flothful repose fatigues you. Let us depart! we have yet forced marches to make, enemies to subdue, laurels to gather, injuries to revenge. Let those tremble who have whetted the poignards of civil war in France, who have basely affaffinated our ministers, and burned

our ships at Toulon: the hour of vengeance and retribution is now at hand. But let the people remain tranquil; we are friends to all the people, and more particularly the descendants of Brutus, of Scipio, and the great men whom we have taken for our models. Re-establish the capitol, and place there with honor the statues of the heroes that rendered it celebrated; awaken the Roman people, debased by many centuries of flavery. Such will be the fruit of your victories; they will form an epoch for posterity; you will have the immortal glory of changing the face of the first country in Europe. The free French people, respected by the whole world, will give to Europe a glorious peace, which will indemnify them for the facrifices they have made during fix years; you will then return to your homes, and your fellow citizens will fay, thewing you, this man was of the army of Such were the ideas which the French general exerted himself to impress upon the public, as well as on his own people. His private conversations were of the same tendency, and he omitted no opportunity of representing the expedition of the French into Italy, as intended to lay the foundation of a total deliverance of the inhabitants from the government of strangers, and the tyranny of domestic rulers.

Sentiments of this description were not unacceptable to multitudes in every part of Italy. The majority of the natives could not but perceive the humiliation of being subject to princes born and hred in foreign countries: they could not, from that circumstance alone, feel that attachment for them which nonade was kept up, on both fides,

during great part of the day.

But the French general was convinced, that unless he succeeded in effecting a passage over the bridge, his failure would be conftrued into a defeat, and the reputation of the French arms would fuffer in the opinion of the public. Full of this idea, which was certainly founded, he determined to try every effort, and to encounter every perfonal risk, in order to carry a point on which so much appeared at issue. Forming together the felectest bodies of his army, he led them in person to the attack of the bridge, in the midst of a most tremendous The intrepidity he displayed was necessary to confirm the coutage of his men, whom the greatness of the danger, seemed to stagger: but his presence, and that of all the chief officers in the French army, animated the foldiers to fuch a degree, that they rufhed forward with an impetuosity which nothing was able to withstand. They crossed the bridge and assailed the whole line of the Austrian artillery, which was instantly broken. They fell with equal fury on the troops that advanced to charge them, who were thrown into diforder, and put to flight on every fide. The victory was complete. Had it not been for the excessive fatigue undergone by the French, a great proportion of whom had marched ten leagues that day to join the army, the loss of the imperialists though great would have been much greater. It was owing to the approach of night that the French desisted from the pursuit. Favoured by darkness, Beaulien withdrew from the sield of battle, after losing upwards of two thousand men, killed, wounded, and taken, and twenty pieces of cannon. The loss of the French was considerable: the crossing of the bridge alone cost them near a thousand of their boldest men, who were destroyed by the batteries pointed on it from the Austrian side of the river.

This defeat of the Imperial army appeared so decisive to marshal Beaulieu that he durst not venture to stop the progress of the victors towards Milan. Collecting the wrecks of his army, he made a speedy retreat towards Mantua, pursued by a large body of the French who, in their way, seized on Pizzighitona and Cremona, two places of note. The main body under Buonaparte proceeded to Milan, after taking Pavia, where all the Austrian magazines sell into the hands of the French.

Buonaparte entered Milan the fifteenth of May, five days after the battle of Lodi, which, conformably to his opinion and that of his rival, Beaulieu, proved wholly decifive of the fate of Lombardy. Here the French general thought it necessary to allow his people some days of repose, after the unceasing toils of a whole month, marked by uninterrupted victories.

He was high in the esteem of Buonaparte, who had formed the greatest expectations from him, and grie-voully lamented his fall.

The duke of Parma, in whose fight, as it were, the French had crossed the Po, and defeated the Austrians twice in one day, did not dare to prolong the contest on his part, with so irresistable a soe. He requested an armistice from Buonaparte, and obtained it on condition of paying a large contribution in money, horses, and provisions, of delivering into the possession of the French, twenty capital paintings to be chosen by them, and of sending without delay commissaries to Paris, to conclude a peace with the republic: on these terms the duke procured a neutrality for his dominions, which was concluded on the ninth of May.

The uninterrupted successes of the French had now struck their enemies with universal consterna-Beaulieu himself, though an expert and intrepid warrior, thought it more prudent to act on the defensive, than to attack them with troops continually defeated bravery of the Austrians, though undeniable, had not been proof against their impetuous valour and unyielding enthusiasm. They seemed to have reverfed the character formerly attributed to them, of impatience and unsteadiness, and to have asfumed that of firmness and con-Stancy.

Their exploits had now opened to them the road to Milan, the capture of which would give them the possession of Lombardy, and effect the expulsion of the Austrians from This was the project of Buonaparte, whose glory would be completed by fuch an atchievement;

and whose thirst of same would thereby be gratified to the utmost extent of his wishes.

Between him and that capital of Austrian Italy lay the remains of the Imperial forces, determined to risk another battle for its preservation. They were posted on the other fide of the Adda, over which stood a long bridge, which Beaulieu had intended to break down, but was prevented from doing by the quick. approach of the French general. Itwas protected, however, by so numerous an artillery, that the Auftrians did not imagine the French. would be able to force a passage over it.

On the tenth of May, the French army arrived in fight of this bridge, before which stood the town of Lodi, filled with the Imperial troops; which were also posted in every place around it in the most advantageous order of battle that the fituation of the town and its environs would admit. Beaulieu had, on this occasion, displayed uncommon skill, conscious that, on the issue of this day, the fate of Auftria in Italy wholely depended, and that, were he defeated, all future resistance would be vain.

The battle began at nine in the morning. The approaches to Lodi were vigouroufly attacked by the. French, who, after an obstinate dispute, drove the Austrians into that town; where a resolute fight ensued: but the French had again the advantage, and forced them to retreat. across the bridge to their main body, which was drawn up in order of battle, with formidable batteries on their right and left to guard the passage of the bridge. A battery was planted on the opposite side by the French, and a violent cannonade was kept up, on both sides,

during great part of the day.

But the French general was convinced, that unless he succeeded in effecting a passage over the bridge, his failure would be conftrued into a defeat, and the reputation of the French arms would fuffer in the opinion of the public. Full of this idea, which was certainly founded, he determined to try every effort, and to encounter every perfonal risk, in order to carry a point on which so much appeared at issue. Forming together the felectest bodies of his army, he led them in person to the attack of the bridge, in the midst of a most tremendous The intrepidity he displayed was necessary to confirm the coutage of his men, whom the greatness of the danger, seemed to stagger: but his prefence, and that of all the chief officers in the French army, animated the foldiers to fuch a degree, that they rufhed forward with an impetuofity which nothing was able to withstand. They crossed the bridge and affailed the whole line of the Austrian artillery, which was instantly broken. They fell with equal fury on the troops that advanced to charge them, who were thrown into diforder, and put to flight on every fide. The victory was complete. Had it not been for the excessive satigue undergone by the French, a great proportion of whom had marched ten leagues that day to join the army, the loss of the imperialists though great would have been much greater. It was owing to the approach of night that the French delisted from the Favoured by darkness, pursuit. Beaulieu withdrew from the field of battle, after losing upwards of two thousand men, killed, wounded, and taken, and twenty pieces of cannon. The loss of the French was confiderable: the croffing of the bridge alone cost them near a thousand of their boldest men, who were destroyed by the batteries pointed on it from the Austrian fide of the river.

This defeat of the Imperial army appeared so decisive to marshal Beaulieu that he durst not venture to stop the progress of the victors towards Milan. Collecting the wrecks of his army, he made a speedy retreat towards Mantua, pursued by a large body of the French who, in their way, seized on Pizzighitona and Cremona, two places of note. The main body under Buonaparte proceeded to Milan, after taking Pavia, where all the Austrian magazines sell into the hands of the French.

Buonaparte entered Milan the fifteenth of May, five days after the battle of Lodi, which, conformably to his opinion and that of his rival, Beaulieu, proved wholly decifive of the fate of Lombardy. Here the French general thought it necessary to allow his people some days of repose, after the unceasing toils of a whole month, marked by uninterrupted victories.

CHAP: VII.

Exultation of the French at the Successes of their Armies.—Their Army in Italy animated by the Praises of their Countrymen, and the Conversation as well as the Proclamations of Buonaparte to a high Passion for Glory.— Enters the Duchy of Modena.—Spoliation of Monuments of Antiquity and Art.—Abhorrence of the Italian Nobility and Clergy towards the French greater than that of the inferior Classes.—A general Insurrection, ready to break out, quashed by the Vigilance and Promptitude of Buonaparte.—The Austrians, under General Beaulieu, with the Connivance of the Venetians, take Possession of Peschieva.—Buonaparte advances against Beaulieu, who retreats to the Tyrolese.—The Venetians tremble before the French.—Dismiss from their Territories the Brother of the late King and Claimant of the Crown of France.—Buonaparte takes Possession of Verona.—Blockades Mantua.—Prepares to march into the Tyrolese.—Detained by Insurrections in the Districts, known under the Name of Imperial Fiess.—These being Suppressed, he carries his Arms to the Southward .- Reduces Tortona, Bologna, and Urbino.—Menaces Rome.—Armistice between the Pope and Buonaparte.—Suspension of Hostilities with Naples.—Buonaparte the Friend and Patron of Men of Learning and Science.—Ambitious Views of the French Republic.—Insurrection in Lugo.—Quelled, and the City reduced by the French.—The Blockade of Mantua converted into a close Siege.—Raised by Marshal Wurmser.—Actions between the French Army and that of the Austrians, reinforced by Detachments from Mantua.—Remarkable Instance of Presence of Mind in Buonaparte.—The Austrians driven back beyond the Adige.

THE news of these astonishing successes had, in the mean time, silled all France with exultation. A splendid sessival was appointed, at Paris, by the Directory, in order to celebrate them with suitable magnificence. To render it more solemn, it was accompanied with speeches to the citizens, and eulogiums of the victorious army, pronounced by Carnot, the president of the day, and calculated to animate the public against the enemies of France, particularly the English; and to encourage the nation to bear up chearfully against the pressures of the war, by the prospect of terminating it finally to the advantage and glory of France.

During an interval of five days rest, allowed by Buonaparte to his soldiers, he did not forget to address them in his usual manner, and to excite their ardour, by a recital of their exploits, and a representation of the honours and applause bestowed upon them by their country, and by a prospect of the future triumphs awaiting them.

flowed

He was now meditating expeditions into the territories of those princes of whose enmity to France sufficient proofs had been given. A detachment of his army had already entered the duchy of Modena, the sovereign of which had fled to Venice with his treasures. From this city he deputed a minister to the French general, with whom he concluded a suspension of arms on much the same conditions as those granted to the duke of Parma.

The spoliation of the repositories' of art, which was now annexed to the conditions of treaties with the Italian princes, proved one of the most vexatious as well as mortifying circumstances of the French invafion. The monuments of painting and of statuary, which adorned their palaces, cities, and churches, were viewed by the natives with a mixture of delight and veneration. They entertained a species of affection for them; and, in the presence of some of them, they placed not a They had belittle confidence. come a kind of tutelary deities and household gods. The Italians were lensible of emotions not altogether dissimilar to those of the Israelite Micah, into whole house armed men from Dan entered, and took away " the graven image, and the ephod, and the feraphim, and the molten image."* In one respect, the oppressions of the French in Italy were greater than those of the northern hordes under Attila and Odoacer; for those chiefs did not trouble the Romans with demands of pictures, statues, sculptures. It seems to be the fate of the great models of the arts, like the arts themselves, to travel from the east, by the west, to the north. Perhaps their tour in this direction is not yet terminated deprive the poor Italians of objects to long endeared to them, by habit and possession, seemed an act of tyranny exercised upon the vanquissied in the wantonness of power. Those objects had been respected by all parties, in the viciflitude of those events that had so frequently Tubjected the places that contained them to different masters. French were the first who had conceived the idea of feizing them as a matter of mere property. Herein they were accused of consulting their vanity rather than their taste for the fine arts. The Romans, in their triumphant periods, had plundered the Greeks of all the master-pieces they could find in their country. This appeared to the French a precedent fit for their imitation, and a fanction for robbing the Italians of what they esteemed the most valuable part of their property, and the most honourable proof they still retained of their former superiority those departments of genius: The conduct of the French, in tearing the monuments of antiquity and art from Italy, and carrying them to Paris, was univerfally condemned and execrated by all civilized nations. It was, in truth, in fome measure, plucking the rose from the tree.

Motives of this nature, conspiring with the dislatisfaction experienced by multitudes, at the irreverence ^{* &}quot;Ye have taken away the gods which I made, and what have I more?"—Judges xviii. 24.

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

which the French testified for the religious practices of the natives, enabled those who hated them, on this account, to instill their hatred into others, and to instame their indignation against men who prefumed to more sense in those matters than other nations.

The two classes, whose inveteracy to the French was most notorious, were the nobility and the clergy; as the French did not scruple to avow their enmity and contempt for both, it was natural that these should hold them in abhorrence. In their speeches and conversations, public and private, the former feldom failed to represent the nobles as tyrants, and the priests as impostors. The depression which both these orders of men had fufferred in France, shewed what was intended for them in other parts of Europe, were the French to fucceed in the vast defign imputed to them, of intirely subverting the political and religious system of this quarter of the globe.

Actuated by these apprehensions, feveral of the most resolute of the nobility, and most zealous of the clergy, resolved, it was said, to incite the commonality to rife against the French, on the first opportunity that should seem favourable to such The day fixed upon for its execution, was the twenty-fourth. of May. Early in the morning, Buonaparte set out for Lodi, at the head of a strong detachment. had hardly reached that place, when he was informed, by an express, that an almost general insurrection was fpreading through Lombardy. The alarm bells were ringing every where, and the peafantry and lower classes throughout the country, instigated by the nobles and the clergy, were up in arms, and intent on the Vol. XXXVIII.

massacre of all the French they could meet with. Rumours were circulated, that Beaulieu, strongly reinforced, was on his march to Milan, and that a number of French detachments had been surprised and put to the fword. Incenfed at the ideas of equality upheld by the French, the nobles had dismissed their domestics, telling them, that being their equals, they could no longer employ them as fervants. The partifans of Austria were, in short, exerting all their activity to raise commotions, and no place was free from them.

On the receipt of this intelligence, Buonaparte hasted back to Milan with a large body of horse and soot. He arrested a number of suspected persons, and ordered those to be shot who had been taken in arms. He intimated to the archbishop, and to the clergy and nobles of the city, that they should be responsible for its tranquillity. A fine was imposed for every servant discharged, and every precaution taken to prevent the conspiracy from gaining ground.

It was principally at Pavia, that the compirators were the most numerous. They had seized on the citadel, guarded by a small party of French, whom they made prisoners. joined by some thousands of peafants, they relolved to defend the town, and refused admittance to Buonaparte, on his fummoning them to furrender. But a body of French granadiers burst open the gates, on which those who had the custody of the French, who had been compelled to furrender in the citadel, fet them at liberty. None of them were missing: had violent hands been laid upon them, the determination was taken to destroy Pavia, and to erect on its fite a pillar with this inscription, "Here stood the city of Pavia."

[H]

In order to deter the inhabitants of this, and the other towns inclined to stir up insurrections, the promoters of that at Pavia were sentenced to be shot, and two hundred hostages, for their peaceable behaviour, were delivered to Buonaparte, who sent them to France. He next issued a proclamation, declaring, that those who did not lay down their arms within twenty-sour hours, and take an oath of obedience to the French republic, should be treated as rebels, and their houses committed to the slames.

The nobles and priests in the infurgent districts were to be arrested and fent to France. The places within the precincts of which a Frenchman was affaffinated, were condemned to pay triple taxes till the assassiven up. fame fine was laid on places where concealed arms and ammunition were found. Persons of rank and fortune who excited the people to revolt, either by difmissing their fervants, or by holding inimical difcourses against the French, were to. be fent to France, and to forseit part of their estates.

Injunctions and declarations of this nature were posted up in every place of note throughout the Milanese. Particular precautions were taken for the security of the city of Milan, the castle of which still remained in possession of the Austrians, who might, in case of any formidable insurrection, have given it essession assistance.

Freed from the perplexity occafioned by these disturbances, Buonaparte prepared to prosecute the plans he had been forming. The broken forces of the Austrians had in their retreat taken resuge on the Venetian territory. Hither they were closely pursued by the French. But previously to the commencement of operations in the Venetian state, Buonaparte was careful to give formal notice of his intentions to the senate.

The disposition of the Venetian government, towards France, was Justly suspected to be inimical. Had it been friendly before the entrance of the French into Italy, their fuccesses, and the powerful footing they had now obtained, would have rendered them too dangerous to be viewed with a favourable eye. Situated between two fuch powers as France and Austria, Venice had no inclination to befriend the one more than. the other, and would gladly have been delivered from the proximity of both. Unwilling to offend a state, between which, and the French republic, an amicable intercourfe subsisted, the French general published an address to that government and people, wherein he affured them, that in following the enemies of France into the Venetian territories, he would observe the strictest discipline, and treat the inhabitants with all the amity and confideration due to the ancient friendship existing between the two nations.

In the mean time, the Austrians had taken possession of Peschiera, by the connivance of the Venetians, to whom that town belonged. Here Beaulieu hoped to be able to make a stand, till succours arrived to him from Germany. Buonaparte, desirous to expel him from Italy, or to compel him to surrender, advanced to that town, intending to cut off his retreat to the Tyrol, by the eastern side of the lake of Garda. Early in

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

in the morning of the thirteenth of May, several divisions of the French approached the bridge of Borghetto, by which Buonaparte proposed to effect a passage over the Mincio, and furround Beaulieu's army. Austrians made the utmost efforts to defend the bridge; but the French crossed it after a warm action: the Austrian general perceiving their intent, withdrew in haste from his position at Peschiera, and retired with the utmost expedition to the river Adige, which, having passed, he broke down all the bridges, to prevent the French from perfuing By these means he secured his retreat to the Tyrol, the only place of fafety now remaining to him.

Buonaparte might now confider himself as the undisputed master of Italy. He was fo much viewed in that light by the fenate of Venice, even previously to his passage of the Mincio, and the defeat of Beaulieu, that, foreseeing the danger of appearing too well inclined to the house of Bourbon, they had warned out of their territories the unfortunate brother of the late king of France, who had, on the death of his nephew, fon to that monarch, assumed the name of Lewis the eighteen, together with the royal title.

The circumstances of his dismission did the Venetians no credit: on that prince's demanding the sword, formerly presented to the senate by his ancestor, the celebrated Henry the sourth of France, as a token of his regard, they resuled to restore it, on pretext that a large sum of money, due from him to the state, had never been discharged.

Buonaparte took possession, on the third of June, of the city of Verona, the late residence of the French prince. He now determined to lay siege to Mantua, the only place of strength and importance lest to the emperor in Italy. The reduction of this fortress would effectually put an end to the influence of the court of Vienna, and transfer to France, the power and credit exercised by the emperor in all the affairs of Italy.

This was a deprivation to which the head of the house of Austria could not bear the idea of submitting, and every effort was resolved upon to prevent it. The ill success of Beaulieu had been such, that it was determined, at Vienna, to substitute another commander in his room. Marshal Wurmser, a veteran general in high esteem, was appointed to succeed him, though he had himself experienced several defeats by the French.

In hope of reducing Mantua before fuccours could arrive, Buonaparte determined to lay immediate fiege to it. On the fourth of June, it was invested by the French, who drove the out-posts into the town, which was now closely surrounded on every fide.

But the want of artillery prevented him from doing any more than blockading it. He had formed hopes of reducing that city by other means than a formal siege; which were to cut of all succours from Germany, and all provisions from its neighbourhood.

In order to effect the first of these purposes, he resolved to carry the war into the Imperial dominions in Germany, and to invade the Tyrol itself. This was doubtless a very bold and hazardous attempt: the natives of that difficult and mountainous country being not only a resolute and hardy race of men, but extremely attached to the samily of Austria; of whom they had for centuries continued the faithful and affectionate subjects.

[H2] resolate

100] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

Buonaparte did not, however, despair to make an impression upon them in his favour, through the medium of those addresses, of which he he had experienced the efficacy on other occasions. On the fourteenth of June he published a manifesto, wherein he informed them, that he intended to march through their country, in order to force the emperor to come into terms of peace with the French, who defired a termination of the war, not only for themselves, but for the benefit of all Europe, so long harrassed and defolated through the ambition of the Imperial family; for which alone the people of its dominions were involved in the horrors of war, as well as the people of France. The French, he told them, bore no hatred to the inhabitants of Germany, but folely to their ambitious fovereigns, and felt the fincerest sentiments of good will and fraternity for their oppressed subjects. He invited them, therefore, in the name of the French, to receive their army with hospitality, and abstain from all hostilities; promising the strictest honour and punctuality, in all dealings and transactions with them, but admonishing them, at the same time, that if compelled to have recourse to their arms, the French would, however, unwillingly, prove as terrible to them, as they had unvariably done to all their other enemies.

But while he was preparing to follow up this manifesto, by marching his army into the Tyrol, he was called away by the indispensible necessity of providing for the security of his conquests; menaced by a variety of unfavourable circumstances, against which vigorous exertions were required without delay.

The distance at which the forces of the French were at this time, from several districts, known by the name of Imperial Fiefs, and fituated on the borders of Piedmont, Genoa, and Tuscany, had emboldened the people there, who were in the interest of the emperor, to act a very hostile part against the French; they attacked their convoys, intercepted the communication with Buonaparte's army, and killed his couriers. Such were the complaints and reprefentations of the French. In order to put a stop to those proceedings, which were fecretly countenanced by those numerous enemies of the French, who did not dare to avow themselves, Buonaparte was obliged to dispatch large detachments from the main body of his forces, to repress them. This was the very end proposed by those insurrections, but the celerity with which he acted, quickly effected their suppression: the infurgents were compelled to fubmit, and deliver up their arms and hostages for their obedience. Heavy fines were imposed upon them, and ordinances issued; a refusal to comply with which, was made punishable with military execution.

The motive that led to this feverity, was the determination to proceed, without the danger of being recalled by new commotions, in the plan of extending, through the most distant parts of Italy, an unresisting subjugation to the dictates of France. Rome and Naples were the two states against which Buonaparte was intending to act. The enmity of both to the French was undeniable. The inability of the Pope to refift them was an additional motive to invade his territories? Ferrara, Bologna, and Urbino, all cities of importance, were taken possession of, and Rome itself was threatened.

The partifans of the French in Italy, and elsewhere, expressed open fatisfaction at their conduct towards the Roman see. The disreputable means by which it had rifen to power, and acquired the territories composing its sovereignty, were not forgotten. The arrogance of its pretentions, and the daily diminution of the reverence and veneration which it formerly commanded, jointly induced people to view its humiliation with pleasure. Conscious of these sentiments in the generality, Buonaparte felt the less scruple in the feverity of his transactions with the court of Rome, with which it feems he had determined to keep no measures; commissioned doubtless by the government of France to act. in this rigorous manner.

Terrified at this invasion of his dominions, and totally unable to refift it, the pope was reduced to the necessity of swing for an armi-Rice, which was granted to him, on conditions fimilar to those on which the dukes of Parma and Modena had obtained it: to which was added, the furrender of the cities of Bologna, Ferrara, and the citadel of Ancona, with the territorics of the two former, and a larger proportion of pictures and statues, and some hundreds of the most curious manuscripts from the Vatican library. The pope, with a refignation more becoming the of the ambitious and daring actions of his predecessors, yielded to necessity with the best grace in the world. He discharged his subjects from molesting, and even from reviling the French. He exhorted them to use them well, and even to pray for them. In former ages, the popes were wont most bitterty to curse even their own spiritual sons, when they shewed any degree of a refractory spirit. The piety of the church, fmothered by wealth and power, appeared to be revived with perfecution. The Christians seemed to return to the principles of "loving their enemies, bleffing thofe that curfed them, doing good to those that hated them, and praying for those who despitefully used and persecuted them." Had the pope with the Romish clergy been sincere in such professions of humility and benevolence, and credit been given to fuch professions, the church might have fprung, like a phænix, from its own ashes, and the tide of affairs been turned: but, without inquiring too minutely into the piety of the pope, we must commend his prudence, in advising the Romans to give up a part of their wealth, rather than the whole. His holinefs was a more prudent man than the Roman knight Nonius, who was put to death by Tiberius, for refusing to part with a very exquifite and precious piece of feulpture. All persons imprisoned for their opinions were now to be fet at liberty; the ports of the ecclefiaftical state to be open to the French, and flut to their enemies, and a free pallage allowed to the French troops through the papal territories. This armiftice was figned on the twenty-third of June: but the directory, though head of the church, than so many willing to negociate a peace with the pontiff, refused to receive the ministers he had sent to Paris for that purpole, on account of their being ecclefiaftics, a profession of which they had declared to admit no members in the quality of negociators.

[H3]

A fuspension of arms had already been concluded with the king of Naples, on terms of more equality. The multiplicity of operations, undertaken by the French, did not permit them to exert the like feverity with a prince who was so much more able to oppose them.

In the mean time, the resolution taken by the directory, to exclude the English from an access to any port to which it could barr their entrance prompted them to direct their general to fieze on the port of Leghorn, on pretence of the flag of France having been infulted there, and the French merchants illtreated, in violation of the rights of neutrality. On the twenty-eighth of June, a detachment of Buonaparte's army took possession of this place. The English merchants, however, being apprifed of his intentions, had fufficient time to remove their property on board their ships in the harbour, and very little was feized by the French.

The feizure of Leghorn was accompanied by the reduction of the castle of Milan: this celebrated fortress, furrendered to them on the last day of June. The garrison, confifting of more than two thousand men, convinced of the impossibility of making any effectual relistance, yielded themselves prisoners of war. One hundred and fifty pieces of cannon, with an immense quantity ofammunition and stores, were taken here by the French.

During these various transactions, while Buonaparte was occupied in extending through Italy the empire of the French, and the terror of his arms, he was equally careful to impress the Italians with savourable opinions of his inclination to promote their general welfare, and equally of his respect for learning. This, he knew, and literary men. would exhibit an advantageous contrast of the respective dispositions of the French and the Austrians, in matters of this nature. The neglect and indifference of these latter, for the polite arts and sciences, and their professors, had long been well known, and it was a part of Buonaparte's. policy, by displaying his partiality to characters of this description, to conciliate their esteem, and secure their prepossession in his favour.

To this intent he had taken with him, to Italy, several eminent literati from France. They were the companions of his private hours, and were looked upon as a credit to his. expedition: with them he confulted. in what manner he could make it redound to the benefit of letters and.

philosophical knowledge.

The cultivators of learning in Italy, to whom he was represented in this advanțageous light, could not fail to conceive amicable ideas of him, and he was particularly folicitous to improve them. An opportunity offered, on the reduction of Milan, where he requested an interview with the celebrated aftronomer Oriane, in order to testify his respect, and that of the French. nation, for his extraordinary merit. In a letter, written to him on this occasion, and addressed, through him, to all the Italian literati, Buonaparte exerted his perfuafive talents to convince him and them of the predaliction with which the rulers of France regarded all individuals of his character, and how zealous they were in the protection and encouragement of polite knowledge and the liberal arts, and defirous to afford them the most generous and honourable countenance and fupport. "All men of genius," faid the letter, "all those who have obtained a diffinguished rank in the republic of letters, are Frenchmen, in whatever country they may have The learned in Italy, been borne. esteemed themselves happy, if left unmolested by princes and priests: but henceforth, opinions thall be free, and the inquisition, intolerance, and despotism, be no more. I invite," he contined, "the learned to assemble, and propose their sentiments on the means necessary to be taken, and the affiftance they may require, to give new life and existence to the sciences and the fine arts."

He addressed the university of Pavia in the same style, and took peculiar pains to impress on the minds of the public, that the French were folicitous to place the people of Italy on the fame footing with themselves, in whatever related to the liberty of thinking, and would feel more fatisfaction in acquiring their esteem and their approbation of the proceedings of the French government, and of the political maxims on which it acted, than in the fubmission enforced by their The conquests victorious arms. obtained over the human mind, being of far greater importance to men who knew the difficulty of obtaining them, and the utility which they produced, than victories won by the fword, and empire maintained through terror.

Language of this kind, which was incessantly in the mouth of the French general, and of those in his confidence and intimacy, did more in conciliating the people, who had submitted to him, than the dread of his power: the clergy and the nobility excepted: to the very existence of which orders the French fystem was immediately inimical: the other classes beheld in the French a nation of warriors, who feemed to have taken up arms for the purpose of reducing all other nations to a level of opinion and government with themselves, and to harbour no enmity but to hereditary fovereigns, and the adherents to implicit obedience in matters of church and itate.

To disseminate such a disposition in the generality was the chief aim of the French general, well knowing that, on such a ground, he would be able to erect a more durable sabric of that republicanism he had in view, than on the military power he had established, and which, without those concomitances that he held out to the natives, would have been odious to them, and have presented no other picture than that of conquest and tyranny.

In this court, that was paid by the French general to men of letters and genius, we contemplate a policy, not less solid than sublime. from the opinions and spirit of the truly learned and intelligent, that public spirit in all nations fooner or later derive their complexion with their origin. The class too that would be flattered by this address was more numerous by far, than it will be very eafy to imagine: to great a portion of mankind being fo highly fatisfied with their own talents and accomplishments. professions of Buonaparte, however, but ill accorded with his actions. The whole of his conduct indicated that his main defign was, to establish the power and influence of the French in Italy. At Milan he formed the plan of a republic on the model of that of France, and to be under her protection, in the same manner as the victorious and ambitious Romans admitted the conquered states to the alliances and friendship of the senate and people of Rome: thus endeavouring to fubvert the authority of the emperor, and to erect that of France on its ruins, by abolifning feudal rights, and giving the great mass of the people a share and an interest in the new government. He fortified Verona, notwithstanding the reclamations of the Venetians; and placed general officers, in whom he could confide, over the Tuscan troops, as well as over those of Piedmont and The intentions of the French were still less concealed at Paris; where those who bore sway, at the same time that they professed a defire to fraternize with all nations, talked of nothing but the extension of their arms, and of Paris becoming the capital of Eu-They boasted of the generous design of giving peace and tranquillity to all nations under the protection of the French republic.

[H4] that

In the mean time, Buonaparte was preparing to meet the new general appointed to take the command of the Imperial forces that were marching to the protection of the Tyrol. The figuation of the French at this period was extremely critical: they had fubdued an extensive range of country; to preserve which they had been obliged to detach confiderable numbers from their main body. The remains of Beaulieu's army, and the reinforcements arriving with marshal Wurmser, composed a much more formidable strength than that under Buonaparte. But the confidence he placed in the valour of his men, and that which they reposed in his superior genius and skill, seemed, in the opinion of the public, to stand him in the stead of numbers.

The passes into the Tyrol were guarded by works extending from the Lake of Garda to the river Adige. Here the Imperial commander, newly arrived, posted himself: but the French generals Massena, and Joubert, at the head of a felect body, broke into his lines, by turning his right and left: they feized his baggage and standing camp, and forced him to retreat with the utmost precipitation. This happened towards the close of June.

The first engagement, between Wurmser and the French, would probably have been followed with worse consequences to him, had not an infurrection taken place in a city of the ecclefiaftical state, which ebstructed for a while their intended The inhabitants of the operations. city and district of Lago, incited by the complaints of their clergy, and others who bore heavily the French yoke, took uparms, as they expressed themselves, in defence of their faints, and their lawful fovereign, the A fmall detachment was fent to quell them, but they forced it to retire, after killing fome men, the heads of two of whom, according to the French accounts, they exposed at the town house of Lugo. The French general, who was sent with a fushcient force to reduce them, employed admonitions and, threats to that purpose: but they fet him at defiance, and made a desperate resistance: upwards of a thousand of them were killed and wounded, wounded, and the city taken and delivered up to the troops for pillage during three hours. A proclamation was then issued, ordering all arms to be surrendered, on pain of death to those who retained them; and threatening to set fire to places where Frenchmen should be murdered. The reduction of Lugo took place on the sixth of July.

Mantua was, in the mean time, closely besieged, and hard pressed. The garrison made several vigorous sallies, but Buonaparte, who had by this time collected, from the many strong towns he had taken, a numerous and formidable artillery, gave no respite to the besieged, and constantly repelled them. He erected batteries for the firing red hot balls, and several parts of the city were in slames: but the governor was resolved to hold out to the last extremity, and resused to listen to the summons to surrender.

Powerful reinforcements having joined marshal Wurmser, since the check he had received in the mountains of the Tyrol, he re'olved to repair this by raising the siege of Mantua; by effecting which he would at once undo all that had been done by Buonaparte. Animated with this hope, he assailed the French at Salo, on the western side of the Lake of Garda, and at Corona on the east. He had the good fortune to dislodge them on the twenty-ninth of July, from both of these positions: those at Salo retired to Peschiera, those at Corona to the city of Verona.

Buonaparte, who perceived the criticalness of his situation, assembled all his forces to oppose the Austrian general, who, after seizing Brescia, in consequence of the capture of Salo, on the one side of the lake, and Verona on the other, which the French were compelled to abandon, was moving with the division under his command towards Buonaparte, while the other was advancing with all expedition to place the French between two fires.

Conscious that his strength was not equal to an encounter with the Austrian general's united divisions, Buonaparte came to the determination to attack them singly before they could form a junction. This, indeed, seemed the only expedient left to extricate him from his present danger. It was not, however, without the deepest concern, that he saw himself reduced to the necessity of abandoning the siege of Mantua, now almost destitute of provisions, and on the point of surrendering.

He raised it on the thirtieth of July, and, in pursuit of his plan, marched with all expedition to Brescia, where he joined the divisions of his army. They had gained several advantages over the Austrians, particularly at Lonado, a town which these had seized, but from which they were expelled, after being completely deseated in an engagement, the last of July, wherein they lost great numbers.

From Brescia, where the Austrians were again totally routed, on the first of August, they withdrew in disorder towards the Tyrol, where they took resuge in the mountains. On the third, marshal Wurmser, who, apprised of the ill fortune that had attended his other division, had advanced with all speed to its assistance, came up with Buonaparte, who, expecting him, was prepared for battle. The Austrians had some advantage at first, through the rash impetuosity of an advanced corps of French,

which

106] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

which was furrounded and taken; but the centre, forming into a compact body, charged them with fuch vigour, that they foon gave way, and were broken on every fide. division of them endeavoured to make good its retreat to Salo: but that place was already occupied by the left wing of the French, and this division, in attempting to gain the mountains, towards the Tyrol, fell mostly into the hands of the French. General Augereau, who commanded the right wing, assailed the left of the Austrians, posted at Castigliona. Here a furious fight - was maintained the whole day be-The French tween both parties. at length prevailed, and the Austrians sustained an entire defeat. tween two and three thousand fell in the field, and about four thousand were made prisoners, among whom were three generals. The French also lost a considerable number, and fome officers of great note

On the fourth, a division of the French attacked a large body of Austrians, who were posted at Gavardo, towards the western side of the lake. The consict was warm, but the Austrians were again worsted, with the loss of near two thousand men.

Notwithstanding the successes of the third and sourth, Buonaparte was not yet assured of a fortunate termination of this obstinate dispute. Marshal Wurmser had drawn together all the troops that could be rallied, to which he added a part of the garrison of Mantua, now relieved from the siege, and every other corps within reach. When assembled, they formed an army formidable enough to renew the contest with Buonaparte, who was fully convinced that the most dangerous and difficult part of the business still remained to be decided.

He collected the whole of his force, and made the most advantageous arrangements to meet the enemy, whose attack he hourly expected. He visited every post, in order to afcertain the numbers that could be spared to reinforce his main body. Repairing for this purpose to Lonado, he found it occupled by no more than twelve hundred of his troops, while a division of the Austrians, confisting of four thousand men, had encompassed it, and lent an officer to fummon the French to furrender. Buonaparte concluding, from certain circumstances, that this body of Austrians belonged to the defeated part of their army, and was endeavouring to make good its retreat, with remarkable presence of mind, told the officer, that he was mistaken in thinking that he had met only with a detachment of the French army, the main body of which was there with Buonaparte himfelf, who now fpoke to him, and required him immedia ately to return to his general, and require that he should surrender instantly. The commander of the Austrians, struck with astonishment, requested a parley to settle conditions. But Buonaparte, aware of the danger attending the least delay, infifted that they should directly furrender themselves prisoners of war. On their still demanding time to confider, Buonaparte gave orders for a body of chosen grenadiers and artillery to advance against them. This decided the matter, and they all laid down their arms, without attempting to make the least resistance.

Escaped from this imminent peril, in so extraordinary a manner; the French

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

French general determined to lose no time in bringing the contest to a final issue. Feigning to be desirous of avoiding an engagement with Wurmser, he ordered a retrogade motion to be made by his army, in order to induce him the more readily to advance. This order was executed on the morning of the fifth, with fuch dexterity, that while the Austrian general, deceived by appearances, was approaching the French army to attack it, the right wing of the French, under general Serranier, an officer of great ability, turned the left of the Austrians, and affailed its rear, while another division attacked a redoubt in its front. The left of the French, in like manner, moved with unexpected rapidity against the right of the Austrians, and their centre was charged at the same time with such impetuofity and vigour, that, furprifed at movements to contrary to their expectation, they were in a manner taken unawares. They made, however, a resolute desence, but fortune declared for the French. The Austrians were thrown into confusion; and, notwithstanding the skilful dispositions of Wurmser, were not able to stand their ground. They retired with all expedition, after losing two thousand men, and would certainly have lost many more, had not the French, from the excessive fatigue of so many successive conflicts, been disabled from a pursuit.

This victory was completely decifive of the contest between these The battle two rival generals. might be faid to have lasted five days, as there was no intermission of fighting during that time. The losses of the Austrians, precluded all hopes of keeping the field. They amounted to seventy pieces of cannon, all the carriages belonging to his army, more than twelve thoufand prisoners, and fix thousand ſlain.

But the principal loss was that of reputation. The troops thus beaten were chiefly veterans. Those who came with Wurmser were deemed the flower of the Austrian army, that had so obstinately contended with the best troops of France upon the Rhine. Wurmser himself was reputed an officer second to no one in the Imperial service, nor indeed in Europe, for valour, skill, and experience, and was in a manner the last hope of Austria, for the rece-v very of Italy.

All these were circumstances deeply mortifying to the court of Vienna, and proportionably productive of triumph and exultation, to the French republicans, and their well-wishers.

The first intelligence of marshal Wurmser's marching against Buonaparte, at the head of so selected an army, had revived the expectations of all the enemies to France, and not a little alarmed the directory it-But those who were able judges of the military talents of Buonaparte, never felt a moment's despondency, and it is but justice to acknowledge that he fully answered their utmost expectations. Throughout the whole course of this arduous! trial, his abilities aftonished both friends and foes: Surrounded by difficulties of every fort, he acted with a clearness of penetration that forefaw and obviated them all. removed impediments as fast as they arose, and took his measures with so much prudence and fagacity, that he could not be charged with having committed one falle step. His body

and

108] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

and his mind appeared reciprocally calculated for the support of each other. Both were incessantly employed, the one in planning, the other in personally forwarding every design that was conceived. Such were the indesatigable qualities with which nature had endowed him, that while his thoughts were uninterruptedly on the stretch, he allowed himself no kind of repose; and, during the last seven days and nights of this dreadful contest, he was never known to have laid himself down to rest.

Notwithstanding this terrible defeat, the Austrian general, though unable to keep the open field, still occupied the strong line along the Mincio, and a fortified camp before Peschiera. But the French attacked. them on the fixth, forced their camp and lines, and compelled them to withdraw to the other fide of the Mincio, with a great loss of men and cannon. They purfued them to Verona, where the Austrians. . through the connivance of the Venetians, endeavoured to make a stand: but they were driven from this city, and fled in disorder towards the Tyrol. This action completed their route, and the garrison of Mantua excepted, no Austrian troops remained in Italy on the fouthern fide of the Adige.

CHAP. VIII.

Italian Mobs excited against the French.—Suppressed by a Terror of the victorious French.—Marshal Wurmser, pursued by Buonaparte, retreats into the Tyrolese.—The Siege of Mantua resumed.—Marshal Wurmser, powerfully reinforced, makes Head against the French in the Venetian Territories.—But is deseated.—The French take Possession of Trent.— Continued Success of Buonaparte.—Marshal Wurmser, with the Remains of his Army, makes good his Retreat, and takes Shelter within the Walls of Mantua.—Corfica, evacuated by the English, returns under the Government of France.—Pacification between France and Naples—including the Batavian Republic.—Religious Zeal of the Romans.—Awakened by the Court of Rome into rage, and avowed Preparations for War against the French.— A new Republic, composed of several small States.—Prevalence of the Republican Spirit in Italy.—The Austrians reinforced with Troops from Germany, advance against the French.—Retake Trent.—But are dofeated with prodigious Loss at Arcola.—The Austrians, though frequently defeated, return to the Charge.—High Spirit and Courage of the Tyrolians.—Devotion of the Army in Italy to the French Republic.—Patience of the French Soldiers under manifold Privations.

HILE the fate of the Imperial and the French armies remained in suspence, the partisans of Austria, presuming that they would recover all their losses, began to act in the most hostile manner to all who were friendly to the French. False intelligence was every where circulated, and the republican army represented as vanquished and flying before the Auftrians. The intervention of heaven was called in, and its aid held out as certain, in the expulsion of the iniquitous invaders, as they were styled, fent by France to destroy lawful governments and to destroy religion.

The superstitious imbecility, for which the Italian commonalty is noted, was easily worked upon by instigations of this nature. Mobs rose in some places, and maltreated the French and their adherents. But the more prudent opposed this rash behaviour, and the generality of people did not participate in these demonstrations of enmity. Numbers, at the same time, who were decidedly in their savour, had the courage openly to espoule their cause, even when the Austrians had

iio] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

obtained some successes, and it hegan to be apprehended that Buonaparte's arusy was in great danger. This spirit manifested itself principally at Ferrara and Bologna, but more than any where at Milan. Here the majority of the inhabitants expressed the most avowed concern at the retreat of the French before the Imperial army, and at the raising of the siege of Mantua: on the report of the total rout of the French, and the approach of the Austrians, the streets and public places were filled by crowds, demanding arms, and offering to march instantly to the assistance of the French.

But of all those Italian states and princes that shewed unequivocal figns of fatisfaction at the temporary fuccesses of the Austrians, none equalled the temerity with which the court of Rome acted upon this occasion. As soon as intelligence arrived that the French had retreated from Mantua, a vice legate was dispatched to retake possession of Ferrara, notwithstanding noted aversion of the citizens to the Roman government. This was evidently a breach of the armistice between the French and the pope, but the vice legate remained in the city even in opposition to the inclination of the inhabitants, nor quitted it, until news arrived of the entire defeat of the Austrian army.

At Rome itself the detestation of the French broke out in the most outrageous treatment of the sew that were in that city. Those who shewed themselves most forward to abuse them, were the priests and monks. Incited by their example and discourses, the populace were, with dissiculty, restrained, by the government, from exercising their utmost sury on the natives of Francé;' known to be republicans.

The news of the victories obtained over the Austrians, put a stop to these proceedings, by the consternation they spead in Rome, where the general expectation was, that the French would shortly be expelled from Italy: but the cooler part of the public highly censured the readiness with which the pope had been induced to violate the treaty concluded with the French general, and expressed a full persuasion that he would require such a satisfaction as would produce a deep repentance for its infraction.

In the mean time, marshal Wurmfer was occupied in securing his retreat towards the mountainous country on the north of the Venetian dominions; but he was sollowed so closely by Buonaparte, that he was overtaken and descated in two engagements, on the 11th and 12th, with a severe loss of men, artillery, and baggage. It was with disticulty that he pursued his march to the other side of the city of Trent; where he reassembled the remains of his forces.

of his forces.

The flight of the Austrians enabled the French to refume the fiege of Mantua. The garrifon had, on its being raised, totally destroyed the works of the besiegers; carried all their cannon, amounting to one hundred and forty pieces; into the town, and supplied it with large quantities of stores and provisions. From the thirtieth of July; when the fiege was raifed, to the nineteenth of August, when the French recommenced their operations against that city, it had been put into the completed state of defence, and was now reputed more capable than ever to withstand all the efforts of the French, till a more auspicious opportunity of relieving it effectually.

the '

France, in the mean while, was refounding with the exploits and praises of Buonaparte, and his victorious army. The standards taken from the Austrians, and sent by him to the directory, were presented to it with great pomp and ceremony on the twenty-seventh of August. The officer commissioned to deliver them, addressed the directory in a foldierly and spirited speech, which was received with great fatisfaction and applause. It was entirely descriptive of the bravery and determination of the French foldiers, in Italy, to shed their blood for the fervice of the republic. It specified their intrepidity on divers occasions, and the great things it had done for the benefit of the state, and the glory of the nation.

La Revailliere Lepaux, then prefident of the directory, returned him a fuitable answer. He loaded the French foldiery with all those praises that affect them possibly more than any other people of the same profession elsewhere. He compared them to the most renowned warriors of antiquity, and exhorted them to proceed in that career of triumph and fame, which would raise France above all its enemies, and eternize their own name. These encomiums were carefully transmitted to the army of Italy, where they produced their intended effect, in the satisfaction they afforded to both officers and men, and the ardour it filled them with, to be confidered and treated as the heroes of their country?

These enthusiastic sentiments were, at this period, particularly want-

The victories gained in Itaed. ly had cost the French many of their best officers, and bravest soldiers; and their distance from France, together with other impediments, obstructed the recruiting of their forces. Their enemies, on the contrary, had many facilities in this respect: the country bohind them was their own: it abounded with robust and hardy men, inured to a laborious life, and inclined to the military profession. Hence continual reinforcements were drawn, by means of which marshal Wurmfer was enabled to repair his frequent losses, by incorporating the new levies with his veterans.

His head quarters were now at Bassano, a town in the Venetian territories. Here he had affembled a confiderable force, which he diftributed with great skill in all the advantageous positions in his neighbourhood. One of his divitions was stationed at Alla, on the Adige, . in the road to the city of Trent, of which Buonaparte propofed to make himself master. This division occupied a strong post at Serravalle, on the right of the Adige, and another at Marco, on its left. By a feries of skilful movements Buonaparte compelled a number of intermediate bodies of Austrians to fall back to thefe two posts; and, crossing the Adige, on the fourth of September, . he attacked the one at Marco, while the remainder of his forces fell upon the other at Serravalle. The engagement was obstinate on both sides, but the French prevailed, and the Austrians were defeated with great loss, and driven from both positions. They retreated to Roveredo, in order to recover themselves, and make a fland; but the French came

came up with them, and again put them to the rout, and took possession of that town.

The Austrians, having retreated to Trent, were making preparations to maintain themselves, by fortifying the avenues to it: but Buonaparte, who perceived their defign, gave orders to attack them directly in the post they had taken. It was extremely strong, and it required vast efforts to make them abandon it; but they were completely routed, and fied in confusion towards Trent, within three miles of which they were purfued. Thus terminated this famous fourth of September; in the course of which the Austrians sustained three defeats, and loft upwards of feven thousand men, who were made prisoners, befides a number of flain, together with thirty pieces of cannon, and a large quantity of baggage and horfes.

In the night that followed this memorable day, marshal Wurmser, losing all hope of making head at Trent, evacuated it, and, next morning, the French took possesfion of this celebrated city. a fmall distance from it a large body of Austrians posted themfelves at a bridge, commanding the entrance into the town of Lavis. But hither they were immediately followed by Buonaparte, who forced the entrenchments they had thrown. up, after making his way over the bridge, and put them to flight.

Master of Trent, an independant principality of the empire, Buonaparte resolved to organize the government of this city on a republican plan. He totally emancipated it from that Imperial jurifdiction, appointing an administrative council, composed entirely o. natives of the district, to whom alone every place of power and emolument was affigued, in absolute exclusion of all strangers. The laws and usages established were left untouched; but the fovereignty was vested in the French republic, to which an oath of obedience was required from all persons in authority.

By thus investing the natives of this place with the exclusive enjoyment of all those employments and profits formerly diverted from them to alions, he held out the prospect of a fimilar treatment to all that fubmitted to the French. He doubted not, by this exhibition of their justice and impartiality, to procure a general willingness to prefer subordination to France to the dominion exercised over them by their present masters.

After fettling the government of the city of Trent, Buonaparte lost no time in the profecution of his advantages over the Austrians. shal Wurmser had fixed himself at Bassano, the way to which town was rendered excessively disficult, by the river Brenta, and the defiles 'Here again that bear its name. the superior generalship of Buonaparte enabled him to effect a paftage over this river. He directed a chosen body of men to attempt it at a place where it was not expected, and, by a circuitous march, to fall upon the rear of the Auitrians. They succeeded completely; and, while the small fort of Cavela, that stood in the defile, was carried by storm, they gained the head of this narrow pals, through which the Austrians, after evacuating that fort, not being able to make their way, were compelled to furrender themselves, to the number of sour thousand men, besides their cannon and standards. This advantage was obtained on the feventh of September.

 Buonaparte found no farther oppofition in passing the other defiles on the road to Bassano. Near this place a strong division was posted, which, favoured by the ground, maintained, the next day, a vigorous dispute, but was finally routed. The French pushed forward to Bassano, from whence it was with difficulty that some chosen corps of Austrian grenadiers were able to protect the retreat of marshal Wurmser himself, who had hardly time to fecure the military chest. This was truly a decifive action. Five thousand men were taken, with thirty-five cannon and upwards of two hundred large waggons loaded with the baggage of the army, and a valt quantity of military utenfils and ftores.

Notwithstanding this great defeat, marshal Wurmser steadily adhered to the relolution he had formed, that in case his retreat should be cut off to the Austrian territories, he would throw himfelf into Mantua, and defend it to the last extremity. This was now precifely his fituation: he had luckily, with the remains of fome battalions, rejoined a large division of his army at Montabello, a town in the proximity of Vienna, and on the road to Verona. As it was impracticable to retire across the Brenta, where the French army commanded all the passages, he marched to Porto Lagnago, where he passed the Adige, on the ninth of September, making all the expedition he was able to reach Mantua.

The French, in the mean time, Vol. XXXVIII.

were purfuing him, and came up to a place through which it was imagined he would pass; not finding him there, they took another route; but their guide missed them, and they again missed him. He had now reached Cerea, a village lying between Governolo and Castellaro, at which places large bodies of the French were posted to intercept him. Here too a division of their army met him, and an engagement ensued, but he deseated them, taking a number of prisoners, and advancing to Castellaro, encountered another division with like succels. These two actions took place on the twelfth, and at night he arrived at Mantua.

A great number of Austrians had, during this escape of their general, fallen into the hands of the French. He had stationed the corps that came with him in the suburbs of Mantua, where the French attacked him on the fourteenth. The whole day was spent in very bloody skirmishes; and on the fisteenth a serious engagement followed. Austrian general's object was to retain possession of the suburbs, from which he hoped, by means of his numerous cavalry, to forage the country round, and procure provitions for the garrison. The object of the French was to drive him from these posts, and confine him within the body of the place. The conflict was severe and obstinate on both fides, but the Austrians lost the day, and were compelled to feek thelter within the walls of Mantua No less than two thousand fell in the action, and as many were taken, with twenty pieces of cannon, and a large quantity of ammunition. The loss of the French was also confiderable, the Austrians 28 [I] maintained a long and desperate fight.

114] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

Various were the fallies and skirmishes that took place in the course of this famous siege, between the garrison and the besiegers. species of art and stratagem was employed by each party, and numbers fell in the encounters that continually happened. But the fuccess was usually on the side of the French, who gradually diminished the strength of the garrison, by the frequent captures of those who sallied out, and who, notwithstanding the skill and valour they displayed on these occasions, seldom could make good their retreat into the town.

While the French army lay before Mantua, the standards taken from the Austrians in the several actions on the borders of Italy, towards the Tyrol, and lately before Mantua, were fent to the directory, and presented, on the first of October, with great form and folemnity, by Buonaparte's aid-de-camp, Marmont, who, in a fet speech, detailed the recent triumphs of the French in Italy. They had, he observed, in the course of this campaign, destroyed three hostile armies, taken fortyfeven thousand men, two hundred and eighty pieces of cannon, and forty-nine fland of colours. of thele indeed, the French, he laid, held in little value, as they were taken from the troops of his holiness, who had changed his late tone, as will prefently appear; an enemy unworthy of their notice: but full they snewed the number of their enemies, and the extent of their own fucceiles.

Shortly after the festivals and rejoicings, occasioned by the presentations of these trophies, the directory had another opportunity of exulting in the good fortune that seemed to invariably connected with the proceedings of the French in Italy. Since their occupation of Leghorn, it had been the resort of all those Corsicans who had fled from, or been expelled their country, when it became annexed to the British dominions. They received every encouragement from the French there, and came to the determination of forming a plan for the expulsion of the English from Corfica.

A circumstance that operated powerfully for the French in that illand was, that Buonaparte was a The great actions native of it. he had performed, had rendered him an object of universal respect among his countrymen, who gloried in him, as a man who reflected the highest honour on his country. The report of his continual victories emboldened the French party, in Corfica, to renew their endeayours to undermine the interest of the English, whose government they represented as domineering and oppressive, and contrary to those principles that were congenial to the They granatives of this island. dually succeeded in propagating discontent among a people noted for their fickleness and the inconstancy of their attachments. communication was established between the exiles at Leghorn and elsewhere, and their partisans in Corfica. In a flort time, the adherents to France became fo numerous and active, that the English in the island clearly perceived that an infurrection was preparing against them, which, from the inconfiderableness of their force, they would not be able to withstand. Corficans held meetings and affembled numbers of men in arms, whole whole intentions were evidently inimical. They openly at length refused to pay taxes, or to acknowledge the viceroy's authority: they seized his person in a progress he was making through the island, and released him only on condition he thould recall the troops he had flationed in the interior parts. The malcontents continued their intrigues, and completely succeeded in filling the public with complaints Apprifed of and diffatisfaction. their designs, the viceroy perceiving the impracticability of ohviating them, intimated the intention of leaving the island, and embarking with the English garrison. In conlequence of this intimation, a body of French and Corficans failed from Leghorn, and landed on the eighteenth of October in Corfica, where multitudes having joined them, they proceeded to Bastia, the capital, and fummoned the English garrison to furrender; but it effected its embarkation on board the ships in the harbour with inconfiderable less, and withdrew to Porto Ferraio, in the island of Elbe, of which the English had taken possession at the time that Leghorn was feized by the French, in order to prevent them from making a seizure of this island in the same manner.

The evacuation of Corsica by the English, and its return to the government of France, was an event peculiarly acceptable to the directory, which did not fail to speak of it in terms of the greatest satisfaction, and to magnify it as of the highest importance to the republic, and detriment to the English interest in the Mediterranean. The fact was, that the retention of it would manifestly have cost much more than its worth. The disposition of the inhabitants was so little to be relied upon, and they had been to thoroughly prejudiced against the British government, that it appeared totally useless to endeavour to reclaim them by reasonings, which they would have difregared, or to coerce them by severities, which would have produced civil contentions and bloodshed, that must have filled the island with wretchedness and calamity, without answering any other purpose than perpetuating mutual enmity, and rendering the possession of it a fource of endless perplexity. In this light the determination, taken to abandon it, was a measure of timely prudence.

Thele various successes of the French, and of their partifans, accelerated the treaties of peace into which the princes of Italy had engaged to enter with the republic. The king of Naples and the duke of Parma had, conformably to the terms of the armistice granted to deputed commissioners to Paris, to lettle the conditions. It was an auspicious circumstance for both, that Spain was at this time on friendly terms with France, under the meditation of the Spanish minister at Paris. These two princes were treated by the directory with more moderation than they could have otherwise expected, confidering the involveracy they had manifested against the republic; much the same conditions were granted to them, as to the other powers with which France had: already concluded pacifications. Naples however was required to pay the sum of eight millions, either in money or in naval stores. Batavian republic was formally included in this treaty, which was concluded in the middle of Octo-

[I2] concluded

The conduct of the court of Kome was marked, on this occasion, with a temerity that was by numhers attributed to imbecillity, and the groffest degree of bigotry. Notwithstanding the repeated defeats of the Imperialists, such was the confidence in the prowefs of the Germans, after Buonaparte had been forced to raife the fiege of Mantua; and in that fatality which had formerly attended the French in their invalions of Italy, that it was firmly believed at Rome they would be expelled, as they had been before, with equal loss and ignomy; and that the fortune of the house of Austria would certainly preponderate.

Full of these ideas, those who influenced the papal councils, were constantly averse to the concessions demanded by the directory, as repugnant to the long established maxims of the Roman fee, and inimical to the Catholic religion. was explicitly required of the pope, that he should revoke all those publications that had been issued in virtue of his spiritual authority, and that related to the affairs of France.

This was a blow so directly striking at his religious principles, that no surprise was excited at the abhorrence he expressed of such a requisition. Herein he was seconded by all the zealous adherents to his tenets. Had no other means been used to combat the demands of the French, than reasoning and argument, no blame could have been imputed to their antagonists: but the spirit of bigotry and superstition rose up against them in a manner that reminded the world of the most despicable scenes of supersition that were recorded of tormer ages.

The immediate intervention of heaven was reforted to, and miracles positively afferted to have been performed in many of the churches of Rome, in vindication, as it was construed, of the truth and dignity of the catholic religion, outraged by the iniquitous conduct of the French, and their wicked attempts to establish infidelity on the ruins of the Christian The streets of Rome were belief. filled with processions, and the credulity of the people converted into the means of inflaming them against the French, as the enemies of the Divinity, and of all that was facred among men.

The court of Rome did not feem to reflect, that by lending itfelf to fuch base and scandalous attempts to impose upon the multitude, they forfeited the confideration of all the reasonable part even: of their own fociety. For though the propensity of the Roman catholics to give credit to miraculous events is well known, yet the more judicious and discerning among them are very far from giving countenance to the abfurdities that pass current among the generality.

Such however was either the real or pretended belief in the impostures daily propagated, that the zeal of all classes and conditions was rouzed; the populace was kindled to the utmost rage against all who expressed a doubt of these wonders, and testified the most violent ardour to enlift in the fervice of the church and state. phrenzy of the monks, and of the weaker ecclefiaftics, came in aid of that which appeared in the commonalty,

monalty, and even some persons, not devoid of understanding, were induced to think, that the fury and indignation, excited by the persuafion of celestial assistance, being at hand, against the French, might fupply the want of discipline, and animate the multitude to the most vigorous and effectual exertions.

The French resident, at Rome, endeavoured to make the administration fensible of the dangers to which it exposed the state; by these rash proceedings; but his advice was rejected, and preparations of war occupied the attention of all men: not howevever without moving the compassion of those who forefaw the calamities, or the humiliations, that would result from these senseless measures, and the derifion of those who secretly ridiculed the idea of transforming a nation of bigots into an army of heroes. This, however, did not, perhaps, appear to the court of Rome, what indeed it was not, impossible; and, as to the number of those who derided fanatical and superstitious notions, was probably believed to be far less than it really was.

Whether the pope himself was prompted by his own credulity, or that of others, he completely threw off the mask of piety and resignation which he had formerly assumed, as above related, and acted, throughout the whole of this business, as if he confidered the cause of the Roman see as intitled to supernatural interpolition. So deep rooted was his attachment to the rules and prescriptions of sormer times, that he listened to no advice but that of ecclesiastics, and employed no other persons to negociate with the French, though he well knew how odious such persons were to them, and how likely to mar all negociations on that very account. He behaved, in short, as if he had lived in those ages when the ignorance of mankind, and the implicit respect arising from it for the pontifical character; subdued the dictates of good fense in all transactions with the church of Rome; and enabled it to domineer over nations with an authority that filenced every argument, and commanded their obedience to him, on the despotic principle of his being the vicegerent of heaven upon earth...

And yet had he turned his attention to what was passing around him, and even among his own people, he must have seen the satal impropriety of trusting to the disposition of men in religious or political matters, at the present æra, as might have been done heretofore.

So improffive had been the example of the French in affairs of religion and politics, in every part of Italy, that avowed approvers of them had arisen in every province and fovereignty of that country. Republican principles, especially were maintained by those who still faithfully adhered to the tenets of Christianity, which, indeed, they explicitly afferted, was totally unconnected with any form of government, and inculcated no more than obedience to the established laws, and fidelity to the government itfelf, whatever its form might be. As these maxims, however sound and reasonable in themselves, militated against the systems prevailing in Italy, the ruling powers felt, of course, an invincible repugnance to them. Hence their abhorrence of the French, and their readiness, at the same time, to enter into agreements with them, before their principles had gained sufficient latitude among their own subjects to incite [13]

118] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

them to throw off the yoke, and adopt the fystem of the French, who might easily be prevailed upon, in such case, to give them effectual countenance.

This was fully verified in the instance of the duchy of Modena: its loverign, when he fled to Venice, had established a regency, which, contrarily to the intent of the armiftice concluded with the French, as they complained, let about repairing the fortifications of the city of that name. This afforded them a plaufible pretext to take it into their own possession: they dismissed the ducal regency, and fubfituted a government on their own plan, and which was to rule in their name. This change was effected on the eight of Öctober.

The city of Reggio, the next in importance in that duchy, had already cast off its obedience, and settled a republican government, in complete imitation of that in France. This happened towards the close of August. The cities of Bologna and Ferrara, which had submitted to the French about two months before, were now so completely revolutionized in their principles, that they sent a deputation to congratulate the people of Reggio upon what they had done, and to offer them atsistance against all opposers.

Atter the French had seized Modena, an union of that city and those of Reggio, Bologna, Ferrara, and of their respective districts, into one commonwealth, under the protection of France, was in mediately projected. The French forms and initiations were adopted in every respect; but care was taken, at the same time, to prevent, by the skickest regulations, all ter altuous proceedings, on account of differences in opinion, and to secure the property of all those who behaved peaceably. Herein the conduct of Buonaparte was remarkably impartial: he threatened the severest punishment to those who violated the tranquillity of the public on pretext of avenging the state on the enemies to liberty.

The spirit that animated the people of this new republic, and which was generally diffused every where, was highly unacceptable to the aristocratical governments in Italy. At Genoa, the mass of the inhabitants was evidently inclined to the French system, but the nobles still continued inveterate to democratical principles.

In the districts, situated along the mountainous country, bordering upon the territories of Genoa, numbers of banditti insested the roads, and were privately encouraged by the Austrian emissaries at Genoa; whose residence in that city was strongly suspected to be considered at by some principal persons in the Genoese government. These suspections, and the repugnance of the nobles to savour popular nations, prevented a cordial correspondence from substituting between this state and the French republic.

In the duchy of Milan, the republican spirit prevailed, with hardly any other opposition than of those interested for the Austrians, by the employments they had held in their service. The administration of as fairs, in this country, was now vested in the representative assembly, chosen by the people, which exercised the powers of government under the protection of France.

The members of this administration were men of conspicuous sirmness and determination in the cause they had embraced: they exerted all their abilities and insurance over their

their countrymen, in order to preferve that spirit of liberty among them, on which, they were conicious, depended the favour of the French, without which their condition would not be better than unther the Austrian domination. indeed was held in particular detestation by the persons eminent for their literary talents, for whom it expressed a marked aversion, on account of the freedom they frequently took in their writings and conversations, when treating of religious or political subjects.

The return of this odious domination was extremely dreaded by the Those, in whom the Milancle. change of affairs had placed the supreme authority, well knew, that, were the Austrians to regain possession of this country, its inhabitants would suffer severely, on account of the preference they had manifested for the French; and that they themselves had no other profpect than of capital punishment for the part they had acted.

Swayed by these motives, they wed every means, and employed every argument, to inspire their countrymen with the resolution to oppose, to the last extremity, the re-establishment of the Austrian They published admonipawer. tions and addresses to the public, several of which were strikingly eloquent and pathetic: they warmly exharted their countrymen, and, through them, the people of all Italy, to improve the opportunity, arisen from the entrance of the French, and their readiness to emancipate the subjects of the despotic princes, who had to long oppressed the country, to throw off the yoke, and to establish free constitutions. They enforced this advice with every reason that could be adduced, but especially the facility they would find, in conjunction with the French, to bring about every alteration necessary for their welfare. might to autpicious an occasion recur, to substitute the governments, founded on liberty, to the tyrannical fystems from which every man among them, that dared to fpeak his mind, openly expressed his wish to be delivered.

In pursuance of these sentiments, which were almost universally diffused through all classes, the administration publicly offered a prize for the best treatise that should be produced on the important question, which was the free government best calculated to promote the happiness of Italy? The subject was handled, accordingly, with all the freedom it merited: the pens of lome of the most eminent writers were employed on this occasion, and though, by venturing to utter their thoughts, they might eventually expose themselves to the greatest danger, their zeal and courage raifed them above all apprehensions.

The publications of this kind, that frequently appeared at this period, made to effectual an impression upon those for whom they were intended, that a general inclination to take an active part against the Austrians was every where visible. were, in fact, confidered by most of the Italians as the common enomy of their country, long before the French expedition. The only difference between these and the Germans, was, that the latter had poffession, and the former were striving to gain a footing. But then, the views of both were professedly opposite; the one meaning to retain his possessions, the other to set them free from their prefent holders, and to erect them into independent states.

[14]Animated

Animated by the patriotic writings of their literati, the citizens of Milan, and of other towns, prefented a petition to the administration, requesting it to procure permillion, from Buonaparte, to form themselves into military corps, in order to ferve against the Austrians. Their request was favourably received by the general, who was duly fentibly of the impression such an example would have on their fellow-countrymen in other parts of Italy.

During these various transactions, the necessity of dividing his attention to a multiplicity of objects, of providing the means to carry on different enterprizes, and, above all, to continue the blockade of Mantua, had left the Austrians leilure to make new military arraugements. They recruited the fhattered army of marshal Wurmfer, and, by drawing reinforcements from the neighbouring provinces of the Austrian dominions, they formed a new one, with which they again indulged the hope of being able to take the field, and repair their loffes.

They now moved their cantonments behind the Lavisio and the Piava, and advanced against the French, who, after ineffectually striving to oppose their passage of these rivers, yielded to their superior force, and fell back to the Adige.

General Davidovich, who commanded the Austrians in this quarter, was thereby enabled to recover Trent, and other towns in its vicinity; while marshal Alvinzi proceeded as far as Vicenza, in the Venetian territories, where he was fure of meeting with every clandestine aid which that state. could afford.

From the beginning of November, a variety of actions took place between the Austrians and the French, who were generally fuccessful and made a number of prifoners; not, however, without fuf-fering on their fide.

The plan of marfial Alvinzi, who had the chief command, was, to form a junction with the Auftrian troops that were on their march from the Tyrol, and with those that had forced the French to retire from Trent. To this intent: he drew near to Verona, where, he hoped, they would joined him. Buonaparte, apprifed of this movement, crossed the Adige, on the fourteenth of November, and approached the Austrians posted at Alvinzi, judging that he Caldaro. would be vigoroufly attacked, and that the day would probably prove decisive, disposed his troops with great skill. The village of Arcola, through which the French were to pals, was situated in the middle of a marsh, and accessible only by a causeway. This post he occupied in great force, lining with troops every fpot on each fide, from whence the French could be an-They fucnoved in their march. ceeded, however, by dint of intrepidity and perfeverance, and penetrated to a bridge on a canal that flanked the village: here flood a numerous body of cholen men, who repulfed them in repeated attacks: they had also to encounter a tremendous fire from the houses near the bridge, which were filled with troops that kept up a continual discharge of musketry. The French generals, who saw the necessity of carrying this post, placed themselves at the head of their men, who feemed to lose courage at the numbers that fell, and to despuir of success. Augereau, who had the chief command in this desperate attack, seeing most of those generals carried off wounded, advanced himself, with a fiandard in his hand, to the foot of the bridge. He had the good fortune to escape unwounded, but his men could gain no ground. Buonaparte, on receiving intelligence of this ill-success, came himself to the fpot, and reminding his troops of their passage over the bridge of Lodi, dilmounted, and, feizing a standard, rushed towards the bridge at the head of the grenadiers, crying out, " follow your general." The troops advanced again to the bridge, but were not able to Itand the fire of the Austrians. Two other generals were wounded, and Buonaparte's aid-de-camp was killed at his fide; he himself, who had again mounted to rally his men with the more speed, fell from his horse into marshy ground; after extricating himself he continued to press forward his men: but still they made no impression upon the Austrians, who, nevertheless, did not dare to move from their polition, in order to improve their advantage.

Buonaparte had, in the mean time, dispached general Guiaux, a remarkable bold officer, at the head of a strong body, with orders, by a circultous march, to proceed to Arcola, and affail it upon the rear of the Austrians, where it was more accessible. This officer executed his orders with the completest success. He carried the villages, taking feveral pieces of cannon, and making a great number of prisoners. This he effected the more readily, that while he fell upon their rear, the Austrians their front, who were again advancing upon them, and whom they now could not have withflood.

Thus terminated the action of the fifteenth, which, though it ended successfully for the French, was undecifive. On the fixteenth, at break of day, the Austrians made a general attack upon the French. They were vigoroufly repulfed every where but at Arcola, of which they had retaken possession on the leventeenth. It was again assailed, in the lame manner as on the two preceding days, by general Augereau, who commanded the right wing, facing which stood this celebrated spot. The centre of the French army was, in the mean time. so furiously charged that it gave way; but Buonaparte, while it was retreating, placed a large body in a wood that flanked it, which, as foon as the Austrians, pressing on the centre, were preparing to turn it, fallied forth upon them unexpectedly, and routed them with vast The left wing of the flaughter. Austrians, covered with marshes, stood its ground a long time, through the advantage of its position, and the fuperiority of its numbers. order to make an impression upon this, a party of horse was detached round the marshes that protected it. and directed to found a large number of trumpets, as foon as they had reached its rear. This stratagem succeeded, and the left wing precipitately retired, imagining it was turned by a confiderable force: Still, however, Arcola remained untaken, notwithstanding the skill and bravery employed in attacking it. The same manœuvre that prevailed against it in the first engagement was again practifed with the were threatened by the troops in like fuccess. A strong column came round upon the rear of those who defended.

defended it, while general Massena, with the left wing, after defeating the right of the Austrians, united with the centre, and both, with general Augereau on the right, advanced on the causeways leading to it, when it was carried. The Austrian army was closely followed till night put an end to the pursuit.

This was the most obstinate battle that had yet been fought between the French and the Austrians. Valour and skill were conspicuously displayed on each side, but the genius and good fortune of Buonaparte overcame all obstacles, and gave him a victory, of which, on the first onset, he had every reason to doubt. The loffes of the Austrians, in this terrible battle, were truly ruinous. It was computed that eight thousand of them were killed and wounded, and near five thousand taken, befides an immense quantity of warlike stores. The loss of the French ivas also very considerable, especially in officers, who felt themselves obliged, on this critical occasion, to expose their lives in the brunt of the battle, the gain of which may be chiefly ascribed to the personal intrepidity displayed by the commander-in-chief and his other generals. In a letter to the directory, Buonaparte acknowledged, that, what with flain, or disabled, he had hardly a general left him fit for duty.

Early in the morning of the eighteenth, Buonaparte let his army in motion to profecute the fuccess of the foregoing day. It was forefeen that Alvinzi would retire either towards the Piava, on the frontiers of the Austrian dominions, or endeavour to, strengthen himself by a junction with the forces under general Davidovich, who had been more fortunate than himself, and still kept the field in confiderable force.

Celerity, in his movements, was now become more indispensible than ever to the French general. The continual supplies of recruits arriving from the Tyrol, and the parts contiguous to it, enabled the Austrians, however frequently defeated, to return, as it were, immediately, to the. charge; and such was their strength, that, had it been concentrated in the late actions, there was little doubt but the French mast have yielded to its superiority.

Buonaparte had now been completely victorious over four hostile armies, composed of troops equal at least to any in Europe. The mference naturally was, that his own troops, and those who commanded them, were superior in military tas lents to those whom they had defeated; but the Austrians were net of this opinion; and such was the confidence they repoted in their own prowefs, that they attributed the luccelles of the French to fortunate calualtics, and neither to bravery nor better tactics. The lubjects of the emperor, particularly those of the counties usually styled hereditary, were so fully of this perfuation, that they entertained no doubt of being able finally to chape the French out of all their Italian conquests. Hence they readily repaired to the Imperial standard, eager to recover the reputation they had, in some degree, lost, by the continual advantages of the French over them.

The inhabitants of the Tyrul were remarkably zealous in testifying their readiness on this occasion. They felt themselves greatly offended by the proclamation that Buonaparte had issued to them, after he had defeated marshal Wurmfer, and was preparing to invade the Tyrol. It was filled with the severest threats, to such of them as belonged to the districts of which he should take possession, if they did not, southwith, leave the Imperial service and return to their homes. This they considered as a violation of their native right, to act in desence of their sovereign.

From motives of this nature they flocked to the different hodies that were assembling to reinstruce the defeated army of Alvinzi, and that division under Davidovich, which, after forcing the French forces, under general Vaubois, to abandon their position, was advancing towards Mantua.

In order to oppose his progress, a large force was immediately dispatched against him, which effectually succeeded in putting him to the rout, with so considerable a loss, that his designs upon Mantua were totally frustrated.

. The intelligence of these various advantages, but especially of the great victory at Arcola, was received, as usual, by the directory, with the highest satisfaction. The presentation of the standards, taken on that memorable day, and in the other engagements with Alvinzi's army, took place on the thirtieth of December. It was accompanied with a speech from the officer who preiented them, remarkable for the devotion it expressed in the army of Italy, to the republican constitution of France, and its determination to support it against every attempt. either from foreign or domestic enemes.

A declaration of this kind was the more acceptable to the republican party, that its enemies in France were, at this time, extremely active in their endeavours to render it odious to the nation, and to excite a disapprobation of the measures of government, particularly of the prolongation of the war. They reprefented it as wholly unnecessary for the honour or the interest of France, and continued merely to indulge the ambition of persons in power. Juch an arrangement of their conduct they hoped to bring the nature of the power they exercised into difguit, and to prove it inconfiftent, both with peace abroad, and tranquillity at home.

... These adversaries to the ruling lystem, were the friends to the ancient monarchy, and the adherents to the first constitution, by which the power of the crown was limited. These latter were incomparably more in number than the former, and included a large proportion of the noblesse, and many of the clergy. But both these parties together, however numerous, were inferior in strength to the republican, which comprehended all the common classes, and dreaded a renovation of that oppressive authority which the upper ranks had exercifed over the lower. But what principally weakened the two first parties was their difunion: they hated each other as much as they did the republicans. The nonjuring clergy, in particular, would not divest itself of the least attachment to their primitive tenets, and anathematized all that differed from them. As these two parties agreed, however, in their detellation of republicanism, they exerted all their abilities and influence in undervaluing it, and all its supporters. Buonaparte's great actions protected him from

124] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

from those who might have been inclined to depreciate his merit, but he could not escape the infinuations against his sidelity to the commonwealth. These were industriously propagated by its enemies, in order to breed suspicions in the government, and to induce it to diminish its considence in him, and thereby to set both at variance with each other.

But the intrigues and publications to this intent were ineffectual. It was to remove all jealousies of this nature that Buonaparte directed his aid-de-camp, Lemarois, on presenting the colours, taken at Arcola, to the directory, to assure them of the inviolable attachment of his army to the interest of the republic.

The mass of the nation, pleased with the glory accruing to it from so many victories, was strongly prepossessed in favour of a system under which its arms had to wonderfully prospered. The staunch asserters of a commonwealth were continually reminding the public of the disproportion between the people at large and those who formerly possessed an exclusive authority over them. The noblesse did not exceed one hundred thousand individuals, nor the clergy, with the monastic orders, twice that number. they entitled, in justice and reason, to assume a sovereign authority over twenty-four millions of people, containing a far greater number of perions, possessing worth and capacity, equal at least, if not superior, to what they could boaft? Was it not among the plebeians, as they infultingly flyled all but themselves, that the nation counted the men of talents in all professions? Was it equitable that these should bow the neck to the others, and submit to that feudal vassalage which had fo long oppressed and disgraced the people of France? Having emancipated themselves from this slavery, was it to be expected that they should return to it, with their eyes open to the contemptible character of those who arrogated the right of again becoming their tyrants, and, after paying the price of fo much blood, to fecure themfelves against their pretensions, and the iniquitous combination of those soreign despots, who abetted them, in hope of sharing the spoils of the French nation, after having again reduced it to fervitude?

Reasonings of this kind were more acceptable to the generality than the arguments employed by the anti-republicans, who, though they widely differed in opinion among themselves, were considered as forming but one party, to which their enemics gave, in common, the name of royalists; meaning thereby to involve all the opponents of the commonwealth in the indiscriminate imputation of being soes to liberty, and afferters of arbitrary power.

The conflicts of opinion upon these various subjects were, at this period, encreasing daily, and threatened to produce internal convulsions in various parts of France, through the invincible activity and courage of the party in opposition to government. But the vigilance of the directory repressed every movement that had the least tendency to insurrection, and the decided resolution of all the armies, to support the present measures, kept the discontented in away in awe.

No class of men had fignalized their attachment to republican principles with such fervour and constancy as the French soldiery. It was now the fifth campaign, during which their toils and fufferings were not less remarkable than their exploits. Hunger and nakedness had frequently been their portion, in the midst of their most splendid successes. Had not the incredibly hard living they were used to in their own country, under the leverity of the old government, inured their bodies to go through much fatigue with a flender fusienance, and few comforts, they would not have proved adequate to the labours and feanty support to which they submitted, with such admirable patience, in the course of their warfare. This part of their character attracted the notice of foreign nations as much as of their own: and it was often a matter of furprize, how they could perform the duties of a military life with fo stinted and wretched a fare, and under fo many discouragements.

The army of Italy, in particular, had exhibited astonishing examples of fortitude in the most trying situations; that their enemies had concluded, from the reports of the dissiculties to which they were reduced, in procuring the means of existence, that nothing else would be needed to compel them to abandon their position, and withdraw to France. It was previously, however, to the present campaign, and while they were stationed among the rocks, extending along the south of Piedmont, to the frontiers of France, that the French foldiers had occasion to exhibit their patience under hard fare. The coarse and disgusting food on which they sub-sisted, was compared to the Lace-demonian broth of old, and none, it was said, but Frenchmen, Greenlanders, or Scotch Highlanders, could have sed on such messes.

It was by their perseverance, in these extremities, that they maintained the posts they occupied, and assorded time to Buonaparte to join them, at the head of those reinforcements, united with which they marched to the conquest of Italy.

This and their other atchievements were incessantly held out to the French armies, as incentives to adhere faithfully to a caute which they had hitherto supported with so much glory. One more campaign would, probably, put an end to their toils; and, by procuring a glorious peace, enable them to return to their country, and spend their suture lives with honour and ease, in the enjoyment of those remunerations promised them for their services.

Such were the arguments and expectations that animated the armies of France at this period, especially that which had performed such great things in Italy, and now hoped to close the year by the capture of Mantua, and the total fall of the Austrian empire in Italy.

126] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

C H A P. IX.

Campaign in Germany - Opposite Designs of the Franch and Austrians .-Successes of the French. They invest Ehrenbritstein. - Driven back, by the Archenke Charles, to Duffeldorf. -The Division of the French Army under Moreon takes Post at Strasburg .- The Plan of Operations proposed by this General.—Crosses the Rhine.—Reduces the Fortress of Kehl.—Defeats the Austrians, under Marshat Wurmser, near Philipsburg. - And in various and fuccessive Engagements. The Austrians retire, in order to wait for Reinforcements, into the Interior of Germany.—Junction of the French Troops under Jourdan and Kleber .- These united reduce Frankfort .-Successes of Moreau in Suabia. —Cessation of Hostilities between the French and the Princes of Wirtemberg and Baden .- Conduct of Pruffia .- A Pruffian Army takes Possession of Nuremberg .- Impolicy of the Freuch in the Mode of raifing Contributions.—Cause of this.—Depredations of the French in Germany.—Operations of the French Armies under Moreau and Jourdan.— Difasters of the Austrians.—The Emperor represents the Situation of Germany, and his own Situation, in an Appeal to his Bohemian and Hungarian Subjects .- Diet of the Empire .- Partakes of the general Consternation of Germany.—Determination to open a Negociation for Peace with France. -The Tide of Success turned against the French by the Germans, under the Archduke Charles.—Obstinate Engagements.—Masterly Retreat of the French Armies.—Particularly of that under Moreau.—Consequences.— The Austrians occupied in the Siege of Kehl .- Sally of the Garrison there. -Farious Actions. - Armistice between the French and Austrians. -The Diet of the Empire re-uniniated by the enterprizing Spirit and Success of the Archduke Charles, folicitous to regain the Favour of the Imperial WHILE Buonaparte was employed in a contest with the Austrian arms and authority in Italy, Jourdan and Moreau were engaged in a conslict with the same formidable enemy on the Rhine; which the French had long proposed to make the boundary of the republic, on the side of Germany.

Court.

The object to which the Austrians were thought to direct their motions was Luxembourg; the recovery of which important fortress, at the opening of the campaign, would have given great reputation to the Austrian arms, and opened, at the same time, a passage for the recovery of the Netherlands.

The French were no less desirous of obtaining possession of Mentz, in their attempts on which they had lost such numbers, and experienced so many disappointments; but the fortifications of this city had been

fa

fa confiderably increased, and the garrison so much strengthened, that, unless the French could attack it on the German, as well as on their own, side of the Rhine, the communication with Germany would furnish it with continual supplies of men and provisions, and frustrate all their endeavours to reduce it.

The opening of the campaign aulpicious to the French. Moving from Dusseldorf, that divifion which had wintered there; marched, under general Kleber, on the right fide of the Rhine, towards a body of Austrians, encamped at the river Sieg, to guard its passage against the French; but these defeated them on the first of June, and, following their fuccesses, encountered and routed another body, commanded by the prince of Wirtemberg, on the fourth, at Altenkirchen, a place lying on the road to Mentz, whither the French intended to force their way, in order to intercept its communication with Germany. In the first of these engagements, the Austrians lost about two thousand men; in the second, near three thousand.

They had now crossed the Sieg, and the Lahn, and were in pursuit of the troops they had defeated at the passage of these rivers: they had, at the same time, invested the celebrated fortress of Ehrenbritstein, the capture of which would have given them the command of all the neighbouring country.

Happily for the Austrians, this was a place of extraordinary strength, and not to be subdued but by the greatest efforts and perseverance: in order, however, to secure it esfectually, together with the adjacent parts, it was judged adviseable, by the Austrian commanders, to move, with the greater part of their forces, to the defence of the German fide of the Rhine.

The archduke Charles, who was at the head of the Imperial army, croffed that river accordingly, about the eight of June, in such force, as rendered the Austrians confiderably superior in strength to the French, who, by this motion, were arrested in their progress towards Mentz, which they had nearly approached: and general Lesebre, one of their belt officers, was, after a most brave and skilful desenge, deseated; on the fifteenth, near Wetzkar, and compelled to repals the Lahn, and retire towards the Seig, in his way back to Dusseldors.

General Jourdan, who commanded the French army, opposed to the archduke, after raising the slege of Ehrenbritstein, near Siegburg, took a polition where he hoped to make a itand, until the reinforcements he expected had joined him; but the archduke, confiding in the goodness of his troops, as well as the furperiority of their numbers, attacked the division under Kleber, on the twentieth, at Kirpen, and, after a well-disputed action, compelled him togetire, and abandon all the courttry he had reduced, in his march from Dusseldorf; to which place he found it necessary to make a retreat with that part of the army under his command, while the other recrossed the Rhine at Neuwied with Jourdan, and repossessed their former politions, in order to prevent the Austrians from deriving any farther advantages from their fuccess.

Manheim and Mentz seemed now to lie open to the attacks of the French; but, as the protection they would receive from the Austrian armics,

128] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

Rhine, would render such an attempt extremely hazardous, they determined to besiege neither, but to leave their future reduction to the consequence of a plan of operations, which, if it succeeded according to their expectations, would not fail to put them in possession of those two cities, without the necessity of a siege.

When the archduke crossed to the right of the Rhine, he left a strong division of his forces in the Hundsdruck, the country lying on the left of that river, between Mentz, on the north, and Manheim, on the south. This division, together with the garrisons of those two cities, was reputed sufficient to watch and repel the motions of general Moreau, who commanded the French forces in that quarter.

But this active general was intent on a very different plan from that of annoying the Austrian division, or of forming the siege of either of these places. In order, however, to deceive them, by fuch appearances as might facilitate his detigns, he made a variety of motions, indicating an attack of feveral of their posts; and, while they were making arrangements to oppose him, he drew off, unperceived, almost the whole of his army, and, by an expeditious march, reached Strasburgh before the Austrians had discovered his motions.

He had now attained the spot from whence he was to enter upon the execution of his project, which was, to cross the Rhine, opposite this city, into Swabia, and to take the fort of Kehl; by being master of which, he would gain the command of a large extent of country in its proximity, and secure an entrance to the French into that circle.

He had proposed to attempt a passage in different places; and, in order the more eafily to effect his defign, to take polleffion of fome of the islands in that river, but most of thefe happened to be overflowed. and the others were possessed by the Austrians, who were to be dislodged before he could make good his To conceal his motions, he attacked them in the night of the twenty-fourth of June, in fuch force, and with to much resolution, that the Austrians were soon obliged to retire across the bridges communicating with the German side, and which they had not time to defirov. Over thefe the French passed to that side, but they had neither fufficient artillery nor cavalry to affift the infantry in cafe of an attack, which was every moment expected. In this critical fituation, general Morcau determined to march forwards with the few pieces of cannon he had feized upon the With these he resolutely . assaulted the forties of Kehl, and carried it. This sudden and unexpedied success greatly alarmed the Austrian army, under the archduke; the rear of which was thereby put into danger, while the front was expoled to the force under Jourdan: who, collecting the divisions that had retreated, was preparing to join Kleber, again advancing towards the Austrians.

Marshal Wurmser, who commanded the Austrian troops in the Brisgaw, from which large detachments had been sent to Italy, was unable to maintain his ground against Moreau, and the archduke was himself compelled to hasten to his aid; but, before he could arrive,

Moreau

Moreau fell upon the Austrians at Renchan, a village near Philipsburgh, and totally deseated them, on the twenty-eighth of June, with a considerable loss of men and cannon. He pursued them to Radstadt, where, having received re-inforcements, they made a stand; but, after an obstinate conslict, were again routed on the sixth of July. General Laroche had, on the second, deseated a large body of them posted on Mount Kubis, the highest of those called the Black Mountains.

They now retreated to the village of Ettlingen, a strong position in the neighbourhood of Manheim. Here they were joined by the ·major part of the archduke's army, and appeared refolved to make a vigorous resistance for the preservation of that part of Germany. The battle was fought, on the ninth of July, with great fury on both sides, but ended to the advantage of the French. They were repulled in four charges, but fucceeded in the fifth, which was made with the bayonet. strians lost great numbers slain in the field, befide fifteen hundred who were taken.

This victory decided the superiority on the Rhine in favour of the French. The Austrians lest totally uncovered the cities of Mentz and Manheim, and the fortresses of Philipsburgh and Ehrenbretstein, and retired farther into Germany, to wait for reinforcements, before they could venture to resume offensive operations.

In the mean time, general Kleber had again proceeded from Dusieldorf, and advanced along the right bank of the Rhine. He was joined on the second of July by general Jourdan, who had crossed the Rhine near Coblentz. The Austrian general, Wartensleben, had not been able to oppose these various movements of the French, who had worsted his troops on several occasions, and taken or killed near two thousand of them. After dispersing all the various corps that attempted to impede their progres, they arrived, on the twelfth of Juy, within sight of Francsort on the Main.

Vol. XXXVIII.

This city, with feveral others n its proximity, furrendered to the French, on capitulations that left them in possession of their municipal laws and government. In order to quiet the minds of the Germans, and convince them that the views of the French did not extend to any permanent possession of the towns and territories they had seized, general Jourdan issued a proclamation, by which he formally engaged to protect the judicial chamber of the empire at Wetzlar, fituated in the circle of the Upper Rhine, tome distance from Francfort. granted a safeguard to all its members, and strictly forbad its proceedings to be disturbed under any pretence.

Among the cities that furrendered to Jourdan was that of Wurtsburgh, one of the most considerable bishopricks and ecclefiaftical principalities in Germany. Here he found immense magazines and two hundred pieces of cannon. It fell into his hands on the twenty-fixth of July; and shortly after, having forced Wartensleben to retire beyond the Rednitz, near Bamberg, on the first of August, he took posiession of that capital of Franconia, on the same day: like Wurtsburgh, it was also a bishopric and principality, and possessed a considerable territory.

[K] By

empire, fupported by the protestant interest, which stood on a parity of strength and importance with that of the Roman catholic; it also counted among its friends and wellwishers, those powers abroad, with which Austria was liable to be at variance. But the support of the most potent of these powers had vanished from its ideas, since the matrimonial alliance that took place between the houses of Bourbon and Austria, in the person of the late unhappy queen of France. It had revived however on the treaty that fevered Prussia from the coalition, and it was secretly held out, by France, as the most efficacious temptation to a court, the aspiring views of which required no less motives at this period to fecure its alliance.

Could the constitution of Germany have undergone such a change, as to place the Imperial diadem on the head of a protestant prince, and could the house of Brandenburgh have secured its succession to this dignity, it was generally imagined that Prussia would have interested itself in the defence of the empire; but the little expectation it entertained, of being able to compass such a point, rendered it, in the general opinion, indifferent to the preservation of the Germanic Provided the constitution. memberment of this great body flould be accompanied with these advantages, which the politics of Prussia kept in view, it was the public persuasion that no opposition would arise from the court of Berlin, to an alteration, from which it would derive fuch material benefit. The smaller states first, and then the greater in lower Germany, feemed likely to be swallowed up peace-meal in a rifing Pruffian empire: if this empire itself should not be divided, by that partitioning policy, which has supplanted the law of nations, among the Russians, Swedes, and Austrians.

A conviction of the rapacious views of Prussia had greatly alienated the attachment of the Germans. to that power. The willingness of the French, to permit the encroachments it had in contemplation, subjected them no less to a diminution of that partiality with which they had hitherto been favoured by the people of Germany. These had hoped, that the dread of this victorious nation would have fo far operated in favour of the common classes every where, as to have induced the divers princes, engaged in the coalition, to have abated of the rigorous exactions from their respective subjects, and procured to these a milder treatment than if their arms had been fuccessful. But when they began to feel the weight of the contributions demanded by the French in the countries of which they had taken possession, and found that the authority they exercised was no less grievous and severe, than that of their former rulers, their good wishes to the French diminished, and they began to mistrust those promises of equity and moderation, to those who submitted to them, which had induced fuch numbers to give them a friendly reception, and to welcome them as their deliverers from oppresfion.

The mass of the people in the numerous districts, where contributions were required by the French, had expected that no more would have been exacted from thefe. than their just proportion; but, contrary to their hopes, and in contradiction to those principles of equality on, which the French laid fo much stress, these, with a degree of carelessiness and improvidence, that belied the ideas, which had been so universally formed of their fagacity, left the repartition of the fums to be raifed, to the management of those very persons who had been objects of public discontent and complaint, for the injustice and partiality of which they had been the instruments, under their respec-These being, tive governments. for the fake of expedition, entrusted with those levies, made no alteration in the manner, and adhered to established precedents. Thus the privileged classes still enjoyed their former exemptions, and the inferior part of the community was loaded, as antecedently, with almost the whole burden of the taxes, imposed for the raising of the contributions.

contrary

This was the most injudicious of all the measures adopted by the French in the management of their new acquisitions, and it operated more fatally to their interest than was perceptible to the generality. It excited the most violent resentment in the multitude, which had been taught to believe, that whereever the French became masters, all oppressions would be at an end, and no man would be treated worfe than his neighbour. To be deceived in so barbarous and oppressive a manner: to behold their tyrannical rulers authorized to lord it over them as usual, and to find that the presence of the French, from which so much had been expected, produced no mitigation of their flavery. To be rendered, in short, no less miserable by the successes of the French, than they could have been, had their boasted republic been destroyed, and the completest despotism established on its ruins, filled them with the keenest indignation at a people whom they now branded as deceivers and impostors, and wholly unworthy of the good fortune that had attended them. Had the French republic been true to the principles professed in their declarations and manifestoes to all nrtions, they would have been wholly irrefistible. All thrones raised on despotic power would have fallen; and, as was faid of Alexander * the. Great, the earth would have stood filent before them. It is to their weakness and vices, the inconfistency of their conduct in Italy, Germany, and wherever they went, with their professions, the prevalence of their passions over their principles, that most of the European potentates owe their crowns at the present moment.

One of the causes of the readiness with which the French allowed the petty fovereigns of Germany, to collect in their own manner the contributions imposed upon them, was, to conciliate their good will, and convince them that no interference was, aimed at in their domestic affairs, by leaving to them the arrangement, of which their fovereignty and independence remained unviolated. Had the French purfued another fystem, and proclaimed an entire emancipation of their subjects from all farther allegiance to their native princes, it was. far from clear that fuch a measure would have produced any other confequence than throwing the countries, empire, fupported by the protestant interest, which stood on a parity of strength and importance with that of the Roman catholic; it also counted among its friends and wellwishers, those powers abroad, with which Austria was liable to be at variance. But the support of the most potent of these powers had vanished from its ideas, fince the matrimonial alliance that took place between the houses of Bourbon and Austria, in the person of the late unhappy queen of France. It had revived however on the treaty that fevered Prussia from the coalition, and it was secretly held out, by France, as the most efficacious temptation to a court, the aspiring views of which required no less motives at this period to fecure its alliance.

^{*} First Book of the Maccabees, Ch. 1.

Could the constitution of Germany have undergone such change, as to place the Imperial diadem on the head of a protestant prince, and could the house of Brandenburgh have fecured its fuccession to this dignity, it was generally imagined that Prussia would have interested itself in the defence of the empire; but the little expectation it entertained, of being able to compass such a point, rendered it, in the general opinion, indifferent to the preservation of the Germanic constitution. Provided the difmemberment of this great body. should be accompanied with these advantages, which the politics of Prussia kept in view, it was the public persuasion that no opposition would arise from the court of Berlin, to an alteration, from which it would derive such material benefit. The smaller states first, and then the greater in lower Germany, feemed likely to be swallowed up peace-meal in a rising Prussian empire: if this empire itself should not be divided, by that partitioning policy, which has supplanted the law of nations, among the Russians, Swedes, and Austrians.

A conviction of the rapacious views of Prussia had greatly alienated the attachment of the Germans to that power. The willingness of the French, to permit the encroachments it had in contemplation, subjected them no less to a diminution of that partiality with which they had hitherto been favoured by the These had people of Germany. hoped, that the dread of this victorious nation would have so far operated in favour of the common classes every where, as to have induced the divers princes, engaged in the coalition, to have abated of the rigorous exactions from their respective subjects, and procured to thele a milder treatment than if their arms had been fuccessful. But when they began to feel the weight of the contributions demanded by the French in the countries which they had taken possession, and found that the authority they exercifed was no less grievous and fevere, than that of their former rulers, their good wishes to the French diminished, and they began to mistrust those promises of equity and moderation, to those who submitted to them, which had induced fuch numbers to give them a friendly reception, and to welcome them as their deliverers from oppreffion.

The mass of the people in the numerous districts, where contributions were required by the French, had expected that no more would have been exacted from these than their just proportion; but,

contrary

HISTORY

to retire into the country I fe operations of the arm Moreau, were defigned those of that under Jourds as fuccefsfully proceeding enterprize he formed, a before him the Imperialit Wartenfleben, a brave a enced officer, but at this p ntinually unfortunate. Afof ill fuccess, he sustainer lefeat, on the fixth of Augu hftadt, in the neighbourho iberg, where his own fk valour of his troops, we I to yield to the super ns of the French.

now retired to a firong petween Sultzbach and A wo towns on the confines of the fixth of Bavaria, but here gain attacked by gene n, on the fixteenth of A and his troops diven from tageous post they occupind at Neumark, a town inity.

fe repeated disasters, in G rendered more grievous elligence daily arriving of the progress of the French caused an alarm at Vient equal to that which had be enced in the commencement reign of the late empre Theresa, when she was co to quit her capital, to average of falling into the har numerous enemies.

emperor Francis feemed of being in the like manito abandon Vienna. I lary dominions, Bohemia p ly, were menaced with invasion by the French, i immediate stop were put areer.

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796. 134]

thus revolutionised, into confusion, and embroiling the French with feveral princes, the amity of whom they were defirous to obtain, and were at that time earnestly seeking. a measure of this kind must at once have rendered these princes irreconcilably averse to any connections with a state evidently bent on the destruction of every species of sovereignty, but that of the people at large; and determined to abolish every where the rights of princes and reigning families, and every trace of hereditary government.

The real truth was, that the fituation of France, at this period, was extremely critical. The pecuniary wants of the republic were such, that it could not provide the supplies required by the commanders of their numerous armies abroad, which, though victorious, were frequently reduced to the most deplorable need of the commonest neces-It was therefore indispensifaries. bly requisite to procure them at any rate, and with the most effectual expedition, for men who neither would, nor indeed could, wait for them, and who thought themselves entitled to a comfortable maintenance, and fome remuneration for the services they were continually performing for their country.

The German people, in consequence of the depredations exercifed upon them by the French armies, became their most inveterate foes, and lost no opportunity of doing them every species of detriment. They joined in crowds the Imperial armies; they formed themselves into bodies under chiefs of their own chusing, and fell upon the French wherever they could do it with advantage. They proved, in short, the most useful auxiliaries to the Austrian troops, through their local knowledge of the countries where the war was waged, and through the refentment that animated them against the French, for the losses they had sustained in the predatory incursions of the republican foldiery, and the avidity of booty for which these were peculiarly noted.

Such were the causes of the rapid decline of that partial disposition towards the French, expressed by the commonalty in fo many countries in Germany, at their first en-As they viewed them in the light of friends and brethren, coming to their relief, they were the more exasperated, when they found them to be enemies and plunderers.

In the mean time, the army, commanded by Jourdan, having overrun Franconia, was advancing towards Ratisbon, levying contributions from all the districts in its way. The diet of the empire, fit, ting in that city, was struck with consternation, at the rapidity of its approach, notwithstanding that the Imperial army disputed every step with the utmost resolution.

The army, under general Moreau, was, at the fame time, marching from Swabia, of which he had completed the reduction, by taking Ulm and Donawerth, places of great importance on the Danube. He was now master of both sides of that river, and proposed to pass the Lech, dividing Swabia from Bavaria, in order to penetrate into this circle. The Austrians, apprifed of his intention, collected a strong force to oppose him; but he forced his passage over, on the twenty. fourth of August, near the city of Augsburg, and compelled the Auftrians to retire into the country be-

These operations of the army, under Moreau, were designed to fecond those of that under Jourdan, who was fuccessfully proceeding in every enterprize he formed, and driving before him the Imperialists, under Wartensleben, a brave and experienced officer, but at this period continually unfortunate. After a series of ill success, he sustained a heavy defeat, on the fixth of August, at Hochstadt, in the neighbourhood of Bamberg, where his own skill, and the valour of his troops, were obliged to yield to the superior exertions of the French.

He now retired to a strong position between Sultzbach and Amberg, two towns on the confines of the north of Bavaria, but here he was again attacked by general Jourdan, on the sixteenth of August, and his troops diven from the advantageous post they occupied here and at Neumark, a town in the vicinity.

These repeated disasters, in Germany, rendered more grievous by the intelligence daily arriving of the victorious progress of the French in Italy, caused an alarm at Vienna, almost equal to that which had been experienced in the commencement of the reign of the late empress, Mary Theresa, when she was compelled to quit her capital, to avoid the danger of falling into the hands of her numerous enemies.

The emperor Francis seemed on the eve of being in the like manner forced to abandon Vienna. His hereditary dominions, Bohemia particularly, were menaced with a speedy invasion by the French, unless an immediate stop were put to their career.

In this perilous emergency he made a solemn appeal to his subjects in Bohemia, who lay nearest the danger, exhorting them by every motive of loyalty to their fovereign, and regard to the fafety of their possessions and religion, to arm instantly in the defence of both. To this purpose he enjoined the establithment of a national militia, to which he held out every encouragement and remuneration enjoyed by the regular troops. By the plan proposed, the twentieth part of all the able-bodied men in that kingdom were to be drafted for the protection of its frontiers, from the expected irruption of the French.

The like appeal was made to the people of Hungary, and of all his other dominions. They were carefully reminded, on this occasion, of the immense exactions of the French, not only in money, but in every article of necessity, or of use, and with what severe punctuality the payment of them was required.

It was chiefly the dread of thefe heavy demands that influenced the determination of the Germans to contribute all in their power to prevent the farther progress of the French. Their levies of money, and their other requisitions excited The duke of. universal alarm. Wirtemburg had been assessed four millions; the circle of Swabia, twelve millions, besides to surnish eight thousand horses, five thousand oxen, one hundred and fifty thoufand quintals of corn, one hundred thousand sacks of oats, a proportionable quantity of hay, and one hundred thousand pair of shoes. Eight millions were demanded from the circle of Franconia, with a very large supply of herses. Great sums [K4] were also required from the cities of Francsort, Wurtsburg, Bamberg, and Nuremberg, together with an immense quantity of other articles, for the subsistence and clothing of the French armies.

But the terror, which their arms had spread every where, superfeded all considerations but that of deprecating their hostility upon any terms. After general Moreau's passage of the Lech, the elector of Bavaria, thinking himself no longer secure, made overtures to that officer for a pacification. This, indeed, had been done by every prince and city that had not been able to resist him.

The diet itself of the empire, convened as usual at Ratisbon, partook of the universal consternation. In a fitting, held on the 30th of July, for the purpose of consulting on the situation of affairs, the deputies of the princes and states of the empire came to the determination of opening a negociation for peace with France. All the members of the die acceded to it, except the deputies from Austria and Bohemia, who ascribed the disasters of the war to want of union among the states of the empire, and their backwardness to fecond their chief, the emperor, in the common defence of their country.

But the dangers apprehended from the French, appeared greater than that of opposing the desire of the emperor. A decree was passed, by the diet, seriously to remonstrate to han, that, in the present circumstances of the empire, it was necessary, conformably to the wish of its divers members, to put an end to a war that had been so calamitous, and no longer to deser the concluding of a peace upon reasonable conditions.

Not content with this address to the emperor, they looked upon the situation of the diet as so precarious, that they commissioned deputies to repair to the French armies, to stipulate with the generals for the security and protection of the diet, and of the public documents and archives in its custody, and for the neutrality of Ratisbon itself.

In this extremity, the archduke resolved to make a resolute attempt to extricate the diet and the empire at once, from the humiliating condition to which they were reduced. He was at this time so hard pressed by Moreau, that he hardly could judge which of the two difficulties required his attention the most: that of opposing this formidable adversary, or of hastening to the succour of Wartensleben.

Jourdan had invariably maintained his superiority over him: and pushing him, from post to post, was now advanced within a day's march of Ratisbon. No time was, therefore to be lost in marching to his assistance. This was become the more indispensible, that a strong division of Jourdan's army, under general Bernardotte, an active and enterprising officer, had been dentached, with orders to proceed immediately to Ratisbon.

This circumstance determined the archduke. Leaving a powerful body to observe the motions of Moreau, he speeded towards the Danube, which he crossed on the seventeenth of August, at Ingolstadt, with the intent of throwing himself between Ratisbon and the French division that was approaching it.

On that very day general Wartensleben's army was attacked in its encampment at Sultzback, by that of Jourdan. The Austrians had been so much reinforced by continual detachments sent them by the archduke, that they were more than equal in number to the French. They defended themselves with such obstinacy, that the conslict lasted from the beginning of day till eleven at night, when the French had obtained possession of the ground on which the battle had been fought.

During this engagement, a large division of Jourdan's army marched towards Amberg, to prevent the Austrians, who were stationed there, from coming to the aid of those who were sighting at Sultzbach. General Championnet, who commanded this division, fell in with the Austrians while on their way to that town; and assailed them with so much vigour, that they were forced back to Amberg. The dispute was maintained with great courage and perseverance on each side, and lasted no less than twelve hours.

On the morning of the eighteenth, the French army moved forwards towards the Austrians, who were strongly posted in front of Amberg. General Jourdan propoled to attack them before they had been joined by the archduke; but their superiority was already such, that without waiting to be attacked, they advanced upon the French with fuch impetuofity and vigour, that these were several times forced from the position they had taken: they recovered it at last, after repeated efforts; and, pursuing their advantage, made themselves masters of the heights before Amberg. The Auftrians were compelled to retreat across the Nab, and wait the arrival of the numerous troops which they hourly expected would come to their assistance.

They arrived at length, with the archduke at their head. Repeated expresses had been dispatched to him during the night of the eighteenth, to apprise him of the retreat of the Austrians before the French army, and of its taking possession of the country on the other side of the Nab. As soon as he had gained sufficient intelligence of the relative position of the contending armies, he resolved to avail himself, without delay, of the immense superiority which his junction with Wartensleben now gave him over the French.

After concerting their plan of operations, the archduke attacked the French division, under general Bernadotte, on the twenty-second of August, and forced him to fall back to Neumark, whence he was, on the day following, compelled to retire towards Nuremberg; leaving the left wing and rear of Jourdan's army exposed to that of the archduke.

This proved a decifive day. General Jourdan was no longer able to contend with the united armies of the archduke and of Wartensleben. They moved in order of battle, on the twenty-fourth, with an intention to furround him: The latter was to assail him in front, and the former to take him in flank and rear. vast disparity of his strength obliged the French general to make an immediate retreat. He conducted it with equal judgement and spirit. From the twenty-fourth of August, when it commenced, till his arrival at Wurtsburg, on the second of September, it was a series of encounters and skirmishes; wherein the superiority of the Austrians in numbers, aided by the great multitudes of the peasantry, that fell upon the French from all quarters, rendered all resistance, on their part, impracticable.

General Jourdan made a resolute stand upon that day. He deseated the Austrian general, Stzaray; and would have totally destroyed the troops under his command, notwithstanding his skill and their bravery, had not the whole of the archduke's army arrived in time to relieve both him and Wartensleben, who had not, conjointly, been able to make an effectual impression upon the French.

They again continued their retreat, harrassed by the Austrians; who frequently experienced the feverest checks, and were obliged to act with the utmost caution against an enemy, whole inferiority of strength alone, procured them most of their advantages. From the fixth to the fixteenth, feveral obstinate engagements took place between the Austrians and the French, who routed two of their best generals, Kray and Hotze, with confiderable But on the archduke's concentrating his force for a general attack, they withdrew from their posts on the Lahn, on the seventeenth, and made good their retreat to the Sieg. It was performed with fuch order, and their countenance appeared fo firm and resolute, that the Austrians, though they were so much more numerous, did not judge proper to give them much molestation, and suffered them to retire with a lofs that was deemed inconfiderable, when compared with the means they had of rendering it much greafer.

Thus ended an expedition, from which, at its commencement, the most prosperous issue was expected, and would probably have been derived, had those irregularities and depredations been duly restrained, which were so peculiarly unbecoming and impolitic in the republican and revolutionary army, and had those supplies of men and of money been feafonably provided, on which the general entrusted with the expedition had confidently relied. The want of pecuniary remittances obliged him to have recourse to heavier exactions than were confiftent with the plan of conciliation, on which the French must have been conscious, the prefervation of their popularity among the natives of Germany, and of that good will to their cause, through which they promifed themselves. and actually met with during fometime, a very friendly reception from the commonality chiefly depended. The want of reinforcements was a still more fatal injury to the enterprife. The extent of country, overrun rather than subdued by the French, required a far greater force than that commanded by Jourdan, whose operations were necessarily stinted, from the inadequacy of his strength to perform them, and whose activity was perpetually retarded by the defect of means to give it proper scope.

The losses of the French, in this expedition, were very considerable in soldiers and officers of the highest desert and reputation in their service. None, indeed, but such could have contended with the far superior numbers of excellent troops continually starting up against them from every quarter; nor could have made good their retreat through the vast tract of country they had to traverse; their march through which was no less dangerous from the hostility of the inhabitants, than from the indesatigable vigour of a pursuing enemy.

The

HISTORY OF EUROPE. [139

The greatest loss that befel them, in this long and difficult retreat, was that of general Marceau, an officer of the highest character in his pro-In the retreat of the Sieg, on the nineteenth of September, while the French were cleaning the defiles of Altankircha, he was entrusted with the protection of their He executed this talk in a masterly and successful manner. But as he was reconnoiting a wood, occupied by the enemy, he was mortally wounded. So great was the esteem and respect he was held in by the Austrians, that the archduke himself sent his surgeon to attend him; and after he was dead, ordered his body to be delivered to the French, and military honours to be paid to his memory by his own army, in conjunction with the French military.

General Marceau fell in the flower of his age: he had just completed his twenty-feventh year. But his talents were extraordinary, and excited the firmest persuasion, that he would become one of the greatest commanders of the age. He was, by the generality of military people, reputed another Buonaparte. had, like him, rifen by performing arduous and essential services, and was the favourite of the foldiery, who lamented his loss as that of a friend and protector, as well as of a general in whom they placed the justest confidence.

Shortly after his retreat across the Rhine, general Jourdan became fo feriously indisposed, through the incessiant fatigue he had undergone during this laborious campaign, that he was obliged to refign the command of the army of the Sambre and Meuse, which was conferred upon general Bournonville, who was at this time at the head of those forces denominated the army of the north. He had greatly distinguished himself in the campaigns of 1792 He fully maintained the and 1793. reputation he had acquired; and, during the remainder of the campaign, kept the Austrians continual in check, and defeated them in fome very ferious engagements.

In the mean time, the archduke having freed the empire from one of the invading armies, now faw himlelf at liberty to attack the other with a far fuperior force, flushed with victory, and defirous to complete the fuccess and honour it had gained, by compelling that army in the lame manner to abandon its conquests in Germany.

Leaving a sufficient strength to make head against the French forces he had driven across the Rhine, he fet out at the head of a powerful army in quest of general Moreau, whom he doubted not to compel, as he had done Jourdan, to retire into France.

This resolute and skilful officer was still contending successfully with general Latour, who commanded the Austrian forces, and was extremely active in his endeavours to expel the French from Batavia; but Moreau was superior to him in every engagement. Finding however, impossible to maintain his ground, in the heart of Germany, after the expulsion of Jourdan's army, against the immense superiority of numbers that were on the point of assailing him, he came to the determination of moving back to the Rhine. He broke up his incampment before Ingolstadt on the 10th of September, and retired leifurely towards Neuburg, overcoming every obstacle in his way, and defeating every corps of the Austrians that attempted to oppose Elated with the advantage they had obtained over him at Ingolftadt, from whence he had not been able to move without confiderable loss, they hoped, by means of that superiority and strength which had rendered them successful, to have it in their power to molest him as effectually in his retrograde mo-But the judiciousness of his tions. arrangements was fuch, that most of the encounters were to their difadvantage.

It was not, however, without the most extreme danger and difficulties, that he purfued his march. On reaching the Lech, Latour came up with him; an engagement enfued on the feventeenth, when the Austrians were totally defeated and purfued as far as Landsperg, in Moreau then croffed the Lech, and proceeded through Ulm, in Swabia, towards the Black Forest, on the confines of Switzerland. But he was so closely pressed by Latour, that he was obliged to make a stand at Steinhousen, near that forest, and give him battle. place on the last of September, and was fought with uncommon fury on both fides, that of the French especially, who law no alternative between victory and ruin. They defeated the Austrians, of whom-they flew and took confiderable numbers. with several pieces of cannon. The corps of emigrants, under the duke D'Enghien, fon to the prince of Condé, sufferred greatly in this action, as they had done some time before, in a conflict with the republican troops, that happened on the twelfth of September.

Notwithstanding this defeat, Latour remitted nothing of his efforts, and, still confiding in the number and goodness of his troops, harassed incessantly Moreau's rear. This officer now perceived that he must again risk a general action, and that unless he again defeated the Austrians who were nearest, they would speedily be joined by such numerous reinforcements, that all resistance would be vain. On the second of October, a felect body attacked the right wing of the Austrian army, posted between Bibarach and the Da-After routing this, they advanced upon the centre, which was at the same time vigourously assailed by the centre of Moreau's army. The contest lasted fix hours, and was extremely bloody on both fides. At length the Austrians gave way, and were so completely defeated, that they retired with the utmost expedition to a great distance from the field of battle. Their loss amounted to hear five thousand men, killed and taken, twenty pieces of cannon, with feveral standards, and a quantity of ammunition.

This victory did not, however, liberate the French from the dangers that still menaced their march to the Rhine. Between them and that river was posted a numerous army, and strong bodies infested their flanks and rear. They proceeded, however, with fuch firmness and judgement as to make their way through every impediment, to the Danube, which they croffed on the fixth of October, pushing the Austrians before them. On the ninth, general Defaix, a very resolute and able officer, attacked the Austrian corps commanded by generals Navandorf and Petrasch, ly fucceded in keeping both in check, while the centre of the French boldly enterred the defile called the Valley of Hell, from the frightful appearance of the rocks and mountains that hang over it on each fide, and in many places are bardly the space of thirty seet asun-This valley extended feveral leagues; and at the opening that led out of it, a formidable body of Austrians was stationed. was duly sensible of the peril he was about to encounter; but no other method remained to extricate him from the many difficulties that furrounded him. Latour, though repeatedly defeated, was still in great force. Anxious to regain his reputation, he exerted himself incesfantly whenever the least advantage feemed attainable. While this indefatigable enemy pressed upon his rear, every inlet on each fide of the valley was filled with troops, awaiting the moment of assailing the flanks of the French in their passage through it. To guard against this multiplicity of dangers, Moreau disposed of his right and left in such a manner, that the rear part of them protected his entrance into that valley, by facing the forces under Latour, and the van by advancing upon Navandorf and Petrasch on their respective wings, obliged them to divide their strength and attention. Having made these dispositions, the main body of the French proceeded in compact order along the valley, at the farther opening of which a desperate fight enfued with the Austrians that guarded But the French cleared their way; as did also the rear of their. right and left, which marched through with little molestation; and, having joined their respective divisions, presented altogether so formidable a countenance, that the Austrians, already disheartened by their inability to prevent the passage of the French, did not attempt to attack them in the polition they had taken after leaving the defile, nor in their march to Friburgh, where they arrived the next day.

This celebrated action took place on the twelfth of October. It completed the fecurity and fuccess of one of the most memorable retreats recorded in the military annals of It covered with modern times. glory the troops that performed it, and the general that commanded them. Throughout the whole of his expedition, Moreau had displayed confummate abilities. He had furmounted obstacles of every kind, and penetrated into the very heart of the empire. He had taken posfestion of Augsburgh and of Munich, the capitals of Bavaria, and compelled the elector to fue for peace. Had not the ill-fortune attending Jourdan's army disconcerted his plan, it was highly probable that he would have marched into Austria, and forced the emperor to accept of any peace that he could have obtained, discomforted as he then was in every quarter, and deprived of any other means to fave himself from apparent destruction.

In the mean time, it cannot be denied, that the light in which the French directory perceived and represented the expeditions of its armies into Germany, was a true one. The princes of the empire were detached from the coalition; immenfe fums were levied, which defrayed the expences of the invafion; and a powerful diversion was formed in favour of the expedition into Italy.

But it ought equally to have been acknowledged, as above, that these expeditions contributed to remove the partiality entertained for the French, from the minds of all the people in Germany, when they faw with how little reason they had expected to be benefited by the fuccesses of those licentious invaders. Nothing less than their infamous conduct to the people, who had long viewed them with benevolence, and had received them with cordiality, could have effaced the impression which had so univerfally taken place in their favour. The Germans now became convinced of their error, in expecting that a foreign nation would be fincerely folicitous to rid them of their grievances, and would not rather make use of the opportunity of rendering them subservient to their own purpoles.

142] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

But that consequence of the forced retreat of the French from Germany, which politicians teemed most deserving of consideration, was the immediate influence it had over the councils of the court of Berlin. While the French appeared irrefistible, it harboured and undertook defigns of a nature tending at once to revolutionize the whole empire, and to exact the dominion of Prussia equally on the fall of Austria and the ruin of the smaller states of Germany. The movements and fuccesses of the French in Italy and on the Rhine, and the establishment on the part of Prussia of a great military force in Nuremberg, feemed to indicate a plan for furrounding the emperor, by a wide circle, at the fame time that they laboured for his destruction, by interior attacks. The French armies contracted more and more quarters of the Austrians on the Rhine; the position of the Prussians, at Nuremberg, precluded the army under the archduke from retreating by the way of the Danube, otherwife than through their connivance, which, according to the usual policy of the court of Berlin, must be purchased by some important conces-In a word, according to human views, the abasement, if not the ruin, of the house of Austria leemed to be fast approaching; and the liberties of the inferior states already to have fallen. therefore, with universal satisfaction that Germany beheld the Prussian monarch's affociates in these iniquitous defigns, disabled from giving him assistance or countenance. The world indignantly beheld the affected moderation he assumed, by pretending to relinquish his usurpations on the ground, that the inhabitants of the districts he had seized, would not consent to become his subjects, nor the empire itself be prevailed upon to authorize him to accept of their submission. His ambition appeared altogether of a mean and contemptible kind. It was evident he would have facrificed his common country to strangers, for the sake of promoting fome paultry interests, the compassing of which would never have indemnified him from the danger he must have incurred by introducing so formidable and restless a people into Germany as the French. Their interference in its internal affairs would, in all likelihood, have been exerted without confulting his inclinations and interest, and might much more shortly than he imagined, have been extended to his own concerns, in a manner that would have affected him most detrimentally, and afforded him ample cause to repent of the fordid motives that had induced him to act against his country.

France, though disappointed in the great projects it had sormed in the expedition to Germany, still preserved its general preponderance against the coalition. The directory had, previously to the opening of the campaign, published to all Europe a defire to terminate the warupon equitable conditions; but these did not appear such to the two remaining powers in alliance against They well underthe republic. stood, that the cession of the Netherlands would be required, together with the restoration of all the conquests made by the British army in both the Indies.

It was to confirm its pretentions to these lofty demands, that France made those venturous attempts in the empire that had almost succeed-But the failure did not induce the rulers of the republic to abate in their demands, which they still infifted on with as much obstinacy as if they had been completely fuccessful in those vast enterprizes.

Austria did not display less resolution. It relied on that constant good fortune which had, in the critical occurrences of many ages, never permitted it to be reduced to diftrefs, without finally providing it with the means of deliverance. Hence, in the midst of difficulties, the spirit of that high-minded family, though frequently staggered at the reverses that befel it, and bending occasionally before unavoidable necessity, still remained unbroken, and filently cherished the hope, that the hour of prosperity would return, as it had so often done, and richly repay it for its past

While fuch ideas were prevalent, the court of Vienna felt more indignation than despondency at the success of the republican arms.

persuasions of a similar kind, that were no less current among the people of its hereditary dominions in Germany, contributed wonderfully to animate them in the defence of a family, that feemed, at all times, the peculiar favourite of fortune, and destined, however liable to temporary depression, ultimately to succeed against all its enemies, and to verify the epithet, bestowed upon it so long ago, of fortunate.

The inferior fovereigns, and petty states of the empire, had, in the beginning of the contest between the coalition and the republic, wavered in their opinion concerning the justice and propriety of requiring them to join against a people that had given them no provoca-Hence flowed those discontents, and murmurs, against the Imperial mandates, and requisitions, to that purpose, which were gradually converted into an enmity to those that issued them, and into good wishes to the cause against which they combated. But this hoftile difposition had no activity. and habitual fubserviency to the politics of the court of Vienna was too firmly established among most of the secondary princes, and Imperial cities, as they are styled, to be shaken by transitory events. The court of. Berlin was more feared than respected, and its tergiversation destroyed all influence but that which proceeded immediately from the terror of its arms. Thus the Austrian interest, though it sometimes sluctuated, still recovered its influence, and the inimical defigns of Prussia, against the lesser states of the empire, together with the flagitious behaviour of the French, rettored, in a great measure, the preponderance of the Imperial court, and the former readiness to coincide with its wishes. The return of this complying temper was also partly due to the necessity which Austria selt, of paying a competent regard to the ideas and inclinations of the people at large, and of carefully avoiding to give them just cause of offence.

144] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

The frontiers of France, on the Rhine, were now in danger of becoming again the theatre of war. The spirit and activity of the archduke, encreafed by his late fuccesses, had prompted him to an enterprize, from which, if he fucceeded, much utility and honour would be derived This was to retake, by a sudden and vigorous attack, the fortress of Kehl. To this end he detached, from his army, a corps of chosen men, who attacked the French general, Scherer, at Bruchfal, in the proximity of the Rhine, on the thirteenth of September, and, pushing him before them as far as Kehl, forced the outworks on the nineteenth, and had nearly carried that strong for-A tremendous fire, from the French batteries, compelled them, at length, to retire: but the boldness and resolution displayed in this enterprize did great honour to the assailants, and snewed how little the Austrian troops were daunted by the fuccesses of the French.

The same enterprizing disposition continued to characterize the archduke in his operations against the French, after their retreat to Friburgh, where Moreau had now established his quarters. On the seventeenth of October, his advanced posts, at Kindringen, in the vicinity, were assailed with great sury by the Imperial army, commanded by the archduke in person. All the generals that had been employed against Moreau, in the course of the campaign, were present in this action, which was maintained with remarkable obstinacy by both parties. The personal intrepidity of the archduke was confpicuous on this occasion. The right wing of his army, under Latour, being repulsed, and on the point of abandoning the attack of Kindringen, he put himself at the head of a body of granadiers, who returned to the charge and carried The left wing, and the centre of the Austrians, met with the firmest resistance, and, though the French were worsted, the action was not decisive.

General Moreau, finding himself overpowered by the immense superiority of numbers that occupied the positions around, concentrated his force in such a manner, as either to make a vigorous defence, or a fecure retreat, as circumstances should render it most expedient. He was attacked upon the strong ground he had chosen at Schlingen, situated upon a height, near Friburgh, on the twenty-third of October. The dispositions made by general Moreau, to receive the enemy, were so judicious, that, not with standing the number and valour of the Austrians, and the expertness of their commanders, the contest lasted three days, when the French, after disputing every inch of ground, retired in the best order, across the Rhine, at Huninghen, on the twenty-fixth. retreat was conducted with fuch firmness in the men, and skill in their commander, that the Austrians were neither able, nor willing, to attempt a close pursuit.

The French, on leaving the right fide of the Rhine, had provided the fortress of Kehl with a garrison, composed of select officers and sol-Moreau's intention was to find the Austrians such employment, in the siege of this important place, that they should not have leifure to turn their attention to any other object in that quarter. His project fucceeded fo well, that, till the commencement of the ensuing year, their whole time and strength were fpent in efforts to reduce this fortress. Herein they lost numbers of their best men. A very serious action took place on the twenty-fecond of November. The garrison made a general fally, and, driving the besiegers from their line of circumvallation, spiked all their cannon, and, after making a great flaughter, carried off a large number of prisoners.

In order to balance this check, the Austrians attacked, on the thirtieth of November, the fortification that covered the head of the bridge of Huninguen, on their fide. The attempt was made in the middle of the night, and the French were driven from their works. Recovering, however, from their disorder, they fell upon the affailants, retook their works, and defeated them fo completely, that they were obliged to retire, with the utmost speed, to a great distance, furiously pursued by the French, who slew and took vast numbers, though not without a fevere loss on their side, at the first onset, which was very unfavourable, and had nearly put the enemy in possession of the head of the bridge, whereby the communication with Kehl would have been cut off, and its reddition accelerated.

Vol. XXXVIII.

This action, for the time it lasted, and from the mutual animosity of the combatants, was reputed the most destructive of any that had yet happened during this war. was the fury of both the French and Austrians, that they were wholly intent upon flaughter. Few prifoners were made; and the killed and wounded, on both fides, was computed at four thousand, the loss being nearly equal.

The month of December was confumed in operations of this kind, which occasioned the loss of numbers, and served only to exercise the skill and bravery of both parties. It was not till the opening of the next year, that, after a valiant defence of two months, the fortress of Kehl furrendered to the Austrians, who thereby became possessed of a heap of rubbish and ruins. The garrison carried away the very pallifadoes, and lest nothing worth the taking. The works at the head of the bridge were in like manner evacuated some time after, and a final termination put to the operations of the campaign in this quarter.

The French and Austrian armies, on the lower Rhine, harraffed by the incessant satigues they had undergone, came also to the determination of concluding hostilities during the winter. An armistice took place between them, about the middle of December, by which they mutually agreed to retire into cantonments, and to remain there peaceably, till the suspension should be formally declared at an end.

The termination of a campaign fo unfortunate in its commencement, and so favourable in its termination, to the Austrian interest in Germany, totally revived its influence over the diet of the empire at Ratisbon. The consternation that had overwhelmed, it at the near approach of the victorious armies of Jourdan and Moreau, had been marked by circumstances denoting more despondency than became so respectable a body of men, and subjected them, in some measure, to the censures of the public, particularly of the court of Vienna, which expressed high displeasure at the readiness they had manifested to treat with the enemy. They now were equally solicitous to regain the good-will of the Imperial court, and addressed it in terms remarkably submissive and thankful for the protection they had received from its armies, and the preservation of the empire, by the expulsion of the French, through the valour and exertions of the archduke.

[L]

146] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

CHAP. X.

State of Parties in France.—A Revival of the Reign of Terror threatened in the Southern Departments by Freron.—The Directory defert and oppose the Jacobin Interest.—Conspiracy of Jacobins.—Discovered and defeuted.—Arrangements respecting the Estates of Emigrants.—Instrucce of the non-juring or refractory Clergy troublesome to Government. — Scandalous Neglect of the Execution of Justice.—Criminal Trials.—Money and Finance.—The same Impositions laid on the People of the Austrian Netherlands as on those of France.—New Plots and Insurrections.—Law for reconciling the different Factions in France, by the Extinction of Terror.—Proposal for repealing a Law which appeared to some to bear too hard on the Relations of Emigrants.—Rejected.—But an equitable Alteration made in that severe Law.—This a Matter of Triumph to the moderate Party.

T was the policy of the direc-L tory, as above observed, to secure their own power, by engaging the French nation in continued military exploits, by which the public mind might be occupied otherwife than in inquiries into their own past or present conduct; and by which they might acquire popularity, in proportion to the fuccess and glory of the French arms. Yet there was, in the midst of all the fuccesses of Buonaparte, in the heart of France, a very numerous party in opposition to the measures of the government; and this party, by the repulle of the French from Germany, was daily encreased. The French, at this period, might be divided into two great classes: the one bufiling and intriguing politicians, never fatisfied while there was anything to be done or undone; for ever in motion, and incapable of rest: the other purty, composed of men, bred in times before France was feized with a rage for innovation, whose prejudices were all in favour of monarchy, though not perhaps unlimited; and of others too, who, though they had originally favoured the principles of the revolution, longed now, above all things, to enjoy the bleffings of peace. When this peaceable party, whether inclined to monarchy, or republicanism, reflected that all the golden dreams of the reformers had passed away like visions of the night, and been followed by nothing but the accumulated evils of war; horror on horror, disappointment on disappointment. When they locked back on former times, plentiful and tranquil; a period too, when they were younger than now, knew more happiness, and saw every thing around them in the light of joy and gladness; they were sensible of the liveliest anguish and regret, and ar-[L2] dently dently wished for a return of such times as they had formerly enjoyed. This party was the most numerous in France, but they were forced to conceal their fentiments, and they They were of were not united. courfe, as usually happens in all countries, kept under by a smaller number, in possession of the powers of government. But, in the capital, where the minds of men were stimulated and fortified in their fentiments and defigns, by mutual intercourse, and which had so long been the feat of intrigues and attempts of opposite parties, there was a great number of discontented individuals, waiting for opportunities of publicly avowing their fentiments, in opposition to those of the present rulers, and to support them by open force. The vigilance of the directory obviated their defigns, and contained them within bounds. So reftlefs and determined, however, were the enemies to the present government, that, farther to fecure the public tranquillity, they thought it expedient to add another minister to the six already appointed by the conflitution, to whom was given the official title of minister of the police.

Through precautions of this nature, peace was maintained at Paris, but disturbances broke out, occafionally, in several parts of the republic. The southern departments, long a prey to that warmth and inpetuosity of temper which characterize their inhabitants, were at this time plunged into consusions that required the immediate interposition of government to suppress them.

As the people in those parts had been particularly ill treated by the jacobin party, they had, ever fince the fall of Roberspierre, meditated schemes of vengeance against the instruments of his tyranny, and of the many cruelties exercised upon them. They executed these schemes to their sull extent; and many of the guilty agents, in the atrocities committed among them, were sacrificed to their revenge.

The moderation that governed the councils of those who succeeded to the power of Roberspierre, put a stop to those executions. The prudence of the commissioners sent to pacify these departments, had almost restored them to peace and mutual conciliation, when, unfortunately for their repose, a man was sent to represent and to exercise the supreme authority of the state in those parts, who had already signalized himself there by his enormities.

This was the famous Freron, a man of courage and abilities, but of a fierce and fanguinary disposition. The people in those departments had filled the places of administration, in their respective districts, with persons of their own chusing. These were immediately displaced by Freron, who substituted to them individuals notorious for their crimes and the blood they had shed. reinstituted the societies, and renewed those revolutionary committees that had filled France with fuch horror; and he authorized them to break those members of the various municipalities whose principles difterred from their own.

During several months, the oppressed inhabitants of those departments were compelled to submit to the tyranny of Freron and his partizans, who strove with indesatigable zeal to re-establish the reign of terrorism. But the directory, who selt the necessity of putting an end to the influence which the jacobins were endeavouring to recover, recalled Freron, and commissioned two men of moderate principles, Imard and Jourdan, to inquire, in conjunction with others, into the causes of the discontents and disturbances that had happened in those departments. But the jacobin party laboured so earnestly to frustrate this commission, by calamniating the members that composed it, that, notwithstanding their accusations were formally declared malicious and illfounded, it was judged requisite, in order to prevent feuds and animofities in the two councils, to diffolve the commission. Government was apprehensive it would make discoveries that might involve perfons high in office, and occasion jealousies to be revived, which might defeat the conciliatory views proposed by the new constitution. The inquiry was, therefore, entrusted to the directory, which wifely determined to drop retrospective meafures, and, by lenient means, to restore tranquillity to the departments in question.

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

The jacobins were highly offended by the moderate councils which they now perceived the directory was resolved to pursue. They accused it of having abandoned those democratical principles on which the republic was founded, and basely betrayed those from whom it derived its power in the state. But the directory unintimidated by their threats, steadily adhered to its determinations, and gradually introduced into office individuals of their own opinions, in preference to the jacobins, who had hitherto enjoyed almost exclusively the first places under government.

This defertion of the jacobin interest subjected the directory to the most violent rancour of that restless and daring party: but, heedless of their hatred and menaces, government alleged these as reasons for putting a period to their meetings, and shutting up their places of refort. They represented them to the public in the most odious light, exhorting all good citizens to watch their motions, as full of danger and malevolence to the state. procured laws to be enacted, obvioufly levelled at them: those, for instance, that made it a capital crime to hold feditious meetings, or to attempt the re-establishment of the constitution under Roberspierre. Those members of the late convention and committees, reputed the heads of this party, were ordered to leave the capital, and the major part of those in offices of trust were dilmissed.

It was not without preffing motives that the directory acted with this feverity towards the jacobins: they were labouring to disseminate a spirit of disobedience through all the civil and military departments in the metropolis. They had feduced into open rebellion a hody of the latter, known by the appellation of legion of the police. It confifted of men selected from various corps of the army, and ordered to Paris for the support of the convention when the Parisians opposed that article of the constitution, which ordained a re-election of two-thirds of its members to the new legislature.

As they amounted to ten thoufand men, such a force appeared too formidable to be lest in the hands of the jacobins, who had so perverted them, that they were no longer to be trusted. They were directed to repair to their respective regiments.
Upon their resulal to obey, a power[L3] ful ful body of troops were fent for, which brought them to submission. The legion was disbanded, and dispersed into the communes to which the men belonged.

This proved a measure of the most fortunate policy. Incensed at the proceedings of government against them, the jacobins had formed one of the most daring and deeply-planned conspiracies that had yet taken place among the many, which had marked this eventful revolution. conducted with the profoundest secrecy. The conspirators never met twice in the same place; and it was hardly possible to trace their motions, though their leaders constantly affembled every day, and government was apprifed of the existence of a plot.

The minister of police, Merlin, of Douay, a name well known, being either inactive or lukewarm in this affair, another man was placed in his office, of more activity and zeal. This was Cochon, who exerted himfelf with so much care and diligence, that the haunts of the confpirators were at length discovered, and most of the principal ones arrested.

The conspiracy was to have been carried into execution upon the eleventh of May, and the discovery of this defign was not made till the On the morning of the minth. tenth, the directory informed the two councils of the particulars of this conspiracy, which was in every respect a most dreadful and dangerous one. Two men were at the head of it, equally noted for their boldness and resolution. The one was Babeuf, from whom it took its name. This man, conformably to the custom prevailing among the rigid democrats at this time, had assumed the name of a samous republican of old, Gracchus, thereby to denote his inflexible adherence to the popular cause. He was a man of parts, in the exercise of which nothing was able to daunt The other chief actor in this conspiracy was the celebrated Drouet, the post-master of Varennes, who stopped the unfortunate Lewis XVI. in his flight; and, as a reward of his fidelity to the nation, was elected a member of the con-Having fallen into the hands of the Austrians, and suffered a long and fevere imprisonment in Germany, he had acquired a popularity which recommended him fo strongly to the people of his own district, that they elected him a deputy to the legislative body, when the new constitution was formed. The other principal authors of this conspiracy were general Rossignol, notorious for his cruelties in La Vendée; Julian, a confidential agent of Roberspierre; Amar, a noted associate of that tyrant; Laignelot, a man of abilities and a member of the late convention.

The plan of the conspirators, as laid by the directory before the two councils, was to massacre these three bodies, the field-officers of the Parifian military, and the constituted authorities of Paris, and to give up the citizens to plunder and flaughter. From the papers that were feized, it appeared that they had formed a complete scheme of government. The legislature was to have confisted of about seventy of those members of the late convention, who had not been re-elected; of a deputy from each of the provincial departments; and of some of the deputies to the present legislature, whom they looked upon as favourable to their designs.

The infurrection itself was concerted with great forefight and regularity. At the found of a bell, rung every morning in each of the lections, as a notice to cleanle the streets, the conspirators were to distribute themselves into knots of four or five, and each of these to proceed to the houses of those they had marked for destruction. ing dispatched these, they were all to meet at an appointed place, whence they were to march in force to the palace of the directory, whom they were to put to death in the same manner.

If reports may be credited, a still more atrocious plan remained to be executed, after completing the for-A fecret directory, composed of four persons, was to have a number of confidential agents under their orders; who were, after the infurrection had fucceeded, to have murdered as many of their own party as were pointed out to them by these directors, in order thereby to get rid of those who, not being acquainted with their ultimate designs, would probably have opposed them. carefully had they provided against discovery, that numbers of the actors in this terrible tragedy were not to have known any but their immediate employers, who were themselves to be dispatched, if any of those agents were either to be discovered and feized, or to betray them.

It has been a matter of much doubt, whether a conspiracy of so horrible a nature could have been brought to a complete execution, had circumstances been ever so favourable to the conspirators. But the antecedent massacres, at several periods of the revolution, have too fatally evinced, that the shedding of blood was become so familiar a scene in France, and that the spirit of assassination was so prevalently disfused among surprising numbers, that this horrid project would, in all likelihood, have been executed as unresuctantly as others had been, and that its framers would not have been disappointed for want of hands to perpetrate the horrors they had in contemplation.

Babeuf, the cheif contriver of this. atrocious plot, boldly acknowledged himself the author of the treasonable writings found in his possession. When required to denounce his accomplices, he answered that they little understood his character who thought him capable of betraying his friends. He continued, from his, prison, to set the directory at defiance, and to address them on a footing of perfect equality. wrote a long letter, dictated by phrenzy as much as by firmness, wherein he told them, that it was not in their power to prevent the infurrection intended against them, which he dignified by the epithet of holy, threatening them with death unless they retracted their proceedings against him and his party, and promising, if they acted hecomingly, a share in the new government.

Whatever might be the motives that influenced government, the trial of the conspirators was unaccountably delayed. The council of five hundred did not vote the impeachment of Drouet until the eighth of July following, when it was negatived by fifty-eight against one hundred and forty, a proof that he had a strong party in that house. About a month after, he escaped from his confinement through the connivance, it was suspected, of the government. But his associate, Babeus, was not so fortunate. He was tried by the high criminal court at Vendome, which condemned him to death.

[L4] from

Great and unfeigned was the fatistaction of the public at the difcovery and suppression of this sanguinary plot. The jacobins became more than ever the objects of general execration. The extermination of all who rejected their principles seemed a fundamental maxim of Their inthat inexorable faction. flexible resolution and perseverance in their projects, which, had they been attended with humanity, might have rendered them respectable, only tended to excite a dread and abhorrence of them. Thus, they were viewed by the generality as the pefts of the community; and a speedy riddance of them became the wish of all but those who were involved in the criminal intrigues.

It was not with the same facility that government was able to crush the advocates of the perfecuted toyalists. A seizure of those estates, which were to devolve to emigrants on the demife of the actual possessor, had been decreed by the council of five hundred, and rejected by that of elders. The decree excepted only that portion which by law was to remain with the prefent possessor. It was warmly opposed, as too rigorously intrenching upon the rights of private property; but, after long and violent debates, it was decreed that, instead of a direct seizure, that moiety should be levied for the use of the state which the legislature had already appropriated to that purpose. This, however, it was plain, afforded no relief to the possessor.

The cheif obstacle to these and to the other pecuniary arrangements, respecting the estates of emigrants, was the difficulty of finding purchasers for the lands that had been declared national property. Many individuals, though warmly adhering to the republic, reprobated the confiscation of property on any pretext, while no mildemeanor was imputable to the proprietor; who, while obedient to the laws, could not, without manifest injustice, be punished for the misdeeds of others. The fale of confiscated estates, met also with perpetual obstructions from the scruples infused into the minds of numbers by the nonjuring clergy; who explicitly denounced damnation to those who purchased them. Hence a large proportion of national lands remained unfold, to the great inconvenience of the government, in its want of those sums that would have been produced by the disposal of them.

This interference of the nonjuring clergy, in a matter of so much importance to the ruling powers, could not fail to encrease their hatred to that order of men. They accused them of contributing more to the detriment of the state, by their bigotry, than its foreign enemies had done by their arms. They perverted the dispositions of the weak and the ignorant, by intimidating them with arguments founded upon falsehoods and absurdities. The unhappy propensity of unenlightened minds to superstition gave ecclesiaftics so decided an ascendancy over them, that, unless they were checked by the most effectual restaints, they would progressively become the absolute dictators of society. This was undeniably an evil of fuch enormity, that all reasonable men would concur in the necessity of obviating it by every means that appeared indispensibly requisite. The only expedient that feemed to promile efficacy was to interdict every individual of that profession from interfering in political matters, either directly or indirectly, under the feverest penalties. Such was the language of the staunch friends to the republican fystem, and to that freedom of thought upon all fubjects, which now characterised so numerous a part of the French nation.

lolute

While the French government and its adherents were complaining of the undue influence of the refractory clergy, these retorted the representations made to their disadvantage, by appealing to the people, on the little justice they had to expect from men, fo many of whom difregarded those principles on which alone the morality of mankind, and their integrity in the most essential transactions of society, are usually founded. These principles were those of religion, without which little confidence could be placed in each other by the generality of meh, who had neither abilities nor leifure to argue themselves into virtue and honesty by philosophical reasonings, and were much more easily kept in good order by those precepts and doctrines that had been established and respected during fo many ages, than by the maxims and opinions lately introduced. The clear and visible consequence of these had been the embroilment of the public in continual feuds, and the overturning of a government, under which, with all its imperfections, the nation had enjoyed much more tranquillity and fatiffaction, than it had known fince the introduction of the present system.

The principal allegation against the foundness of the principles, on which the fuccessive rulers of the republic had conducted themselves, was the shameful negligence of which they had all in their turn been guilty, in deferring upwards of three years the inquiry into the murders committed in September, 1792. Thele were univerfally reprobated by all parties: they had covered the French nation with difgrace, and exposed it to the abhorrence of all Europe; and they still remained unpunished and uninvestigated. Of those who had the reputed authors and abettors; some indeed were no more, but others remained, who were happily divested of the power of opposing the course of justice.

These reproaches bore hard upon government, and it found itself unable to item the torrent of complaint against the long and scandalous neglect of executing that justice upon the criminals, which they fo fully deserved. A tribunal was erected, in May, before which their trials began upon the twenty-Several of those arrained before it were fentenced to die, and others to be imprisoned: but as it appeared, that the generality had been the mere tools of others, and had been impelled to the commission of those enormities, through mistaken zeal, and an erroneous persuasion that they were avenging their country, in compassion to their ignorance, they were acquitted of evil intentions, and pardoned.

These acquittals were so many, and the punishments so few, comparatively.

paratively to what had been expected, and loudly demanded, that the public was entirely disappointed: the more indeed, that some, who were deemed the principal promoters of those criminal transactions, found means to escape the vengeance of the law.

Before this tribunal were also brought those citizens of Paris, who had taken up arms to oppose that decree of the convention, by which two-thirds of its members were to be returned deputies to the new legislature. Lenity being now, to use a very common phrase, become the order of the day, they were acquitted, to the great joy of their fellow citizens, who now fincerely repented the violent measures they had been perfuaded to adopt upon that occasion, through the intrigues of men who had much more in view, the attainment of their private ends, than the public objects which they pretended to have so much at heart. These, the people of Paris were at present convinced, would have been much more effectually accomplished by the fleady and perfevering firength of argument and remonstrance, in which they would have probably been gradually joined by multitudes in all the departments. they failed in these endeavours, still they would not have been the dupes. and victims of private ambition, and shed their blood for men who, like most aspiring characters, would, if successful, have forgotten their fervices, and repaid them with ingratitude.

After having thus, in some degree, satisfied the demands of the nation, the directory now turned its attention to a business which required more than ever the cares and exertions of government: this was the department of the finances, which having, fince the foundation of the republic, been supported by the most extraordinary and unprecedented means, were now beginning to totter, and to threaten instant ruin.

The credit, at first given to the affignats, had long been gradually falling, and they were now become of no value. It was therefore indispensible to replace them by a currency of more estimation. The specie of the nation was either hidden by those who would not part with their hoards, or in those avaricious hands that had accumulated it for the purpose of swelling its value in pecuniary transactions with those who wanted it. The means of bringing it forth, in the ordinary occurrences of fociety, were studioully fought, but could not be found, while those terrors and uncertainties continued, that made every man tremble for his property. The establishment of the new constitution was beginning to remove these apprehensions: but they still retained much of their influence, and the scarcity of hard money was still an universal complaint.

In order to remedy the depreciation, and indeed the inutility of assignats, government procured the passing of a decree, on the 25th of March, which it hoped might tend to expedite the fale of the national property in lands. Twenty-two years purchase was the price at which they had been fixed fince the year 1790, when the national affembly first had recourse to this method of supplying the wants By the decree now of the state. passed, a new fabrication of paper money was issued, to the amount of two thousand four hundred millions oflivres. Part of this fum was intended to redeem the assignats in circulation at the rate of thirty of these for one of the former; and the lands on fale were to be mortgaged, as a fecurity for the payment of the remaining part. The purchasers of these lands were to pay for them by instalments; and, as the property difposed of was a folid and visible affet; it was hoped that the new emission would retain its original The directory infifted in the most ferious terms on the immediate want of this supply, for the carrying on of the war, and the fervice of the current year.

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

The various failures of the French government in its pecuniary operations, had so much discouraged the speculators in these matters, that it was highly necessary to hold out every encouragement to them. the decline of the affignats, a paper, known by the name of rescriptions, had been given for advances to government, and made payable in specie at a fixed period: but this too had lost its credit, by non-payment. The new fabrication, which went by the name of mandates, lost, at its first issuing, one-fourth of its nominal value, and was reduced shortly after to one-fifth. It continued to decrease, and sell at last to the bare proportion of one-tenth. So heavy a loss alarmed the directory, as, at that rate, the national property, which was paid for in mandats, must of course be sold for one-tenth of its value. It came to the determination to shorten the periods of payment, in order to diminish thereby the quantity of mandats in circulation, which would of those that raife the worth had remained: but this expedient did not much restore it, and government, to secure any farther detriment, ordained the last instalment, which was the fourth part of the purchase, to be paid in specie.

Thus the speculators were totally deceived in their calculations of the profit they had expected: the more indeed as private land fold at a cheaper rate than public: but as they were chiefly monied men, and much of their opulence had arisen from their fuccessful speculations during the public distress, as their losses were unheeded, and the conduct of government, however irregular and arbitrary, passed uncenfured.

So great, in the mean time, were the difficulties of the republic, that, according to a statement of the revenue, made at this time by the committee of finances, the whole of it amounted to no more than five hundred millions of livres, while the expenditure was not less than one thousand. The directory was fully fensible that in such a situation the boldest, as well as the most prudent measures must be resorted to. and that no alternative remained. but either of finishing the contest with the enemies of France, on disadvantageous conditions, or of itraining the authority and power of government to the farthest extent that could be borne with, or fubmitted to, regardless of the dislatiffaction and murmurs that such a conduct would in all likelihood occation.

France was, at this period, nearly exhausted of all extraordinary means of levying money. The fale of national property, which was almost the only one remaining, had been This measure however decreed. had not yet taken place in the Austrian Netherlands, now incorporated abstained from loading this country with fuch burdens as might prove offenfive to its inhabitants. the exigences of the republic were now become so urgent, that the directory thought itself entitled to put so rich a portion of the empire under the fame requisitions as France This could not be conitlelf. strucd into oppression of the natives, as they would only be placed on the same footing as the French, with whom they now formed one nation, united in views and interests, and having the same enemies to combat, by whom, if subdued, they would experience in common the fame ill treatment, and relapse into that state of slavery, from which they had both taken such pains to emancipate themselves.

Such were the motives laid before the people of the Austrian Netherlands, to induce them to coincide with the defign of the French government, to decree the fale of those valuable tracts of land, become the public property in that country, by the suppression of the numerous and opulent monastic orders. Exclusively of these motives, which were of confiderable weight with that part of the people which were well affected to the French, had a precedent to plead of great efficacy in the minds even of those who retained an attachment to the religious establishments in their country. This was the general willingness of the catholic powers to retain no other than the parochial and fecular elergy, and to suppress all conventual institutions, as the incentives and receptacles of idleness, and burthening the industrious part of the community, with the maintenance of with France, which had hitherto a numerous class of individuals, abstained from loading this country wholly heedless for the purposes of with such burdens as might prove society.

As these representations were founded in truth, and as the minds of the people in Belgium had of late undergone material alterations in their opinions of things, they were not unwilling to admit the validity of the reasonings alleged in vindication of the measures proposed by the French, and the suppression of religious houses, together with the sale of their lands, for the use of the state, took place accordingly.

The refources arifing from this ample fund, aided by the imposition of some new taxes, rendered supportable by an equitable repartition; and more than all, by an exact and rigid economy, introduced into every channel of expenditure, supplied the five hundred millions wanted, in addition to the revenue, and enabled the government to provide for the demands of the present year.

The difficulties experienced by the French government in matters of finance, great as they were, did not equal those that continually obstructed the indesatigable endeavours to preserve internal tranquillity. The inextinguishable animosity of the opposite parties, that distracted the nation, seemed to increase by failure and disappointment in their respective projects, and to derive, as it were, new vigour from the repeated suppression of their attempts to overturn the established government.

The jacobin party, though not more active than the royalists, confisted of men of far superior parts. As they had but lately been ousled from the seat of power, they nou-rished

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

rished a spirit of revenge which prompted them to endless efforts to regain the mastery. In the mean while, their expulsion had not been Many of their particomplete. zans still remained in places of trust: the legislature counted many among its members, and the directory itself had one of their wellwithers.

Emboldened by these circumstances, and unintimidated by the discovery and suppression of the dreadful conspiracy, headed by Babeus, they had the audacity to frame another, at a distance from the capital, hoping, if fuccessful, to rally around the inlurgents, the numerous jacobins kill remaining in those parts.

The place where the infurrection broke out was Marseilles, a city famous, in the annals of the revolution, for tumults and disturbances. On the nineteenth of July, while the citizens were occupied in the annual election of their magistrates, the jacobins affembled in multitudes, armed with a variety of weapons. They ran through the streets, exclaiming live the mountain and the constitution of ninety-three. party of them rushed into the hall of election, from whence they drove the citizens, and murdered all who opposed them.

As the plan of this hafty infurrection was ill contrived, it had no other consequence than to throw the city of Marseilles into a temporary confusion. It appeared, however, that the interest of the jacobins, in that place, had more strength and patronage than had been imagined. The commissary of the directory, in his dispatches to government, instead of laying before it the criminal behaviour of the jacobine, represented the whole as an affray between the royalists and the republicans. But the council of five hundred ordered an inquiry to be made, which detected the perfidy of the commissary, in consewhich, the forced of quence elections of magistrates, that had been made by the jacobin party, were annulled, and proper measures taken to prevent them from difturbing the peace of that municipality.

But the jacobins were not the only disturbers of the public tranquillity. The royalists, however just their cause, frequently disgraced it by the ridiculous zeal which they manifested in its support. Actuated by those illiterate and bigoted priests, that swarm in France, they formed themselves into bands that assumed the appellation of companions of Jefus and the king. They fell upon those, who, during the reign of terrorifm, had perfecuted and treated them with barbarity, on whom they exercised the most unmerciful retaliation. Affrays of this nature often happened, especially in the south of France, where the vindictive disposition of the inhabitants is apt to lead them into excesses of a satal tendency, from the duration and obstinacy of their resentment.

H was easier, however, to cruss both the spirit and the insurrections of the royalists, than of the jacobins. The former were usually excited to action through their implicit submission to the advice and exhortation of the refractory ecclefiastics: but the latter acted from the unsubdued and incessant impulse of their own principles, the very nature of which rendered them independent of the opinion of others, and perpetually excited them to action action, without needing any other stimulation. Men of this character are not easily tamed into subjection to those who differ from them in sentiments, and are much more ready to rise in opposition to them, than those who are governed by the difference of others.

158] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

by the dictates of others.

This conspicuously appeared in that other attempt, which the jacobins made to overthrow the establishment, so very soon after having failed in their late conspiracy. numbers that voted against the impeachment of Drouet, and his evation from confinement, plainly shewed the influence of the jacobin fac-Relying on its many concealed partifans, a resolution was taken, by the undiscovered accomplices of Babeuf in that conspiracy,to rescue him and his associates from the hands of government, at the time when they were to be removed from their prison at Paris, and transferred to Vandame, for trial before the high criminal court.

In order to conceal from the public the real actors in the intended rescue, the jacobins assumed the appearance of royalists. They put on white cockades, displayed white colours, and every other token of royalism, and in this manner proceeded in their enterprize: but they were quickly discovered, and their project entirely frustrated.

Whether through neglect or connivance, no inquiry was made into this business. This induced the jacobins to meditate another plan, and to take what they hoped might prove more efficient means to succeed. They collected as many of their most daring associates as could be procured in the capital and its vicinity. They tampered with the soldiery, some of whom they seduced, by whose medium they vainly. imagined the majority of the remainder would be brought over to them. When they thought they were sufficiently prepared, they embodied themselves, to the number of five or fix hundred, and marched to the camp in the Plain of Grenelle, at a very small distance from. Paris. They seemed to entertain no doubt of being joined by the troops there, and confidently entered the camp, crying out, the constitution of ninety-three, and down with the two councils and the five tyrants. At the head of this desperate body. of men were three members of the late convention, with as many generals who had been dismissed the: fervice, and Drouet himself, it was faid, not long escaped from his prison. They warmly exhorted the foldiers to join them, promising every remuneration that could be required; but they were totally deceived in their expectations. foldiers remained true to their officers, and, at the word of command, fell upon the conspirators, who, unable to contend with fuch a force, betook themselves to flight. bers were killed upon the fpot, and about one hundred and thirty taken. They were tried as infurgents by a military commission. Sentence of death or banishment was passed upon the most notoriously guilty, and the others were discharged.

The objects proposed by these rash and surious conspirators, were similar in every respect to those of Babeus and his associates. Blood and the extermination of all persons in power, those only excepted whom they considered as savourable to their designs.

While the jacobins were intent upon those destructive schemes, which, which, happily for France, were for feafonably prevented, the government was preparing a law, by which it hoped to reconcile the parties that divided the nation, so far as to extinguish the motives of terror that rendered so many Frenchmen enemies, through necessity, of their countrymen in power.

10

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

This law, from which such salutary effects were expected to flow, was an act of universal amnesty, which was to put an immediate stop to all prosecutions for revolutionary crimes and offences, committed since the commencement of July, 1789, to the sourth of Brumaire, in the sourth year of the republic, 1796. The only exceptions to this amnesty were those contained in the law enacted in the last sitting of the late convention, and called the law of the third Brumaire.

These exceptions were levelled at the opposers of the new consitution, transported priests, and emigrants, and those who had participated in the insurrection at Paris against the decree of the convention, ordaining the re-election of two-thirds of its members.

But this law had always been confidered, by the impartial, as too indifcriminately favourable to the adherents of the party which had framed it, as it not only put a stop to the proceedings against the agents of terrorism, but even against individuals guilty of crimes, for which they had been sentenced to severe and merited punishment, and whom it sat at liberty in direct violation of all justice, and to the consternation of all persons inclined to moderation and pacific measures.

A committee had been appointed to draw up the plan of this proposed amnesty, the report of which led to a variety of discussions relating to it, and occasioned at last a proposal to repeal the very law of the third of Brumaire, as bearing too inequitably upon those who were related to emigrants, whom it excluded from public offices, together with those who had been concerned in the insurrection of last October, against the decrees of the convention for the re-elections.

These members of the legislature, who savoured the repeal of this law, considered it as inconsistent with the real principles of the constitution, by which no man ought to be subjected to so heavy a punishment as the forseiture of his civic rights, without evident proof of his deserving it. In consequence of the reasonings they used in support of this opinion, a committee was chosen to deliberate on the merits of this law, and whether it could, with safety, be repealed at the present

The public was, in the mean time, greatly divided in its opinion on this question. Some pronounced it at once a trial of strength between the royalists and the republicans. Were the law to be repealed, an inundation of the former would infallibly take place in every department, and the restoration of monarchy would be the unavoidable consequence.

The nation at large held itself deeply concerned in the decision of this important question, and waited for it with the utmost impatience. The committee, appointed to examine the advantages and ill-consequences resulting from the law alluded to, was considered as holding in its hands the sate of the nations. Loud and servent were the wishes

withes of the respective parties, that the examination might terminate in their favour. The remarkable fervour with which the royalists expressed their hope of its repeal, fufficiently indicated how much they expected it would militate for them, while the apprehensions of the republicans, left it should be repeated, manifested equally their conviction, how strongly this would operate to their detriment.

This fermentation of the public mind carried the weight of the firongest argument with those who were entruited with this great decission. The elatedness of the royal party, on the bare possibility of a repeal, clearly pointed out the danger of it to the commonwealth, and admonified its well-wishers to oppose such a measure with all their might. The members of the committee of examination, being staunch republicans, could not fail to perceive the question before them in the fame light. They did not therefore helitate to pronounce explicitly a verdict conformable to the opinion of their party, which was thereby released from a state of the deepest anxiety on the issue of this business.

There were, however, fome very fincere republicans in both the councils, who disapproved of this law, and exerted their abilities for its repeal. They argued that it made no difference between the relations of real enemies to the revolution, who had abandoned their country, out of hatred to the system introduced by that event, and the relations of individuals who had fled from the tyranny that had deluged France with profcriptions and murders. Such a flight ought not, in the clearest equity, to be accounted punishable. The law should have been pointed at those chiefly whose crimes had rendered them objects of abhorrence to all parties; and who, having been tried and condemned for them, had been shielded from punishment, by the amnesty extended to them by that law, in defiance of equity and the general fense of the public, which loudly demanded that they should be made examples of, as guilty of plunders and assassions that had filled the nation with dread and horror. Were fuch men to be excepted from the rigour of a law which ought to have been made for them alone, instead of falling upon the innocent? Was reconcileable with reason and propriety, that fuch men should be promoted to posts of honour and authority? but the fact was, that the period when this law took place was marked by the terrors that hung over those who, though they reprobated, did not dare to refule their affent to it. The conftitution, though framed and accepted, frood yet upon a tottering foundation. The most upright men in the convention felt themselves in danger from that violent party still prevailing, and with which they had no other expedient to compromise for their own fafety, than confenting to this inequitabe law, in hope however of some auspicious opportunity to repeal it. This opportunity was arrived, and every motive concurred to induce the legislature to rescind an act replete with cruelty and icandal. It was well known, that those, whom it affected, had been falsely held out to the public, as enemies to the state, and their names, together with those of their relations, wantonly inferted in the list of emigrants, while it was notorious that many of the unfortunate individuals, thus traduced, were locked up in prisons, where calumny and Juspicion were at that tyrannical period fufficient reasons to confine and to treat them: with the most unseeling barbarity. But were it only out of respect forthe rights of the people at large, a law should be abrogated, that took from them the constitutional right of chusing to places and dignities in the state, those whom they reputed worthy of their confidence. deny them this right, was to abridge them of their liberties in a most essential point. To plead the safety of the nation was the language of tyranny, and would justify every species of despotism. What crimes had not been committed by the languinary triburals, crected on the pretence of punishing the foes to the revolution?

To these, and other arguments, in favour of a repeal, it was replied, by the supporters of the law, that it passed at a time when it was deemed indispensible for the predervation of the national freedom, and the fecurity of the constitution just established. Its numerous and active enemies were every where in motion, and striving with all their might to set the people against it. Suspicions were warrantable motives to exclude those on whom they fell, at a time when so many were justily suspected, from stations of power and trust, wherein they might have acted so hostile a part to the commonwealth. Would it have been prudent to expose it to such danger at home, while menaced by fo many fees from abroad? Allowing that a number of individuals suffered unjustly by this law, was not this a much less inconvenience than to Vol. XXXVIII.

throw the whole nation at once into the hands of fo many concealed enemies? But the suffering, so bitterly complained of, amounted only. to a temporary suspension of their rights, of which they would undergo the deprivation, no longer than the short space that might elapse till the restoration of general tranquillity. As foon as peace was re-established, both at home and abroad, the fuspension of all privileges would ceafe, and every man be placed on the completest footing of equality, in respect of pretensions to public employments. But till that period, it were the height of imprudence to place confidence in any but the tried friends to the commonwealth. The promotion of others would unavoidably excitefears and jealousies. With what: prospect of impartial justice could the relations of emigrants be entrusted with the execution of the fovere, but necessary, laws enacted against them? Instances might occur, in the present situation of things, when not only the liberty and property, but the very life of the dearest relative would be at stake: was it to be expected that the ties of confanguinity would not have their influence on these occafions, and that a man coolly and determinately would doom another: to death, whose life was as dear to him as his own? In this light, the law, fo violently reprobated, was in . fact humane and 'merciful: it exempted individuals from those terrible conflicts between the feelings of nature, and the dictates of duty, wherein they could neither yield to the one nor to the other, without incuring the imputation of betraying their trust, or of wanting humanity. When these various circumftances [M]

162] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

stances were duly confidered, it must appear that the repeal of the law in question would be attended evidently with so many inconveniences, that no judicious and unbiassed person could require it. The interest of the public was not, in truth, more concerned in maintaining that law in its full vigour, than that of private families: both would equally fuffer from its abolition. It would often happen that justice would not be done to the public, or that by doing it, men would embitter the remainder of their lives, and become objects either of general relentment or compassion. It being clear, therefore, that much more evil than good, must flow from the repeal of the law; and the fecurity of the state being, at the same time, a motive that ought to supersede all others, that law could not with any propriety be abrogated. It was, at the fame time, much to be suspected, that many of those, who recommended such a measure, acted from finister motives, as nothing could be a stronger proof of its impropriety, than the fatisfaction univerfally expressed, by the royalists, at such a question being brought before the two councils.

A multiplicitly of other arguments were alleged by the contending parties, in which the public joined with an earnestness that shewed how much all men were convinced of the importance of the subject in debate. But the report of the committee seemed to carry an influence that could not, and ought not to be resisted. This was the opinion of the people at large, even more than of the council of sive hundred, as the question against the repeal was carried by a majority of only forty-four.

The minority, encouraged by this evidence of their strength, resolved, if it were not able to compals the repeal of the law of the third of Brumaire, (25th October, 1795;) fo to modify its provisions, as to direct them equally at the partifans and instruments of the terrorists and jacobins; and the royalists, who, after taking up arms against the republic, had fubmitted and been pardoned. The proposal of such an amendment proved highly exasperating to the supporters of that law, who afferted, that fufficient moderation had been shewn in exempting from its operation the actors and abetters in the infurrection against the conventional decrees for the re-elections. the general disposition of the council was so strongly marked by impartiality on this occasion, that the amendment was carried, to the great furprize of the public; the majority of which, though decidedly. inclined to measures of lenity, was fearful of that preponderance of jacobinifm, which had hitherto exerted fo irresistable an influence over all the proceedings of the legislature.

The council of elders would willingly have consented to the total repeal of the law of the third Brumaire, and embraced, therefore, with readiness, an opportunity of mitigating its severity, by assenting to the amendment made by the council of five hundred.

This alteration of that fevere law proved a matter of unexpected triumph to the moderate party, which constituted a large majority of the nation. The exclusion from posts of emolument, or of power,

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

was a heavy blow on that fanguinary faction, which had ruled by terror. It lost thereby a multitude of its agents, whose crimes now rendered them ineligible to public employments, and many were, on the same account, obliged to vacate those which they possessed.

The discerning part of the public looked upon this event, as a species of revolution, and formed the strongest hope that it would promote a reconciliation between the friends to a republican government, and those to a limited monarchy. Liberty being equally the aim of both, it appeared not improbable that, if the latter could be satisfied. of an earnest determination in the ruling powers to put an end to oppressive measures, the little prospect that now remained of subverting the established government, would induce them to submit to it, rather than renew those attempts to restore their own fystem, which had so repeatedly failed, not more through the rashness or incapacity of those who had conducted them, than the general repugnance of the nation to join them upon those occasions.

Effects expected in France from a growing Spirit of Moderation.—The Chief Object in the Councils of France, how to Break or to Weaken the Power of England.—Plan of the French for that End.—Means for Restoring the Pecuniary Credit of the French Republic.—A Rupture threatened between the French Councils and Executive Directory.—Prevented by the necessity of their acting in Concert.—The Legislature Invade the Province of the Directory, by the Appointment of a Committee for judging in Cases of Appeals from Emigrants.—Lostiness of the Directory.—Humbled by the Wise Economy and Firmness of the United States of America.—Jealousies and Disputes between the French and Americans.—And an open Rupture.

THE spirit of lenity that seemed to have arisen, and been nourished by the new constitution, began to operate powerfully in its favour, and to gain it daily fresh The people in France adherents. appeared in general extremely willing to support it, hoping that the period of internal confusions would thereby be accelerated, and that the European powers leagued against them, when they found that unanimity was re-established among the French, would ceale to profecute the war for the reftoration of the house of Bourbon to the throne of France, against the manisest will of the nation.

The heads of the republic were now deeply occupied in the concerting of means to counteract the measures of that power, on the indefatigable efforts of which all the others depended for the support of their own. It was with unfeigned mortification that France beheld that power unshaken and undiminished in the midst of the disasters that had befallen the other parts of the coalition. That invincible spirit, which had so many ages accompanied the councils and the arms of England, and enabled it to maintain so many contests with France, had, in the present, displayed greater energy than ever, and impressed feveral of the foundest politicians with an idea, that however the French republic might for a while diffuse the terror of its arms among the neighbouring states, the persevering courage of the English, aided by their immense opulence, would finally weary out the endeavours of the French to retain the acquisitions they had made; and, that notwithstanding the republic itself might remain, it would, on the issue of the terrible trial it had stood, be compelled to remit of the pretentions it had formed to prescribe terms of peace to all its numerous enemies, and to treat at last upon a sooting of equality with that one, which, while it remained unvanquished, would always prove an effectual obstacle to that plan of universal influence over all the governments of Europe, which France had, since the unexpected success of its arms, kept constantly in view.

HISTORY OF EUROPE. [165

However the French might exult in the triumphant career of their armies, it plainly appeared, by the fentiments repeatedly expressed by the principal speakers of the convention, and in the councils, and upon all public occasions, to be their intimate persuasion, however averse to avow it, that while England stood its ground, they would never totally accomplish those mighty schemes of conquest and influence. To execute them partially, would only in-. volve them in perpetual quarrels with those powers whose interest required their depression, and whose cause England would never fail to Thus it was clear, that support. unless the strength of this ancient rival were effectually broken, and it were reduced to fue for peace on fuch terms as France should dictate, the proposed effect of so many victories would be frustrated, as the humiliation of all its other enemies would not secure to the republic those objects at which it avowedly aimed. The prolongation of the war, in order to attain these, might be attended with fuch vicillitudes of fortune, as would entirely change the circumstances of affairs, and oblige the republic, in its turn, to abate of its high pretentions, and even to compound for its existence, and the prefervation of the ancient limits of France

That these ideas frequently occurred to the most sagacious of the French, is incontestible, from the various publications of the time, and no less from that remarkable anxiety with which their rulers canvassed every subject relating to England. How to compass its depression was the chief object of their councils; and every fortunate event that besel them, in their numerous enterprizes, employed their consideration in what manner to convert it to the detriment of England.

Among the various means of obtaining that important end, the annoyance of the English maritime commerce, had long been tried, certainly not without some degree of success: but in no degree sufficient to weaken the naval power of England, which continued to rule the feas in every quarter of the globe, with irrefissible sway. It was indeed from this very circumstance, that France derived a multiplicity of arguments in its manifestos and exhortations, both to its own people, and to the other nations of Europe. Their tendency was to prove, that England was the tyrant of the fea, and that all the European powers were interested in repressing that tyranny. To effect this, they ought to unite cordially with France, and second its endeavours to restore the freedom of the feas, by abridging, through every means in their power, the commercial refources of Eng-The actual strength of its navy was so great, that it could not at present be opposed with much hope of fuccess: but other methods might be used not less effectual in their ultimate issue, and these were in the option of every state. That the power which commanded the feas, commanded also the shores, and that naval power was of more importance than dominion at land, $[M3]_{-}$ had passed into a kind of political maxim for ages. It was, in fact, a superiority of naval power that subverted the Roman empire. The irruptions of the Gauls, the Cimbri, and Teutones, by land, were repelled, and might have been repelled had they been repeated. The necessity of subsistence drove them quickly to the necessity of committing their fortune to the issue of a battle, in which the invaded derived an advantage over the invaders from the possession, and from the knowledge of the country. But when the barbarians began to combine their military operations with naval expeditions; when stores, as well as troops, were poured upon the Roman frontier, from the Baltic, the Dwina, the Elbe, the Danube, and the Euxine leas, then, and not till then, they began to be wholly irrelistible. It was the maritime habits, and the naval power of the Scandinavians, under the appellation of Normans, Danes, Picks, and other names, that enabled them, for the space of fix hundred years, to harrafs, over-run, and rule the greater part of the sea coasts of Europe. The trade of a pirate became an honourable profession. The sons of kings, at the head of pirates, lought and obtained at once fettlements and renown. Since the revival of letters, the modern improvements in arts and sciences, and the vast extension of commerce, the Juperior importance of naval power seemed to be farther illustrated, and more certainly established.

It was not among the least striking instances of that fertility of imagination which supported the French under all difficulties, that they found means, as they conceived, to oppose power at land to power at fea: to raife the naval power of France, and to undermine that of England, by excluding her trade from the great inlets of Europe. This would give England a blow, from which it would It could not not easily recover. fail to produce an immediate alteration in its commercial circumstances; the depression of which, would infallibly create a discouragement and despondency in the English government, that must induce it at once, to remit of the haughtiness with which it exercised its naval fuperiority over other nations.

Such was the purport of the various publications issued by authority, or proceeding from the many individuals, who bufied themfelves with compositions of this nature. The impression, which they made upon the generality of European states, was very feeble. None, indeed, appeared to pay them much attention, but those on which France possessed the forcible means of in-The others were convinced, that the motives of the French, in these warm addresses to the continental powers, were dictated by felfish views, and that, were they to fucceed in over-throwing the maritime power of England, they would doubtless transfer it to themselves, and employ it to the fame ends to which they had fo notorioufly converted the superiority they had acquired at land.

It was doubtless inconsistent, on the ground of morality in the English nation, to arraign the ambition and tyranny of the French, while they themselves, purfued schemes of tyranny and ambition on the main ocean, and in every quarter of the globe. If the French were plunderers at land, the English were plunderers on too many occasions, and dictators at sea. Still, however, they had done no more in the present war, than what had been authorized by long established custom; and under every restraint, a commercial correspondence with England, had been experimentally found extremely profitable. If their industry enabled them to derive benefit from other nations, these also received no less profit from them. An exclusion of their trade would redound therefore, equally to the detriment of both parties.

lish

Foiled in their endeavours to shut all the European ports against the English, the French determined, however, to exclude them from those of which they had the com-A proclamation had been issued by the English government, permitting the exportation of merchandile to Flanders and Holland. But the Dutch convention was directed to publish a counter proclamation, prohibiting the importation of goods from England, under fevere penalties; and enjoining the people of the united provinces to renounce all commerce with a nation that had treated them to inimically, and whose intentions were to deprive the Dutch republic of its trade, after depriving it of its ancient freedom, by the forcible establishment of a stadtholder. Having expelled a fovereign imposed upon them against their consent, they were bound in duty and honour to refule all connections with those, who were endeavouring to subject them again to his yoke.

A similar prohibition of English manufactures had taken place in France, during the administration of Roberspierre, and had for some time been strickly enforced. But the advantages refulting from a commerce with England, had gradually superseded the sear of offending against this prohibition; and it was little attended to at this time. A weighty motive for not enforcing it was, the necessity of giving vent to the cargoes of the English veffels captured by the French priva-But after the government in Holland had come to the determination of forbidding the entry of English goods, it thought itself the better entitled to require the adoption of the like measure in France, as Holland, in adopting it, had complied with the requisition of the French government. This appeared to unantwerable a mode of reafoning, that the directory, however, difinclined to compliance, found itfelf under the necessity of giving fatisfaction to the Dutch confederates, who were fordetermined as to admit of no denial, that they threatened to relaind their resolutions, unless the same were taken by the French government.

The regulations proposed on this occasion were very severe; they not only prohibited the importation of English merchandize in future, but ordained the re-exportation of what had been imported. Harsh methods were, at the same time, adopted to fecure the observance of these regulations; and though they were unacceptable to multitudes, so intent was the legiflature on diminishing the resources of England, that the prohibitory decree, together with the heavy penalties annexed to its infringement, was carried by a large majority.

Great were the expectations of the enemies to England, that this exclusion of its merchandize and manufactures [M4]

manufactures would, in a short time, reduce it to such distress, as to disable it from carrying on the war, and oblige it to submit to any conditions, for the fake of recovering its trade. It cannot be denied that appearances militated strongly in favour of these consequences. Spain and Italy, two capital marts for the fale of English commodities, especially the first, were now almost entirely shut to their admission. Genoa and Leghorn, the two principal feats of the trade between England and Italy, were under the immediate controll of France; the former was compelled, through the terror of its arms, to exclude England from its ports, by a formal treaty to that purpole; and the latter was in the possession of a French garrison. Corfica was, at the same time, no longer in the hands of the English: but Naples and the papal territories still remained open to them in Italy; and Portugal afforded an ample channel for the introduction of every article of commerce from England, not only into that kingdom, but also into Spain, adjoining neighbour, with which its immediate communication would always procure either an open or clandestine entrance for English merchandize of all kinds.

Thus, on a confiderate examination of the confequences resulting from this samous decree, they did not meet the expectations of those who framed it. It was sound that as power thut one door against commerce luxury opened another. Little was the diminution of the English trade to the southern parts of Europe, while in the north it remained uninterrupted. From this quarter it was that England drew the most essential articles it wanted. Hamburgh was a port, which, while it continued open, would always prove an inlet for English goods to all parts of Germany: and the princes and states of the empire were no ways disposed to gratify the French with an exclusion of the English from that only medium of commercial communication between Germany and the other trading countries in Europe.

The disappointment of the French government, in the fanguine hope it had entertained of destroying the commerce, and through it the finances of England, was farther aggravated by the disorder of its own. Notwithstanding the indefatigable efforts used to place them on a footing of stability, temporary expedients were still the only props of government, which had no fixed profpect of supporting itself by other than precarious and uncertain means. But as these could not again be reforted to, the state still reverted to the dangerous fituation it had just escaped, and was liable to experience still greater difficulties, from this successive abridgement of its remaining relources.

In this alarming fituation the directory resolved to call a meeting of the great bankers and merchants, to confult with them on the means of restoring the pecuniary credit of the nation, and circular letters were difpatched to them for that purpose. On the tenth of December a meflage of a most pressing nature was fent to the council of five hundred. It was feriously urged, by the directory, to come without delay to the affistance of the state, the wants of which were such that if not immediately relieved, it would be exposed to certain ruin. The only remedy that could be proposed, in this extremity, was, to authorize the directory to receive the last instalment due on the sale of the national domains, amounting to eighty millions, and which, being payable in specie, might be appropriated with effect to the extinction of the debts that lay most heavy on government, and the liquidation of which appeared the most indispensible.

rectory

This mellage was communicated to a fecret committee of the council of five hundred: but contrary to the expectations of the directory, it was treated with flight, and as undeferving of attention. Equally aftonished and offended at this reception of a mellage, from which far different effects had been hoped, the directory published this transaction upon the following day, as an appeal to the public on the conduct of the council. But this step was judged to have been too hastily taken. It seemed intended to bring the council into disgrace, as refufing to concur with the directory in a necessary measure, and it evidently tended to occasion a variance between these two branches of government, an evil that ought of all others to be the most studiously avoided-in the present circumstances of the nation.

The committee, thus brought forward before the public, exculpated itself for the rejection of this message, by afferting that it represented the state in a much more alarming situation than consisted with reality. Through care and economy all dissiculties might be removed, and the directory had been no less saulty in exaggerating the difficulties of the nation, than imprudent in making them known to the world.

It was with much concern that the public beheld a rupture between the legislature and the executive department, which, unless it were fpeedily healed, by the discretion of both parties, might be productive of the most serious evils. The necessity of acting in concert prevented sarther altercation: but the council of sive hundred became extremely watchful of the motions of the directory, and resolved to confine it with the utmost strictness, to the powers assigned to it by the constitution.

During the cruel administration of Roberspierre, multitudes had fled to foreign countries, or concealed themselves in various parts of France, in order to elcape the fale that would otherwise have attended The revolutionary committees of the districts to which they belonged, actuated by the barbarous spirit of the times, had and red the names of these unhappy persons on the lift of emigrants, by which they were subjected to the punishments enacted by the law, against individuals of this description. After the overthrow of this fanguinary fystem, several decrees had been passed, to rescue those who had suffered unjustly, through its tyranny, from the wretched condition to they had been reduced. Those who had expatriated themselves fince the last of May, 1793, when this dreadful system commenced, were permitted to return to their country, and those who had been falfely entered on the lift of emigrants, were cleared from the penalties annexed to emigration.

But, in the numbers that appealed to the laws enacted to reinstate in their rights those who had been unjustly deprived of them, there were many who came strictly under the denomination of emigrants, but who found means, through partiality or bribery, to procure testimonials of their not having left France before the administration of Roberspierre. The appeals were made to the directory, which appointed commissioners to examine and decide of their validity: but these abused the powers committed to them in fo glaring and scandalous a manner, and the directory appeared to remifs in calling them to account for their criminal behaviour, that the legislature thought itself bound to take the cognizance of thefe matters from the executive power, which, either through want of time or of inclination, did not pay them fufficient attention, and to appoint, for their investigation, a committee of its own members.

170] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796:

The public were not diffatisfied at the scrupulous vigilance of the councils over the directory, and at the fpirit with which they animadverted upon their conduct, and restrained their powers when it was necessary for the safety of individu-The number of which the directory confisted, though seemingly calculated to keep the active rulers of the state sufficiently divided among themselves, to prevent any one of them from engroffing the fupreme authority, bad not, however, in the opinion of many, provided against the combination of the members collectively, to grasp at sovereign power, and to overrule, through the weight and dignity attached to their office, the proceedings of the other departments of the itate. It was therefore no less incumbent on these to repress the first attempts of that body, to exceed the limits of their constitutional powers, than upon the parliaments of Great Britain to keep a vigilant eye on the conduct of the monarch and his ministers, and on the statesgeneral of Holland, to watch the steps of an aspiring stadtholder.

Such were the opinions of the discerning part of the public; nor did many scruple to avow their apprehensions, that in consequence of the numerous appointments to places of trust and profit, confided to the directory, it would soon or late arrive at so great a power, as to form a party strong enough to controul the legislature itself.

Whether this were effected through influence, or through force, the result would be the same: and the nation would be obliged to submit to absolute sway, like others that are governed dispotically, by the crown and its agents, through the purchased and service acquiescence of its representatives.

These surmises were not without foundation. The stateliness assumed by the directory in its intercourse with foreign states, sufficiently indicated the lofty ideas they entertained of their importance, and how readily they would raise themselves to the summit of personal grandeur and uncontrouled power, in the management of all public affairs, unless their ambition were obviated by timely checks, which could not be too expeditiously employed against men who exhibited so early a dispolition to aspire at an undue extenfion of their authority.

This loltiness of the directory had suffered no small degree of humiliation from the spirited conduct of the government of the united states of America. Full of the idea, that these owed their indepedence to France, the French bore with impatience and indignation that so great a benefit should be overlooked, and that, in this struggle for liberty with so many powers combined against them from every quarter in Europe, they should be forsaken by that people, in whose cause they had

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

had acted with so much zeal and and fuccels.

But that which principally exafperated the French government, was the treaty that had been lately negociated between England and the American states, by their envoy in London, Mr. Jay. It was reprefented as so contrary to the treaties in force between them and France, as to amount almost to a denunciation of the amity subsisting between thole two powers.

The relentment of the French hardly knew any bounds. language held at Paris portended nothing less than the most signal revenge for what was termed an act of the basest ingratitude and per-Instead of that cordiality which had taken place between the French and American governments, a distant and suspicious intercourse fucceeded; and if the public voice of the people of France had been listened to, a rupture could not have failed to enfue.

It was retorted, on the part of the Americans, that as foon as the French republic had been established, it began to entertain a defign to introduce a lystem perfectly similar to its own, into the United States, without confulting them, and in defiance of the constitution ready lettled among them. To this end, they commissioned their resident, Genet, to use all manner of artifice and intrigue, in order to pervert the dispositions of the commonalty, and to seduce them from their attachment and obedience to the existing government. He had carried his misconduct so far, as personally to infult the president of the congress, and endeavoured to set him and that body at variance with the people. This agent, of the French republic, had indeed been recalled by his employers, but the feeds of mischief he had sown had produced their intended effect, in the divisions that had embroiled the Americans, and destroyed that unanimity of sentiments from which they had derived fuch internal tranquillity.

To these complaints the French replied, that the treaty of commerce with England had cancelled all pretentions of amity from America to France. It violated, in a positive and hostile manner, the treaty entered into by the French, in favour of the Americans, in the year 1778, by which the states agreed to guarantee the possessions of France in the West Indies: whereas, by the present treaty with England, the very furnishing of provisions to the French islands, was allowed to be an illegal trade. Such a falling off from their professions of friendship and attachment to France, at a time when they ought to have been realised by actions, after having been so reiteratedly expressed in words, displayed in glaring colours the contemptible interestedness of the Americans, and proved them to be void of all principles but those of avarice and gain, and that to these they would facrifice all confideration of honour and magnanimity.

Recriminations of this nature grew louder and more rancorous than ever, on the intelligence that the government of the united states had formally ratified this treaty. But fresh motives of inveteracy arose from the discoveries contained in a letter, written by the president of the congress to the American ambassador at Paris. This letter, which was dated from Philadelphia, the 22d of December, 1795, had been dispatched in a vessel that was wrecked on the coast of France. It was preserved with other papers, and carried to the directory, by whom it was confidered as indubitable proof of the inimical disposition of the American government to the French republic.

This letter, on a cool perufal, contained however, no hostile defigns against France. Its contents were chiefly complaints of the arbitrary proceedings of the British ministry respecting the trade of the United States. He directed Mr. Morris, who had quitted his embally at Paris, and acted as American agent at London, to lay before the English ministry the imprudence, as well as the unjustifiableness of those proceedings, at a time when Great Britain ought to be particularly folicitous to retain the good will of the Americans, in order to induce them to receive favourably the treaty of commerce just concluded, but which met with a multitude of opponents, on account of the harsh measures that had been fo unseasonably taken against the commerce and navigation of the united states. It was with difficulty he had stemmed the torrent of discontent and refentment that had arisen on this occasion, and prevented the party, that favoured the French, from carrying matters to extremities. own views, in which he was feconded by the better fort, were peace and neutrality. These would, in the course of a few years, raise the United States to a condition of prosperity and power, that would render them formidable to all the world, and secure to them tranquillity at home, and respect from abroad.

Such was the general tenour of this famous letter, the interception of which was looked upon as fo timely an occurrence for the interest of France, by admonishing it to place no considence in the Americans. But without the medium of this letter, the most judicious of the French were convinced that the interest of the Americans would lead them to act a neutral part in the contest between France and England, and that it would be highly impolitic in either of these, to insist upon their acting any other.

The French government did not however relinquish the hope of a future connection with the united states. They grounded this expectation on the numbers of people there, who testified an aversion to all political ties with England, and whose republican disposition inclined them to espouse the cause of all who opposed the government of kings. They also relied on a change of men and measures in the American administration. The presidency, it was intimated to them by their American partifans, would, on a new election, be filled by another incumbent, less averse to an alliance with France than the prefent. These and other representations of a fimilar tendency, from the fame quarter, induced the French government to dissemble the resentment it bore to the American for its partiality to England, and to extend it no farther than to treat the fubjects of the united flates, employed in their commerce and navigation, in the fame manner in which these were treated by the English.

These misunderstandings, between France and the states of America, had, in some degree, been suspended by the recall of Mr. Morris from his French embassy and replacing him by a man whose principles were more conformable to their own, and his person, therefore, more accepta-

Í.la

This was Mr. Monroe, who was received with great respect and cordiality. But when this gentleman was recalled, and Mr. Pinkney appointed his fuccessor, which was in November, 1796, the directory refused to admit him in that capacity, and fuspended, at the same time, their own ambassador in America, Mr. Adet, who was ordered to lay before that government the complaints of the republic against its proceedings, and the determination to iffue orders to the French ships of war to act, towards the trading vessels of neutral states in the same manner that those states. permitted themselves to be treated: by the British navy.

In support of this determination, the directory alleged the seizure of French property, by the English, on board of American vellels in the very ports of the United States, and through the connivance of their government. Such had been the regard paid to America, by the convention, at the commencement of this war, that while it declared lawful prize all English property found in neutral vessels, the shipping of the United States was excepted from this declaration. But the conduct of the English, in seizing the American ships laden with provifions on French account, had compelled the convention, through mere necessity, to rescind this act of indulgence and to use the right of retaliation, by feizing English property in American vessels.

It was farther stated by Mr. Adet, that American failors were preffed into the fervice of the English, without reclamations being made, or even marks of disapprobation being manifested on the part of the American government. These and other acts of partiality, amply justified the measures taken by the directory. When the United States thought proper to enforce the respect due to their flag by the English, the French would also treat it with the same degree of respect.

Thele remonstrances of the French refident were answered by stating, to him, that according to the terms of the treaty of 1778, neutral property had been declared fecure in American vessels: but that no such stipulations were contained in the present treaty between England and America. But the propriety of this answer was pronounced inadmissible by the French. It was abfurd, they faid, that any state should assent to the continuance of a treaty, when they found it was to be converted into an instrument of the deepest injury to their interests. For the Americans to infift on the validity of fuch a treaty was an infult to the understanding of the French, to which it could not be expected they were either so unwise, or so pusillanimous, to submit; nor could the Americans reconcile to any principle of justice, or of honour, the breach of that article in the treaty with France, by which they had bound themselves to guarantee the French colonies, in the West Indies, against the attempts of the English.

The reciprocal jealogies excited by these various transactions were greatly heightened by the motives which were understood in France to have influenced the recall of Mr. Monroe from his embaffy, and the nomination of Mr. Pinkney in his stead. These were the reputed partiality of the one to the French, and the contrary disposition of the other. When the former took leave of the directory, they did not omit suit d'accident à l'ort time, in terms of the defineds, as to difheart from carrying on the war, . The confirmit to any conthink of the take of recovering It carnot be denied the questioners militated firongly areas of their confequences. spara and lia's, two capital marts . he ale et l'aglish commodities, especial's the first, were now almost entire's that to their admission. Georgiand Loghorn, the two princopul icars of the trade between bug'and and Italy, were under the i mirediate controll of France; the former was compelled, through the terror of its arms, to exclude England from its ports, by a formal musty to that purpole; and the latter was in the possession of a French garrison. Corfica was, at the same time, no longer in the hands of the I'nglish: but Naples and the papal territories still remained open to them in Italy; and Portugal afforded an ample channel for the introduction of every article of commerce from England, not only into that kingdom, but also into Spain, its adjoinining neighbour, with which its immediate communication would always procure either an open or clandestine entrance for English merchandize of all kinds.

Thus, on a confiderate examination of the consequences resulting from this samous decree, they did not meet the expectations of those who stramed it. It was found that as power that one door against commerce luxury opened another. Little was the diminution of the English trade to the southern parts of Europe, while in the north it remained uninterrupted. From this quarter it was that England drew the most essential articles it wanted. Hamburgh was a port, which, while it continued open, would always prove an inlet for English goods to all parts of Germany: and the princes and states of the empire were no ways disposed to gratify the French with an exclusion of the English from that only medium of commercial communication between Germany and the other trading countries in Europe.

The disappointment of the French government, in the fanguine hope it had entertained of destroying the commerce, and through it the finances of England, was farther aggravated by the disorder of its own. Notwithstanding the indefatigable efforts used to place them on a footing of stability, temporary expedients were still the only props of government, which had no fixed profpect of supporting itself by other than precarious and uncertain means. But as these could not again be reforted to, the state still reverted to the dangerous fituation it had just escaped, and was liable to experience still greater difficulties, from this successive abridgement of its remaining refources.

In this alarming fituation the directory resolved to call a meeting of the great bankers and merchants, to confult with them on the means of restoring the pecuniary credit of the nation, and circular letters were difpatched to them for that purpose. On the tenth of December a meffage of a most pressing nature was fent to the council of five hundred. It was feriously urged, by the directory, to come without delay to the affifiance of the flate, the wants of which were such that if not immediately relieved, it would be expoled to certain ruin. The only remedy that could be proposed, in this extremity, was, to authorize the di-

rectory

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

due on the sale of the national domains, amounting to eighty millions, and which, being payable in specie, might be appropriated with effect to the extinction of the debts that lay most heavy on government, and the liquidation of which appeared the most indispensible.

This message was communicated to a fecret committee of the council of five hundred: but contrary to the expectations of the directory, it was treated with flight, and as undeserving of attention. Equally astonished and offended at this reception of a mellage, from which far different effects had been hoped, the directory published this transaction upon the following day, as an appeal to the public on the conduct of the council. But this step was judged to have been too haftily taken. It feemed intended to bring the council into difgrace, as refusing to concur with the directory in a necessary measure, and it evidently tended to occasion a variance between these two branches of government, an evil that ought of all others to be the most studiously avoided-in the prefent circumstances of the nation.

The committee, thus brought forward before the public, exculpated itself for the rejection of this mesfage, by afferting that it represented the state in a much more alarming fituation than confifted with reality. Through care and economy all difficulties might be removed, and the directory had been no less faulty in exaggerating the difficulties of the nation, than imprudent in making them known to the world.

It was with much concern that the public beheld a rupture between the legislature and the executive department, which, unless it were rectory to receive the last instalment speedily healed, by the discretion of both parties, might be productive of the most serious evils. The necessity of acting in concert prevented farther altercation: but the council of five hundred became extremely watchful of the motions of the directory, and resolved to confine it with the utmost strictness, to the powers assigned to it by the constitution.

During the cruel administration of Roberspierre, multitudes had fled to foreign countries, or concealed themselves in various parts of France, in order to escape the fate that would otherwise have attended The revolutionary committees of the districts to which they belonged, actuated by the barbarous spirit of the times, had and red the names of these unhappy persons on the lift of emigrants, by which they were subjected to the punishments enacted by the law, against individuals of this description. After the overthrow of this fanguinary fystem, several decrees had been passed, to rescue those who had suffered unjustly, through its tyranny, from the wretched condition to which they had been reduced. Those who had expatriated themselves fince the last of May, 1793, when this dreadful system commenced, were permitted to return to their country, and those who had been falfely entered on the lift of emigrants, were cleared from the penalties annexed to emigration.

But, in the numbers that appealed to the laws enacted to reinstate in their rights those who had been unjustly deprived of them, there were many who came strictly under the denomination of emigrants, but who found means, through partiality or bribery, to procure testimonials of their not having left France before the administration of Roberspierre. The appeals were made to the directory, which appointed commissioners to examine and decide of their validity: but these abused the powers committed to them in fo glaring and scandalous a manner, and the directory appeared to remis in calling them to account for their criminal behaviour, that the legislature thought itself bound to take the cognizance of these matters from the executive power, which, either through want of time or of inclination, did not pay them fufficient attention, and to appoint, for their investigation, a committee of its own members.

170] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

The public were not diffatisfied at the scrupulous vigilance of the councils over the directory, and at the spirit with which they animadverted upon their conduct, and restrained their powers when it was necessary for the fafety of individu-The number of which the directory confisted, though seemingly calculated to keep the active rulers of the state sufficiently divided among themselves, to prevent any one of them from engrossing the fupreme authority, bad not, however, in the opinion of many, provided against the combination of the members collectively, to grasp at sovereign power, and to overrule, through the weight and dignity attached to their office, the proceedings of the other departments of the It was therefore no less incumbent on these to repress the first attempts of that body, to exceed the limits of their constitutional powers, than upon the parliaments of Great Britain to keep a vigilant eye on the conduct of the monarch and his ministers, and on the statesgeneral of Holland, to watch the steps of an aspiring stadtholder.

Such were the opinions of the discerning part of the public; nor did many scruple to avow their apprehensions, that in consequence of the numerous appointments to places of trust and profit, confided to the directory, it would soon or late arrive at so great a power, as to form a party strong enough to controul the legislature itself.

Whether this were effected through influence, or through force, the result would be the same: and the nation would be obliged to submit to absolute sway, like others that are governed dispotically, by the crown and its agents, through the purchased and service acquiescence of its representatives.

These surmises were not without foundation. The stateliness assumed by the directory in its intercourse with foreign states, sufficiently indicated the lofty ideas they entertained of their importance, and how readily they would raise themselves to the fummit of personal grandeur and uncontrouled power, in the management of all public affairs, unless their ambition were obviated by timely checks, which could not be too expeditiously employed against men who exhibited so early a dispofition to aspire at an undue extenfion of their authority.

This lostiness of the directory had suffered no small degree of humiliation from the spirited conduct of the government of the united states of America. Full of the idea, that these owed their indepedence to France, the French bore with impatience and indignation that so great a benefit should be overlooked, and that, in this struggle for liberty with so many powers combined against them from every quarter in Europe, they should be forsaken by that people, in whose cause they had acted with so much zeal and and success.

had

HISTORY OF EUROPE. [171

But that which principally exafperated the French government, was the treaty that had been lately negociated between England and the American states, by their envoy in London, Mr. Jay. It was represented as so contrary to the treaties in sorce between them and France, as to amount almost to a denunciation of the amity subsisting between those two powers.

The resentment of the French hardly knew any bounds. The language held at Paris portended nothing less than the most signal revenge for what was termed an act of the basest ingratitude and perfidy. Instead of that cordiality which had taken place between the French and American governments, a distant and suspicious intercourse succeeded; and if the public voice of the people of France had been listened to, a rupture could not have failed to ensue.

It was retorted, on the part of the Americans, that as foon as the French republic had been established, it began to entertain a defign to introduce a lystem perfectly similar to its own, into the United States, without confulting them, and in defiance of the constitution ready lettled among them. end, they commissioned their resident, Genet, to use all manner of artifice and intrigue, in order to pervert the dispositions of the commonalty, and to seduce them from their attachment and obedience to the existing government. He had carried his milconduct fo far, as personally to infult the prefident of the congress, and endeavoured to set him and that body at variance with the people. This agent, of the French republic, had indeed been recalled by his employers, but the seeds of mischief he had sown had produced their intended effect, in the divisions that had embroiled the Americans, and destroyed that unanimity of sentiments from which they had derived such internal tranquillity.

To these complaints the French replied, that the treaty of commerce with England had cancelled all pretentions of amity from America to France. It violated, in a positive and hostile manner, the treaty entered into by the French, in favour of the Americans, in the year 1778, by which the states agreed to guarantee the possessions of France in the West Indies: whereas, by the present treaty with England, the very furnishing of provisions to the French islands, was allowed to be an illegal trade. Such a falling off from their professions of friendship and attachment to France, at a time when they ought to have been realised by actions, after having been so reiteratedly expressed in words, displayed in glaring colours the contemptible interestedness of the Americans, and proved them to be void of all principles but those of avarice and gain, and that to these they would facrifice all confideration of honour and magnanimity.

Recriminations of this nature grew louder and more rancorous than ever, on the intelligence that the government of the united states had formally ratified this treaty. But fresh motives of inveteracy arose from the discoveries contained in a letter, written by the president of the congress to the American ambassador at Paris. This letter: which was dated from Philadelphia, the 22d of December, 1795, had been dispatched in a vessel that was wrecked on the coast of France. It was preserved with other papers, and carried to the directory, by whom it was confidered as indubitable proof of the inimical dispofition of the American government to the French republic.

This letter, on a cool perufal, contained however, no hostile defigns against France. Its contents were chiefly complaints of the arbitrary proceedings of the British ministry respecting the trade of the United States. He directed Mr. Morris, who had quitted his embassy at Paris, and acted as American agent at London, to lay before the English ministry the imprudence, as well as the unjustifiableness of those proceedings, at a time when Great Britain ought to be particularly folicitous to retain the good will of the Americans, in order to induce them to receive favourably the treaty of commerce just concluded, but which met with a multitude of opponents, on account of the harsh measures that had been so unseasonably taken against the commerce and navigation of the united states. It was with difficulty he had stemmed the torrent of discontent and refentment that had arisen on this occasion, and prevented the party, that favoured the French, from carrying matters to extremities. own views, in which he was feconded by the better fort, were peace and neutrality. These would, in the course of a few years, raise the United States to a condition of prosperity and power, that would render them formidable to all the world, and secure to them tranquillity at home, and respect from abroad.

Such was the general tenour of this famous letter, the interception of which was looked upon as fo timely an occurrence for the interest of France, by admonishing it to place no confidence in the Ameri-But without the medium of this letter, the most judicious of the French were convinced that the interest of the Americans would lead them to act a neutral part in the contest between France and -England, and that it would he highly impolitic in either of thefe, to infift upon their acting any other.

The French government did not however relinquish the hope of a future connection with the united states. They grounded this expectation on the numbers of people there, who testified an aversion to all political ties with England, and whose republican disposition inclined them to espouse the cause of all who opposed the government of kings. They also relied on a change of men and measures in the American administration. The presidency, it was intimated to them by their American partisans, would, on a new election, be filled by another incumbent, less averse to an alliance with France than the prefent. These and other representations of a fimilar tendency, from the fame quarter, induced the French government to diffemble the refentment it bore to the American for its partiality to England, and to extend it no farther than to treat the fubjects of the united flates, employed in their commerce and navigation, in the same manner in which these were treated by the English.

These misunderstandings, between France and the states of America. had, in some degree, been suspended by the recall of Mr. Morris from his French embassy and replacing him by a man whose principles were more conformable to their own, and his person, therefore, more accepta-

This was Mr. Monroe, who was received with great respect and cordiality. But when this gentleman was recalled, and Mr. Pinkney appointed his fuccessor, which was in November, 1796, the directory refused to admit him in that capacity, and suspended, at the same time, their own ambassador in America, Mr. Adet, who was ordered to lay before that government the complaints of the republic against its proceedings, and the determination to issue orders to the French ships of war to act towards the trading vessels of neutral states in the same manner that those states. permitted themselves to be treated:

by the British navy.

In support of this determination, the directory alleged the seizure of French property, by the English, on board of American vessels in the very ports of the United States, and through the connivance of their government. Such had been the regard paid to America, by the convention, at the commencement of this war, that while it declared lawful prize all English property found in neutral vessels, the shipping of the United States was excepted from this declaration. But the conduct of the English, in seizing the American ships laden with provitions on French account, had compelled the convention, through mere necessity, to rescind this act of indulgence and to use the right of retaliation, by feizing English property in American vessels.

It was farther stated by Mr. Adet, that American failors were preffed into the fervice of the English, without reclamations being made, or even marks of disapprobation being manifested on the part of the American government. These and other acts of partiality, amply justified the measures taken by the directory. When the United States thought proper to enforce the respect due to their flag by the English, the French would also treat it with the same degree of respect.

Thele remonstrances of the French resident were answered by stating, to him, that according to the terms of the treaty of 1778, neutral property had been declared fecure in American vessels: but that no such stipulations were contained in the present treaty between England and But the propriety of this America. answer was pronounced inadmissible by the French. It was abfurd, they faid, that any state should assent to the continuance of a treaty, when they found it was to be converted into an instrument of the deepest injury to their interests. For the Americans to infift on the validity of fuch a treaty was an infult to the understanding of the French, to which it could not be expected they were either so unwise, or so pusillanimous, to submit; nor could the Americans reconcile to any principle of justice, or of honour, the breach of that article in the treaty with France, by which they had bound themselves to guarantee the French colonies, in the West Indies, against the attempts of the English.

The reciprocal jealouries excited by these various transactions were greatly heightened by the motives which were understood in France to have influenced the recall of Mr. Monroe from his embassy, and the nomination of Mr. Pinkney in his stead. These were the reputed partiality of the one to the French, and the contrary disposition of the other. When the former took leave of the directory, they did not omit this opportunity of declaring their fentiments on the situation of affairs between France and America. They assured him, that whatever differences had arisen between the ruling powers of both countries, the French still retained their esteem for the people of the United Provinces, of whose warmth and good will to the republic of France they were thoroughly convinced, as well as of their difinclination to coincide with the measures adopted by their government. They were not less careful in testifying their highest regard for his personal merit, and their warmest gratitude for the attachment he had unvariably displayed to the cause of liberty and the prosperity of France.

174] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

Such, however, was their refentment of the connection between the English and the American governments, that they determined to gra-. tify it, by treating the American minister with rudeness, if not with indignity. Not fatisfied with having denied him the assumption of that character, they would not fuffer him to remain at Paris as a private Herein they were, by many of their own people, feverely cenfured, as having, without necessity, affronted an individual, come to them on a respectable mission, and widened thereby the breach between them and the state which he repre-Prudence, it was faid. ought to have enjoined a contrary behaviour. They should have sought to have kept the door of reconciliation open, instead of striving to thut it in this arrogant and coutemptuous manner.

CHAP. XII.

The Haughtiness of the Directory towards different Nations.—Particularly towards the Dutch, whom they consider, not as Consederates, but a conquered People.—Moderation of the Republic and prepondering Party in the United Provinces.—Batavian Convention.—Its Proceedings.—Affairs of Geneva.—Meeting of the National Institute of France.—Considered as an auspicious Omen of the Return of Peuce and Reign of the Arts.—And Liberty of Thinking and Publishing on all Subjects.—The Alliance between the Church and Monarchy of France, in the End, ruinous to both.—The new, or constitutional, Clergy avow their Assent to the Separation of the Church from the State.—Yet venture to condemn some Things settled, or approved, by the republican Government.—But which they considered as adverse to the Dignity and Interests of the ecclesiastical Order.—The Settlement of ecclesiastical Affairs considered by the Generality of the French as a Matter of great Importance.

THE irritable temper of the directory was experienced by other governments beside the American. The court of Stockholm. which had, fince the death of the late king Gustavus, explicitly re nounced his projects against the French republic, and manifested favourable dispositions to it, had lately undergone an evident alteration. Some attributed this to the intrigues of Russia; others to the resentment of the Swedish government at the duplicity of the French, who had paid the subfidy they owed to Sweden, in drafts upon the Dutch republic, which they were conscious would not be honoured. Another motive of dissatisfaction to the directory was, the recall of baron Stäel, the Swedish ambassador, a friend to the republic, and the replacing him by Mr. Renhansen, a gentleman noted for his attachment to the politics of Russia. The court of Sweden gave the directory to understand, that were he to be refused admisfion, the French envoyat Stockholm, would be treated precisely in the same But the directory ordered him, nevertheless, to quit Paris; not, however, without expressing the highest respect for the Swedish nation, the good-will of which it still fought to retain, notwithstanding this variance with its government. The French envoy at that court was, at the same time, directed to leave it; his residence there being no longer confistent with the honour of France, to the interest of which that court was become manifefully inimical, by its subserviency to Ruffia, the declared enemy to the French republic.

The king of Sardinia's ambassador had, in like manner, experinced the displeasure of the directory, for expressing

176] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

expressing his regret at the precipitation with which his master had concluded the treaty of peace with France; the terms of which, he faid, would have been much lefs fevere, had he waited for the more favourable opportunities that followed it. For having uttered words of that import, he was ordered to quit the territory of the republic. The Tufcan envoy was dilmissed in the lame manner, on account of the particular zeal he had testified in behalf of Lewis XVI.'s daughter, when she was permitted to leave France.

The court of Rome, when compelled by the victories of Buonaparte to folicit a suspension of arms, had lent commissioners to Paris, to negociate a peace: but, in hope that the numerous reinforcements, which were coming from Germany to the Imperial army, would enable it to recover its lottes, and expel the French from Italy, they studiously protracted the negociation, on pretence that they were not furnished with fufficient powers to conclude a definitive treaty. It was not till the luccesses of the French had put an end to these hopes, that they appeared defirous, as well as entpowered, to come to a conclusion. But the directory, for answer, fignified their immediate dismission.

Notwithstanding the resolute and decisive conduct adopted by the directory, they sound it necessary to abate of their peremptoriness with the Dutch; who, though strongly determined to remain united in interest with France, were not the less resolved to retain their national independence. The party that savoured and had called in the French, had done it solely with the view of securing their militance for the suppression of the stadtholdership, in which they had been formally promiled the concurrence of the French republic. They were, for this motive, to zealous for the fuccets of its arms, that, during the campaign of 1794, they had projected an infurrection in the principal towns of the Seven United Provinces, while the republican armies should advance, with all speed, to their support. Having communicated their defigns to the French government, they doubted not of its readiness to second them, and prepared accordingly to execute the plans which they had formed in virtue of that expectation. But the uninterrupted career of victory, that had given for decided a superiority to the French over all their enemies, had also clated them in such a manner, that, looking upon the co-operation of their party, in Holland, as no longer of that importance which it had hitherto appeared to be, they now received its applications with coldness, which plainly indicated that they confidered the Dutch as a people that must submit to their own terms, and whom they now proposed to treat rather as being subdued by the arms of the French, than as confederated in the same canfe.

Such were the dispositions of the French towards the Dutch, when they enterred the United Provinces. The arbitrary manner, in which they imposed a multiplicity of heavy contributions upon the Dutch, was highly exasperating to the nation: but they were too prudent to exasperate men, who were determined to act as conquerors, and whom it was impossible to resist. They submitted, therefore, with that phlegmatic patience, which characterizes:

them

them in difficulties, and usually enables them to surmount the greatest, by giving way to the storm while it lasts, and reserving themselves for those auspicious opportunities of retrieving their affairs, that so seldom fail the vigilant and undesponding.

In the mean time, the republican party, in Holland, resolved to conduct itself with so much temper to the adherents of that party, which it had opposed with so much firmness and perseverance, that they should have no cause to complain of its having made an improper use of the power it had newly acquired. effects of this moderation were highly beneficial to both parties. fostened the grief of those who had been deprived of the government of their country, and induced them to be less hostile to those who had taken their places: and it procured for these a readiness in the generality of people to consider them as actuated by patriotic motives, and in no wife by private animofity towards their antagonists.

This conduct was the more remarkable, that the inhabitants of the provinces, though a large majority, was defirous of a change of government, differed materially in their opinions concerning that which was The party favouring to lucceed it. the stadtholder was the least considerable. It confifted of the titled, or noble families, still remaining in the United Provinces, and chiefly depended upon the inferior classes, and the great number of foreigners, for the most part Germans, in the Dutch service. The mercantile and middle classes; and generally the people of opulence and property, were inclined to a republican fystem: but herein they differed among themselves as to the plan to be adopted.

Vol. XXXVIII.

Several preferred the antecedent one, that had sublisted from the demise of William III. king of Great Britain and stadtholder, with such alteration as might secure it essectually from a re-establishment of that office, and render it more democratical: others recommended an immediate adoption of the precedents, which the French had fixed on as the most popular. These different parties contended with great warmth for the superior excellence of their various plans. But the necessity of fettling some form of government, brought them, at last, after long and violent dispute, to the determination of calling a national convention. The provinces of Zealand and Frizeland, the two most considerable in the Dutch republic, next to that of Holland, made a long and obstinate opposition to this proposal. But they were, at length, prevailed upon to concur with the others on its expediency.

The year 1795 was confumed in altercations of this nature. But as foon as the national convention met, which was on the first of March, 1796, all parties agreed on a refolution to declare war against Great Britain, which they considered as having chiefly occasioned the many calamities that had befallen the United Provinces for a course of Through its influence over the stadtholder, the strength of the state had been perfidiously withheld from acting in defence of the trade and shipping of the republic, and its interests wholly sacrificed to those of England. During the whole duration of the American war, this had been done in despite and contempt of continual remonstrances and folicitations from the most respectable citizens in the commonwealth. It was through the interference of England, leagued with Pruffia, that the fladtholder, who had been expelled from the United Provinces, was reflored in defiance of the manifest will of the Dutch. Thus a governor was imposed upon them, whom they could compare to no other than a lord-lieutenant of Ireland, or a stadtholder of some Prussian district. He was the mere agent of those two powers, by whose impulse he was guided, and by whose power he was upheld in his authority, which he exercised entirely according to their directions. Through their fatal influence, Holland had been precipitated into the present contest with France, against the well-known wishes of all the provinces, and upon pretexts quite foreign to their interest. While this influence lasted, Holland could be viewed in no other light than as a depender ce of England and Pruffia. It was, therefore, incumbent on the national convention, to put an end to this flavish and ruinous connection with these two powers, but especially with England; which had, on the pretence of elpouting the cause of the stadtholder, torn from the republic almost the whole of its possessions in the Indies and in America. What was still more insulting, the English ministry treated him avowedly as the fovercign of the Provinces, though they musi know that he was constitutionally no more than the captaingeneral of their armies, and the admiral-in-chief of their fleets. Ve hat was this but tyrangy and usurpation in the extreme? The pretentions of Pruffia were at end, by the treaty it had concluded with France: but thole of Fugiand were in full vi-, pences of another. To this it was gour, and it eagerly felzed every opportunity of doing all the damage in its power to the people of the United Provinces; who had, therefore, the clearest right to confider it as their most inveterate enemy. On thele confiderations, which were obvious to all impartial minds, the national convention ought to call forth the whole strength of the nation, and use every effort to recover what England had so unjustly taken from it, rather by furprize than real pro-

N] wealth

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796. 1787

Such was the language of the republican party, in Holland, which, confiding in its ftrength, and on the support of the French, was determined to improve to the utmost the opportunity that now offered, of extinguishing, radically, all the hopes and pretentions of the Orange family. In this determination, this party met with every encouragement from the directory, which anxiously simulated it to form a constitution explicitly exclusive of a stadtholder.

The Dutch convention itself was ' sufficiently averse to the re-establishment of this office, which, new-modelled as it had been, by Fingland and Pruffia, was become, in fact, a fovereignity. But however unanimous on this point, they varied The former inon feveral others. dependence of the Seven Provinces on each other, and their separate and unconnected authority over their respective territories and people, had so long subsisted without impairing the general union, that it appeared to many unnecessary. if not dangerous, to make any alteration in this matter, as it would affect the mode of levying taxes, and burthen one province with the exreplied, that a firm and indiffoluble union,

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

union, which was the object principally required, could not be effected, while such a separation of interests was suffered to exist. It would open a door to perpetual variances, which might eventually endanger the very existence of the government they were about to establish, by breaking the principal bond of unity on which it was to be found-After a multiplicity of debates upon this subject, the importance of a folid union of all the provinces, into one common state, appeared so indispensible, that it was unanimoully agreed to, on the first day of December, 1796. To remove the objection that had principally stood in the way of this decision, a commission of the most respectable members of the convention was appointed to examine and state the former debts of the respective provinces, and to confider of the most equitable and fatisfactory manner of liquidating them, by providing for their extinction, and preferring, at the fame time, uninjured, the rights and interests of all the parties concerned in this liquidation.

In all these transactions, the members of the Dutch convention were remarkably cautious in permitting no visible interference in their deliberations on the part of the French Its fecret influence government. was well known; but the prefervation of every form and external indication of freedom, was judged indifpenfible, in order to maintain the apparent dignity of the state, and, what was of more consequence in the eye of the discerning, to prevent the French themselves, at any suture period, from pleading a right of interfering, from any acknowledged pre-The directory was also cedent. very careful in abstaining from all open and oftenble exercise of authority over this meeting. This would have invalidated their proceedings, and infringed the liberty which France boasted, of having restored to the Dutch, in too glaring a manner, not to have excited their murmurs and resentment. For these reasons the directory affected every sentiment of respect for this national convention of the United Provinces, and treated it with every outward mark of their considering it as the representative of an independent nation.

"But the regard shewn; by France, to the republic of Holland, was measured solely by the consideration of its weight in the political scale, which, however depressed by circumstances, might still recover the level of its former importance. The directory did not extend the same deference to those whom it deemed more subjected to its power. This was remarkably evinced in its conduct towards Geneva. This Ilitle republic had invariably remained attached to the interests of the revolution in France, ever fince its first breaking out; and had gone hand in hand with it through all its varia-Relying on these proofs of its fidelity, it now requested the direflory to confirm its independence, by making it a clause in the treaties between France and other powers. But this request did not coincide with the views of the directory, which had, it feems, in contemplation the annexation of Geneva to the dominion of France. In pursvance of this project, an intimation was given to the Genevans, that their interest would be better confulted, and their freedom fecured, by becoming a part of the French republic. This intimation was highly difgusting to the Genevans; and the means taken to bring them to compliance, were still more offensive. Disturbances and bloodshed were indirectly either promoted or countenanced, by fome dark intrigues. with a view to make them fenfible that the only remedy, for those domettic confusions, was to throw themselves into the arms of the But this attempt was not fuccessful; nor even approved by numbers of the French themselves. They condemned it as manifelting an ambition incompatible with those principles of moderation, on which true republicans ought to value themselves, and which the French held forth to Europe as the maxims by which they had resolved to con-Were Europe duct themselves. once convinced that the ancient fystem of conquest and encroachment on the territories of its neighbours, which had rendered France fo odious under the monarchy, were to be continued under the republic, the necessity of self-defence would gradually unite every country against it: in which case, notwithstanding the brilliant career of its arms hitherto, patience and perseverance, on the part of the numerous enemies that so unjustifiable a conduct would create, must in the end prevail, and both the glory and character of integrity, at which the French ought equally to aim in their political proceedings, would be forfeited.

[N2]

In addition to these motives, for abstaining from a forced incorporation of Geneva with France, it was urged that the inhabitants of that city and its territory, though forming but a small state, were so jealous of their independency, that they would never consent to resign it. The very circumscription of that state, made every member of it the more fensible of his personal weight in its affairs, and of the freedom which he enjoyed. To deprive him of the fatisfaction, arifing from fuch a fituation, would be a wanton exertion of the superior strength of the rupublic, which would redound much more to its difgrace than benefit. Stung with rage at a treatment which they did not deserve, the citizens of Geneva would defert it, and carry to other countries that industry to which alone it owed its flourishing fituation during to many years. The mere possession of the place itself would prove a poor recompense for the expulsion of its inhabitants, which, however indirectly effected, would not be the lefs real. In the mean while, they would exhibit, in the various places of their voluntary banishment, living proofs of the ambition and tyranny of France. The nearest of its neighbours would see their own desting in that of those unhappy fugitives, and learn from thence the obligation they were under, of embracing one of these two alternatives; either of fubmitting to the like treatment, or of preparing manfully to-resist it. Of those who would be constrained to adopt this resolution, the first would be the Swifs, a people noted for ages on account of their love of liberty, and of their aftonishing atchievements in its defence. a people, if united, France would find a formidable enemy: nor was it indeed to be supposed, they would tamely behold the annexation of Geneva to France, by compulfory means, nor even by the voluntary concession of its inhabitants. were bound, in the former of thefe cases, to assist them, and in the latter they

they would hardly permit such an acquisition to France in so near a neighbourhood, and of so dangerous a tendency, without seriously interposing to prevent it. This, of course, must be attended with consequences of which the ultimate issue could not be ascertained, but which would undoubtedly be productive of many calamities.

Arguments of this nature were indifcriminately used by the Genevans, the many French individuals that espoused their cause, and by those persons in Switzerland, who forefaw the difficulties, wherein the Helvetic body must necessarily be involved, were the directory to perfift in so unequitable a project. was therefore abandoned: but the iniquitous ambition that had prompted it still remaining ungratified, fought a revenge for its disappointment, in the harsh usage of the several agents deputed from Geneva to Paris, whom it ignominiously expelled from that city, on no other pretence, than that they did not come with those friendly views that became the state which fent them. But the Genevans, undiscouraged by this treatment, persevered unremittingly in the determination to remain a separate state, and continued to labour with the more vigour in improving the government they had established, when they found themfelves countenanced by the moderate party in France, which, happily for them, was the most numerous.

The motives that were thought to have actuated the directory in a transaction, from which they reaped finally so little honour, were the defire to signalize themselves by the acquisition of a state, which, however inconsiderable in strength and extent, had obtained a highly-deferved reputation throughout Europe, by the industry and ingenuity of its inhabitants; and, more than all, by the distinguished figure it had maintained, and the high spirit it had displayed, in those active and tempestuous scenes that were produced by the reformation. It had long been confidered as the original feat of calvinism, and the rival of Rome itself in matters of religion. the famous founder of that feet lived and died, after having, by his unconquerable courage, laid the foundation of the most resolute association of men that ever figured in modern ages. From the principles which he inculcated, arose that reformation in religion which was grafted on republican maxims. Hence it was immediately adopted by all that aspired at freedom. It filled France with the most intrepid afferters of civil as well as religious rights. fpread into the low countries, where it erected the republic of Holland. It made its way into England and Scotland, where it gradually animated the inquisitive and daring spirits of the last century in this country to those researches into the nature of government, and to those exertions in the cause of national freedom, which, had not fanaticism intervened, would probably have terminated fo happily for all parties. Geneva, during the fixteenth and feventeenth centuries, had been the central point of communication between the principal actors of this high spirited party. Beza, a far greater character than Calvin, no less inflexible, but much less austere, added lustre and importance to this place, by his learning and many other respectable qualities. He con-[N3]tinued tinned like him, the oracle of his party, and was vifited and confulted by all the great champions it prodaced, both in arms and literature. All thele circumstances conferred a filendour upon Geneva, that entailed it to great diffinction. fir" kings and states in Europe, of the protestant persuasion, treated it unanimoutly with every mark of refoech, and it continued on this honourable footing even during the reign of Lewis the fourteenth, who ftrove feveral times in vain to Jubdue the spirit with which it resisted his attempts to influence its government. The annexation of fo celebrated a flate to the French empire apprared, to the directory, an object worthy of their attention, and they were feriously chagrined at their failure.

A compensation for their disappointment offered itself, about the fame time, in a province, wherein they might claim a better right to exercise their sway, and from which both they and their countrymen would derive more honour and pro-This was the province of fcience and literature, that had remained neglected during the confufions attending the antecedent periods of the revolution. The necellity of reviving the spirit of genius, that had iain a while dormant, or had only been busied in the arts of defiruction, rouled at once the attention of government, and of the whole nation. The great numbers of literary men in France, exerted themselver, on this occasion, with the mest commendable zeal. Setting af.de all partialities, on religious and pelifical accounts, they cordially united in profecuting the plan propoliciby the ruling powers, for a regular cultivation of all those departments of knowledge and polite learning, that conduce to the utility and glory of a nation.

Defirous of giving this revival of the encouragements, due to literature, all the followity of which it was susceptible, the directory appointed the fourth of April, 1796, for a public meeting of all the members of the national institute, established the preceding year, at the æra of the new constitution. meeting was held in the largest hall of the ancient palace of the Louvre. All the literati, and all the men of genius and reputation in the polite and liberal arts attended. The directory, the councils, and all persons in the principal departments of government were present, together with the foreign ministers, and as many spectators as the hall could contain. The purpose of the meeting was formally announced, in a speech made by the president of the directory. France, he faid, delivered from past miseries, had now resolved to revive those arts, through the cultivation of which the nation had rifen to fo high a degree of reputation, and commanded the respect of all Europe. It was the determination of government, to pay them all the attention, and give them all the encouragement and recompense which they could possibly claim from a free and enlightened people. The president of the national inftitute, citizen Dufaulx, replied, in the name of his brethren, that they were all equally animated with the love of freedom, of knowledge, and of arts; that they were firmly attached to the republic from principle, and the coniciousness that in the bosom of freedom all those great fentiments are generated and nurtured, that dignify human nature, and constitute the true grandeur of nations.

The folemnity of this day, and the hopes it inspired, that a renewal was at hand of the arts and occupations of peace, filled the public with the highest satisfaction. Discerning people observed, on this occasion, that the liberty of thinking and publishing, so carefully settered under the former government, was an advantage of much more confequence than the generality scemed to perceive. Exclusively of those apprehentions for personal safety, which were now removed, remunerations would flow in equal proportion to persons of all religious perfuafions, and neither dignity nor income would be appropriated to any particular fect. This would at once destroy all other motives, in the investigation of truth, than that of arriving at a discovery. While the champions of only one fect were falaried formaintaining its doctrines, and all others precluded from oppoling them, by the feverest penalties, with what face could any man pretend to affert their reclitude? It was folely by freedom of difquifition that truth was discoverable: and the most valuable consequence of the revolution was the abrogation of that exclusive privilege, which ignorance and imbecility had conferred upon the clergy of the established church, that of silencing, without any other argument than threats and terror, all those who dared to diffent from their opinions.

The fact, at this period, was, that though a prodigious mass of the French nation still remained enflaved to the Romish tenets, multitudes in all classes had imbibed a propenfity to think and speak on Subjects relating to religion, with the most boundless restraint: these latter had been experimentally found the fraunchest friends to libertv, and the former its most inveterate foes, it was natural to conclude, that the ecclefiaflies, adhering to the church of Rome, who were the spiritual guides of these, were also the infligators of this rancour. Hence the strictness and severity with which they were constantly watched. Hence too the averseness of the constituted authorities, to permit any species of authority to refide in any ecclefiastical body, lest, as the experience of all times had invariably shewn, it should gradually obtain an influence over the minds of men incompatible with the rights of government.

The spirit that brought about the revolution was in direct opposition to those claims of implicit belief, on fpiritual authority is which all founded. While the monarchy continued part of the constitution, finding the priefthood, either from interest or bigotry, its most faithful and firmest supporters, it repaid their asfistance with its own. It was this alliance, between the church and the crown, that finally ruined both; and induced their destroyers to confider them as inimical, from their very effence, to political liberty; and inadmissible, on this account, into any system founded on that After the king's death, principle. the clergy underwent the feverest perfecution, those only excepted who had taken the oaths of fidelity to the republic. During the stormy and tyrannical government of Roberspierre, the civil estalishment of the Gallican church was formally annulled, and even those eccless. astics, who adhered to the republican government, were deprived of the regular maintenance hitherto allowed them.

[N4]

184] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796,

After the fall of the tyrant, the convention decreed a variety of mitigations in the laws that had been enacted against the nonjuring clergy. It proclaimed the fullest liberty of worship, and required no other than a simple declaration of submission to the laws, from those clergymen who exercised their professional functions, together with an acknowledgment of the fovereignty of the people. But those who subscribed to these conditions, together with their followers, were branded, by the nonjuring clergy and their adherents, as guilty of apostacy. Much of that spiritual antipathy took place between those dissenting parties, which has fo long proved the difgrace and the bane of religion. But the ruling powers, faithful to their determination of impartiality, paid no attention to those dissentions; and as they had formally declared, that no particular mode of worship should be maintained at the public expence, nor be protected exclusively to any other, they went no farther than to prevent those animolities from breaking out to the disturbance of the peace of the community; and to this end enacted penalties to punish and repress them.

As that part of the French clergy and nation, which openly professed allegiance to government, by conforming to its ordinances, and making the declarations prescribed, could not sail of being viewed with a favourable eye it ventured to take some steps which were thought hazardous, in the opinion of those who dreaded the jealousy they night occasion. A meeting of fome of those bishops, who were called conftitutional, from their having taken the civic oaths enjoined by the constituent assembly, so styled from having framed the first constitution, was held in the beginning of 1795, in order to confult how to reflore order and regularity in the worship and discipline of the church, and to replace it on a footing of stability, after the confusions that had to violently diffurbed its peace. They made a declaration, at the fame time, which was highly acceptable to the friends of harmony and universal toleration in religious They frankly and exmatters, plicitly avowed their affent to the separation of the church from the state, acknowledging it to be the most effectual means of eradicating those corruptions and scandalous practices that had been produced by their union, and fo deplorably tainted that purity of manners, and integrity of life, which ought to accompany the ecclefiaftical profession. Religion, they faid, when unconnected with politics, would resume that influence over mankind, which arifes from innocence and virtue. The great and the powerful would respect it the more for demanding from them only the protection of the state in return for its obedience and conformity to the laws of the land.

These were declarations very uncommon in the ecclesiastical assemblies of modern ages. But numbers of the most zealous friends to Christianity, applauded them with servent sincerity, as tending to divest religies of those appendages, which made it doubtful whether its afterters and sollowers were influenced by conviction, or by interest; and to bring it back to the principal

ples

ples, temper, and views of Jesus Christ, the apostles and primitive Christians. At the same time, it was observed, as well it might be, that the conflitutional reforming clergy were as much to be suspected as any of the old clergy, in the preceding period of private or felfish passions. It is something carnal and develish, not pure, difinterested, and benevolent, that is, for the most part, at the bottom of that zeal which is manifested for the overthrow of religious establishments. The new clergy past ievere censures upon those ecclesiastics who had swerved from their religion, or violated its discipline, or the vows they had made, and the obligations they had contracted on their entrance into the service of the church. They published also some pastoral letters, containing their sentiments on several points of consequence. They disclaimed all temporal authority, declaring the gowernment of the Christian republic to be purely spiritual. Charity was its essential character, and it required no submission to its precepts, that was not warranted by reason. Its true spirit was moderation, and the very reverse of tyranny. afferted, however, at the same time, that the authority of the church was vested in the episcopal order, but rejected the supremacy of the pope, allowing him only the first rank among the bishops.

Notwithstanding the caution which the circumstances of the times imposed upon them, they icrupled not to condemn some things that were fanctioned by the law. They feverely reprobated those relating to divorce, and centured no less violently the matrimonial connections, formed by ecclefiaftics, during the diforders of the revolution, and the licentiousness of man-They stigners it bad occasioned. matized, as guilty of facrilege, those laymen who had taken upon them to officiate as the ministers of religion, in the meetings held for the celebration of divine fervice, and in the absence of regular clergymen. This latter was deemed an act of unfeatonable feverity, by the impartial, who diffregarding the scrupulous /nicety that dictated it, thought that it betrayed too marked a preposesfion for the dignity of the ecclefiaftical order. This occasional exercise of the priestly function was denominated laicism, and represented as facrilegious usurpation of the lacredotal rights.

The ultimate intent of the constitutional prelates, who had been concerned in those meetings and publications, was, to procure a convention of a more numerous affembly than their own, which confisted only of thirty-four, in order to fettle definitively the affairs of the Gallican church: but the government did not incline to permit the formation of any body of men into a national fynod or council. It apprehended that the claims of fuch a meeting might be fuch, and its influence to prevailing, as to endanger the authority of the state, and to create disturbances that might lead to ferious consequences. The advocates of government pleaded on this occasion the precedent of England, where the convocation of its bishops and clergy has for many years, though fuffered to meet, been prohibited to act. these reasons, the directory ordered a number of ecclefiastics, met for the purpose of holding a fynod, to be dispersed: this happened in the month of March, 1796; fince when, no other meeting of this nature has been attempted.

1001

The public approved this exertion of authority, without inquiring into the reasons alleged by those who argued for the propriety of thefe meetings. They dreaded that spirit of obstinacy with which the generality of divines are apt to maintain their opinions, and to difregard the mischiefs that may be occasioned by insisting on the obligation of receiving them as orthodox, and binding on the consciences of Though the revolution had diminished, in a great measure, the superstitious disposition of the times, enough remained to fet the nation in flames; and it was the duty of its rulers to discountenance and suppress all religious discussions of this kind, which invariably tended to involve men in quarrels, and feldom elucidated the subjects about which they contended.

The conforming and the nonjuring clergy fully confirmed thefe apprehensions, by the animosity they reciprocally displayed. The latter especially exhibited scenes of bigotry, that could not have been exceeded in the darkest ages. who abjured the party of their antagonists, were not admitted into the congregation of the faithful, as they fiyled themselves, until they had been formally exorcifed: a ceremony which they deemed necessary to expel the evil spirit that might fill be lurking within them. what was still more scandalous, as well as more abfurd, they would fometimes dig out of their graves, the bodies of those who had been buried by conformists, and give them a fresh interment, in order to infure their repole.

Such absurdities, at the close of the eighteenth century, amply refuted the affertions of those who represented the clergy of France, as a rational and enlightened body of men. This might be true of numbers; but till the revolution had empowered men to think, an incomparable majority of both clergy and laity were plunged in the deepeft ignorance and credulity. Some have thought there was more of hypocrify than persuasion among the former; but their late sufferings have proved their fincerity.

The conforming clergy feem, however, to gain ground. Their tenets appear more reasonable to the reflecting, and feveral of them are also decided republicans. Christianity has been by fome of them described as the great charter of the original rights of man, and the union of church and state as anti-Christian, and inimical to liberty, While fuch principles are avowed by ecclefiaftics, and countenanced by government, it can hardly be doubted but they will finally preponderate: the fooner indeed, that all ideas of persecution are dropped, and the fanatical party left to indulge in all its extravagancies, without the least notice on the part of the state, which tracts them with a filent contempt, that more effectually exposes them to ridicule, than could be done by the measures of restraint.

This revolutionary spirit, in religious matters, was not, in the mean time, confined to France. It had long been making a concealed progress in Italy and Germany, and the French revolution gave it fresh vigour. In the Austrian Netherlands, the influence of the Romith clergy, and the submissive disposition of the natives, in the concerns of religion, preserved it from alterations. But, in the united provinces, the freedom allowed to all perfuafions had so completely paved the way for innovations of this kind, that, on the irruption of the French, and the revolution effected in the Dutch government, the religion of the state was immediately abolished, and all fects declared upon a footing of equality. The stipends of their respective ministers were to be paid by their followers, and no other interference exercised by the ruling power, than to maintain liberty of worthip to all who paid obedience to the laws of the country.

ligion,

A fystem so new to the ideas of all the nations in Europe, so repugnant to the temporal interests of an immense portion of the established clergy, and reputed by numbers in all classes so inimical to religion itself, could not fail to call forth the indignation of multitudes. approbation of perhaps a majority of those literary men, who are not members of the ecclefiaftical body, has powerfully conduced to give this new system a considerable degree of popularity. As it does not appear hostile to Christianity itself, few, if any, of those fects that are not connected with the state, by a regular establishment, can be supposed inimical to the introduction of it into countries, where they exist themselves merely upon sufferance, and certainly can lose nothing by being placed on a level with all other fecturies, in point of emolument and importance. The Roman catholic states, being all monarchical, are those that have hitherto opposed it with most violence: as the ecclefiastical establishments there, form part of the political system, a disjunction of the church from the state cannot be effected, without confiderably weakening the latter; the authority of which depends effentially on the support given it by the former, whose attachment, therefore, is remunerated and fecured, by the riches and splendor annexed to Opinion being the foundation of all power, and ecclefiaftics in those countries possessing a notorious influence over the community, fovereigns are too fenfible of their own interest to suffer the dissolution of a tie, that binds their subjects to them to efficaiously, and will, therefore, strenuously exert themselves to prevent the propogation of a fystem, that would deprive them of fuch able defenders.

The lettlement of ecclefiafrical affairs, in France, was confidered, by most men, as an object of the highest Though great liberty importance. was assumed by numbers, in the exercise of that latitude of thinking, which was countenanced by the ruling powers, and the spirit of the constitution, and who paid little regard to the interests of religion: yet the majority, throughout the nation, were extremely defirous to fee a total and unfettered freedom of worship granted to all persons who submitted to the established system. The government was fo thoroughly convinced of the necessity of coinciding with the general sense of the community on this subject, that, notwithflanding the multiplicity of weighty concerns that occupied it in the course of this year, it carefully bestowed its attention upon the termination of this business. The fatisfaction expressed by the public, on this account, proved the rectitude of the measures they had adopted.

CHAP,

C H A P. XIII.

In France, a General with for Peace.—But the Popularity of the War with England fill continued .- Overture of Prace from England to the French. Republic.—Negociation for Peace at Paris. Abruptly broken off.— Affairs, Maritime and Colonial, French and British.-Infidelity of the French Government to their Engagements to the Dutch.—French Preparations and Expedition for an Invasion of Ireland.—Defeated.—The Death of Catharine II.—Ind of the Regignation of General Washington.

THE directory were very fensible that, after the pacification which they had in so great a meafure effected in the affairs of religion, the nation would expect that they should proceed with equal solicitude to restore peace between the flate and its numerous enemies: victories enough had been obtained to teach these the inefficacy of their endeavours to fubvert the fuftem now lettled in France; the adherence to which, by the mass of the people, was sufficiently proved, by the zeal with which they supported it, and the infferings to which they had chearfully submitted, during the itruggle against its many and potent adversaries. It was time to come to a conclusion of so destructive a war, and to conclude a peace upon reasonable conditions.

This was a language that began to diffuse itself every where. The popularity of the war against England, which was looked upon as the power under the aufpices of which it had been chiefly promoted, was not diminished: but as the ruinous expences of this terrible contest, had proved fo fruitless, for the purpole propoled by this ancient rival, it was now hoped, that he would defift from attempts that had already cost him so much blood and treasure. To perfift in them, must finally plunge him into far more ferious difficulties than he had yet encountered. refources, however great, were not fufficient to subsidize the immense combination of powers that he must bring into action. He might keep them together fome time longer; but the greatness of his efforts must necessarily exhaust him, and he would then be compelled to agree to a much more diladvantageous peace, than if he were willing, while yet on a respectable footing, to enter into pacific negociations.

Such were the fentiments of the moderate party in France, but there were others who entertained no other ideas, than of an entire subjugation of England. To humble it would not fatisfy them. The French, in their opinion, were entitled to wreak the most signal vengeance on a people that had excited all Europe against them, that had

loaded

HISTORY OF EUROPE. [189

loaded them with the most opprobrious aspersions, that had sought their utter ruin, and not only to deprive them of their hard earned liberty, but to parcel them out among the European delpots. Fortune having declared for the republicans, it was equally their duty and their interest to inslict the severest punishment on those who had formed so iniquitous a design. While England subfisted, it would prove an everlasting and irreconcileable enemy. It would unite with every power that harboured malevolent intentions to France. It would foment and support that rebellious and fanatic party among the French, which thought itself bound, in conscience, to oppose the present government, and to reftore the house of Bourbon. No medium remained between a precarious existence of the republic, and the total reduction of England. Having forced all their other enemies to lubmit, it were shameful to suffer this, their most deadly one, to retain the power of compelling them to undergo another trial for their independence.

With arguments of this kind did the violent among the republicans plead for the propriety of making an attempt upon England itself; alleging, at the same time, the number of partisans and well-wishers the republic might rely upon, among the English malcontents; whose numbers were immense, and daily augmenting, through the prefsures which the war incessantly accumulated upon the nation.

But that circumstance which most irritated all parties in France at this juncture, and destroyed the considence of their government in the good saith of that of England, was the mission of Mr. Hammond, to Berlin, in order to procure, as they firmly asserted, the re-union of Prussia to the coalition. His sailure, they said, was the real cause of the English ministry's determination to make overtures for a treaty.

Influenced by this suspicion, though the Directory permitted the French minister for foreign affairs to grant a passport for an agent from England, at the request of the English ministry, yet this was done much more to obviate the complaints that would have arisen upon their resulas, than from any expectation of a prosperous issue to the negociation.

Lord Malmsbury, the person commissioned on the part of Great Britain, to negociate a peace with France, arrived at Paris, on the twenty-second of October, and was, on his arrival, received by the people of that city with every demonstration of joy: but the government, far from treating him with cordiality, indirectly countenanced a variety of surmisses, so prejudicial to his errand and official character, that he was necessitated formally to complain of them, before it thought proper to silence and disavow them.

The negociation was opened, on the twenty-fourth of October, by lord Malmsbury's proposing to De la Croix, the French minister of the foreign department, to fix upon some principles whercon to sound the conditions of the treaty, and recommending that of reciprocal restoration of what had been lost and taken by each of the Belligerent parties, as the most usually adopted on such occasions. He observed, that Great Britain having, in the course of this war, made conquests upon France of the highest value and consequence, was not in the case of requiring restitutions for itself; but France having made large acquisitions on the allies of Great Britain, the objects of the negociation seemed, of course, to be the compensations that France might expect, for the restitutions it would make.

190] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

To this proposal of the English ambassador, it was replied by the directory, that the accession of other powers to a business, which he was authorifed to tranfact separately between Great Britain and France, would essentially retard the progress of the negociation, as he had no commission from those allies to act in their behalf. But that to prove their readiness to embrace every means of reconciliation, they would confent, on his procuring credentials to that purpole, from those allies, to take into confideration any specific proposals he should lay before them.

This answer was accompanied with explicit infinuations, that the intention of the British ministry was, by the semblance of a general negociation, to prevent other powers from making their particular proposals, and, at the same time, to induce the English nation to supply the government with the means of continuing the war, from a persuafion that the French had resused to make a peace.

The British minister's reply was, that he had not been commissioned to enter upon a separate treaty; that Great Britain proposed to make a common cause in this transaction with its allies, and that to wait for powers from these, before any discussions on the subjects to be proposed should take place, was perfectly unnecessary.

The directory rejoined, by taking notice, that the respective situation of France, and of its remaining enemies, ought to be duly considered in the demands of the latter for restitutions. The strength of these had been diminished by their losses, and the desertion of their associates, who had not only abandoned the coalition, but were now become the allies of France, or observed a strict neutrality. These, it was infinuated, were circumstances very unfavourable to the restitutions hinted at by the British negociator.

After a variety of farther affertions and replications on both fides, the directory at length agreed to the principle laid down by lord Malmfbury, and required a specific mention of the compensations he had alluded to. He replied, by proposing the restitution of what had been taken from the emperor, and peace to be negceiated with him for the empire, as its conftitutional head: the accession of Russia to the present treaty; and Portugal to be included in it, without any demands of indemnity by France. In return for the concessions, Great Britain contented to restore its conquests in both the Indies; provided howover it received an equivalent for that portion of the island of Hispaniola, ceded by Spain to France. The restoration of the prince of Orange, to the Stadtholdership of the Seven United Provinces, was allo required, in confideration of Great Britain would refiore most of its acquisitions from

To these outlines of the pacification proposed, the directory answered, by requiring the whole of his demands to be stated to them intwenty-sour hours. To this peremp-tory requisition he replied, that it precluded at once all further negociation: that, if they disapproved of his propositions, or resuled to take them' into confideration, they ought to bring forward their own, that he might lay them before But he received no constituents. other answer, than that they could listen to no terms inconsistent with the constitution, and the engagements formed by the republic. It was fignified to him, at the fame time, that being obliged to confult the British ministry, previously to all replies and communications, it evidently appeared that his powers were inadequate to the conducting of a treaty, which might, if the British ministry were inclined to pacific measures, and determined to treat on their present plan, be as well forwarded by an epistolary correspondence. Lord Malmsbury's, they farcastically observed, was a negociation of couriers and messages. This republican rudeness strongly marked the subversion of the French monarchy. His refidence therefore in Paris being totally unnecessary, they ordered him to depart in forty-eight hours. This injunction was notified to him on the twentieth of December.

10

Thus ended a negociation, of which no hopes had been entertained, from the manner in which it. commenced, and was carried on. Politicians thought that too much was demanded of the French, and that they were disposed to grant too little. The truth was, that neither the British, por the French, government, were fincerely disposed to peace; though a flew of pacific inclinations was inecessary to both, in order to preferve any tolerable degree of popularity, and even to the endurance of their fway among. their respective nations. Circumstances greatly favoured the French, exclutively of their fuccesses in Italy. The German princes and states, alarmed at the reassumption of its former leftiness of style by the court of Vienna, on the expulsion of the French from the empire, were confirmed in their adherence to Prussia, as a counterbalance to the power of Both the court of Berlin and Petersburgh had united, on this occasion, in espousing their cause. Thus, though the emperor continued stedfast in his engagements with England, still the union formed against him in the empire, diminished considerably his importance. Spain too, at this period, was in league with France, and preparing a formidable armament against England. The councils of the Batavian republic, the new ftyle of the Seven United Provinces, were so firmly interwoven with those of the French republic, that a re-establiment of their former government was become inadmissible in any treaty.

Notwithitanding these manifold advantages, numbers in France did not contentedly fee the dismission of lord Malmibury, thinking that possibly a fairer opportunity of concluding a beneficial peace, would The events of war had not recur. hitherto been to much more prefperous than could be expected, that they ought to have been improved. while their influence was in full strength from their being recent, and the fortune of the state should not have been committed to the future contingencies of war, the chances of which were so uncertain and precarious.

In order to screen themselves from these strictures, which most people deemed not ill-founded, the directory published an elaborate apolegy for their conduct, wherein they endeavoured to criminate that of the British ministry in the late negociation. They enumerated the conquests and victories of the French, the glory they had obtained, the connections they had formed, and the treaties they had They represented that concluded. ministry, as insisting upon the disfolution of every honourable and beneficial tie they had contracted. Every advantage was to be given up, and the enemies of the republic replaced on the same sooting as before the war, and completely enabled to renew it with the likeliest prospect of success. France, in a word, was to renounce its honour and its reputation, as well as its dearest interests, and tamely forego all those claims to which the triumphs obtained by its arms had given it so reasonable and incontestible a right. The apology concluded with menaces to England, and exhortations to the people of France, to persevere unremittingly in the profecution of the war, which could not fail to terminate glorioully for the republic, and to the merited humiliation of a foc, that prefumed to dictate conditions to a state that had imposed its own terms on every other member of the coalition.

192] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

This address, by the directory, so well calculated to operate on the national vanity of Frenchmen, and a vulgar passion for false glory, proved satisfactory to the majority of people: but many remained unconvinced of the propriety of their conduct, and appealed to the multiplicity of untoward events that had befallen the arms, and the enterprizes of the republic, during the course of the present year.

These had certainly met with severe checks. Exclusively of their expulsion from Germany, the French had been very unfuccessful in the West Indies, and throughout the whole of their transmarine settlements. The colony of St. Domingo, the most valuable of any to France, and the former tource of its commercial prosperity, was in a state of confusion, that baffled all the efforts continually made to reflore it to any order. The blacks and the mulattoes were now become its rulers, and the ancient proprietors in most parts of it, entirely ruined. Their estates were in the hands of their former flaves, who lorded it every where with that barbarity, which is the utual concomitant of uncivilization. As they were armed, their numbers made them irre-They chose their own commanders, and in a short time threw off all subjection to government, and took forcible possession of a large portion of the fouthern diffricts, where they declared themfelves a free and independent peo-The French commissioners were unable to reduce them, and with no fmall difficulty preferved the fovereignty of the republic in the northern parts. In addition to thole dilorders, leveral of the principal places in the illand were in possession of the English, who had been called in by the planters, to protect them from the tyranny of the French commissioners: in confideration of which they had tranfferred their allegiance from France to Great Britain.

But neither the French nor the English seemed, at this period, in a situation long to retain the dominion of that island. The emancipation of the slaves, by the government in France, had excited a spirit of disobedience in them, which, gradually matured into mutiny and rebellion, had produced a revolution, by which ther were become masters of the country. The strength of the English, on the other hand, never had been sufficiently considerable to esfect any real progress in the reduction of this valuable island. Continual diseases, of the most deadly kind, had fwept away the reinforcements fent from England, almost as fast as they arrived. Never, in fact, was the folly of committing European troops to thole fatal climates so dreadfully evinced as in the prodigious mortality, that unceasingly attended this fruitless and destructive expedition.

3

The reports brought over to the French government, of the real state of St. Domingo, convinced them, that, while the war lasted, it would. be utterly out of their power to reestablish their authority in that colony. Some persons indeed scrupled not to predict, that, in the present circumstances of affairs in those parts of the world, this would never be accomplished. The negroes and mulattoes were become fo intelligent in the European methods of attack and defence, that they were completely adequate, by their numbers, their dexterity in the use of arms, and their knowledge of the country, to relist any force that could be brought against them, and to maintain their independence in fpite of all attempts to reduce them. The extent of the island was such, that it could only be subdued by a large military force; and experience had shewn, that it was impracticable to preferve the lives and health of Europeans long enough, they had been landed, to carry a defign of this nature into effectual execution.

Warned by the fate of their West Indian colonies, the rulers of France Vol. XXXVIII.

did not think proper to enforce the decree for the emancipation of flaves in their East Indian settlements. The commissioners that had been fent to the isles of France and Bourbon, to execute this decree, had been expelled by the inhabitants. On their return to France, they made heavy complaints of the treatment they had received; but the directory, taught by experience, readily admitted the excuses of the colonists, who, professing a due attachment to the republic, had, however remonstrated against the policy of the decree, and requested leave to qualify its execution, so as toprevent the mischiefs that would flow from an immediate compliance with it. The danger of exasperating the people of fo distant a settlement induced government to abstain from coercive measures, and to listen tavourably to their representations.

In the mean time, the hostilities carried on by the military and naval forces of Great Britain in the West Indies, against the French and their allies, had been accompanied with fuccess. The island of Grenada. chiefly inhabited by French planters, who had, in a great measure, through ill usage, been driven into rebellion, was, after a long and fanguinary contest, obliged to yield to the conduct and valour of general Nichols, and the troops under his command. He had contended with a variety of difficulties, and met with obstinate resistance, during the whole course of the year 1795; but, in March, 1796, he obtained complete victory over the infurgents, who were compelled to lay down their arms, and submit to the mercy of the British government.

In May following, the Isle of St. Lucia was reduced in like manner, [O] by

194] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

by general Abercromby, after defeating and taking prisoners a very considerable body of French, who did not, however, surrender themselves without a vigorous desence. In the preceding month, Isiquibo and Demerary, two Dutch settlements of great importance, were taken possession of by a body of troops, commanded by general Whyte.

The only advantage gained at sea, by the French, in the course of this year, was at Newsoundland, where a vast amount of property, in warehouses and other buildings, and in merchandize and shipping, was destroyed, in the month of August, by admiral Richery, after he had escaped from Cadiz, where he had been compelled to take resuge many months, from the British squadron, sent in quest of him. He had the good fortune to return safe to France, after his expedition, without the loss of a ship.

This fuccess was amply counterbalanced, by the capture of a Dutch fleet of ships of war and transports, destined for the retaking of the Cape of Good Hope; which had been reduced, in the preceding year, by a British naval and military force, under the command of admiral Elphinstone and general Clarke. It failed, in March, from the Texel, and was to have been joined by a French squadron, at the expence of the Dutch. Destitute of this expected aid, it was attacked by the British squadron, under admiral Elphinstone, who captured the whole; confisting of three ships of the line, three frigates, and other vessels of inferior size. About two thousand troops were on board the fquadron. This event took place in the course of August.

The Dutch settlements, in the island of Ceylon, with Malacca, Cochin, and Chinsura, in the end of 1795, and beginning of 1796, were also taken possession of by the British troops without resistance.

The reduction of these places, particularly of the Cape and Ceylon, though the possessions of our ally, the stadtholder, whom we had taken under our protection, inspired an unufual degree of joy and exultation, not only in the generality of the British nation, but into administration, and persons in their confidence, who now began to drop hints, which have been so often repeated, of coercing the trade of the world, of restraining it within British channels, and of the commercial advantages of naval-war, without interruption, and without A fecretary of state said, in the house of commons, "I would be glad to see the minister who should dare to give up the Cape of Good Hope on any account." This was somewhat in the same spirit. with the resolution of the French government, to incorporate, in all possible cales, the Austrian Netherlands with the territories of the republic. The possession of the Cape and Ceylon, particularly the harbour of Trincomale, a fure alylum to thips in all feafons, was accounted, by those who thought in thus manner, fuch a compaction of the maritime dominion of Great Britain as the arrondiffement of the French empire, by the natural boundaries of leas, rivers, and mountains. As, on the one hand, it was faid, a kingdom may be united by local position, but divided internally by mountains, morasses, and deserts, which enable the inhabitants of particular districts to resist government, and to co-operate with external enemies; so, on the other, the refources of power, though feparate, and at a great distance from each other, may be of fuch a nature as to be easily united, and not intercepted or cut off by any hostile power. Compactness of dominion is determined not always, or only, by geographical fituation, but by other circumstances, that secure the co-operation of all its different members. The resources of British power are of fuch a nature, that, though remote from each other, in point of local fituation, they are approximated by facility of communication. ocean, which divides the territories of the British empire, unites its difterent nerves in one cord of strength. The Cape of Good Hope is our half-way house to India. The reduction of Ceylon, again completes the chain of connection between the British dominion in Europe and that in India, which now happily embraces the best part of that penin-Jula. Even the immense army that we are obliged to keep on foot in India is a fortunate circumstance; if we bave regard, as we ought, not only to gain, but to the stability of empire. It nourishes, in the British youth, a military spirit: while mercantile habits, and the acquisition of fudden wealth, tend to enervation; the necessity of maintaining the grand spring of our commerce, by force of arms, breeds up a race of foldiers. Nor, to complete the selicity of our relative situation to India, do our friends remain their for life, or plant colonies, in the process of time, to be estranged tion to its greater extent and happier from the parent country, but return with their fortunes to the places of Add to this proftheir nativity. perous fituation of our affairs, towards the east, our successes in the West Indies, our commercial treaty and alliance with North America, and our new fettlements on the fouth and west continent of America: and the result of the whole will be, that our commercial zone encircles the globe; that to the whole world we may bid defiance, and force the trade into our own channel. It is possible, by a due attention to political economy, to every thing that may encourage navigation and trade, to manufactures, to agriculture, which is the basis of all, and to the state of the labouring poor, to whom the possibility and hope may, and, no doubt, will be extended, of becoming, through industry and other good habits, independent cultivators of the foil, and raised to the possession of farms on their own account.—It is possible, by due attention to these things, and to all that falls within the progress of political economy, to maintain our power and rank in the scale of nations; hot only until the vicifitude of human affairs shall reduce the power of France, from its preient preponderancy on the continent, to a state less formidable, but for a long feries of future ages. The small republic of the island of Rhodes made head and stood out against the Romans, long after great kingdoms on the European continent had owned their sway: after Spain, Gaul, and part of Germany, bowed under their yoke. Great Britain will maintain a more fuccessful contest with France than Rhodes did with Rome, in proporfituation. The war, which had been unavoidable in its origin, had been well conducted, and successful on the part of Great Britain, whose [02]naval more than once proved highly detrimental to the interest of France.

It was imagined, at the time, that this retention of the Dutch money proceeded from a motive by which the directory doubted not to justify This was the great project of invading Ireland, that had long been meditated, and which they were now preparing to carry into execution. The importance of that noble island to Great Britain was well known. The number and bravery of its inhabitants, the fertility of the foil, abounding in all the necessaries of life, pointed it out as an acquifition to France, that would fet it above all difficulties, and put an end to the war at once, by depriving England of those supplies of men and provisions, indispensibly wanted for its armies and navies.

In this vast undertaking, the French principally relied on the cooperation of the Irith themselves. . They were thoroughly acquainted with the fituation of the country, and the discontents of the people, by means of the fecret correspondence between the French government and the heads of the malcontents, who regularly informed it of the measures that were taking, on their part, to excite a general infurrection.

The armament, defigned for this great expedition, had been preparing, at Breft, during the whole fummer. It confilled of twenty-five thips of the line, including the feven that composed the squadron of admiral Richery, who was to join it with all fpeed; fifteen flout frigates, befide floops and transports for an army of twenty-five thousand men, to be commanded by general Hoche, whole military abilities were effects ed equal to those of any officer in the French fervice, Moreau and Buquaparte himfelf fearcely excepted.

Through feveral unforefeen accidents this armament was not ready for failing till the eighteenth of December. On going out of Breft, forme of the largest ships struck upon the rocks, at the mouth of the harbour, and feveral were loft, and others rendered unfit for prefent fervice. The Day after its departure, a violent form arose, which dispersed the fleet, and damaged many of the fhips. This tempeltaous weather lasted during the whole time of the expedition. On the twenty-fourth, admiral Bouvet, commander-in-chief of the French fleet, anchored with feven thips of the line, and ten others, in Bantry-Bay. In order to reconneitre the country, a boat was dispatched towards shore; but it was immediately captured, and multitudes appeared on the beach in readiness to oppose a sanding. After lying fome days in this bay, the florminess of the weather incressed to such a degree, that, on receiving no intelligence of general Hoche and the principal officers, who were in a frigate that parted from the fleet, in the gale of wind that feattered it on putting to fea, the French admiral determined to quit his polition, and make the best of his way to France. The land officers, on board, objected to this, and infifted on landing the troops; but, as general Hoche, who mione possest the plan of the expedition, was ablent, he refused to comply with their representations, and fet fail for Breft, where he fafely artived, on the laft day of December. The other divisions of his fleet had alfo the good fortune to reach that harbour, with the loss, however, of five thips: two of the line, and three frigates: one of the latter was captured by the English, and two foundered at fea, with one of The other, after a the former. desperate engagement, with some thips of the British squadron, off Brest, ran ashore to prevent the being taken.

The fate of this fleet proved, even to lenie, what needed no proof in the eye of reason, that a superior naval force is not, in all cases, a certain fecurity against invasion. Ireland, notwithstanding the superiority of the English fleet, was fixteen days at the mercy of the enemy, and faved from attack only by the elements.

Such was the iffue of this famous expedition: the real object of which had long kept Europe in suspence. Some thought it Portugal, others the English outward-bound fleets. Few imagined it was to hazardous an enterprize as the invasion of ireland. The itrength of the Protestants there alone was deemed fully fufficient to repel fuch an attempt, and the Koman Catholics had fo many reasons to be satisfied with the conduct of government, that no suspicions were entertained of any defire, on their part, to exchange their connection with England for one with France, whose treatment of those who were become its dependants, under the name of allies, afforded, certainly, no encouragement to follow their example.

by the death of Catharine II. empress of Russia. Catharine, as we have seen in the preceding volumes of this work, had subdued by her policy, or her arms, the Crimea, the Cuban, with a part of the frontier of Turkey, and almost one half of Poland. Indulging still in her ambi-tion of conquest; inflamed, not satiated, by so much success, she sought still to extend her dominion, whereever it was bounded only by that of a neighbour, not by the hand of nature. She contrived to itretch forth, as it were, both her arms, the one in Europe, the other in Asia; but contrarily to what had been usually experienced, both by herself and predecessors, while she made a conquest of no small importance in the north of Europe, the was vigoroutly repelled from the foster climate of Asia. By carefles and intrigues the induced the inhabitants of Livonia to infift on the fulfilment of an ancient convention, whereby the Courlanders were obliged to bring all their merchandizes to Riga; though they had, on their own coasts, excellent harbours, happily fituated. A quarrel, which had naturally arisen on this subject, between the Livonians and Courlanders, was not yet terminated, when the emprels lent engineers into Courland, to mark out a canal for facilitating the merchandize of that country into Livonia. Courlanders, seeing this, and searing left they should be soon forced to make use of this canal, thought it better for them to be protected, than oppressed, by the empress, and to be her subjects rather than her neighbours.

Catharine, informed of these dispolitions, called to her the dake of The close of 1796 was marked Courland, the feeble son of the famous Biren, under the pretext of having occasion to confer with him on matters of importance. But no looner was that prince at the foot of the throne of the Autocratrix of the north, than the states of Courland held an affembly. The nobi-

[04]

lity

more than once proved highly detrimental to the interest of France.

It was imagined, at the time, that this retention of the Dutch money proceeded from a motive by which the directory doubted not to justify This was the great project of invading Ireland, that had long been meditated, and which they were now preparing to carry into execution. The importance of that noble island to Great Britain was well known. The number and bravery of its inhabitants, the fertility of the foil, abounding in all the necessaries of life, pointed it out as an acquisition to France, that would fet it above all difficulties, and put an end to the war at once, by depriving England of those supplies of men and provisions, indispensibly wanted for its armies and navies.

In this vast undertaking, the French principally relied on the cooperation of the Irish themselves. They were thoroughly acquainted with the situation of the country, and the discontents of the people, by means of the secret correspondence between the French government and the heads of the malcontents, who regularly informed it of the measures that were taking, on their part, to excite a general insurrection.

The armament, designed for this great expedition, had been preparing, at Brest, during the whole summer. It consisted of twenty-sive ships of the line, including the seven that composed the squadron of admiral Richery, who was to join it with all speed, fisteen stout frigates, beside sloops and transports for an army of twenty-sive thousand men, to be commanded by general Hoche, whose military abilities were esteemed equal to those of any officer in the French service, Moreau and Buqaaparte himself scarcely excepted.

Through several unforeseen accidents this armament was not ready for failing till the eighteenth of December. On going out of Brest, some of the largest ships struck upon the rocks, at the mouth of the harbour, and feveral were loft, and others rendered unfit for present service. The Day after its departure, a violent form arose, which dispersed the fleet, and damaged many of the fhips. This tempestuous weather lasted during the whole time of the expedition. On the twenty-fourth, admiral Bouvet, commander-in-chief of the French fleet, anchored with feven ships of the line, and ten others, in Bantry-Bay. in order to reconnoitre the country, a boat was dispatched towards shore; but it was immediately captured, and multitudes appeared on the beach in readiness to oppose a landing. After lying some days in this bay, the storminess of the weather increased to such a degree, that, on receiving no intelligence of general Hoche and the principal officers, who were in a frigate that parted from the fleet, in the gale of wind that scattered it on putting to sea, the French admiral determined to quit his position, and make the best of his way to France. The land officers, on board, objected to this, and infifted on landing the troops; but, as general Hoche, who alone possest the plan of the expedition, was absent, he refused to comply with their representations, and set fail for Brest, where he fafely artived, on the last day of December. The other divisions of his fleet had also the good fortune to reach that harbour, with the loss, however, of five ships: two of the line, and three three frigates: one of the latter was captured by the English, and two foundered at fea, with one of the former. The other, after a desperate engagement, with some thips of the British squadron, off Brest, ran ashore to prevent the

being taken.

The fate of this fleet proved, even to sense, what needed no proof in the eye of reason, that a superior naval force is not, in all cases, a certain lecurity against invasion. Ireland, notwithstanding the superiority of the English fleet, was fixteen days at the mercy of the enemy, and faved from attack only by the elements.

Such was the iffue of this famous expedition: the real object of which had long kept Europe in suspence. Some thought it Portugal, others the English outward-bound fleets. Few imagined, it was so hazardous an enterprize as the invalion of Ireland. The strength of the Protestants there alone was deemed fully fufficient to repel fuch an attempt, and the Roman Catholics had fo many reasons to be satisfied with the conduct of government, that no suspicions were entertained of any defire, on their part, to exchange their connection with England for one with France, whose treatment of those who were become its dependants, under the name of allies, afforded, certainly, no encouragement to follow their example.

by the death of Catharine II. empress of Russia. - Catharine, as we have feen in the preceding volumes of this work, had subdued by her policy, or her arms, the Crimea, the Cuban, with a part of the frontier of Turkey, and almost one half of Poland. Indulging fill in her ambition of conquest; inflamed, not satiated, by fo much fuccels, the lought still to extend her dominion, whereever it was bounded only by that of a neighbour, not by the hand of nature. She contrived to stretch forth, as it were, both her arms, the one in Europe, the other in Asia; but contrarily to what had been usually experienced, both by herself and predecessors, while she made a conquest of no small importance in the north of Europe, the was vigoroully repelled from the foster climate of Asia. By carefles and intrigues the induced the inhabitants of Livonia to infift on the fulfilment of an ancient convention, whereby the Courlanders were obliged to bring all their merchandizes to Riga; though they had, on their own coasts, excellent harbours, happily fituated. A quarrel, which had naturally arisen on this subject, between the Livonians and Courlanders, was not yet terminated, when the empress sent engineers into Courland, to mark out a canal for facilitating the merchandize of that country into Livonia. Courlanders, seeing this, and searing left they should be soon forced to make use of this canal, thought it better for them to be protected, than oppressed, by the empress, and to be her subjects rather than her neighbours.

Catharine, informed of these dispositions, called to her the dake of The close of 1796 was marked Courland, the feeble son of the famous Biren, under the pretext of having occasion to confer with him on matters of importance. But no looner was that prince at the foot of the throne of the Autocratrix of the north, than the states of Courland held an affembly. The nobi-

[04]

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

ofed to withdraw the counthe inpremacy of Poland, out it under that of Ruffia. iciple members of the grand made a faint opposition to ration, by observing, that, hey proceeded to a refot would be expedient to return of the duke. The graff Hoven role up, and long time in favour of Rufome counfellors expressed es of his opinion, and others ed them with treaton. The grew warm on both fides; es were reciprocally given, ds were about to be drawn, e Ruffian general, Paklen, I in the affembly. His pretored tranquillity. No one I to raile his voice against and the propolal of the as adopted. The next day was drawn up, by which 1, Semigallia, and the circle , made a formal furrender dives to the empress of Rufit was carried to Peterfwhere the duke of Cournt, from the mouth of his ects, that they themselves ived him of his dominions. refs immediately fent a goither. ver fome difcontent remainurland: discontent brought rption; and the postessions of ribed were given to the The faof Catharine. Plate Zuhoff, and his broerian, obtained a great part ich and fhameful (poils, equifition of Courland to as of great importance. It much corn, as well as timboth of which articles it a great commerce; and rerai ports advantageoutly fituated on the Baltic, among which are Libau and Vindau: the first a flourishing and commercial city; the fecond, likely to become one day the station of the Russian sleets. The port of Vindau, which is never obstructed by ice, by a little improvement, might be rendered capable of containing a hundred ships of the line.

At the fame time that the quietly usurped the sovereignty of Contland, she fent out her arms against Perfia. Under pretence of defending Lof-Ali-Khan, of the race of the Sophis, the aimed at the polfession of the Persian provinces, which border on the Calpian. Valerian Zuboff, at the head of a numerous army, penetrated into the prevince of Dagheltan, and advanced to lay siege to Derbent. His first attack was directed againt a high tower, which defended the place; and, after having made himfelf mafter of it, and put the whole garrifon to the fword, he was preparing to make an affault upon the The Persians, intimidated town. by former fuccelles, and the impetuofity of the Ruffians, cried ont for quarter; and the commandant, a venerable old man, of the amazing age of one hundred and twenty years, and the same who, at the commencement of the prefent century, had furrendered Debent to Peter I, came now to deliver the keys to Valerian Zuboff.

Aga Mahmed was advancing with fuccours to the relief of Derbent, when he heard that the place was already in the hands of the Ruffians. Valerian Zuboff came forth from the place to offer him battle, in which victory declared for the Perlians, who forced their enemies to return into Derbent.

. Catharine,

Catharine, being informed of this, immediately gave orders for a body of troops, which she had in the Kuban, to go and reinforce the army of Valerian Zuboff, not doubting that her general would very foon give a total defeat to Aga Mahmed. -She also flattered herself with the hopes of obtaining a greater triumph. The new treaty, which she had just concluded with Great Britain, and with Austria, secured to her the affistance of those two powers against Turkey. In a word, she now reckoned on the full accomplishment of her darling project, of driving the Ottomans out of Europe, and of reigning in Constantinople. But the fuddenly finished, by an easy death, the career of a splendid life, in the fixty-seventh year of her age, and thirty-fixth of her reign. She died at Petersburgh, of an apoplexy, on the tenth of November; on which her fon, the great duke, Paul Petrowitz, was proclaimed emperor.

Catharine was the most illustrious fovereign, after the exit of Frederick the great, king of Pruffia, on the theatre of Europe, for comprehension of mind, lofty ambition, courage, and perseverance in her designs, and the general influence of her policy and arms, in the affairs of Europe. ambition was not directed merely to the fecurity and extension of the empire, but to the civilization and welfare of subject tribes and nations, by the introduction of arts, improvement of manufactures and commerce: and all this; by means more gentle and gradual than many of those employed by Peter the

fuccessful: in all her regulations. for the internal government of her mighty empire, there appeared that benevolence, which, for the honour of human nature, is usually found in conjunction with sublimity of genius. She wished, soon after her accession to the throng, to introduce civil liberty among the great mass of the people, by the emancipation of the pealantry. It was found impracticable to emancipate their bodies without enlightening To this object the their minds. bent the powers of her inventive. though prudent, genius. were instituted in all parts of her dominions, and a way was opened for the lowest of her subjects to liberty, by certain privileges, within the scope of industry and merit. The code of laws, drawn up by her own hand, was never exceeded in point either of fagacity or goodness: for, we are always to bear in mind, that even Solon found it expedient not to dictate the best laws, but the best that the people; for whom he dictated, were capable of bearing. Her military plans partook of the strength of simplicity: She did not feed the slame of war to no purpose, by throwing in, as it were, faggot after faggot, nor waste time in tedious detours, but, with a mighty and irrefiftible concentrated force, proceeded directly to her object. She had not the art of appearing affable, generous, and magnanimous, but the merit of really being fo. She was not liberal and mechanical, and the only a patroness, but a great proficient, in literature; and, had not her life been spent in great actions, it would, probably, have been employed, though with fomewhat less great; and, consequently, more ef- glory, in celebrating the illustrious fectual. In all her wars the was atchievements of others. It is an invidious invidious thing to pry, with too and had ceased to be a formidable her predicament, and fituation, not eafily to be forgiven. As to the obscure event that led her to the throne, if this had not taken place, an event assuredly, to death.

was, to curb the power and infolence of the French republic. It will ever be memorable, and rewas the policy of the empress, who detested the French republic, with- whom the benefits of her instituout loving the Austrians, to let both tions will extend, with grateful adparties exhaust themselves: deter- miration. Yet, it was the love of mined, however, whatever might glory that was her predominant vent either from acquiring an uncontrolled fway in Germany. Orders were iffined for a levy of a hundred and fifty thousand troops, destined to act, in some shape or other, for the relief of the emperor of Germany. It has been questioned, whether it would not have been wifer policy, in her Imperial majesty, to have moved for the affishance of the consederates fooner? She, perhaps, entertained a persuasion, that the allies would stand firm together, and make a more fuccessful opposition to the republic. She was, no doubt, well enough pleafed to fee almost all the other powers of Europe weaken themselves by war; whilst, at the same time, it must have been her intention, as has fince appeared, to interfere, more and more, in the general conflict, in proportion as the party she detested gained ground on a fovereign prince; who, though a neighbour, and ancient enemy, love of fame. General Washington yet possessed a hereditary throne, having rescued his country from the much curiofity, into the frailties rival. It is to be confidered, farof such a character. The severest ther, that had she moved sooner, critic has not been able to charge the Turks, on the other fide, instiher with anything unnatural, or, in gated by French intrigues, might have moved also. The Czarina waited, too, until she should secure peace, on the most formidable frontier, by a marriage between her of another kind must have led her grand daughter and the young king first to imprisonment, and then, most of Sweden; an object which she had much at heart, though it was The last of her grand defigns found impossible to accomplish it.

Catharine II. has left a name that membered by future generations, to be the fate of their arms, to pre- passion; and the humane will regret that she pursued this through feas of blood: fo that she will take her station in the temple of fame, among the great, not the good princes; and, in this speculative age, add to the odium of absolute monarchy, by displaying the miseries that flow from unbounded power, united with unbounded ambition.

> This year also, general Washington, the greatest of cotemporary men, as Catharine was of cotemporary fovereigns, refigned the prefidency of the United States. These illustrious characters were both respectively at the head of the twolatest, greatest, and most rising empires in the world; both nearly of the same age; both of equal celebrity; though not of true glory: pure and difinterested patriotism being the ruling principle in the mind of Washington; the patriotism of Catharine only secondary to her ambition, and subservient to the oppreinon naval power was never fo great, nor commerce fo flourishing and extensive, nor revenue so high, as at the present moment. And all this prosperity was not ascribed to the uncontrolable tide of affairs, but to the superior penetration and providence of the British government.

There were others, again, who, on the subject of the present state of affairs, indulged an opposite train of reflection. The continental powers, it was faid, had Britain ficod aloof, would have made fuch arrangements, among themselves, as might feem adequate to the control of the French republic. Their confederacy would have been the more folid and fincere that it would have appeared the more necessary. When they found England fo zealous in the cau'e, they readily devolved on her the labouring oar, because they judged that she was the ablest to wield it. Had not Great Britain interfered, the whole continent of Europe would have been involved in war: Britain alone would have been at peace. By a conduct the most extraordinary, and a destiny the most fantastic, Britain alone is likely to be at war with France, and all the other nations to be at peace. France, bounded by the Alps, the Pyrenees, the Rhine, and the Ocean; in friendship with Spain, and overawing the Italian states, will be mistress of a maritime coast. from the lea of Marmora to the Texel. With fuch internal resources, such an extent of coast, the Scheldt, Rhine, and other rivers, as well as canals for circulating her commerce, it is to be feared that she will overtop not only Great Britain, but give law to all Europe. But all this is the refult of those precipitate counsels which drove French to become a military republic, and gave them power by the necessity of exerting it. Our commerce, flourishing, indeed, for the present, beyond all example, yet cannot be lasting, being founded, in a great measure, on principles of injustice. The dominion which is arrogated by the British slag at sea, cannot possibly fail to be as odious to the European nations, as the ambition of the French at land. The trade of the East and West Indies, the most valuable in the world, and the great stimulant to all commerce, is, at present, in our hands: true. If, however, this be a great good to us, which in the eye of found and moral policy it is not, it is a great evil to other nations; to whom, as well as to us, the productions of the tropical and other diffant climates, have, through use, become articles of the first neceffity. Is it to be supposed, that the inventive genius of France will not, after flie shall have made peace with the continent, encouraged by the universal discontent, jealousy, and resentment, at the conduct of Great Britain, fall on some means to sap the soundations of her naval power, pride, and tyranny? Have we not to expect fuch a combination against us, as was formerly excited, by jealoufy, envy, and cupidity, against Venice? may not an armed neutrality at sea be yet formed, more general and more tirm, in proportion to the growing tyranny that prompts it? may not the French, and the other nations on the Mediterranean, excluded from the great India-trade, by the way of the Cape of Good Hope, entertain the project, and in tome shape, and some time or other, effect it too, of inviting it into its old channels, through Persia, Arabia, and Egypt? The route to India, by the Cape of Good Hope, being loft to all nations but England, is it not to be expected that those nations will either combine for the purpole of recovering a participation in that advantage, or attempt to open new, or rather re-open old channels of communication with the East for themselves? That they have adopted the general principle of opposing our power-at sea, by their power at land, they have already discovered, by their efforts to exclude our merchandize from Amsterdam, Venice, Genoa, Leghorn, and other ports. It is but an extension of the same principle to force back the India-trade into its ancient channels. In order to evade the effects of such measures, a plain road lies before us. Let us entrench ourselves, as it were, in moral and facred ground, and make head against the ambitious views of France, by raising up the standard of justice: by shewing a readiness to give up all conquests, Dutch as well as French, without referve, as the price of a peace, founded on similar principles of justice. Can any thing be more infolently abfurd than to stand foremost in a confederacy, against a system of ambition on the continent of Europe, while we ourselves glory in ruling the waves * with absolute sway? let us respect neutral flags, encourage universal freedom of trade, and avow a just conviction, that all nations have but one general interest: the inviolability of private property and public credit, of the rights of men, and the rights of nations; and free ports be opened in every part of the British dominions. We may then find some success in rouzing. Europe against oppression, when we ourselves have given the example of moderation and justice.

Such were the outlines of the two opposite parties, which appeared at this time in Great Britain, on the subject of peace or war, and free or forced commerce. In recording public opinions, as well as actions, we do not confine ourselves merely, on every subject, to the debates in parliament, but pay due respect to liberal and enlightened minds, whether expressed in public speeches, productions of the press, or in private conversation.

The loss of the armament, on which the Batavian republic had: expended large fums, was aggravated by the scandalous neglect of the French government, to furnish them with that naval affiftance which had been slipulated and duly paid for. This behaviour of an ally, for whom they had made fuch facrifices, greatly abated the fervour of their attachment, and excited many complaints throughout the feven provinces. The acceptance of the money, for defraying the charges of equipment, and the diverting it to their own ules, was a breach of faith, that difgraced them much more than they were benefited by the fums thus diverted. It is much weakened the confidence of their Dutch allies, that, ever fince, these have constantly testified a mistrust of their most folemn assurances, that has

[O3]

The popular fong of Britannia rule the waves is equally unjust and impolitic. How can foreigners join in such symphonies? What must be their feelings? and what the effect of these, described on their return to their own countries?

more than once proved highly detrimental to the interest of France.

198]

It was imagined, at the time, that this retention of the Dutch money proceeded from a motive by which the directory doubted not to justify This was the great project of invacling Ireland, that had long been meditated, and which they were now preparing to carry into execu-The importance of that noble island to Great Britain was well known. The number and bravery of its inhabitants, the fertility of the foil, abounding in all the necessaries of life, pointed it out as an acquisition to France, that would fet it above all difficulties, and put an end to the war at once, by depriving England of those supplies of men and provisions, indispensibly wanted for its armies and navies.

In this vast undertaking, the French principally relied on the cooperation of the Irish themselves. They were thoroughly acquainted with the situation of the country, and the discontents of the people, by means of the secret correspondence between the French government and the heads of the malcontents, who regularly informed it of the measures that were taking, on their part, to excite a general insurrection.

The armament, designed for this great expedition, had been preparing, at Brest, during the whole summer. It consilled of twenty-five ships of the line, including the seven that composed the squadron of admiral Richery, who was to join it with all speed, fifteen stout frigates, beside sloops and transports for an army of twenty-sive thousand men, to be commanded by general Hocke, whose military abilities were esteemed equal to those of any officer in the French service, Moreau and Buqaaparte himself scarcely excepted.

Through several unforeseen accidents this armament was not ready for failing till the eighteenth of December. On going out of Brest, some of the largest ships struck upon the rocks, at the mouth of the harbour, and feveral were loft, and others rendered unfit for prefent fervice. The Day after its departure, a violent storm arose, which dispersed the fleet, and damaged many of the This tempestuous weather lasted during the whole time of the expedition. On the twenty-fourth, admiral Bouvet, commander-in-chief of the French fleet, anchored with feven ships of the line, and ten others, in Bantry-Bay. In order to reconnoitre the country, a boat was dispatched towards shore; but it was immediately captured, and, multitudes appeared on the beach in readiness to oppose a landing. After lying some days in this bay, the storminess of the weather increased to such a degree, that, on receiving no intelligence of general Hoche and the principal officers, who were in a frigate that parted from the fleet, in the gale of wind that scattered it on putting to sea, the French admiral determined to quit his position, and make the best of his way to France. The land officers, on board, objected to this, and infifted on landing the troops; but, as general Hoche, who alone possess the plan of the expedition, was abfent, he refused to comply with their representations, and set fail for Brest, where he safely arrive'i, on the last day of December. The other divisions of his fleet had also the good fortune to reach that harbour, with the loss, however, of five ships: two of the line, and three

three frigates: one of the latter was captured by the English, and two foundered at sea, with one of the former. The other, after a desperate engagement, with some ships of the British squadron, off Brest, ran ashore to prevent the being taken.

The fate of this fleet proved, even to sense, what needed no proof in the eye of reason, that a superior naval force is not, in all cases, a certain security against invasion. Ireland, notwithstanding the superiority of the English fleet, was sixteen days at the mercy of the enemy, and saved from attack only by the elements.

Such was the iffue of this famous expedition: the real object of which had long kept Europe in suspence. Some thought it Portugal, others the English outward-bound sleets. Few imagined it was so hazardous an enterprize as the invalion of The strength of the Protestants there alone was deemed fully fufficient to repel fuch an attempt, and the Roman Catholics had to many reasons to be satisfied with the conduct of government, that no suspicions were entertained of any defire, on their part, to exchange their connection with England for one with France, whose treatment of those who were hecome its dependants, under the name of allies, afforded, certainly, no encouragement to follow their example.

The close of 1796 was marked by the death of Catharine II. empress of Russia. Catharine, as we have seen in the preceding volumes of this work, had subdued by her policy, or her arms, the Crimea, the Luban, with a part of the srontier of Turkey, and almost one half of Poland. Indulging still in her ambi-tion of conquest; inflamed, not satiated, by so much success, she sought still to extend her dominion, whereever it was bounded only by that of a neighbour, not by the hand of nature. She contrived to stretch forth, as it were, both her arms, the one in Europe, the other in Asia; but contrarily to what had been usually experienced, both by herself and predecessors, while she made a conquest of no small importance in the north of Europe, the was vigoroutly repelled from the foster climate of Asia. By caresses and intrigues she induced the inhabitants of Livonia to infift on the fulfilment of an ancient convention, whereby the Courlanders were obliged to bring all their merchandizes to Riga; though they had, on their own coasts, excellent harbours, happily fituated. A quarrel, which had naturally arisen on this subject, between the Livonians and Courlanders, was not yet terminated, when the empress sent engineers into Courland, to mark out a canal for facilitating the merchandize of that country into Livonia. Courlanders, seeing this, and searing left they should be foon forced to make use of this canal, thought it better for them to be protected, than oppressed, by the empress, and to be her subjects rather than her neighbours.

Catharine, informed of these dispositions, called to her the duke of Courland, the seeble son of the famous Biren, under the pretext of having occasion to confer with him on matters of importance. But no sooner was that prince at the soot of the north, than the states of Courland held an assembly. The nobility proposed to withdraw the country from the supremacy of Poland, and to put it under that of Russia. The principle members of the grand council made a faint opposition to this alteration, by observing, that, before they proceeded to a refolution, it would be expedient to wait the return of the duke. The Obcrburgraff Hoven role up, and spoke a long time in favour of Ruska. Some counfellors expressed themselves of his opinion, and others reproached them with treason. The dispute grew warm on both fides; challenges were reciprocally given, and fwords were about to be drawn, when the Ruffian general, Paklen, appeared in the affembly. His preience restored tranquility. No one prefuned to raile his voice against Russia; and the proposal of the nobles was adopted. The next day the act was drawn up, by which Courland, Semigallia, and the circle of Pilten, made a formal furrender of themselves to the empress of Rusfia; and it was carried to Peterfburgh, where the duke of Courland learnt, from the mouth of his own fubjects, that they themselves had deprived him of his dominions. The empress immediately sent a governor thither.

[04]

lity

However fome discontent remained in Courland: discontent brought on profcription; and the possessions of the proferibed were given to the courtiers of Catharine. The favourite, Plato Zuboff, and his brother, Valerian, obtained a great part of those rich and shameful spoils.

The acquisition of Courland to Ruffin was of great importance. It produces much corn, as well as timber: in both of which articles it carries on a great commerce; and it has feveral ports advantageously fituated on the Baltic, among which are Libau and Vindau: the firth a flourithing and commercial city; the fecond, likely to be come one day the fration of the Rullan fleets. The port of Vindau, which is never obfiructed by ice, by a little improvement, might be rendered capable of containing a hundred thips of the line.

At the same time that she quietly usurped the sovereignty of Conrland, the fent out her arms againft Perfia. Under pretence of defending Lof-Aii-Khan, of the race of the Sophis, the aimed at the poffession of the Persian provinces, which border on the Cafpian. lerian Zuboff, at the head of a numerous army, penetrated into the province of Daghestan, and advanced to lay siege to Derbent. His first attack was directed against a high tower, which defended the place; and, after having made himfelf mafter of it, and put the whole garrison to the sword, he was preparing to make an affault upon the The Persians, intimidated by former fuccesses, and the impetuolity of the Russians, cried out for quarter; and the commandant, a venerable old man, of the amazing age of one hundred and twenty years, and the same who, at the commencement of the prefent century, had furrendered Debent to Peter I. came now to deliver the keys to Valerian Zuboff.

Aga Mahmed was advancing with fuccours to the relief of Derbent, when he heard that the place was already in the hands of the Russians. Valerian Zubost came forth from the place to offer him battle, in which victory declared for the Persians, who forced their enemies to return into Derbent.

. Catharine,

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

Catharine, being informed of this, immediately gave orders for a body of troops, which she had in the Kuban, to go and reinforce the army of Valerian Zaboff, not doubting that her general would very foon give a total defeat to Aga Mahmed. -She also flattered herself with the hopes of obtaining a greater triumph. The new treaty, which she had just concluded with Great Britain, and with Austria, secured to her the affiftance of those two powers against Turkey. In a word, she now reckoned on the full accomplishment of her darling project, of driving the Ottomans out of Europe, and of reigning in Constantinople. But the fuddenly finished, by an easy death, the career of a splendid life, in the fixty-seventh year of her age, and thirty-fixth of her reign. She died at Petersburgh, of an apoplexy, on the tenth of November; on which her fon, the great duke, Paul Petrowitz, was proclaimed emperor.

Catharine was the most illustrious fovereign, after the exit of Frederick the great, king of Pruffia, on the theatre of Europe, for comprehension of mind, losty ambition, courage, and perseverance in her defigns, and the general influence of her policy and arms, in the affairs of Europe. ambition was not directed merely to the fecurity and extension of the empire, but to the civilization and welfare of subject tribes and nations, by the introduction of arts, liberal and mechanical, and the improvement of manufactures and commerce: and all this, by means more gentle and gradual than many of those employed by Peter the great; and, confequently, more effedual. In all her wars she was fuccessful: in all her regulations, for the internal government of her mighty empire, there appeared that benevolence, which, for the honour of human nature, is usually found in conjunction with sublimity of genius. She wished, soon after her accession to the throne, to introduce civil liberty among the great mass of the people, by the emancipation of the pealantry. It was found impracticable to emancipate their bodies without enlightening their minds. To this object the bent the powers of her inventive, though prudent, genius. Schools were instituted in all parts of her dominions, and a way was opened for the lowest of her subjects to liberty, by certain privileges, within the scope of industry and merit. The code of laws, drawn up by her own hand, was never exceeded in point either of fagacity or goodness: for, we are always to bear in mind, that even Solon found it expedient not to dictate the best laws, but the best that the people; for whom he dictated, were capable of bearing. Her military plans partook of the strength of simplicity. She did not feed the same of war to no purpose, by throwing in, as it were, faggot after faggot, nor waste time in tedious detours, but, with a mighty and irrefiftible concentrated force, proceeded directly to her object. She had not the art of appearing affable, generous, and magnanimous, but the merit of really being so. She was not only a patroness, but a great proficient, in literature; and, had not her life been spent in great actions, it would, probably, liave been employed, though with somewhat less glory, in celebrating the illustrious atchievements of others. It is an invidious invidious thing to pry, with too much curiofity, into the frailties of such a character. The severest critic has not been able to charge her with anything unnatural, or, in her predicament, and situation, not easily to be forgiven. As to the obscure event that led her to the throne, if this had not taken place, an event of another kind must have led her first to imprisonment, and then, most assured, to death.

The last of her grand defigns was, to curb the power and infolence of the French republic. was the policy of the empress, who detested the French republic, without loving the Austrians, to let both parties exhauft themselves: determined, however, whatever might be the fate of their arms, to prevent either from acquiring an uncontrolled fway in Germany. Orders were issued for a levy of a hundred and fifty thousand troops, destined to act, in some shape or other, for the relief of the emperor of Germany. It has been questioned, whether it would not have been wifer policy, in her Imperial majesty, to have moved for the affifiance of the confederates sooner? She, perhaps, entertained a persuasion, that the allies would stand firm together, and make a more successful opposition to the republic. She was, no doubt, well enough pleased to see almost all the other powers of Europe weaken themselves by war; whilst, at the fame time, it must have been her intention, as has fince appeared, to interfere, more and more, in the general conflict, in proportion as the party she detested gained ground on a fovereign prince; who, though a neighbour, and ancient enemy, yet possessed a hereditary throne, and had ceased to be a formidable rival. It is to be considered, farther, that had she moved sooner, the Turks, on the other side, instigated by French intrigues, might have moved also. The Czarina waited, too, until she should secure peace, on the most formidable frontier, by a marriage between her grand daughter and the young king of Sweden; an object which she had much at heart, though it was found impossible to accomplish it.

Catharine II. has left a name that will ever be memorable, and remembered by future generations, to whom the benefits of her institutions will extend, with grateful admiration. Yet, it was the love of glory that was her predominant passion; and the humane will regret that she pursued this through feas of blood: fo that she will take her station in the temple of fame, among the great, not the good princes; and, in this speculative age, add to the odium of absolute monarchy, by displaying the miseries that flow from unbounded power, united with unbounded ambition.

This year also, general Washington, the greatest of cotemporary men, as Catharine was of cotemporary fovereigns, refigned the prefidency of the United States. These illustrious characters were both respectively at the head of the twolatest, greatest, and most rising empires in the world; both nearly of the same age; both of equal celebrity; though not of true glory: pure and difinterested patriotism being the ruling principle in the mind of Washington; the patriotism of Catharine only fecondary to her ambition, and subservient to the love of fame. General Washington having releved his country from the oppression

ment, and restored it, by a commercial treaty, in spite of France, and almost in spite of itself, to an amicable connection with the English nation, voluntarily retired from power, after giving the most profound instruction and advice respecting union, virtue, liberty, and happiness: between all of which there was a close connection, with the most ardent prayers for the prosperity and peace of America. There is nothing in prosane history to which his parting address to the states can be compared. In our facred Scriptures alone we find a parallel in that recapitulation of divine instructions and commands which the legislator of the Jews made in the hearing of Israel, when they were about to pass the Jordan.*

It

In his address to congress, on the seventh of December, 1796, having given an account of the situation of the United States, in relation to foreign powers, and strongly recommended the creation of a navy, he directs the attention of congress to the encouragement of manusactures, agriculture, a national university, and also a military academy. His sentiments, on these subjects, are those of an enlightened and philosophical statesman.

"I have heretofore proposed to the consideration of congress, the expediency of establishing a national university, and also a military academy. The desirableness of both these institutions has so constantly increased with every new view I have taken of the subject, that I cannot omit the opportunity of, once for all, recalling your attention to them.

"The assembly to which I address myself, is too enlightened not to be fully sensible how much a stourishing state of the artsand sciences contributes to national prosperity and reputation. True it is, that our country, much to its honour, contains many seminaries of learning, highly respectable and useful; but, the sunds, upon which they rest, are too narrow to command the ablest professors in the different departments of liberal knowledge, for the institution contemplated, though they would be excellent auxiliaries.

Among the motives to such an institution, the assimilation of the principles, opinions, and manners of our countrymen, by the common education of a portion of our youth, from every quarter, well deserves attention. The more homogeneous our citizens can be made, in these particulars, the greater will be our prospect of a permanent union; and a primary object of all such a national institution, should be the education of our youth in the science of government. In a republic, what species of knowledge can be equally important? and what duty more pressure on its legislature, than to patronize a plan for communicating it to those who are to be the suture guardians of the liberties of the country?

"The institution of a military academy, is also recommended by cogent reasons. However pacific measures may contribute to the general policy of a nation may be, it ought never to be without an adequate stock of military knowledge, on emergencies. That first would impair the energy of its character, as d both would hazard its safety or expose it to greater evils when war could not be avoided: besides, that war might not often depend upon its own choice.

In proportion as the observance of pacific maxims might exempt a nation from the necessity of practifing the rules of the military art, these ought to be its care in preserving, and transmitting, by proper establishments, the knowledge of that art. Whatever argument may be drawn from particular examples, superficially viewed, a thorough examination of the subject will evince, that the art demands much previous study, and that the possession of it, in its most improved and perfect state, is always of great moment to the security of a nation. This, therefore, ought to be a serious care of every government; and, for this purpose, an academy, where a regular course of instruction is given, is an obvious expedient, which different nations have successfully employed."

General

204] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

It has often happened, has it we must buildnot talents and vire has most frequently happened, that it is, in politicians and warriors, have

General Washington, in Suprember (1706), published a little plete, entitled "A Letter from G nera Wash nything his he tignation of the fithes of President of the United States," This ferter, morten by the father and Avidan of his country to his courtrymen, an an occasion which his customas watter, and open, and the tettor and grand orject or his life in this full recollection, and is the may in juster and livelier colours t an any thing we can recurr. He has the proplement to the constants to be affored, that his restriction to the proplement of the constant afford regard appreciately to the thickness who will had a first extension to his country; and that, in with lawing the tender of upplies, who as the rate in his fituation, might imply, he was induenced by no direct their of real for their future excertises no deficiency of gratitude for their past kinds. The hot was supported by a tail convection, that the step. was compatible with both. Herer, mentioned the motives that induced him to accept and continue in the high office, to v'le' their foffing stall twice called him. and those which had urged him to Ity it down, he does to in I cking forward to the moment which is intended to termite to the chief of the file life, may feelings do not permit me to fulpend the deep acknowled ement of the life of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country, for the many word in the last center of the tree; this more, for the fiedfatt confidence with which it has frepretted only infifer the opportunities I have then enjoyed, of manifesting my involve area, many by ferrices taltiful and perfevering, though in arefulació uniqual to my zeel. It handres have refulted to our country from these ferrices, let it all mys he semembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annaly, that under circulaffances in which the passions, agitated in every elrection, Italie to militad; amirift appearances, femetimes dullocs; vicinitudes of fortune, often discouraging; in fittiations in which not unirequently, want of fucceful has countenanced the spirit of criticism, the constancy of your support was the effential prop of the efforts, and a nuarantee of the plans, by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to the grave, as a strong incitement to unccafing vows, that Heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its horeficence; that your union and notherly affection may be perpetual; that the free co statution, which is the work of your hands, may be facredly maintained; that its administration, in every department, may be themped with wisdom and virtue; that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspicies of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing, as will acquire to them the grosy of recommending it to the applaufe, the affection, and adoption of every nation which is yet a firancer to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to flop; but folicitude for your welfare, which cannot end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger, natural to that solicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the present, to offer to your foliams contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments, which are the result of much reflection of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your folicity, as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motives to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it, your indusgent reception of my sentiments on a former, and not difficultar co alion."

He recommends the love of liberty; the unity of government to which they were powerfully invited and urged by every inducement of sympathy and interest; guards them against the causes by which this union may be disturbed; all obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, controul, and counteract, or awe regular deliberation and astion of the constituted authorities; the spirit of party, and all encroachments of one department of government on another.—" Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensible supports. In vain would bave been employed in personal ambition and aggrandizement; or, what is worse, for the aggrandizement of absolute monarchs, whose precarious similes were preserved to the steady and dignissed regards of true glory. A Charles of Sweden sacrifices his people to animosity, pride, and revenge. A Richelieu lays his countrymen in chains at the feet of their haughty fovereign. The moral philosopher exclaims, on a review on the great qualities of Julius Cæsar, Curse on his virtues! they've undone his country.'

HISTORY OF EUROPE., [205

The great and good qualities of general Washington were displayed in a great and good cause: the would that man claim the tribute of patriotism, who should labour to subvert these great pi lars of human happiness, these sirmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public selicity. Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in the courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition, that national morality can subsist without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education, on minds of a peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail, in exclusion of religious principles."

The legislator and patriot proceeded to warn his countrymen against inveterate antipathies against particular nations. On this subject he makes these remarkable observations, of which many will, no doubt, make, at the present moment, particular applications. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment, sometimes impels to war the government, contrary to the bst calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts, through passion, what reason would reject; at other times, it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other finister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes, perhaps, the liberty of nations, has been the victims." On this point, of an equal and just regard for all nations; and, on the other hand, on the insidious wiles of foreign influence, general Washington descants at a greater length than on any of the other topics on which he touches; and, if possibly, with greater earnestness. It is not difficult, from hence, to conjecture, what was at the time, the principle object of his solicitude—foreign influence, particularly that of the French republic.

The world has had many political testaments; some real, some counterfeit: none that breathes fuch pure morality, fuch sublime and sound policy, as the address and the example of general Washington. The style of his paternal letters and speeches, exhorting his countrymen to preferve union among themselves, and peace, good saith, and sincere good-will towards all nations, as well as the fentiments, shining forth with mild radiance. not in fiery flame, were contrasted with certain passionate persuasives to war. How much to be preferred is found fense, simplicity, and sincerity of intention, self-command and moderation of temper, to the most shining talents and accomplishments without them! Yet, though we cannot rank general Washington in the first class of literary geniuses, he was not deficient, but greatly above par, in the most useful kinds of knowledge, and also in the aft of writing. His thoughts are clearly arranged; he manages with great skill, the march of his hearer's or reader's fentiments and spirits; his language is perfeely gramatical and pure, and altogether free from any provincial flang, and cockney or metropolitan barbarisms, which, usuing from the house of commons and newspapers, has adulterated the English tongue, and threatens, in its progress, to render it to future ages unintelligible. A like observation may be extended to the writings of Dr. Frankland, Mr. Adams, and other American writers.

man race. He purised the sollest ends by the sollest means: the dignity and happiness of mankind, by sublime genius and heroic courage.

The most distinguished characters, in many inflances, have been found to have derived the enthufialm that prompted them to undertake and persevere in the execution of great defigns from an admiration of other illustrious characters, which inspired a desire of imitation. Achilles emulated Bacchus: Alexander, Achilles: Julius Cæfar, Alexander; and Frederick II. of Prussia, with other heroes, Julius So too, Charles XII. of Sweden had Quintus Curtius, in his earliest youth, always in his hands, and had learned his stories of Alexander by heart. In like manner Gustavus III. the late king of Sweden, was inflamed with a love of glory, by contemplating the actions of both his paternal and maternal ancestors; particularly of Gustavus Vafa and Gustavus Adolphus, and of the renowned Pruflian monarch, who was his uncle. If general Washington was roused to any grandeur of defign, or, in his public conduct, political and military, had any model of imitation, it feems to have been king William III. prince of Orange, and king of England. The ground on which we hazard this conjecture is, his admiration frequently expressed of that great prince, both in his letters and in private convertation, compared with the tenor of his own The causes and circumactions. stances in which they were both engaged were fimilar: their conduct also fimilar. The prince maintained the independence of his countrymen, in opposition to the mighty power of France: the general maintained the independence of his countrymen, in opposition to that of England: both were remarkable for coolness and caution; but remarkable also for firmness and intrepidity, under every circumstance of danger, and every critical moment of action. They never flunned a decifive engagement from any other motive than that of prudence: nor were they wifer in council than brave in the field; though their final fuccess was more owing to judicious retreat, and renewed preparations for actions, than to dering impetuofity. The character given to the pretender, in 1745, and applied to general Washington in his familiar letters to general Mercer, may, with equal propriety, be applied both to king William and to himsels. They were the most cautious men in the world, not to be cowards; and the bravest, not to be rash. It may be added, that their fortitude, in the eye of true moral criticism, shone forth with greater fplendour, when veiled in the garb of caution, than when confessed to the eyes of all, and covered with duff and blood in the field of battle.

There is an active fortitude, and their is a passive fortitude: the latter not certainly less, but in some respects superior to the former. the conflict and agitation of danger, quickly to be over, or quickly to spend its utmost fury, the mind of the patriot and hero is awakened by an excitement of his spirits, and the attention and sympathy of all around him. In the calms of torpid filence, nay, and under the chilling blasts of reproach, whilst he still retains his unshaken purpose, the eclat of his virtue is less, but the proof of its constancy greater: greater in the inverse ratio of the magnitude of the difficulties and dangers to be overcome, to the indifference with which they are regarded. It is the firmnels of both the heroes that forms the subject of this brief parallel, after their retreats under innumerable disadvantages and hardships, that, in the whole of their character, is the just object of the greatest admiration.

the

There was also a striking coincidence, not only between the circumstances and situation and the public conduct of these great men, political and military, but also, in some points, between their natural tempers and dispositions: particularly in an habitual taciturnity and referve. A degree of taciturnity is, indeed, inseparable from a mind intent on great and complicated de-Minds deeply occupied in ngns. the contemplation of great ends, and the means necessary for their accomplishment, have as little leifure as inclination either to entertain others with their conversation, or to be entertained by them. Most great men, when profoundly engaged in important affairs, are remarkably filent. Buonaparte, though naturally affable, in the midst of those circumstances of unprecedented novelty, complication, and alarm, in which it has been his destiny to be placed, is, on the whole, referved and filent. Henry IV. of France, though naturally affable, humourous, and facetious, became thoughtful and filent, when he found himself involved in projects of great difficulty as well as importance.

It is not by a multiplicity of words and common-place compliments that men attain an ascendency over the minds of other men; but by the weight of their character and the foundness of their judgement, which readily discerns certain common interests and passions, that tend to unite men in common sympathies and common pursuits. It was a common and striking trait in the characters of both king William III. and general Washington, that they both possessed the happy art of reconciling and uniting various difcordant parties in the profecution of common objects.

But every parallel is foon terminated, by the wonderful diversity which characterizes every individual of the human race. Washington had no favourites, but was warm in his affections to his own family and near relatives: William was not a little addicted to favouritism; but cold and indifferent to the fincere attachment and devotion of his queen: a princess, by whose right he was raised to a throne, and a partner worthy any fovereign prince, for every accomplishment of mind and person. The calm, deliberate, and folid character of general Washington did not exclude a turn contrivance and invention. He was judicious, not dull; ingenious, not chimerical. In this respect, his talents and turn, like his virtues, were carried to the line beyond which they would have ceased to be talents and virtues, and no farther. He knew how to distinguish difficulties from impossibilities, and what was within the bounds of human power, in given situations, from the extravagancies of a heated and bold imagination. He was neither terrified by danger, nor feduced by repose, from embracing the proper moment for action. He was modest, without diffidence; sensible to the voice of fame, without vanity; independent and dignified, without pride. 208] pride. He was a friend to liberty, not licentiques: not to the abstractions of philosophers, but to those ideas of well-regulated freedom, which the ancestors of the Americans had carried with them from England, and confirmed by the revolution towards the end of the eighteen century. On those principles he fought and conquered; conquered—but not for himfelf. He was a Hannibal, as well as Fabius; a Cromwell, without his ambition; a Sylla, without his crimes.

As the children of men, in youth or the vigour of manhood, are more healthful and vigourous than those in the decline of life, so general Washington descended and formed, by the spirit of England, in the purest and most slourishing period of English freedom, possessed a juster and, higher spirit of liberty than what might, probably, have been bred by an emigration in the prefent times. When we reflect on the contest between monarchial power, on the one hand, and the spirit of infubordination, on the other, which, at the present moment, divide Europe, we shall find reason to congratulate mankind, that the example of a happy medium between both has been fet, and is likely to be more and more enforced, by the growing prosperity of America. In this view, general Washington appears in the light of another Noah; the pilot, who, failing in the middle, between the dangers of Sylla and Charybilis, guided the ark that faved the human race from ruin.

The Frenchagents, Adet, Fauchet, Genet, and Dupont, had been fent was ratified only by the prefident's out, to the American states, in the casting vote.

character of envoys; but, in reality, as firebrands of discord and sedition. The grand object of their mission was, that the French republic should acquire such an influence and afcendency in North America, as the already possessed in Venice, Genoa, and the Swiss cantons: to divide the North Americans into two great political parties, or rather governments; to play the nothern states, where the French interest preponderated, against the southern; to weaken, and so to obtain an influence and authority over the whole. As the patriotism, prudence, and firmness of general Washington had contributed to largely to inatch his country from the grasp of the British legislature, so now they contributed equally to fave it from a connection . and fubordination, still more to be dreaded, with the French republic.

The magnitude of the danger, from which general Washington, before his refignation of the prefidency, faved his country, will sufficiently appear from the mention of one circumstance, that Mr. John Adams, the vice-prefident of the congress, the intimate and confidential friend of general Washington, and, in every respect, worthy of so great an honour, was chosen his successor, by a majority of only three votes above the number that appeared for Mr. Jefferies, who was at the head of the French party: which passed on the 8th of February, 1797. It may also be observed, to the same end; that the treaty for an amicable and commercial intercourle between Great Britain and North America,

CHRONICLE.

CHRONICLE.

JANUARY.

AST night, the house n. of Caleb Harman, esq. ie county of Longford, was ced by a numerous party of nders, who demanded a furr of all the arms in the house; on Mr. Harman's refusing to ly with this demand, they dened to carry their purpose by t, and with some difficulty i open the doors. Mr. Harat the head of his domestics, vouring to repel the affailwas fired upon and received ontents of a blunderbus loadth flugs in his abdomen, and isequence of his wounds, died norning. Several of the docs were also severely woundind the defenders having effecfucceeded in obtaining all rms in the house, retreated in ph. Eleven out of the twelve ns who assassinated Mr. Harhave been taken, and are in ford gaol; in the number is erson who was wounded by Harman's pistol.

Leith. His royal highness the count d'Artois, with his suite, d here from on board his marging to anchor in the roads, his L. XXXVIII.

royal highness was faluted with 21 guns from Leith battery, and with the like number on his landing at Leith, where he was received from the boat by lord Adam Gordon and a part of his fuite, and conducted in his lordship's carriage to an apartment in his majesty's palace of Holyrood-house, fitted up in haste for his reception; and, as he entered the palace, his royal highness was saluted with 21 guns from Edinburgh Castle. The Windsor Foresters and Hopetoun Fencibles were in readiness to line the approach to the palace, but, his royal highness chusing to land in a private manner, and with as little ceremony as posfible, that was dispensed with. The noblemen in his royal highness's fuite followed in carriages provided for that purpole, and were conducted from the outer gate of the palace, by the commander in chief, to their apartments. His royal highness and suite, consisting of a number of French noblemen and gentlemen, dined with lord Adam Gordon.

At Carlton house, between 7th. nine and ten o'clock in the morning, the princess of Wales was delivered of a princess. The duke of Gloucester, the archbishop of Canterbury, the loss chancellor, the lord prefident of his majefiy's council, the duke of Leeds, the duke of Devonshire, the earl of Cholmondeley (lord chamberlain), and the earl of Jeriev (mafter of the horse to the prince of Wales), lord Thurlow, and the ladies of her royal highness's bedchamber, were present. Her roval highness and the young princess were in perfect health.

Between eight and nine 14th. o'clock this day, the powder mills belonging to Mr. Hill, at Hounflow, owing to the wheels of the mill not being properly Supplied with oil, took fire, and blew up with a dreadful explofion, which not only terrified the inhabitants of the place but alarmed the cities of London and Wettminster, and the houses of the people feveral miles round the metropolis experienced the effects of its powerful concussion; three men who were at work in the manufactory, have lost their lives, and the flames from the mill communicating to a punt in the mill river, in which were 30 barrels of gunpowder, fet fire to the whole, and blew up with a terrible explosion; the man who had the care of the wellel being thattered to pieces, and the boat being blown out of the Not a vettige of the mill water. isleft standing, and Hountlew heath is covered with bricks and tiles, and the mangled limbs of the unfor-The noutes in tunate fusierers. flountlow, Itleworth, and even Brentford, have suffered considerably; the Crown Inn at Flounflow, and the King's Load at Brentford, have not a whole pane of glass in the windows; and the inhabitants were fo terrified near the ipot, that they not only forfook their dwellings, but a number of women, with their children, through fear, appeared half naked in the threets, expecting every moment that their houses would fall and bury them in the ruins. The scattered limbs of the unfortunate victims, who for the most part have left large families to lament their lofs by this unforeseen event, were, by order of the magistrates, collected together and deposited in the church-yard. The loss of this valuable manufactory is estimated at near 20,000l. The shock was felt as far north of London as the extremities of Enfield parish, and South beyond Croydon. A fimilar difafter happened to the same concern about 20 years ago.

Vienna. The princess roy-16th. al of France, Maria Theresa, arrived here on the 9th, a little after fix o'clock in the evening, amidst the loudest acclamations. of crowds of people, who accompanied her carriage as far as the Burg, where his Imperial majefty had caused a residence to be prepared for her. Count Colloredo, cabinet minifier to the emperor, accompanied her to the place of her residence from Burkersdorff, whither he went to welcome her, in the name of his Imperial majesty, as foon as information of her arrival was received. Prince Stahremberg, the principal lord of the bedchamber, on the 10th, went to the refidence of the princess, and prefented to prince Gavre all the future household servants, &c. deftined for her ule.—The first who received the French princess royal of France in this capital, were the archdukes and archduchesses. The emperor and empress honoured her with a visit soon after her arrival, received her with open arms. r own place of residence the ess wept most bitterly. She nce paid a vifit to the archess Christine, who is indis-. A grand and brilliant courts expected to-morrow, which be the first day on which her rial majesty will make her z appearence after her lying-It is expected also that the ch princess royal will be introl, with proper ceremony to the er class of the nobility and foambassadors. Countess Chanormerly governess to thearchess Elizabeth, first consort of nperor, has been appointed to me dignity with the French ess royal. Prince Gavre is aped governor to her royal high-

The only article preserved E French princes, from the s which were put into her ige at Paris, is faid to be a parcel, which besides a small tity of linen, contained three ture pictures, and fome hair of ather, mother, and the prinllizabeth her aunt; also a pair rters knit by her late unfortumother, out of the threads of d piece of tapeftry which the

1 in her prison.

When the roval standard was flying at the Tower, being ueen's birth-day, a tricoloured lag, three yards wide and of h in proportion, was hoisted the rampart on a staff of seven ong, and continued hoisted for hours before it was discovered e garrison. On the discovery, major of the Tower, colonel h, went hindelf to firike it, 1 making into a wrong part, it peared before he reached the but was traced into the deputy chaplain's house, and found stripped from the staff, under his fon's bed, a young man of 15, at present a pupil in a public school.

Portsmouth. In conse-20th. quence of a dreadful gale of wind, a great number of thips at Spithead were this day obliged to cut their cables, and run for the harbour, feveral of which got foul of each other. Signals of diffress were feen flying on board many veilels, but the weather was fo extremely bad as to prevent any boats going to their affiftance. A man of war's boat was driven out of the harbour with the tide this afternoon, and overfet near South-Sea Beach; the whole of the crew got safe on shore except one man, who was unfortunately drowned. The tidewas many feet higher this day than has been known for upwards of 30 years; ieveral houses on the point having been washed down, and a number of people removed their goods up into the town; for if the wind had not abated, the tide would have been full as high in the morning, and many more houses consequently damaged.

Edinburgh. On the 21st. 24th. inft. his royal highness the duke d'Angouleme eldest son to Monsieur, arrived at the Abbey of Holyrood-house. His royal highness is to be accommodated in the apartments of the earl of Bredalbane there, until such time as the royal apartments can be put in proper repair to receive their royal highnesies; and his royal highness the duke d'Angouleme proposes to fee company for the prefent in the apartments of monfieur on Mondays and Thursdays at noon.

Edinburgh. The weather, 25th. for three days past, has been very tempestuous. On Saturday afternoon it blew a perfect hurricane from the S. W. In the new town, and other exposed situations, many persons were carried off their feet, and thrown down; several carriages were overturned, and in fome houses the windows were broken and forced in. The streets were strewed with chimney pans, by the falling of which feveral perfons were hurt, though we have not heard of any being dangerously fo. On Sunday morning the storm was equally violent. The gale was from a quarter that is feldoni dangerous on this coast; but, if it was equally violent on the West coast, the consequences are to be seared.

Glafgow. By a fudden inundation yesterday at Greenock and Port Glafgow, the tobacco-cellars at the latter place were laid under water from fix to nine inches on the floors, by which means a good deal of tobacco is injured, but to what amount we cannot lay. The loss on sugar at Greenock will be very great, probably not less than 30,000l. in iome of the cellars on the West Quay, the water was up from eighteen to twenty inches on the lower tier of fugar. The form was also severely felt here; a stack of chimnies was blown down in the High-fireet, and feveral trees in the neighbourhood have been torn up by the roots.

A telegraph was this day erected over the admiralty, which is to be the point of communication with all the different fea-ports in the kingdom. The nearest telegraph to London has hitherto been in St. George's Fields; and to such perfection has this ingenious and useful contrivance been already brought, that one day last week information was conveyed from Dover to London in the space The plan of only feven minutes. proposed to be adopted in respect to telegraphs is yet only carried into effect between London and Dover; but it is intended to extend all over the kingdom. The importance of this speedy communication must be evident to every one; and it has this advantage, that the information conveyed is known only to the person who sends, and to him who receives it. The intermediate posts have only to answer and convey the figuals.

Earl Cholmondeley has in-29th. formed the city remembrancer, that his royal highness, from being under the necessity of difmissing his establishment, is unable to receive their congratulatory compliments in a manner suitable to his rank and with that respect which is due to the city of ... London; and that the prince expresses much regret in not having it in his power to shew a properregard for the good wishes of the city of London towards himself and.

the princefs.

This morning about 10, Michael Blanch, a Spaniard, James Colley, an American, and Francis Cole, a Black, who were found guilty at the late admiralty sessions, of the wilful murder of William Little, the matter and commander of an American veilel, were brought out of Newgate, and placed in a cart, and conveyed to Execution Dock, where they were executed according. In the afternoon to their fentence. the three bodies were brought back to furgeons' hall, there to be diffected pursuant to the sentence of the the court of admiralty. Had it been a case of piracy, they would have been hung in chains.

DIED.—In Portugal, Dr. Loreira, author of the "Flora Cochinensis." This celebrated botanist devoted 30 years of close application to the composition of this Sir Joseph Banks invited him to this country, for the purpose of publishing it here; but advanced age prevented him from accepting the invitation. 20. At Lancaster, in an advanced period of life, Mr. Alexander Stevens, architect; who in the course of the last forty years, erected more stone bridges, and other buildings in water, than any man in these kingdoms. Among the many works of that kind may be mentioned the bridge over the Liffey at Dublin, and the locks and docks on the grand canal of Ire-The north of England and Scotland exhibits numberless works of his execution. The aqueduct over the river Lune, at Lancaster, is one of the greatest undertakings he was ever concerned in; and, had he lived a few months longer, he would have had the fatisfaction of feeing it completed.

FEBRUARY.

This night, after eleven o'clock, as the royal family were returning from Drury-lane theatre, when the carriages had reached the end of John-street, Pall Mall, a stone was flung with fuch force as to break one of the glass pannels in the coach, in which were their majesties and the lady in waiting; which, after striking the queen on the cheek, fell into lady Harrington's lap. position on the above business was taken at the duke of Portland's office, before the fecretary of state and two of the magistrates from Bow-street; when some of the footmen attending on the royal family were examined. A reward of 1000l. is offered for the discovery of the offenders.

This day came on in the 18th. court of king's bench, the cause of Jestreys versus Mr. Walker and others, commissioners appointed for liquidating the prince of Wales's debts, for the sum of 54,6851. for jewels furnished by the plaintiff for his royal highness. Messrs. Sharp, Elias, Levi, and Dugden, eminent diamond-merchants, were called on the part of the plaintiff, who proved the value of the articles to be, unfet, 50.9971. 10s.; while Messrs. Crisp, Duval, and Francillon, on the part of the defendants, gave it as their opinion, that, having examined the jewels, they were not worth more than 43,800l. exclufive of the fetting of a miniature picture of her highness. The jury, after a quarter of an hour's confideration, found a verdict for the plaintiff, 50,997l. 10s

Richard England was put to the bar at the old Bailey, charged with the wilful murder of Mr. Rowlls, brewer, of Kingston, in a duel at Cranford-bridge, June 18, 1794. Lord Derby, the first witness, gave in evidence, that ho was prefent at Alcot races; when in the stand upon the race-course he heard Mr. England cautioning the gentleman present not to bet with the deceased, as he neither paid what he loft or what he borwhich Mr. Rowlls rowed; on B3

went

went up to him, called him rafcal or scoundrel, and offered to strike him; when England bid him stand off, or he would be obliged to knock him down, saying at the same time, "We have interrupted the company sufficiently here, and if you have any thing further to say to me, you know where I am to be found." A farther altercation ensued; but his lordship, being at the other end of the stand, did not distinctly hear it, and then the parties retired.

Lord Dartry now lord Cremorne, and his lady, with a gentleman, were at the inn at the time the duel was fought: they went into the garden, and endeavoured to prevent the duel; there were feveral other persons collected in the garden. Mr. Rowlls defired his lord-Thip and others not to interfere; and on a second attempt of his lordthip to make peace, Mr. Rowlls faid, if they did not retire, he must, though reluctantly, call them impertinent. Mr. England, at the same time, stepped forward, and took off his hat: he faid, "gentlemen, I have been cruelly treated, I have been injured in my honour and character; let there be reparation made, and I am ready to have done this moment." Lady Dartry retired, his lordship stood in the bower of the garden, until he faw Mr. Rowlls fail. One or two witneffes were called, who proved nothing material. A paper containing the pritoner's defence being read, the earl of Derby, marquis of Hertford, Mr. Whitebread, jun. col. Bishopp, and other gentlemen, were called to his character. They all spoke of him as a man of decent gentlemanly deportment, who, in-Head of seeking quarrels, was studious to avoid them. He had been friendly to Englithmen whilst abroad, and had rendered fome fervices to the military at the fiege of Newport. Mr. justice Rooke summed up the evidence, after which the jury retired for about three quarters of an hour, when they returned a verdict, guilty of man-The prisoner having ilaughter. fled from the laws of his country for twelve years, the court was difpoied to they no lenity. He was therefore fentenced to pay a fine of one thilling, and to be imprifoned in Newgate twelve months.

In the king's bench, came on the trial of Kyd Wake, indicted for a mildemeanour in hisling and hooting the king as his majesty was going to the parliament-house, on the first day of the present sessions, and likewise crying, " down with George, war," &c. Mr. Stockdale, the bookfeller, and Mr. Walford, the linen draper, who acked as conftables on the day, were examined, and fully proved the facts charged in the indictment; upon which the jury without hefitation, found a verdict, guilty. A great number of persons attended on the part of the prisoner; but as they could only speak to his general character, and not to the case in point, Mr. Erikine, the prifoner's counfel, declined calling upon them, referving their testimony to be offered in mitigation of punishment, on the first day of next term, when the prisoner will be brought up to the court of king's bench to receive judgment.

gone to bed, a very alarming fire broke out in the habitable part of Wreisle Castle, which increased

increased with such rapidity that before the engines could brought from Howden (a distance of four miles) the entire building was on fire; by which the whole, with the leasen covering, was entirely confumed, except one chamber, with the outer and fome parts of the inner walls. It is supposed to have been occasioned by a chimney taking fire, from which no danger was apprehended when the family went to reft. The fouth fide, or principal part of the quadrangle, being the only part left undemolithed in 1600, contained the diningroom, drawing-room, and chapel, used as the parish-church ever since the other was ruined in the civil wars. In the two principal chambers were some beautiful flair-cases of fingular contrivance, containing double flights of flairs, winding round each other, after the defigns of Palladio.

The following melancholy 24th. occurrence took place. the ferry boat was croffing the river from Common-stattle quay to Old Lynn, at feven in the evening, with about 30 pertons on board, it ran foul of the cable of a barge, and was unfortunately overset, by which accident it is feared that upwards of 20 persons have lost their lives; four more must inevirably have shared the same fate, but for the active and vigorous exertions of one of the pattengers (John Price, a failor), who at the imminent hazard of his life, and with that humanity and intrepidity which are the characteristics of an English sailor, rescued four fellow-creatures from death; he had feized a fifth (a woman), but the rapidity of the tide tore her from him, and he himself had nearly perished in the attempt to save her life. Eight only of the bodies have yet been found. It is just 166 years since a similar accident happened at the same ferry, when 18 persons were unfortunately drowned.

DIED. 7th.—At his lodgings in Bath, John Sibthorp, M. D. F. R. S. and regius professor of Botany in the university of Oxford. He was indefatigable in his refearches for new and rare plants, and travelled twice into Turkey and Greece to collect them. The fatigues he underwent in his last tour entirely deftroyed his confiitution, and he has fallen a victim to his favourite fludy. He took the degree of M. A. June 28, 1780,' of B. M. Dec. 8, 1733. (about which time his father refigned to him the profesforship), and of D. M. Jan. 20, 1784. Some years ago the univerfity appointed him a travelling fellow on Dr. Radcliff's foundation, and in that capacity he vifited a great part of the Eu+ ropean continent. At Gottingen his abilities were held in fuch eftimation, that he was henoured with a degree in physic by the universi-In 1794 he published a Flora Oxonienfis, and has left an estate of 3001, per annum to the univerfity, in truft, to defray the expences attending the publication of a Flora Greeca, taken from specimens in his ewn valuable collecti-After that work is finished, the fum of 2001, per annum is to be added to the falary of the Sherardian professor, on condition that he reads lectures on botany in eyery term. His excellent collection of plants and books he has bequeathed to the botanical library of the university,

B4

Macpherion, etq. M. P. for Camelford. Of this celebrated author of Oslian some anecdotes shall be given in a subsequent department of this volume.

MARCH.

Mr. B. D. Cock, driving a 4th. curricle round Camden-place near Bath, the horses, in consequence of being too much curbed, became restive, and one of them, having broken the bar, suddenly dashed over a precipice upwards of 100 seet deep, by which the gentleman was literally dashed to pieces, the curricle destroyed, and the horses killed on the spot.

In the court of exchequer, in Dublin, a jury of merchants, on the 20th of February last gave lord Westmeath a verdict of 10,000l. damages, against Mr. Bradshaw, son of fir Henry Cavendish (who took the name of Bradshaw for a large estate), for crim con. with lady Westmeath.—Lady Westmeath was a Miss Jesseys. She was married to lord Westmeath in 1784, and has two children by his lordship.

Derby. What particularly noth, engaged the attention of the public at our affizes was a charge against a woman of the name of Ann Hoon, aged 24, for the wilful murder of her infant child, about 14 months old. The circumstances of this murder were as follows: On Friday last, this poor creature, who is the wife of a labouring man, was about to heat her oven, and, being thort of wood, had broken down a rail or two from the fencing round the plantation of a gentleman in the neighbourhood: some of her neighbours threatened her with a profecution, and told her the would be transported for it. This much alarmed her mind; and the idea of being separated from her child, of whom the had always appeared remarkably fond, fo wrought on her imagination, that she formed the horrible defign of putting it to death, in order that, by furrendering herfelf into the hands of justice, she might be executed for the murder, and fo be for ever re-united in heaven to that babe whom she had loved more than life. As foon, therefore, as her hutband was gone out to his labour, the proceeded to put this diabolical defign into execution: the filled a large tub with water, when the babe, smiling in its mother's face, difarmed her for the moment, and the found herfelf unable to commit the horrid fact. She then lulled the babe to fleep at her breaft, and, wrapping a cloth round it, plunged it into the tub, and held it under water till life became extinct; then took it out of the tub, and laid it on the bed, and, taking her hat and cloak, locked her street-door, and left her key at a neighbour's for her husband, when he should return from his labour. She then proceeded to walk eight or nine miles to a magistrate, and, requesting admission to him, told him the whole story, concluding with an earnest defire immediately to be executed. She was tried this morning; and, many strong instances of insanity for some years patt appearing, the Jury found her not guilty.

At Stafford atlizes, a remarkable cause was tried, in which Mrs. Docksey, sister and heir at law of the late Peter Garrick, esq. of Lichfield, (brother to the celebrated David Garrick) was plaintiff, and Mr. Panting, furgeon of that town, defendant. The defendant claimed all the real and personal property of the deceased, (nearly 30,000l.) under deeds of conveyance executed by Mr. Garrick at the advanced age of 85, to the total difinherison of all his relations and their families, and in derogation of many wills made in their favour, the last dated in 1791. Mr. Ertkine led the cause for the plaintiff; and after a most eloquent and impassioned opening of the case, which lasted upwards of two hours, and the examination of feveral witnesses, the cause was relinquished on the part of the defendant.

the

Birmingham. Binns and 11th. Jones, two delegates from the London correspondent society, regardless of the laws and peace of the country, delivered (the one at the Swan in Swallow-street, and the other at the Bell public-house, in Suffolk-street in this town) their inflammatory lectures; information of which being given to William Hicks, elq. one of our magistrates, he immediately repaired, with the peace officers, to the illegal affemblies. The meeting at the Swan had broken up; but at the Bell they found Jones in a room haranguing about 70 people. foon as he saw the magistrate, he was filent; but Mr. Hicks being made acquainted, by feveral who were prefent, of the feditious language he had held, immediately ordered the proclamation against disorderly meetings to be read, and the people in a few minutes difpersed. Jones was admonished by the magistrate, who warned him to beware of his conduct in future, as a strict watch should be kept over him and all his associates.

Were executed opposite Newgate, purfuant to their respective sentences, Tho. Kemp, the letter-carrier, Joseph Francis Bodkin for robbing Mr. Ardesoif, and William Fogden for horse-stearling.

This evening about fix o'clock, a difagreeable accident happened in Greek-street, the corner of Compton-street. Two men intoxicated to a great degree, assaulted every person they met; and one of them, who had a hammer in his hand, struck a passenger on the head with it, near the eye, which was beat in by the blow. They were at length secured, and carried to the office in Marlborough-street, whence they were removed to Tothill-sields bridewell.

Mr. Halhed has thought proper to dispose of all his oriental manuscripts, which he acquired with great labour and expence. These manuscripts the British museum has very laudably purchased.

Vienna. On the presentation of the princes royal of France, a particular circle had been formed for the solemnity, and the court was as numerous as it was brilliant. The empress presented the princess to the ambassadors and their ladies, and to certain ladies of the first rank. After which the other ministers and nobility were, in their turn, presented to her royal highness, by the grand mistress of her Imperial majesty's court, by the grand treasurer of the court, count Dietrichstein, and by prince

Gavres,

10] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

Gavres, governor of the princes's court. The princess of France exceeded the general expectation on this occasion. Her beauty, her fenfibility, her grace, her affability, and easy deportment, excited at once surprize and admiration. She faid the most flattering things to field marthals Lafey, Clarfait, Colloredo, and Pelegrini, and to count Trautmanfdorff. The French emigrants were presented to her royal highress by the marquis de Gallo, the Neapolitan ambailador. They were fix in number: the duke de Guiche, captain of the guards to Louis XVI. who diftinguished himself on the 5th of October, 1780; the marquis de Riviere, the Blondel of his mafter; count de Gourci; count de Merci; the marquis de la Vaupaliere, and M. D'Aichepar. Amongst the other French and foreigners, who were acknowledged by the princess, were the duke of Richclieu, count de Fersen, the chevalier Mayer, so well known for his literary productions; the bithop of Nanci, alike celebrated for his virtues and his talents; the duchefs de Guiche, who shed tears; the counters de Vauban, and the counters d'Oudenarde. The presence of these faithful and unfortunate nobles contributed not a little to render the fcene peculiarly interesting.

Raynal. He walked to Paris a week before his death; got a cold, which was followed by a catarrh, and kept his bed fone days. On the day of his decease he got up, shaved and dressed himself. At fix in the evening he went to bed; heard a news-paper read, and made some critical observations upon the operations announced in the paper.

At ten o'clock he died. The justice of the peace of the fection des champs Elyfées did not chuse to bury him until he had asked the Government whether it was intend. ed to pay him any funeral honours. -- He was employed, just before his death, upon a new edition of his philosophical history, and had prefented an address to the directory to obtain from the agentsof the republic in foreign countries the documents, of which he flood in need, relative to the commerce of different nations, to the East India companies, and fome other objects of his work. The directory immediately complied with his request, and sent the necessary orders to the French ambaffadors in Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Spain, and Italy. It is known that the abbé had among his manuscripts, a history of the revocation of the edict of Nantes, in four volumes; but it is rumoured that, under the reign of Robespierre, he burnt part of his papers.

17. At the Hague, Peter Paulus, prefident of the first national convention there, and one of the principal authors of the revolution in Holland. In him his country lotes one of its most zealous defenders, the patriotic party their chief support, the convention its head, and marine its ablest director. He has fallen a facrifice to his exerertions as prefident. His death has produced the fame fenfations at the Hague as the death of Mirabeau did at Paris. The greatest honours have been paid to the firft prefident of the Batavian convention; and a decree of that affembly declares that he never ceased to deferve well of his country; which decree, written on vellum, the convention convention has refolved to prefent to his widow; and to give her, at the fame time, the national fearf with which he was decorated at the opening of the convention.

At his house in Norton-street, fir William Chambers, knight of the polar star, surveyor-general of his majesty's board of works, treasurer of the royal academy, and sellow of the royal and antiquarian societies. A surther account of this architect shall be given under the head of characters.

APRIL.

The intimation of the first 2d. performance of a piece afcribed to the pen of Shakspeare produced this night the effect which might naturally have been expected in a metropolis filled with his admirers. At four c'clock the doors of the theatre were befreged; and, a few minutes after they were opened, the pit was crowded folely with gentlemen. Before fix not a place was to be found in the boxes, and the passages were filled. The play of Vortigern was announced for representation as the production of our immortal bard, but the tale of its long concealment and happy recovery was not heard without fuspicion; which his votaries wished to heighten into immediate incredulity. The town, however, retained its candour; and, we believe, the predominant fentiment in the audience, on this evening, was a with to welcome with rapture the recovered offspring of their beloved Shakfpeare. A play was, therefore, performed, founded in some degree on the historical account of the ambition of Vortigern, the usurper of Pritain; his murder of Constantins; his alliance with the Saxons; and his passion for Rowena, the daughter of the Saxon chief. The events are warped into a resemblance to those of Macbeth, Richard III. &c. with the inadvertency of a copyist, who was more intent on imitating the language than the genius of Shakspeare. The characters are such as would not have been drawn by that attonishing writer in the exercise of his usual faculties. He is remarkable in feldom borrowing from himself. The play is destitute of all those gigantic metaphors, and bold allufions, which, approaching the limits of possibility, attonish and alarm our imaginations into a fympathy with his fublime concep-The language, though evidently an imitation, is infinitely beneath the original, which possesfes an aptitude, a facility, and harmony, which has never been furpassed. The audience betraved symptoms of impatience early in the representation; but, finding its tafte infulted by bloated terms, which heightened the general infipidity, its reason puzzled by difcordant images, falle ornaments, and abortive efforts to elevate and attonith; pronounced its sentence of condemnation, at the conclusion of the play; and we have no doubt that Vortigern, if it be published, will rank in character, though not in merit, with the perverted and furpring labours of the unfortunate Chatterton.

This most gross and impudent imposition had, however, its supporters, as the following attestation, drawn up by the rev. Dr. Parr, shews.

We whose names are hereunto subscribed, subscribed, here in the presence, and by the favour of Mr. Ireland, have inspected the Shakspeare papers, and are convinced of their authenticity.

Samuel Parr, James Boswell, John Twedale, LAUDERDALE, Thomas Burgels, Rev. J. Scott, bart. LINNAIRD, John Byng, J. Pinkerton, James Bindley, Thomas Blunt, H. J. Pye, Herbert Croft, Somerset, Rev. N. Thorn-I. Heard, garter bury, king of arms, John Hewlett, Matthew Wyatt, E. Webb, E. Valpy, J. F. Newton.

To the above an attestation is also subjoined as to the authenticity of the autographs and fac-similies of the deeds with twelve signatures.

The new charter of Northampton, this day brought from London by the mayor, was met at the foot of the bridge by the corporation with great ceremony, and conducted to the Guildhall amidit the congratulations of the townfmen on the re-establishment of their ancient privileges, and the fecurity and protection afforded to the poor.

The trial of admiral Cornders in not proceeding to the West Indies pursuant to the instructions of the admiralty board, commenced on board the Orion at Portsmouth, at eight o'clock in the morning. The charges were three in number. The subtance of them is as follows: 1st, That admiral Cornwallis, after having sailed from England for the West Indies, and proceeded a considerable way on his voyage, did return contrary to the orders he had received. 2dly, That not having a fufficient regard to. the importance of the fituation of a commander in chief, he omitted to shift his flag on board of fome other thip after the Royal Sovereign had been disabled, in order to proceed, as he ought to have done, to the place of his destination; but that, instead of doing fo, he gave his instructions and the command of the convoy to another of-And. 3dly, That after his return he disobeyed another order of the board of admiralty, by not hoisting his flag on board the Astrea frigate, and proceeding to the West Indies, as he had been ordered by their lordships.

The evidence having been gone through, the trial closed at one o'clock, when the court pronounced the following fentence:

"The court having heard the evidence in support of the charges exhibited against the honourable William Cornwallis, vice-admiral of the red; and having heard his desence, and the evidence in his behalf, and having maturely weighed and considered the same, were of opinion, first charges, of his returning without leave, after having been ordered to proceed to Barbadoes, and of his disobeying the orders he had received, mitconduct was imputable to him, for not having shifted his slag on board the Mars or Minotaur, and proceeded in either of them to the West Indies; but, in consideration of other circumstances, the court acquitted him of any disobedience in his conduct on that occasion.

"With respect to the third charge, of his having, after his return, disobeyed the orders of the board board of admiralty, in not going out to the West Indies in the Astrea frigate, the court were of opinion that the charge was not proved, and therefore acquitted admiral Cornwallis upon that charge."

Early this morning, the 10th. wife of Mr. Sawyer, a boatbuilder, near the Bishop's-walk, Lambeth, was discovered in her bed-room, with her brains dashed out, and stabbed in a most shocking manner. This horrid deed is supposed to have been accomplished by fome diabolical villains, who entered the back part of the house leading to the river, and, meeting with refifiance to their schemes of plunder, perpetrated the hellith deed. The murderers eleaped without creating the least alarm. It is a circumtiance particularly remarkable, that, although the huiband of the murdered woman was in the house the whole time, he declares he neither heard nor faw any thing of the transaction.

This morning a little before 12, three malefactors were executed at Kenningtoncommon: a brush-maker, for a riot in St. George's fields, a young man for sheep-stealing, and a man for house-breaking.

Letters from Smyrna unfortunately advise us of the conflagration of 4000 warehouses, entirely belonging to Ottoman merchants, the value of which is estimated at four millions of piastres.

Advice was received at the admiralty, brought by lieut. Crifpe, of the Telemachus cutter, of the capture of the enterprifing fir Sidney Smith, commander of his majefty's ship Diamond, on the coast of France. Having, on the 18th instant, boarded and taken a lugger privateer, belonging to the enemy, in Havre-de-Grace harbour, by the boats of his squadron, then on a reconnoitring expedition, and the tide making strong into the harbour, she was driven. above the French forts, who, the next morning, the 19th, discovering, at break of day, the lugger in tow by a string of English boats, immediately made the figual of alarm. which collected together feveral gun-boats, and other armed veifels, that attacked the lugger and British boats; when, after an obstinate relifiance of two hours, fir Sidney had the mortification of being obliged to furrender himfelf prisoner of war, with about sixteen of his people, and three officers with him in the lugger. The Diamond frigate is fafe, but could afford her commander no affitiance, there not being a breath of wind during the whole of this unfortunate transaction: we are happy to add, that only four British seamen were killed, and one officer and fix feamen flightly wounded. feamen were immediately thrown into prison on their landing; and fir Sidney underwent a long examination before the French commandant, after which he was ordered to be conveyed, under a strong escort, to Paris. lowing were among!t the officers captured with fir Sidney Smith: Meilrs. W. Moory, R. Kenyon, and R. Barrow: one of these was When the officers on wounded. board the Diamond heard of the disaster which had befallen their gallant commander, they fent a flag of truce into Havre, to enquire whether he was wounded, and entreating that he might be treated The governor rewith kindness. turned was well, and that he should be treated with the utmost humanity and attention. The French, it appears, warped out another lugger of superior force against that captured by sir Sidney Smith in Havie-de-Grace harbour, with which they engaged him, for a considerable time, with so much heavier metal, that rendered all his resistance inessectual, and therefore compelled him to strike.

14] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

Two of the officers belong-14th. ing to Bow-fireet arrived in town from Liverpool with Henry Weston, who is charged with committing divers forgerics on the bank of England to the amount of 17000l. He had got to Liverpool, and fent his luggage on board the Hector, bound for St. Vincent's in the West Indies, which ship had got down to a place called the Gut, about feven miles below Liverpool, and was to have failed the next morning. The officers found him in bed at Bates's hotel, with a brace of leaded pittols by his fide. their road to town, Weston found means to conceal a cafe-knife in his pantaloons, and on changing chaises at the King's-Head, Hounflow, he requested to go to the privy, where he cut his own throat, but missing one of the arteries, did not effect his purpose.

This night the countinghouse of Mr. Mingay, of Smithsield (who in the interim was speaking to a friend in the back room on the same floor) was broke open, and a bag of gold, containing 1200 guineas, which had been placed in readiness to send to his banker's in the morning, was taken clear off.

In consequence of a pub-30th lication addressed by lord Malden to the inhabitants of the borough of Leominster, the duke of Norfolk, accompanied by capt. Wombwell, of the first West York regiment of militia, and lord Malden, accompanied by capt. Taylor, aid de camp to his royal highness the dake of York, met on Saturday evening in a field beyond Padding-The parties having taken their ground, and the word being given by one of the leconds, they fired without effect. The seconds then thought proper to offer their interterence, and, in confequence of a conversation which passed while the parties were on the ground, a reconciliation was effected.

In an act now before the house of commons, for the further sup-. port and maintenance of curates within the church of England, the preamble recites the act of the 12th of queen Ann, by which every rector or vicar is enjoined to pay to each curate a fum not exceeding 50 l. and not less than 20 l. a year. It flates, that this allowance is now become infufficient for the maintenance of a curate. The bill therefore enacts, that the bishop or ordinary thall have power to allow the curate a fum not exceeding feventy-five pounds a year, with the use of the rectory or vicaragehouse, where the rector does not refide four months in the year, or 151, in lieu thercof.

DIED—19th, In Doctors Comemons, George Harris, D. C. L. for of Dr. John Harris, bishop of Landaff, chancellor of the dioceses of Durham, Hereford, and Landaff, and commissary of Essex, Herts, and Surrey. He has left a large fortune, which he has chiefly bequeathed to public charities: 10,000l. to the Westminster Lying-in hospital, donations equally liberal to several others, and the residue (supposed to be 40,000l.) to St. George's hospital.

and.

At his house in Staffordrow, Pimlico, aged 89, Richard Yates, esq. the celebrated comedian; his reputation in the parts of old and grotesque characters especially, was eminently great. He was remarkable for pure and chaste acting up to the words of his author with a ferupulous attention; the more remarkable, as performers of this eaft of acting frequently introduce their own humour, with what may be called the licentia histrionica of the drama. He excelled alto in teaching or making an actor, in a higher degree, perhaps, than any one of his time. He was married, first, to a woman who was rich; fecondly, to mis Anna Maria Graham, who had been introduced to his tuition by Mr Garrick, and with him the first came on the stage at Birmingham. Mr. Yates died fuddenly. He had been very well, as usual, for some time, and had breakfasted heartily. Having ordered eels for dinner, when, unfortunately, they could not be had, his warm and hatty temper could ill bear the difappointment; and from anger worked himself up to rage. housekeeper, zealous to please him, went out a long way, and brought fome; ere the returned, exhautted with fatigue of spirits, he had Jeaned his head upon the table, and the found him dead.

MAY.

was remarkably tremendous in the western part of Sussex. At Pulborough a barn was set on fire by the lightning, and entirely consumed. Luckily it contained only seven quarters of oats. In the neighbourhood of the above place, the peas in the fields were considerably injured by a heavy fall of hail, which accompanied the thunder.

7th. dreadful accident happened a few days fince to Mr. J. Robinson, horse-breaker, in Peterborough: having a young colt in training, the animal began on a sudden to plunge, by which means the rider was thrown from his seat with such violence, as to separate the ribs from the back-bone. The unfortunate man is attended by an eminent surgeon, and there are hopes of his recovery.

A few days ago, as a groom was combing a race-horse in the neighbourhood of Beverley, in Yorkthire, the animal became so irritated as to catch hold of the man's side with his teeth, and tear away the slesh in so shocking a manner, as to render his bowels and entrails visible. The poor fellow's recovery is much despaired of.

On Saturday the sheriffs of 5th. London and Middlesex appeared in the Exchequer chamber, to render into court their estreats, levies, captions, &c. and to answer an officer called the opposer, for the crown. Several of the sheriffs officers, no doubt, being engaged about their country houses and their carriages, had forgotten to make any returns, in consequence of which the sheriffs were ordered to attend in person next term, for the purpose of being examined upon interrogatories by the officer before the barons. This is a circumstance to which nothing similar has happened for a great many years.

An important cause came on to be tried in the common pleas, in confequence of an iffue directed from the court of chancery on the question of fact, whether the late earl of Orford devited by his last will any lands and effects to the earl of Cholmondeley. The cafe is briefly this.—On the 25th of November, 1752, the carl of Orford made a will, in which he bequeathed his principal estates, after the demife of his immediate heir, the prefent earl of Orford, to the carl of Cholmondeley, whose grandfather had married the daughter of his ancestor, sir Robert Walpole, the first earl of Orford. In 1756, the earl of Orford made a fecond will, in which he changed the order of fuccession, and gave a preference over the earl of Cholmondeley to lord Walpole, who is descended in a direct line from the fecond brother of the first earl of Orford.—This, of course, annihilated the first will; and, had nothing farther occurred, no question could have arisen on the subject. But, in 1776, twenty years after the fecond will was made, the earl of Orford figured a codicil, the purport of which was to make various provisions which had been omitted in his wills, and declared this codicil to be a codicil to his last will, figned on the 25th day of November, 1752. On the part of the plaintiff, it was contended that this codicil, which was duly figned and attested, was a revival and setting up of the will to which it referred;

and that, of course, that will retained the same force and effect, as if the second will had never. been made. On the part of the defendant, it was maintained, in the first place, that the codicil was destitute of those forms, expressly required by the statute of wills, which could alone give it the effect of reviving a first will in preference to a fecond, where a real estate was devised; and, secondly, that it was the intention of the testator to annex the codicil to the fecond, and not to the first will. To establish these points, it was proposed to adduce parol evidence; but the court interfered; and were unanimous in their opinion, that the cttablished law of the land tobade the admission of parol evidence to contradict a written and perfect instrument, such as the will and codicil together appeared to be; that the word last, on which the counsel for the defendant had laid fo much stress, was an expression which had no determinate mean-. ing until the death of the testator, when it operated to explain the intended lath act of his life; that neither the will of 1751, nor the will of 1756, was, in fact, a will until the testator was dead; that an alteration of the date of the codicil would be making a new disposition. for the dead, which no court upon earth was entitled to do; the only power vested in a court, on the subject of wills, being that of explaining the intention of the deceased, which, in this case, was perfectly clear; that wills ought only to be confidered as ambulatory instruments, subject to the pleasure of the owner, and to be used by him as his judgment or caprice might direct; and that the will of made his last act by the codicil of 1756. The jury, agreeing with the court, found a verdict for the plaintist; in consequence of which, the earl of Cholmondeley will succeed, at the death of the present earl of Orford, to an estate of the annual value of 10,000l. exclusive of the magnificent seat at Houghton, which is supposed to have cost upwards of 200,000l. and some other property.

Kyd Wake, who was convicted at the fittings after last Hilary term of having, on the first day of the present sessions of parliament, infulted his majefy in his passage to and from parliament, by histing, and using several indecent expresfions, such as, " No George -no war," received the judgment of the court; viz. " That he be imprifoned, and kept to hard labour in Gloucester gaol, during the term of five years: that, during the first three months of his imprisonment, he do stand for one hour, between the hours of eleven and two, in the pillory, in one of the public streets of Gloucester, on a market-day; and that, at the expiration of his imprisonment, he do find security for 1000 l. for his good behaviour for 10 years."

Crossfield, Le Maitre, 11th. Higgins, and Smith, were placed at the bar of the Old Bailey, charged with a conspiracy to affasfinate the King. Crossfield pleaded generally Not Guilty.—Le Maitre said, he had good objections to make to the indictment, but, relying on his innocence, would not make them; he therefore pleaded Not Guilty; as did George Higgins and John Smith. Some consultation was then held at the bar, when Vol. XXXVIII.

Le Maitre, Higgins and Smith, were remanded, and Crossfield was The attorneyput on his trial. general addressed the jury, and having concifely flated the law, submitted to them the following account of facts in the case:—Some time fince a man of the name of Upton, before the highest magistrates of the country, his majesty's privy-council, accused himself and several others, directly, with the defign of assassing his majesty. Among the persons so accused was the prisoner at the bar, who thought proper not to abide the justice of his country, but to fly from it. The prisoner at the bar, in company with Upton and another, went to a brass founder's, where they endeavoured to procure a brass cylinder, extremely smooth in the internal surface, of the length of three feet, and with a bore of fiveeighths of an inch. From thence they went to another brass-founder's, on Snow-hill, where they endeavoured to procure the same article; and upon the man's wishing to know for what purpole it was intended, he was answered, that it was a fecret. A third brassfounder was also visited upon the same errand by the prisoner and Upton; and from thence they went to one Hill's, who was a turner, and lived in Bartholomew-close, for the purpose of his turning them models of the instrument they wished to make. In answer to his enquiry for what purpole it was destined, he was told, for an electrical machine. From another witness, of the name of Cuthbert, the jury would hear, that they examined an air-gun. There were also draughts of the instruments, which would be submitted to their inspection, und they would perceive that the rrow was of a peculiar conditioncan. It had believe or barby, which spon meeting any bard flibtlauce iapidd in the head of the arrow. and afterwards opened again, it as to prevent its being withdrawn while the lit had entered the defici and towards the point there was a field has the emitting any limited which might be placed in a cavity prepared for helding of it. The confilleration of one of these draughts mucht be important in the coule. hostife the dimentions marked on not be margin were the land-writing er the probuct. When the infora ri n'ef Upton was received beove the privy council, as 1 · had refereinformed them, the put in r at the bar abfoomded, and they should be able to trace him to official afterwards he returned to Landon; then went to P rain outh, where he entered in board a veil it bound for the Southern whaletallery, as furgion. The name of to a veiled was the Pomona; and, alorthy after he came on bund, they falled from Pertamental to Funcith, during which that his behavlour wis la every respect becoming and drough. When he was et has, however, he told them who he was, and avowed his having been concerned in a plot to kill the king, by an air-gun; and faid, that it government knew he was on board that flip, they would fend a frigate after her, to bring her back it to happ and, that two days after they were at tea, they were captured by a linear corverse, La Vengeance; and he expressed the utmode fatisfier ion at the thoughts er wing to branen; feeling himwill to che fafor there, than while amongh an Luglith crew. They were put an board another flip, the Elizabeth, and afterwards again transferred at Breit to another. During tals time he rather acted as a superintendant of the prisoners than as one himielf. He had frequents, raverlations with the French communities, and made feveral declarations as to bis former and future lut-niline of killing the king. It fermal then his intention to remala there or go to Holland: but upon the arrival of a cartel thip. Le came home under the name of H. W. Jon, and described hiandle as one of the crew of the Hipe, and rit of the Poment as he really was. Upon his patinge hone, he or deavoured to perfuade the witheries not to notice when they got home what puffed at Breft, nor the circumitances of the change They were of thip and name. langed at Fewey in Cornwall, and upon these men giving information to the magnificates of what had pailed, he was inflantly apprehended. In coming to town, he endeav tured to perfuade the officers to let him eleape, and told them they almid test expect above 5s. for their job, but he could reward them much more liberally. One asked, if they consented, what they could do with the post-boy? He antwored, the bay might eatily be fecured av one of the pitiols which the officer carried. Having thus gone through the circumtiances of the case, the attorney general obferred, there were two points for the confideration of the jury. The firm, whether the prifoner was a party to the fabrication of this weapon; and feemaly, whether it was defigned for the purpose charged in the indictment.

He then proceeded to call evidence to substantiate the case.

The evidence for the crown being closed; Mr. Adam, counsel for the prisoner, said, he was afraid his case would take up a great length of time; he therefore submitted to the court, whether they would adjourn, or whether they wished him then to proceed.

After some consultation between the judges and the jury, the court adjourned at eleven o'clock at night to the next day.

The trial proceeded; when 12th. the priloner's counfel addressed the jury in his descuce. They relied chiefly on the equivocations. of the witnesses, on the prisoner's character; and that Upton, in his information, was actuated by motives of revenge, for having been disgraced in one of their clubs.

The attorney general replied in a very able manner; and the learned judge fummed up with candour and accuracy.

The jury, after retiring about two hours, brought in a verdict of Not Guilty.

Henry Weston, the un-13th. fortunate young man who forged the name of general Tonyn, and thereby got potsession of 5000l. stock, was tried at the Old Bailey, and capitally convicted. He calmly addressed the court after conviction, acknowledging the justice of his fentence, and hoping all young men would avail themselves of his and avoid the crime example, (gaming) which had brought him this fine piece, rescued by accident into fuch a miserable situation.

ley this morning at eight o'clock, pounds have already been offered before Mr. Justice Grose, and lasted for it and resused. till half past seven in the evening, when he was found guilty of being concerned in the forgery of the late Mr. Lewis's will.

An action was brought in the court of King's Bench, by lord Valentia against Mr. Gawler, for crim. con. with lady Valentia. The damages were laid at Mr. Erskine, with his usual ability, stated the case, and the criminal conversation was clearly proved from the evidence of a maid fervant, lady Lucy Maxwell (his lordship's fister), and others. The defence fet up was, that lord Valentia not only winked at, but in fome measure promoted the incontinency of his wife. delivered Kenyon an excellent charge to the jury, and they brought in a verdict of 2000l. damages.

On the morning of Friday the 13th of this month, the Peak hills in Derbyshire were covered with fnow near four inches deep, the contrast between which, and the green thorn fruit trees in full bloom, formed a Tpectacle novel and striking.

There has lately been discovered at Wallingford an old painting, on oak, of our Lord's last entrance into Jerusalem, which has been used as a chimney-board, and was near being thrown into the fire; but turns out an original of the The drawing, great Raphael's. expression, and arrangement, astonish all who have seen the picture. Connoisseurs far and near are going to its owner continually to behold from obscurity and the flames, and The trial of William Auf- likely to produce no inconsiderable 14th. tin came on at the Old Bai- sum by its sale. Several hundred

17th. The

The triennial Eton festival was celebrated with great Their majesties and the Splendor. princelles, accompanied by the prince of Wales, went to the college at half past one, when the procession of the young gentlemen began, preceded by the prince of Wales's band of music. Their captain, Mr. Whitfield, being the fenior icholar, led the van, with their ierjeants, ferjeants-major, colonels, corporals, entign, lieutenant, polemen, muticians, &c. Mettrs. Polehampton and Halifax, with twelve fervitors, acted as falt-bearers, and by their legal depredations on the public gained a liberal supply towards fending their captain into the world with a good grace. When they came to Salthill, they were met by the king and prince of Wales on horseback, attended by general Gwyn and colonels Garth and Greville: her majesty and the princeties, with lady Harrington and her fon, were in the royal coaches. The king took on himself the ordering and marshaling the multitude in fuch a manner, as the procession might pass freely round the carriages of the royal imily; many, however, notwithtianding, pressed so close, that his majesty was obliged to call them to order, and asked those he thought were Londoners, " if they were members of Eton, as he could not recognize their persons sufficiently to recollect them." At the close of the procession, ensign Hatch went to the top of the hill, and displayed the flag in a very mafterly fiyle, to the fatisfaction of every person pre-When the Montem was over, the king requested, that our their return home from the Windmill-inn, where an elegant dinner was provided, they might appear on Windfor terrace, which they did in the evening. The royal family, after having given their usual donations, returned to the lodge to dinner. The fineness of the day also drew an immense concourse of persons on foot and horseback to view the sight, which afforded, according to Mr. Halifax the saltabearer's account, on being asked the question by his majesty, a very profitable harvest.

This day came on the trial of John Reeves, esq. for a libel, before lord Kenyon and a special jury, at Guildhall. This prosecution was instituted, in confequence of a resolution of the house of commons, on account of a pamphlet published by Mr. R. entitled, "Thoughts on the English Government;" and in which were the expressions, "that the kingly government might go on, if lords and commons were lopped off;" and such other expressions as were deemed a libel by the house.

The attorney general stated the case on the part of the crown, and left it to the jury to consider, whether the expressions alluded to were merely unadvited and erroneous; or whether, considering the whole context of the pamphlet, they were, as charged, libellous, and tending to villify the constitution.

Mr. Plumer, in behalf of Mr. Reeves, admitted the fact of publication; and contended, from the whole tenor of the work, and the known character of Mr. Reeves, and his enthuliattic admiration, and support against democracy, of the British contitution, that no imputation of libel could be fixed on him.

Lord Kenyon delivered an sdmirable charge to the jury, who retired, and remained out of court for upwards of an hour. When they returned, the foreman faid, "My lord, the jury are of opinion, that the pamphlet, which has been proved to have been written by John Reeves, esq. is a very improper publication: but being of opinion, that his motives were not such as laid in the information, find him—Not Guilty."

A very melancholy and ex-27th. traordinary transaction took Lord Charles Townshend, andhis brother lord Frederick Townshend, fons to the marquis Townthend, had been to Great Yarmouth, for which place lord Charles had been just chosen representative; they arrived in town yesterday morning about fix o'clock, and when they had reached Oxford-Areet, near the Pantheon, the postboys stopped to enquire where the bishop of Bristol, to whose house they had been ordered to drive, lived; when lord Frederick jumped out of the chaife, and struck one of the boys, which gave rife to an altercation, that drew together feveral persons who were passing by. Among these was a coachman, to whom lord Frederick particularly addressed himself; insisting upon it that he knew where the bishop lived; and on the man protesting that he did not, his lordship abused him with great violence; and, with the most deplorable marks of infanity, threw off his coat waistcoat, and thirt, and challenged him to fight. Unable to provoke the man to a contest, he walked leifurely away towards Hanover-square, when some persons who had been attentive to the whole scene, looked into the carriage, and saw a lifeless body on the feat, which proved to be the corpse of lord Charles. Lord Frederick was immediately purfued, and being taken near the end of Swallow-street, was conducted to a neighbouring watchhouse, whither the body of his brother was also conveyed. foon as the magistrates at the police-office in Marlborough-street were apprized of the circumstance, they ordered lord Frederick to be brought before them, together with the possillions who drove him to town. His lordship, when interrogated on the melancholy subject, betrayed the most unequivocal fymptoms of mental derangement, and it became necessary for the magistrates to apply to the postillions for the information they wanted. From their evidence it appeared, that about seven miles from town, in the vicinity of Ilford, one of them had heard the report of a piftol, when, looking round, he faw lord Frederick throw a pittol out of the chaise window; but he did not stop to inquire the cause of it. This was all that could be collected till the evening, when the agitation of lord Frederick had subsided, and he had recovered a confiderable degree of composure. Lord Fre-, derick then, on being asked concerning his brother's death, said, they had been discussing a religious fubject, and lord Charles took a piftol and blew out his own brains, and that he had endeavoured to destroy himself, but his pistol failed. The mayor of Yarmouth was prefent, and declared that their lordflips' conduct at that place appeared that of madmen, which induced him to follow them to town, being fearful fome accident might happen.

C 3

respecting the conduct of their lordilling, was finil er to the above. A pitch was form humowied in the carriage, which appeared to have been just fired. The pittel which had put an end to the life of had Chiefes had been placed in his mostly and hand with two flugs or bils, one of which performed the fall, and the other was extracted from the mouth. Neither the teeth nor tengue were injured, fo that it is evident that no violence had been used in the introduction of the fatal infrument, and the death of lord Charles might not improbably be an act of his own, committed in a parexy fin of phrenmy. Last night the coroner's inqueff fit on the body; when, after a long examination, the jury brought in a verdict-" That the deceat d 1nd been killed by a pittel-ball, but from whele hands unknown." Telter lay and this day 30th. there was a very heavy gale of wind from the fouth-welt, which blow in gutts with uncommon violence. Much danlage was fuffilled in many parts of the metropolis by the blowing down of chimneys, untiling houses; and in fome of the environs of the town many trees were torn up by the roots. In Dean's yard, Westminfær, part of the old ruinous buildings came down by the violence of the wind with a great crash. Luckily it had been fome time fince railed and paled in, fo that no person was near enough to recente any damage. In St. James's Park more than a dozen large trees were forn up by the roots, and the foliage of others were feattered in every direction. The pairage to

Spring Gardens was as thickly

The callende of the fervants, fremed with horses as any orchard' in autuma. A part of one of the that disconnected in Covent-Garden for the are demodation of the spectet is of the election, was blown down: there were, however, noperfession it at the time, as from its elevation it was not confidered fafe. Fart of the roof of a house at the commerce Callege-hill, Dowgute, was thrown down; which, falling upon a poor woman patting at the time, bruised her to feverely, that the was carried to St. Bartholomew's ho pital, without hopes of recovery. Several buildings in the neighbourhood of Houndsditch, Bishopsgate-firect, &c. were also unroofed, and fome trees in the quarter of Moorfields were torn up by the roots. In Lambeth-marsh, an empty house, condemned by the, commissioners of the road, was blown down; as were the roofs from fome of the buildings in the lame quarter.

JUNE.

At the final close of the poll for members of parliament for the city of London, at . Guildhall, the numbers were, for-

Mr alderman Luthington 4379 The lord mayor 4313 3865 Mr. alderman Combe Mr. alderman Anderson 3170, Mr. alderman Fickett 2795 Sir "atkin Lewes 2354

An officer belonging to a 10th. party on the recruiting fervice at Brecon, took an opportunity, whilit a postchaise was waiting for him at the door of an inn in the town of Hay, to shoot himfelf, and deliberately contrived to fend the ball through his head in-fuch

fuch a direction, that he instantly fell, and died without a groan.

Between 11 and 12 in the forenoon a fire broke out in the hay loft over the oil-mill of Messrs. Watts and Parsons in Turners-hill, Marsh-lane, Chesunt; which in a short time consumed the whole premises, with sifty loads of oil ready to remove, not without suspicion of wilful mischief, the mill having been on sire a week before.

13th. At the close of the pollfor Westminster, the numbers were, for

Mr. Fox - 5160 Admiral Gardner 4814 Mr. Horne Tooke 2819

Andrew Robinson Bowes, who was committed for an affault upon lady Strathmore, and who has been in priton eleven years, was brought up, and in consequence of the figuranual produced in court, containing his majesty's most gracious pardon, was discharged upon his own recognizance

Lord Kenyon, in fumming up to the jury on a little wretched play debt, faid, it is to be lamented, that gaming is fo prevalent among the highest ranks of society, which have let the example to their inferiors, and who, it seems, are too great for the law. I with they could be punished. "If any profecutions are fairly brought before me and the parties are justly convicted, whatever may be their rank or station in the country, though they be the first ladies in the land, they shall certainly exhibit themfelves in the pillory."

Charlestrawn. On the 13th of June a most alarming fire broke out in Lodge-alley, which baffled all the exertions of a numerous concourse of citizens, who speedily assembled to extinguish the devouring flames, till Tuesday morning, when a confiderable part of the city was laid in ashes. Those acquainted with the city will conceive the damage done, on being told, that every house in Queenstreet, from the bay to the corner of Church-street: all Union-street continued—two-thirds of Unionstreet—Church-street, from Broadstreet, to St. Phillip's church, with only two exceptions—Chalmers's & Beresford's alleys—Kinloch's court - and the north fide of Broad-street, from the state house to Mr. Jacks's, four doors below Church-fireet; and five houses on the Bay, from the corner of Queen-street, were burnt to the ground. The public buildings deftroyed, are the French church, and leveral adjoining buildings. Phillip's church was on fire at different times, and ultimately must have been destroyed, if a spirited negro man had uot ascended to the top of the cupola, next to the vane, and tore off the The private buildings destroyed, and the property they contained, are of immense amount. Five hundred chimnes, it is faid, have been counted, from which the buildings are burnt; 150,000l. Herling, is supposed to be a fum far thort of the value of those buildings. The goods and furniture destroyed, are probably nearly equal to this fum.

The new college at Hackney, with 18 acres of land, was this day knocked down at 5700l. whether to a real or fictitious bidder we have not heard.
The adjoining house, inhabited by Dr. Rees, as president of the college, was bought by him, or in his name, for 1050l. The sate of this building, on which the proprietor

prietors acknowledge immense sums have been expended in building, and for which more than twice the fum it now fetched had been refused, and the fate of the institution itself, affords a striking proof that the people of this country are not disposed to encourage the modern philosophers in their attempts to undermine the conftitution. That feminary was inflituted under the most favourable aufpices. The most wealthy and respectable part of the dissenters were disposed to support the institution; but, that support having been withdrawn, the building is brought to the hammer. Whether it shall be converted into barracks, being not further from the east than those in Hyde-park from the western extretremity of the capital, or into a country settlement of any capital public and more constitutional school in London, or ferve as a supplement to Bedlam, already too crowded to receive more inhabitants, time must shew.

The following melancholy accident happened yesterday morning in Houghton-street, Clare-market:—Two houses suddenly gave way, and buried in their ruins fixteen unfertunate inhabi-At noon, thirteen were got out and conveyed to the parish workhouse in Portugal-street. there, three had been dug out, thockingly mangled, without the least symptoms of life: two children apparently dead, were restored to life by the means prescribed by the humane fociety in cases of fuffocation; the eft received some of them flight and others severe But what rendered contumons. their fituation the more deplorable was that they recognized, or expected to recognize, in every individual who was brought in, a relative or a friend.

The landlord of one of the houfes, it is reported, received notice of the infecurity of his house two days ago, but did not apprise the lodgers of their danger for sear of losing them.

A duel was fought in a. 28th. field within three miles of Hamburgh, between lord Valentia and Henry Gawler, efq. They left England with their seconds and furgeons for the express purpose of fighting. They fired together. Mr. Gawler's ball took place; it entered his lord ship's breast-bone, and lodged near the neck; it was extracted on the field, and he is confidered to be out of danger. Lord Valentia's ball passed through Mr. Gawler's hat. The affair between Mr. Gawler and lady Valentia was the Subject of the dispute.

DIED.—At Bedwell-park, Herts, in his 76th year, Samuel Whitbread, esq.; whose abilities, integrity, benevolence, and public fpirit, will transmit his character with respect to posterity. His father was a yeoman of Bedfordshire, who lived at the Barns at Cardington, in that country, on an estate of about 2001. per annum, which devolved to his eldest son, who much improved it by building, and ipent much of his time at it after he purchased Bedwell-park. is faid to have died worth a million at least; the bulk of which he has bequeathed to his fon. He was half-brother to Ive Whitbread, efq. hardwareman, of Cannon-street, and theriff of London with Mr. Beckford, in 17:5. By his first wife, Harriet, daughter of —— Haytor, an eminent attorney, of London, whom he married in 1757, and who died in 1764, he has left issue a sou, Sanuel, gentlemancommoner of Christ church, Oxford, and representative of the town of Bedford in several parliaments after his father gave it up, and two daughters; the eldest married, in 1759, to James Gordon, jun. efq. of More-park, Herts; the younger, Emma, to Henry Beauchamp lord St. John of Bletso, 1780. Mr. Whitbread, married to his second wife, 1769, lady Mary, youngest daughter of the late earl, and fifter to the present marquis Cornwallis, who died in 1770, in childbed of an only daughter, married, in June, 1795, to capt. George Grey, late of the Boyne man of war, of 98 guns, third fon of fir Charles Grey, K. B. and nephew of fir Harry Grey, bart. whose fister was married in 1788 to the present Mr. Whitbread, and by when he has feveral children. His extensive establishments in the brewery were long unrivalled, and perhaps, to a certain point, remain so still, and excited the envy even of a poet (Dr. Walcot) who spares - not royalty, though in this inflance of his fatire, he has perpetuated a compliment to the fovereign and the man of malt by coupling them together. Mr. Whitbread's liberal charity will be witnessed by every parish where he had property, and in the distribution of his private benevolence, which is said to have exceeded 3000l. per annum; for no proper application met with a repulse; and to his honour let it here be recorded, that, leveral years before his death, he settled on St. Luke's hospital for lunaticks a perpetual rent-charge of one hundred guineas, payable out of his extentive premises in Chilwell-street.

JULY.

Not was capitally convicted, for the wilful murder of M. le Marquis de Gripier de Moncroe de Laval, a French emigrant nobleman, on the 29th of May last, at his lodgings in Monmouth-court, Whitcomb-street, of which house she had the care; and received sentence to be executed on Monday.

Richard Ludman, Rhodes, Eleanor Hughes, and Mary Baker, were tried for the murder of George Hebner.—This murder was committed in Kingstreet, East Smithsield, in one of those obscure receptacles of debauchery with which this metropolis abounds. The body of the deceased was found on the morning of Sunday the 22d of May, suspended by the neck from a bed-post, in a room on the second floor, with his hands tied behind his back. This unfortunate man was a taylor, and had, it seems, been in very distressed circumstances, which produced a propenfity to intoxication: when much in liquor, his widow faid, he flept fo found, that it was almost impossible to wake him. It was proved that the four priloners were in the house (which belonged to Eleanor Hughes) on the evening of Saturday the 21st, and next morn-They were feen, and fome of their conversation heard, by two women who lived in an adjoining house; this house was separated from that in which the body was found by only a lath partition, perforated in feveral places, and the holes and crevices affording a diftinct view of almost all the apartments of the latter. The manner in which the hands of the deceafed were bound with a piece of tape was deferibed in court. The knot that had been used was what feamen call a timber hitch, and it was obviously such as could not be done by himfelf. There was no direct and politive proof as to the guilt of the prisoners; but there was a chain of most suspicious circum-Mances pointing against Ludman and Hughes. The lord chief baron of the exchequer fummed up the evidence with great precision, candour, and humanity. It was on the expreflions used by the prisoners that the proof chiefly refled, and his lordthip nicely discriminated between those that seemed to arise from furprise, on the discovery of the fituation of the deceased, and those which could only be supposed to proceed from a knowledge of the murder.—The jury retired for about an hour and returned with a verdict, finding Richard Ludman and Elearor Hughes guilty.—Ann Rhodes and Mary Baker not guilty. Sentence of death was immediately pronounced on Ludman Hughes, by the recorder.

Mary Nott, Richard Ludman, and Eleanor Hughes were executed before Newgate.

6th. This morning Henry Wefton for forgery, and John Roberts, alias Colin Reculift, also for forgery, were executed purfuant to their sentence, opposite the debtors' door, in the Old Bailey.

Was tried, in the court of king's bench, Guildhall, before lord Keynon and a special jury, an information filed by the attorney general against D. I. Eaton, a bookseller in Newgate-street, for a libel in publishing a book, which defined the words "a king" to imply "cunning and craft, which would foon be in difrepute in this country:" "a niggard" to mean, "a king who had defrauded his subjects of nine millions of money.

—Oh! Mr. Guelph, where do you expect to go when you die?" and that the guillotine should be introduced into this country, as a more merciful mode of punishing kings and queens than by the axe, &c.

Lord Kenyon concluded charge to the jury with observing, that the king was entitled to the fame protection of the laws with other men; and they would confider whether any part of the king's conduct called for fuch observations as those which had been read to them from the book published by the defendant. His lordship thought his majetty, like the judge of Ifract (Samuel), might appeal to the jury and fay, "Whofe ox have I taken? Whose as have I taken? Whom have I defrauded? Whom have I oppressed?" The jury, after 15 minutes confideration, returned a verdict—guilty

A cause was tried in the court of king's bench, Guildhall, between the proprietors of a newspaper called the Telegraph, plaintiffs, and the proprietors of the Morning Post, defendants. proved, that in the month of February last, the desendants had contrived to forward to the office of the Telegraph from Canterbury, a spu: rious French newspaper, containing a pretended renewal of the armistice, and preliminaries of peace between the emperor and the The proprietors French republic. of the Telegraph being thus imposed on to give as true a translation of this fulfe fabricated intelligence, and thereby sustaining much discredit discredit with the public, and a diminution in the sale of their paper, brought the present action against the defendants as authors of such discredit, loss, &c. The case being made out, the jury gave a verdict with tool damages. The forged paper was printed in London.

This day at noon, Miss 10th. Mackenzie, of Salitburyfireet, in the Strand, accompanied by a Mr. Winders, of the exchequer, hired a boat, and proceeded from Blackfriars bridge to Greenwich; on their return to town the lady fell overboard, and was drowned. She was immediately dragged, for, and every means made use of to recover the body, without effect. On Monday morning at the dropping of the tide, the body was difcovered lying on Duke's Shore, below Rotherhithe church. A coroner's jury was immediately fummoned; verdict accidental death.

Weymouth. We had on 17th. Friday afternoon, the feverest storm of wind, hail, rain, thunder, and lightning, that has been * for many years. It lasted for a great length of time; and the hail-stones were of an immense size, only a few miles distance. Digby was in his phaeton, in his park near Sherborne, at the time. The horses took fright and ran furioully away; overlet the carriage, and his lordship had the misfortune to have one of his legs broke.

A cause of some importance to the interest of the established church was on Monday decided in the court of Arches, Doctors Commons. The rev. W. Percy, a clergyman of the established church, had been accustomed to read prayers, preach, administer the sacrament, and occasionally to church women, and baptize children, according to the rites of the church of England, in the parith of Woolwich, in a building (improperly called a chapel) neither confecrated nor licenfed for fuch purpofes, but originally appropriated to differenters. Mr Percy made no defence; but, being condemned in costs, personally petitioned the court for a mitigation of the costs, on the plea of not having baptized children privately in houses, as let forth in the oth article, which was accordingly withdrawn; but, having by his own confession, incurred the penalty of the other five articles, the court rejected his petition. He was confequently condemned in the whole cotts, amounting to about 15 guineas, and admonithed, by the judge who prefided, to defift in future from fuch irregular and illegal practices as were a gross abuse of the toleration-act.

just completed here, for the reception of 30 poor persons from the hospitals, whose cases render sea bathing necessary. The building is constructed in a very commodious manner; it is situated near the beach, between Margate and Dandelion, and the expence is defrayed by subscription. It will be sit to receive patients in a few days: they will have medical assistance, and a bathing machine has been built for their sole use.

At the affizes for Devon, an action of ejectment was tried, between one Battin, plaintiff, and one Arthur and his wife, defendants, for the recovery of lands in Devonshire, claimed by the plaintiff as heir of one John Noteworthy, an idiot from birth to his death, at the age of fixty one years.

The

The faller free of the Ville of the College of t សមា ស ករុណ បា លាសសម្គេច ប randra Villerien veren in 1944 is a comported to to the wing the the state of the state of the state of grand garge for the sea of the sea Action of the control of the term of the control of from leming true at its miles ของการที่ 1 ก่านการเสอก การเสอ กัฐการ general automatical contrata and the second s marries of a vin as a committee Signal Company and company and after big bitter sprice und ibe abirb ae valous est ossos livias umas empression of a second to VIII is 1777 med tempts (Red 1 to 1) in the ការសម្រើស មានសម្ដេកប្រកាស់នេះគេខាងនេះ 🖺 gana cela mema nati itali etia letta letta The second of the second second second Cart. Tenn v Coffee vert made. des vas au projet of the fixe word interior was a main of his e 😼 ប្រភព្ឋ បានដើកគ្នា ការ៉ាស្រែយ ដើ To the second the control of the second the state of the s person the material and that Tallers est for the letter. The court of the partir of Administration, where the lawen line and time, in the term of the will proved the color to the algress e vite i to i tortt and a catal regress may not and the to first. grand a life for a few without the Debut me And the set, and any genital and granded a confirming in was been e chares que as a laur gerolla elthe state of the second second second second exercises y. Attended a transage of meatay that same the jump whitesame rivinant is all first and go is a vertal fr any to the man, in the or the glader it katell, to the latarather a lie mur. nie i rrwied sedand I are relieved of the little were The time t with with capitalon the John Hoken, sir weigh-" ufunting himner Phillips: and Thur Innes for itening set There is the real and inter orning like mick anymeds; like like over howe benevale beidenise. Tavi- Ins. vii. mi The Annant was the entering to be seen La lignier in the bour of Mr. Addert half limits the Late Conterms commune view with found grand the summer to little four and the attention mentils ampelies-The Line Advances of Resident -----

💶 a – Leji Tilay iky, 🕿 tid vinalited at the new MATERIAL TO THE WATER COME ni me man pomage at me mot, the temperature propagate way; the segir ir ive kumuling, shakbe • carefully pame of the beating period upou it i un ordiboueuse ce musich rae mea fell alwal sad foose of them were materially bruiled, but Di Liste Werelich

. At the ison office, Edwards, are in Pleasant place, and Doctor Gale, were med no franculently rigning and counterfeiting certain certificates, attematicate. &c. of reoralis. Elimaris kepi a recraitinghouse, which was home by the min. The Dudier, weing a good actin, bijita ina, y played the characters if captilla, forgern and magiritare. When a recruit was brought in, ne itripped and examined him as fungeou i approved of him in 👟 nemer place and dreis as captain;

court,

and finally figned his attestation as magistrate. Of all these ingenious acts of his, and Mr. Edward's employing him, and giving currency to his impositions, the jury found them both guilty.

At the same assizes, an indictment was tried, which reflects no finall degree of difcredit on the perfon indicted. Theophilus Bridges, a button-maker, of Temple-street, St. George's-fields, was indicted for the murder of his apprentice, Elizabeth Monk, in January, 1795. The deceased was one of seven apprentices, all taken from the Afylum; and, by the evidence of three of the surviving apprentices, it appeared that Bridges was a very paffionate and severe man, and had frequently beat and kicked the deceased; and that she died after an Hiness of some continuance, caused, as they conceived, by fuch ill usage; together with spare diet and hard A furgeon was called; but who having feen the deceased only a few hours before her death, and being told she was ill of a confumption, and merely having felt her pulse, as he perceived the was very near death, could not speak to any circumstance to criminate Bridges. He was therefore acquitted.

Shrewshury. Yesterday was tried at the affizes here, by a most respectable special jury, before the honourable Mr. justice Heath, a cause against the bp. of Bangor; the rev. Dr. Owen; the rev. Mr. Roberts archdeacon of Merioneth; the rev. Mr. Williams; and Mr. Thomas Jones; for unlawfully diffurbing Mr. Samuel Grindley, in the registrar's office at Bangor on the 8th of January last. It appeared that in 1792, Mr.

Grindley, an attorney, had, by means of the bishop being appointed deputy-registrar of the consistorial court of his diocese, his lordship's nephew being the principal registrar; that, on the 6th of January last whilst the office was shut, the bishop sent for the key of it; which was refused by order of Mr. Grindley; that on the 7th of January, by his lordship's order, the lock of the office was taken off and a new one put on, the key of which was delivered to the bishop, who the same day informed Mr. Grindley thereof. That, on the 8th of January, Mr. Grindley with a blackimith and four other persons, broke open the office. That the defendants, being alarmed at this, went to the office unarmed (after Mr. Grindley had taken possession of it) and expostulated with him, and were excited to shew some marks of anger at this violent conduct; for he was armed with pistols and had forced one person down the steps and threatened to shoot another. It also appeared that the bishop fent for a magistrate; and his lordthip and the other defendants foon afterwards departed, leaving Mr. Grindley in the office. A pamphlet was produced in court to Mr. Grindley, containing some confidential letters from the bishop to him during the time he had been his lordship's agent; which letters Mr. Grindley owned he had delivered into the hands of a Mr. Williams The defendant's counof Treffos. sel, said they had many witnesses; but that their case stood so clear, even on the plaintiff's evidence, they did not think it necessary to call a fingle witness on the part of the defendants; and the jury immediately, without leaving the

Mr. Adam from London, as leading counsel for the plaintiff, had a tee of 300 guineas; and Mr. Ertkine the like for the defendants.

DIED. 21.—At Dumfries after a lingering illness, Robert Burns, who excited fo much interest by the peculiarity of the circumstances under which he came forward to public notice, and the genius difcovered in his poetical compositions. Burns was literally a ploughman, but neither in that state of dervile dependence or degrading ignorance which the fituation might bespeak in this country. He had the common education of a Scotch peafant, perhaps fomething more, and that spirit of independence, which in that country is fometimes to be found in a high degree in the humblest classes in society. had genius, starting beyond the obflacles of poverty, and which would have distingished itself in any fitua-His early days were occupied in procuring bread by the labour of his own hands, in the honourable task of cultivating the earth; but his nights were devoted to books and the muse, except when they were wasted in those haunts of village festivity, and the indulgencies of the focial bowl, to which the poet was but too immoderately attached in every period of his He wrote, not with a view to encounter the public eye, or in the hope to procure fame by his productions, but to give vent to the feelings of his own genius—to indulge the impulse of an ardent and poetical mind. Burns from that reffless activity, which is the peculiar characteristic of his countrymen, proposed to emigrate to Jamaica, in order to feek his fortune by the exertion of those talents of which he felt himfelf pof-It was upon this occasion that one of his friends fuggested to him the idea of publishing his poems, in order to raile a few pounds to defray the expences of his pattage. The idea was eagerly embraced. A coarfe edition of his poems was first published at Ayr. They were foon noticed by the gentlemen in the neighbourhood. Proofs of fuch uncommon genius in a fituation to humble made the acquaintance of the author eagerly: fought after. His poems found their way to Edinburgh; some extracks and an account of the author were inferted in a periodical paper, The Lounger, which was at that time in the course of publication. The voyage of the author was delayed in the hope that a fuitable provision would be made for him by the generofity of the public. A fubscription was fet on foot for a new edition of his works, and was forwarded by the exertions of fome of the first characters of Scotland. The fubicription lift contains a greater number of respectable names than almost have ever appeared to any fimilar production; but, as the book was at a low price, the return to the author was inconsi-Burns was brought to derable. Edinburgh for a few months, every where invited and carefled; and at last one of his patrons procured him the fituation of an Exciseman, and an income of somewhat less than 50l. a year. We know not whether any steps were taken to better this humble income. Probably he was not qualified to fill a fuperior fituation to that which was alligned him. We know that his manners refused to partake the polish polish of genteel society, that his talents were often obscured and finally impaired by excess, and that his private circumstances were embittered by pecuniary distress. Such, we believe, is the candid account of a man, who, in his compositions, has discovered the force of native humour, the warmth and tenderness of passion, the glowing touches of a descriptive pencil —a man who was the pupil of nature, the poet of inspiration, and who possessed in an extraordinary degree the powers and failings of genius. Of the former, his works will remain a lasting monument; of the latter, we are afraid that his conduct and his fate afford but too melancholy proofs. Though he died at an early age, his mind was previously exhausted; and the apprehensions of a distempered imagination concurred with indigence and fickness to embitter the last moments of his life. He has left behind him a wife, with five infant children, and in the hourly expectation of a fixth, without any resource but what she may hope from public sympathy.

In the 64th year of his age, David Rittenhouse, the American philosopher. His history is curious, from the admiration in which his character was held. Rittenhouse was a native of America; and, in the earlier part of his life, he mingled the pursuits of science with the active employments of a farmer and a watchmaker. In 1769 he was invited by the American philofophical fociety to join a number of gentlemen who were then occupied in making some astronomical observations, when he particularly distinguished himself by the accuracy of his calculations and the comprehension of his mind. He afterwards constructed an observatory, which he superintended in person, and which was the source of many important-discoveries, as well as greatly tending to the general diffusion of science in the western world. During the American war, he was an active affertor of the cause of independence. Since the conclusion of the peace, he successively filled the offices of treasurer of the state of Pennsylvania. and director of the national mint, in both of which capacities he was alike distinguished for strength of judgement and integrity of heart. He succeeded the illustrious Franklin in the office of president of the philosophical society; a situation which the bent of his mind and the course of his studies had rendered him eminently calculated to fill; and towards the close of his days he retired from public life to the enjoyment of domestic happiness, when he formed a circle of private friends, who will continue to admire his vir-, tues as a man, while the world will applaud his talents as a philolopher.

AUGUST.

The count de Montmorin arrived in town, being charged with dispatches from Louis XVIIIth to the count d'Artois, at Edinburgh.
This nobleman brings advice, that on Wednetday the 19th of July, at ten o'clock at night, as the king of France was looking out of the window of an inn, at a town belonging to the elector of Treves, called Dillingen, near Ulm, on the Danube, he was wounded in the upper

upper part of his forehead by a hall, supposed to have been fired from a horse pistol on the opposite fide of the fireet, which was about The ball took an 25 yards wide. oblique direction, and made a fingular wound of three inches long, without penetrating the skull; no furgeon being immediately at hand, one of the gentlemen of his fuite cut off the hair, and applied the first thing he met with in order to flop the bleeding. The confusion was great, by which means the perpetrator of this inhuman deed made his escape; he is supposed to be a Frenchman from the Republican army, bribed for this purpose, and connected with others who facilitated his escape. The town has a wall round it, but, perhaps, not more than four feet high in many places. This affaffin must have been particularly acquainted with the king's person, as the duke de Fleurs was flanding close by him at the time, in a narrow window, and is nearly as corpulent in his person. The ball was found on the floor, flattened by having firuck the wall afterwards. The king was not materially hurt, and in three days afterwards purfued his journey to Ingoldstadt, in his way to Saxony.

the derly man, decently dressed, blew his brains out in a field between Brompton and Chelsea, with a large horse-pistol, the muzzle of which, it is thought, he had put into his mouth, as a large piece of the back part of his skull was found at several yards distance from the body. He had no money about him, nor any thing which could lead to discover who he was. A letter was found in his pocket unfinished, in which he addresses himself to a Mr. Graham, painting, in the most pathetic language, the distress that he laboured under, both as to his circumstances and bodily afflictions. The horrors he experienced when assep, he says, cannot be equalled by any humans distress; at such times he was a prey to the most frightful apprehensions. To hell his disordered senses, he had daily taken a large dose of laudanum, which at length turning his brain, occasioned his exit.

At Stafford affizes an extraordinary incident took place: One of the prisoners (Wm. Cottrell) was indicted for a burglary and robbery in the house of Mr. Forman, of Handsworth, to which he pleaded guilty; nor could he be perfuaded to offer any other plea, until the Judge threatened, in case he perfifted, to order him for a speedy execution—He then pleaded not guilty, and his trial proceeded. However, sufficient evidence not appearing to convict him, he was, of course (though very unexpectedly), acquitted.

A cricket-match was played 9th. by eleven Grenwich pensioners with one lcg, against eleven with one arm, for one thousand guineas, at the new cricket-ground, Montpellier gardens, Walworth. nine o'clock the men arrived in three Greenwich stages; twelve the wickets were pitched, and the match commenced. Those with but one leg had the first innings, and got ninety-three runs; those with one arm got but fortytwo runs during their innings. The one-legs commenced their focond innings, and fix were bowled out after they got fixty runs, fo that they left off one hundred and eleven more than those with one arm. Next morning the match was played out, and the men with one leg beat the one arms by 103 runnings. After the match was finished, the eleven one-legged men run a sweepstakes of one hundred yards distance, for twenty guineas, and the three first had prizes.

eleven

about eleven o'clock, one of the Dartford powder mills, about half a mile dittant from the place, blew up with a dreadful explosion. Four persons lost their lives.

This afternoon, a gentleman going down Gray'-innlane in a whitkey, the horse took fright and fet off full speed; his servant, seeing his master in such a fituation, unfortunately for him, came up to the horse, and seized the bridle, but was not capable of stopping him. The beast turned up a narrow passage by ChadsWells; the fervant still running and holding. In turning round the passage the near shaft caught the man in the body, which it clearly run through, and was stopt by the wall. The gentleman was thrown violently from the carriage, but not much hurt. The servant was killed.

Lattaique in Syria. The first shock was May 16th, which lasted about eighty-fix seconds. Upwards of three thousand persons were buried in the ruins of the houses. A great part of the mosques are destroyed. The small town of Gibellet is also totally destroyed, and several houses thrown down at Tortosa and Tripoli.

70th. This morning a duel was fought in Hyde-Park, between Mr. William Carpenter and Mr. John Pride, both Americans, in which Mr. Carpenter received his antagonist's ball in the side, which penetrated nearly through his body; and, notwithstanding it was immediately extracted, he died on Monday morning. The coroner's jury sat on the body, and brought in their verdict wilful murder.

Nantz. A fire took place in our superb theatre during the third act of Zemire et Azor; which caught the transparency in the apartments of Zemire, at the moment when the mechanist and his affiftants were busy repairing the bust of Azor, which had met with an accident in coming up a trap not fufficiently open. The flames spread with such astonishing rapidity, that in five minutes the whole theatre was in flames, and this superb monument of the decorative talents of Cruci, the town architect, was foon a heap of deplorable ruins. The walls alone remain. The wardrobe and other decorations were totally confumed, and fome persons lost their lives. Among the audience, however, a few bruises, inevitable from the confusion, were all the damage, except a pregnant woman, who is stated to have been borne down by the crowd, and shockingly trampled upon. Those behind the scenes were in a dreadful condition. Three persons much burnt, have been drawn out from the flames. The tocsin was sounding at the moment of the account departing, the interior part still burning, and the fight of new victims was perpetually feared.

This morning about four o'clock, fome villains got into a house in Fludger street, occupied by sir Richard Glode, who was out of town, and had packed up every article of value that was portable. The sheriff's dress clothes, liveries, &c. were ready for removal; when the thieves were fortunately heard by Mrs. Johnson, the proprietor of the house; who, with great spirit, went up stairs, where she met one of them. She gave an alarm; but no watchman or patrole was to be found. At length the succeeded in getting down stairs, in spite of the opposition made by the thief, and opened the street door. the neighbours were by this time alarmed and at the door; they had found out a patrole and watchman, to whom Mrs. Johnson delivered her prisoner. A number of picklock keys were found, and every lock in the house had been open-On attending at the Public-office, Queen-square, to prosecute, the prisoner was of course called for; but the watchman and patrole had been overpowered by him, in some way or other, and he had escaped.

DIED.—Thomas Yates, efq. a lieutenant in the navy (to which rank he was admitted June 24, 1782) and an artist of some merit, having published prints from drawings by himself of two celebrated naval actions. He was great nephew to the late celebrated comedian, but by whom he had for some years been unaccountably neglected; and he has now loft his life in confequence of a dispute with Miss Jones relative to the possestion of the theatrical veteran's house in Stafford-row, which Miss Jones confidered to be her property; and in which, for some little time, they both refided. On the 18th of Auguft, Mr. John Sellers was brought into the house, to protect Mils Jones and her property; and, on the 21st, Richard Footner was introduced for the same purpose. On the 22d, the wife of Mr. Yates being abfent, he dined alone about three o'clock; and, walked after dinner into the garden at the back of the house. On his return, the door being fastened, his servant, Mary Thompson, attempted to get him in at the kitchen window. One of the persons who had fastened him out, finding that he was likely to gain admittance, fixed a pistol, the ball from which entered the right fide of Mr. Yates. The noise giving an alarm, some neighbours. climbed over the garden-wall, where they found Mr. Yates bleeding. Dr. Cruikshanks attended him twice the same evening, and had great hopes; but next morning, at nine, pronouncing the wound mortal, Mr. Yates made his will, and expired about noon, leaving five chil-, dren, and a widow pregnant with a fixth. (Mrs. Yates is very elegant in her person, and made her appearance last season at Coventgarden theatre, in the character of the Grecian daughter.) In confequence of the coroner's inquest, Sellers, Footner, and Elizabeth Jones, after a regular examination at the public-office in Bow-street, have been committed on a charge of wilful murder. Two gentlemen of great respectability, who had never before seen Miss Jones, offered bail for her to any amount; which the magistrates refused. On a fecond examination, August 29, the idea of premeditated guilt was in a great degree removed; but the prisoners were again fully committed. Mr. Sellers formerly kept a Staffordshire warehouse on Garlicklick-hill, in which business he failed, and afterwards embarked in the linen-trade. Miss Jones, towards broke out at the workhouse, in the the latter end of 1793, performed middle of the day, when most of the character of Imogen at Coventgarden theatre for one night only.

SEPTEMBER.

Scarborough. On Sunday last, three gentlemen from Horsforth, in the west-riding, went on the water in a pleasure-boat, rowed by a man named Laycock; and, in returning, the strength of the wind, and violence of the waves, driving them amongst the breakers, threw them ten yards from the vessel; and, unable to regain either the boat or shore, they all perished in sight of a great multitude of spectators, who exerted themselves in vain for their relief. The bodies of the three former have been found; the latter has left a wife and child.

At Cheveley, near New-market, one of the duke of Rutland's feats, a boy, named Tweed, employed in keeping birds off a field of corn, placed his gun against a post with the muzzle upwards, which unhappily went off, and, lodging its contents in the boy's throat, instantly killed him.

A large box, containing a quantity of rope, of the thicknefs of two inches, spun by the convicts, has been brought to the secretary of state's office from Botany Bay, being the first proof of their manufacture and production; it is as white as flax, and its fineness cannot be be excelled by the spinners in this country.

A dreadful fire happened at a small village called East Whitton, on the estate of the earl of Aylesbury, in the north riding of the county of York. The flames broke out at the workhouse, in the middle of the day, when most of the inhabitants were in the fields reaping. The buildings being chiefly covered with thatch, and the wind strong at S. W. the fire burnt with such irresistible fury as in the course of a few hours totally ruined near a dozen families, burning sixteen dwelling-houses and out-buildings, with a large quantity of corn and farming-utensils, all of which were uninsured.

This day John Sellers, 16th. William Footner, and Elizabeth Jones, were put to the bar at the Old Bailey; the former upon the charge of having wilfully and maliciously wounded Mr. Thomas Yates, with a pittol ball, of which wound he died, and the two latter for aiding and abetting in the faid murder. The evidence of the fervant, Mary Thompson, varied from her former deposition before the magistrates, before whom the swore that Mr. Yates pushed away the piftol with his hand when presented by Sellers; but contradicted herself in this particular on the trial, that Mr. Yates did not touch the pistol, nor was it possible for him to reach it, though on her first examination she had sworn that Mr. Yates had hold of it, and was ftruggling with it at the moment it went off. It came out in evidence that Mr. Yates bahaved in a vindictive quarrelfome manner in the house having threatened Miss Jones with personal violence. Sellers in his defence, denied all intention of killing Mr. Yates, but faid that the piftol went off, owing to Yates taking hold of it; and that he had defired to be furnished with the piffols for his personal defence, 29 Mr. Yates had repeatedly threatened to bring in several persons to turn them out by force. He bad only been that out for the purpote of keeping him out till the attorney, who had been fent for, thould arrive, and that his taking the pittol was the impulie of the moment, and was only intended to have intimidated him; and that Mr. Yates himself seized hold of the pistol to wrest it from him. Milis Jones in her detence, went into the particulars of her first engagement with the late Mr. Richard Yates, and of her performing at the Birmingham Theatre; of the will in her favour, and of the turbulent behaviour of the deceased: disclaiming all idea of his murder, and that she would have willingly resigned every shilling of the property to have faved Mr. Yates's lite. Footner said little more than accounting for his being in the house in the way Sellers had previously related, merely calling as an acquaintance of Sellers. to character was only called in rayour of Sellers; several persons proved him a quiet, humane, inoffentive man. The learned judge, Rooke, then proceeded to ium up The evidence, and to point out the scoft striking parts to the jury. He thought Miss Jones and Mr. Footner ought clearly to be acquitted of wilful murder, as they did not know that Sellers had the pistol, and it was not intended to keep Mr. Yates out by violence. With regard to Sellers, the jury should consider whether he fired he pistol wilfully; if he did, he was guilty of murder; if the pistol went off by accident it was only manilaughter; short of that it could not be. The jury retired for a few minutes, and brought in their verdict, John Sellers, not guilty of the murder, but guilty of manilaughter; Elizabeth Jones and Richard Footner not guilty. Sellers was tentenced to pay a fine of one shilling, and be imprisoned fix mentils. There are five wills, or tetramentary papers, each of which are uniformly in savour of Miss Jones, one a regular drawn will in 1789.

Leverpool. This morning a little before one o'clock, a most dreadful fire broke out in a large warehouse, belonging to Mr. Hervey in Cheapfide; which, notwithflanding every possible exertion, could not be got under till the whole warehouse, with all its vaiuable contents, were confumed. The top part was occupied by Mr. Middleton, as a cotton manufactory, when the fire broke out, occasioned, as is supposed, by the friction of one of the wheels cmploved in the works. In the lower part were eleven thouland mealures of wheat, belonging to Mellin-Corrie, Gladstone and co. which, with a large quantity of hides, brandy and other spirits, rum were entirely destroyed. three o'clock, the front part of the into the firect. fell warehoule directly upon one of the fireengines that was then working, which occasioned a scene of horror impossible to be described; three men were crushed to pieces on the ipot; ten more were carried to the infirmary in a dreadful fituation, two of whom died immediately; and it is thought that many will be found among the ruins.

William Clark, the driver of the Newmarket mail, was indicted for wilful murder. It appeared that the prisoner was driving the mail coach at a very furious rate along Bishopsgatestreet, where he ran over a boy and killed him on the spot. The pri-Soner drove on not knowing of the accident, but was foon afterwards stopped. He alledged in his defence, that his employers were under contract to perform the journey within a certain period, and therefore he thought it his duty to drive so fast. The judge, in summing up the evidence, observed, "no contract could justify a man for driving in fuch a manner as to endanger the lives of others." The jury retired, and were absent two hours; when they returned, and found the prisoner, not guilty.

This afternoon the co-23d. roner's jury fat on the body of a lady in the neighbourhood of Holborn, who died in consequence of a wound from her daughter, the preceding While the family were preparing for dinner, the young lady, in a fit of infanity, seized a case knife lying on the table, and in a menacing manner purfued a little girl, her apprentice, round the room. On the eager calls of her helpless infirm mother, to forbear, she renounced her first object, and, with loud shricks, approached her The child, by her cries, quickly brought up the landlord of the house, but too late; the dreadful scene presented to him the mother lifeless on a chair, pierced to the heart; her daughter yet wildly standing over her with the fatal knife; and the venerable old man, her father, weeping by her side, himself bleeding at the forehead, from the effects of a blow he received from one of the forks. The had been madly hurling about the room. For a few days prior to this, the family had discovered some symptoms of lunacy in her, which had so much increased on the Wednesday evening, that her brother, early the next morning, went in quest of Dr Pitcairn; had that gentleman been providentially met with the fatal catastrophe had, probably, been prevented. She had once before, in the earlier part of her life, been deranged, from the harrassing fatigues of too much business. As her carriage towards her mother had been ever affectionate in the extreme, it is believed, that to her increased attentiveness to her, as her infirmities called for it, is to be ascribed the loss of her reason at this time. The jury without hesitation, brought in their verdict,— Lunacy.

The melancholy account of the blowing up of the Amphion frigate, at Plymouth, was received at the Admiralty from Sir Richard King, by which it appears that Captain Pellew, the first lieutenant, and fifteen of the crew, out of 220, are the only furvivors left to relate the difma catastrophe; Captain Swaffield o the Dutch prize, is among the un-The accident fortunate victims. happened at a quarter past four on Thursday afternoon, while the Captain and his friends were at dinner. Mr. Pellew is dangeroully wounded. Every exertion that could be used was rendered by the ships boats in the harbour.

This morning a convocation was held at St. Paul's Cathedral. This is a ceremony D 3 which which takes place upon the meeting of every new parliament. His grace the archbishop of Canterbury, the bishop of London, the bishop of Rochester, and several other dignitaries of the church, atlifted. The procession consisted, first, of the choristers and gentlemen of the cathedral, the archbishop and bishops, the judges and civilians, of Doctors Commons, with the proctors in their full robes. The whole was conducted with great solemnity. Prayers (according to the usual custom) were read in Latin, by bp. Horsley, and a Latin fermon was preached by doctor Radcliffe. Two anthems were performed in English. The ceremony lasted about two hours, and was attended by a numerous and elegant company.

OCTOBER.

The cotton mills at Hunslet, near Leeds, belonging to Messrs. Beverley, Cross, and co. were discovered to be on fire, which raged with fuch fury as to destroy the works and buildings in little more than 40 minutes. The damage is estimated at £100,000. The premises and stock were infured in the Sun and London infurance offices, for only 8000l.

Plymoutb. The court martial which was held last Saturday on board the admiral's ship Cambridge, to enquire into the cause of the loss of his majesty's thip Amphion, which blew up on the 22d of last month, in this harbour, after an examination of all the turviving crew, very honourably acquitted both the captain and omcers of every idea of remissiness or neglect upon that occasion.

must have been particularly gratifying to capt. Pellew, after the court martial was over, at the request made to him by the whole of the ship's company which survived this unhappy affair, that he would fuffer them to be partners of his future fortune, when he should obtain a ship, having so long sailed with him; one of the best testimonies this to the character of an officer.

About nine o'clock at night the house of Richard Timson, of Halleton, Leicestershire, was discovered to be on fire, which, with four others, was entirely confumed before any affittance could be procured: but the fury of the flames was happily checked by the activity of the inhabitants, who stripped off the roofs of the two adjoining houses.

This evening a very me-16th. lancholy accident happened at Ilfracombe: a ship called the London, from St. Kitt's, having on board a confiderable number of blacks, (French prisoners,) was driven on the rocks, near the entrance of the pier, during a violent gale of wind, by which about fifty of the prisoners were drowned; those who got on shore exhibited a most wretched spectacle; and the scene altogether was too shocking for description. The wind was blowing directly fair for the harbour.

Mr. Macpherson put an 20th. end to his existence on Enfield chace. Dragged by the rude hands of a runner and a constable before a justice of peace as a French spy, it appeared, on a short examination, that he had been an usher in several schools, which was confirmed by letters and bills found in his pocket, but had for feveral days in vain folicited relief or lodging in the town and neighbourhood for want of money to pay for them. He was dismissed with an order to quit the parish; and the constable having in vain applied for a lodging at the public houses, instead of lodging him at the watch-house or work-house for the night, left him to shift for himself, and find his way in the dark to Barnet over the Chace, where he was next morning found hanging on a tree, and hardly cold. About three weeks before, there had been found in a wood behind Bowes Farm, in Edmonton parish, another unfortunate wretch hanging by his flockings on a tree, but in so putrid a state that his head and feet separated from his body. He had on a good great coat and a kersyemere waistcoat, and in his pocket only fixpence and fome halfpence.

The university of Oxford has lately printed, at its own expence, to be distributed gratis among the French clergy who have taken refuge in Great Britain, (ad usum Cleri Gallicani in Angliæ exulantis, as the title states), 2000 copies of the vulgate and of the new Testament.

The marquis of Buckingham, distinguished for his muniticence towards the clergy, has likewise caused to be printed, at his expence, 2000 copies at the same press and for the same use. The university of Oxford has sent its copies to the venerable bishop of St. Pol de Leoa for distribution, accompanied by a letter, analogous to the generous sentiments which distate this honourable mark of esteem for the French clergy, who are fully sensible of the value of the gift.

DIED -In his 87th year, Tho.

Reid, D. D. professor of moral philosophy at the university of Glasgow. He was a wonderful example of early proficiency in mathematics, fince he was mafter of fir Isaac Newton's Principia at the age of twenty. He wrote some papers in the philosophical transactions on mathematical subjects, which do him much honour, But his fame chiefly rests on his metaphysical writings, in which he maintains the doctrine of common sense against fceptics, and feverely arraigns the philosophy of Locke, whom he confiders as the great promoter, though unintentionally, of modern scepticism. His works are: 1. An enquiry into the human mind, on the principles of common fente. Svo. 2. Essays on the intellectual powers of man. 4to. 1785.

16. At Turin, in his 70th year, and 23d of his reign, Victor Amadeus Maria, of Savoy, king of Sardinia. He was born June 26, 1726; and married Maria Antoinetta Ferdinanda, of Spain, fifter to the present emperor, who died 1785.— On the night of the 13th his majesty was feized with an apoplectic fit, which for some time deprived him of his speech. The immediate application of blifters and bleeding brought his majesty to his senses the next morning, and his speech, though imperfectly, was recovered. During this interval the facraments were administered. Towards the evening alarming symptoms returned, and recourfe was had to a third bleeding in the foot; which not; proving efficacious, the extreme unction was administered. His majesty lay speechless, and with one fide wholly palfied, during the At five in the morning of night. the 15th he was pronounced to be á l'agonie,

à l'agenie, and it was not imagined he could outlive the day. His majesty, however, lingered till near noon the following day, when he expired, as fincerely lamented by all his subjects as he had constantly lived beloved and respected by them, during a reign of upwards This melancholy eof 22 years. vent has plunged all the royal family into the deepest affliction. The prince of Piedmont, his fon, who succeeds him, is 45 years of age, being born 1751; and married, 1775, to Marie Adelaide, fister of Louis XVI. king of France, whose brothers, the count of Provence and the count D'Artois, married his two fisters.

NOVEMBER.

Tuesday last, in Lincoln'sinn-hall, the lord chancellor, after hearing the exceptions to it argued, confirmed the master's report in the Downing cause. The master has reported, that the present annual value of the estates devised to the college amounts to 4500l. This preliminary point being at length obtained, after a contett of many years, an application will immediately be made to the crown, to grant a charter for the incorporation of Downing college, in the university of Cambridge.

When the house of commons was on the point of rising to-day, a man in the front of the gallery held forth a paper to the house, and exclaimed in a loud voice, "treason! treason! I wish to denounce treason to the house, whatever may be the consequences to myself." The speaker immediately ordered the gallery to be cleared, and the man, whose name is faid to be Matthews, was taken into custody by the messengers; but upon its evidently appearing that he was insane, he was instantally discharged.

An awful and fingular hail-storm occurred in Norwich. Two very vivid slashes of lightning illumined the southern and northern hemistheres, succeeded by heavy peals of thunder, while the hail, which fell profusely, appeared impregnated with fire.

Information being Boston. given upon oath, to the magistrates at Boston, that preparatize ons were making in some of the neighbouring villages to obstruct, by force, the deputy-lieutenants, in the execution of the militia-laws on the following days, expresses were immediately dispatched to Joshua Scrope, esq. captain commandant of the South Holland iquadron of loyal Lincolnshire gentletlemen, and yeomen cavalry, and to Thomas Wilson, esq. captain of the Spalding troop, to request their affiftance in repelling any unlawful force, and in maintaining the public peace. Although the commanding officers received this message very late in the evening, and many of the volunteers in their respective troops live at a great distance from each other, yet such was the zeal and alertness displayed in collecting them, that they arrived at Boston on Wednesday morning about 10. o'clock. A few minutes afterwards the rioters entered the town in a large body, blowing horns, and armed with staves, having forced into their company a great number of fervants and labourers in husbandry: but, feeing the cavalry drawn up in the market-place in military order, they were deterred from committing any act of violence whatever. The bufiness of the day (which was to receive and examine the lifts of perfons liable to serve in the present militia) then proceeded, and was completed, amidst the most perfect tranquillity; the volunteers, headed by their respective officers, parading the town during the greatest part of the day. Happily no violent measures were at all necessary, and no harm was done to any person. The cool and resolute conduct of the troops cannot be spoken of in too high terms of commendation.

The lord mayor's day was observed with the usual form. The procession by water was nearly the same as usual; but that by land much less splendid. Among the company who dined at Guildhall were many of prime distinction; the duke of York, prince Ernest, the prince of Orange, the lord chancellor, and almost all the great officers of state, many foreign ambassadors and general officers, Mr. Fox, &c. &c. The Tunisian ambassador, by his own desire, was present, but did not dine in the He drank coffee and fmoked hall. tobacco, in a room by himself, while the company were at dinner.

ed this night at the Sun public-house in Cow Cross, Smithfield. A riot in the house the night before having greatly disturbed the neighbourhood, the constables ordered the house to be cleared of the company, which consisted of a club of disorderly persons, who regularly met there. The fellows, expecting they would not be suffered to stay to their usual hour, had provided themselves with bludgeops and other offensive weapons, with which, on the officers demanding entrance, they sallied out, knocking down and ill-treating every one who came in their way. Seven persons were taken to St. Bartholomew's hospital; one of whom, a beadle, is since dead of his wounds. Three of the ring-leaders were next day committed to Clerkenwell bridewell for examination.

The following letter was this day transmitted to all the admirals and captains, whose names were mentioned in the Gazette by earl Howe, as having signalized themselves in the action of the 1st of June, 1794, accompanying the medal which has been presented to them.

" My Lord, (or Sir),

"The king having been pleased. to order a certain number of gold medals to be struck, in commemoration of the victory obtained by his Majesty's fleet under the command of earl Howe, over that of the enemy, in the actions of the 28th and 29th of May, and 1st of June, 1794, I am commanded by his majesty to present to your lordthip one of the medals above-mentioned; and to fignify his majefly's pleasure that you should wear it when in your uniform, in the manner described by the directions which (together with the medal and ribband belonging to it) I have the honour to transinit to you. I am also commanded by his majesty to acquaint your lordship, that, had it been possible for all the officers on whom his majesty is pleased to confer this mark of his approbation, to attend personally in London, his majesty would have presented the medal to each in person; but that of them being, from various causes, at this time impossible, his majesty, in order to obviate all further delay, has therefore been pleased to direct them to be forwarded in this manner. Allow me to express the great satisfaction I feel in being made the channel of communicating to your lordship, so distinguished a mark of his majesty's approbation. I have the honour to be, my lord, (or fir),

time

Your lordship's most obedient humble servant, "Spencer."

Admiralty, 30th Nov. 1796.

[The admirals to wear the medal suspended by a ribband round their necks. The captains to wear the medals suspended to a ribband, but sastened through the third and sourth button hole, on the lest side. The colour of the ribband blue and white.]

In lord Grenville's grounds 30th at Dropmore, Bucks, some labourers, in digging for a fishpond, have found a great number of oaks buried in the earth, twelve or fourteen feet deep; they are uncommonly large, some of them fifty feet long, and the greater part perfectly found. They were all laid close together, and nearly in one direction. If they have been deposited there by some great inundation, which is the general conjecture, it is rather fingular; for the place where they have been found is by far the highest spot in Buckinghamshire.

press of all the Russias. She had been indisposed several days previous to the 16th, but on the morning of that day was very chearful, and took her cossee as usual to breakfast. She afterwards went to the water closet, where she already had been twice in the course of the morning, and as the stayed an unutual time, her attendants became extremely alarmed. At length one of her pages went to the door to listen, and not hearing the least motion, called one of her principal female attendants, who opened the door, and found the empress extended on her back, with her feet towards the door, in an apo-Medical affistance plectic fit. was inflantly fent for; but three quarters of an hour elapsed before her chief physician, Dr Rogerson, arrived. She was then bled twice, and appeared to be much relieved, but never spoke afterwards. remained in this state till the following evening The pulfation of the heart was perceptible till nine o'clock; but a quarter before ten the physicians pronounced her dead. When opened, two stones were found in the gall-bladder, one of which weighed an ounce, and the other half an ounce, Ruffian weight, which is one third less than the English weight. empress was daughter of Christian Augustus, prince of Anhalt Zerbst, born May 2, 1729, married, Sept. 1, 1745, to Peter III. grandson of Peter the Great, who being deposed July 9, 1762, she was proclaimed fole empress of all the Russias. 1768, the established a new code of laws through her dominions; and the fame year she submitted to the hazard of inoculation for the benefit of her dominions, where it was unknown; and the experiment, under Baron Dimfdale, fucceeded perfectly, and was commemorated by an annual thanksgiving. first war in which she engaged was with the Turks in 1769, which continued five years; and, July 21, 1774, peace was figued, whereby the the Crimea was declared independent of the Porte, a large tract of country between the Bog and the Dnieper, was ceded to Russia, befides several islands restored, with free navigation in all the Turkish feas, including the passage of the Dardanelles, privileges granted to the most favoured nations, and stipulations in favour of the inhabitants of Moldavia and Wallachia. In 1782, she concluded a commercial treaty with Portugal, and, in 1783, with the Danes; and, 1782, founded the order of Wladimir. In 1783, she opened a communication with both Indies. In 1784, the granted free trade to the coasts of the Euxine sea, and took a journey to the Crimea. In 1787, the endeavoured to establish an East-India trade, ordered the geography of her empire to be explored; established three new universities 1786; and, among other exertions in fayour of the arts, purchased the Houghton collection of pictures 1779, and Mr. Lyde Brown's collection of antique statues. War was again declared with the Porte 1787. She had an interview with the emperor of Germany at Cherfon, and with the king of Poland at Kiow, the same year: the former joined her in the war with the In 1788, war was de-Turks. clared against Sweden; and the Ruslian troops entered Poland by force, and demanded quarters and forage. In this war her Imperial majesty possessed herself of Oczakow, with the flaughter of only The war between 12,000 men. Russia and the Porte still continuing, Great Britain, whose mediation had been rejected by the former, began to arm in 1791, in defence of the latter. Peace was at length figned that year between the two rival powers, the Porte making large cessions of territory to the empress; and between Ruffia and Sweden 1791. After the attack of the Thuilleries, and deposition of Louis XVI. on Aug. 1792, the empress recalled her ambassador from France, and ordered the French ambassador to quit her capital in eight days. Whatever be the moral character of this great princess, the always exerted the most surprizing talents and abilities: Ruflia has been exalted to a pitch of grandeur and cultivation which Peter the Great can only be faid to have begun. Her rapid progress from weakness and barbarism to civilization and a mighty state, with dominions extended by every effort of political skill and artifice, has been most aftonishing. Providence, whose ways are beyond the reach of human reason or conjecture, permitted Catharine II to make this use of her usurped dominion, and to anticipate, by the removal of a weak confort, by means unwarranted by every principle of justice and humanity, that most important of all revolutions in the hiftory of human kind, the civilization of fo large a portion of the human race, and the cultivation of the wildest and most untrodden For whom of her fuccesdefarts. fors it may be referred to annihilate, the Ottoman power is not for us to fay. Her only fon and successor to the crown, Paul Petrowitz, was born Oct. 1, 1754, married Oct. 1, 1776, to the princess Sophia Dorothea of Wirtemberg Stutgard, who, after her conversion to the Greek religion, took the name of Maria Federowna, and by whom he has three children.

When

When the empress was taken ill, the present emperor was at Gatchina, a country palace, about 28 English miles from St. Petersburg. He reached the capital about eight in the evening; and, immediately after his mother's decease, was proclaimed before the palace in the usual form; and the whole court, which was there afsembled in anxious expectation from the morning of the empreis's accident to the moment of her death, immediately took the oath of allegiance to the new fovereign, as did also the four regiments of guards; and everything passed with the greatest order and tranquillity.

At the George inn, Northampton, on his journey from Buxton to London, that respectable veteran of the bar, Edward Bearcroft, esq. M. P. for Saltash, chief-justice for Chester, and a king's counsel; whose memory will be long and fincerely respected by all who had the honour of his friendship, or enjoyed the pleasure of his fociety.

Mr. Bearcroft was an example of industry and perseverance at the Many years he had hardly practice enough to support him with the severest economy, and thought of relinquishing the law in despair; but, in time, his good fense and knowledge of the law excited confidence, and, till his hearing was affected, he was one of the most fuccessful of its profestors, particularly in cases were legal opinions were requifite.

DECEMBER.

This day the tide in every part of the Thames was very high. In Tooley-fireet the inhabitants were taken out in boats; and a large quantity of foreign wheat, upon the ground floors of the warehouses, was much damaged.

The following mode of raif-5th. ing the loan of 18 millions was proposed and recommended by the bank directors on Wednesday last. One million was subscribed by the bank in their corporate capacity, and four hundred thousand pounds by the directors individually; and before the close of the books the first day, five millions were subscribed by different merchants and others. At ten o'clock this morning the parlour doors at the bank were opened, before which time the lobby was crowded. Numbers could not get near the books at all; while others, to testify their zeal, called to the perfons at the books then figning, to put down their names for them, as they were fearful of being shut about twenty minutes At past eleven, the subscription was declared to be completely full, and hundreds in the room were reluctantly obliged to go away. the post innumerable orders came from the country for subscriptions to be put down, scarcely one of which could be executed. long after the fubscription was closed, persons continued coming. and were obliged to depart disap-It is a curious fact, and well worth stating, that the subscription completely filled in fifteen hours and twenty minutes: hours on Thursday, six ditto on Friday, fix ditto on Saturday, and one ditto and twenty minutes on Monday—fifteen hours, twenty minutes.

The duke of Bridgewater actually tually tendered a draft at fight on ris, another of the club, it aphis banker, for the 100,000l. which he subscribed to the new loan! which of course could not be accepted, as the act is not yet passed.

Francis Dunn was indicted 9th. for the wilful murder of David Brewer, by giving him several wounds on the head, and in the side, with a clasp knife, on Thursday the 10th of November, and William Arnold and William Ryan, for aiding and abetting him in the On the night of said murder. Wednesday the 9th of November, the patroles observed two men go up Pipe-maker's alley, near Cow Cross, and, following them up, observed one of them, which proved to be Dunn, with a knife in his hand. They interrogated him as to what he was doing with it; but he refusing to fatisfy them, they took him to the watch-house, of which the deceased, Mr. Brewer, was the keeper; however, as they had no charge against them, and a publican appearing in their behalf, they were discharged. The next night there was a club held at the Sun, Cow Cross, at which, among others, was a witness of the name of Toombs, who stated that, on his refusing to sing, several persons infulted him; and that the prisoner, Dunn, even went so far as to tear his coat, on which he went down, and brought up three watch-On their coming into the room, and one of them proposing to secure the door, they all, to the amount of twenty-five or twentyfix, began to attack the watchmen. Dunn knocked one of them down, the house, in doing which they were in the room. From one Har- his blood; he was afterwards taken peared, that when they got into the street, they missed one of their. party, whereupon they returned to the Sun, and, finding the door fastened, Dunn and Ryan got in at the window, and then opened the door for the rest; but not finding their companion, one of them suggested he might be taken to the watch-house, to which Dunn went first, Williams next, then Arnold, and the rest followed. Another witness, and the deceased, Brewer, feeing them coming, shut. to the upper part of the door, it shutting with a hatch; this they foon forced open, and three of them entered; when two women fwore to feeing one of them strike Mr. Brewer over the head, and another punching him on the fide. They then came out, and being met by another party, Dunn faid to them, " Damn him, I've cut his bloody eyes out." Dunn at this time had a knife in his hand, which, as he came out of the watch-house, he was noticed to wipe on his coat; Arnold also had a knife in his hand a and it was proved by several witnesses, and two accomplices, that the whole party proceeded in a riotous manner, knocking down feveral watchmen, and that Dunn in particular kept his knife in his hand, and feeing one of the patrole at the corner of the street in their way, he ran up to him, and cut him under the chin, and his coat behind; and after this he made a thrust at a gentleman whom they met as he was turning up Saffronhill. After they left the watchand they were glad to get out of house, Mr. Brewer came to the door, wiping his face, and standwere followed by the whole that ing, as the witnesses termed it, in to St. Bartholomew's hospital, and on the Saturday evening he expired; previous to which, however, he faid to one Willey, and to Coleman, that he was a dead man, and that he believed the man whom they brought to the watch-house the night before with a knife, was one of them that had cut him, and the cutting drover another.—On being asked if they meant Arnold, they faid, yes. The furgeon defcribed Mr. Brewer to have received three wounds, one at the top of the head through the ikull; another in the left temple down to the chin, which went the whole length to the bone; and a third under the blade-bone of the right shoulder, three inches long, and one inch deep; these wounds brought on an inflammation, that inflammation a fever, and were consequently the cause of his death. Arnold was taken the next day in Smithfield, Ryan a few days after on board the Sans-Pareil at Spithead, and Dunn in the neighbourhood of Cow-Cross. Being called upon for their defence, Ryan faid, conscious of his own innocence with respect to the murder, he should leave it with his counsel. Mr. Justice Grose then fummed up the evidence, and explained the law upon the case, particularizing the different points as as they were corroborated against either or all the prisoners; observing also the difference, as it appeared to him, there was in the guilt of the prisoners.

The jury, after remaining out of court about twenty minutes, brought in their verdict - Dunn and Arnold, guilty.—Ryan, not guilty.

As the recorder was proceeding to pais tentence on them, Dunn faid he had a favour to beg of the court, which was, that as but one life had been loft, the law would be fatisfied with one as an atonement. He fought not to fave his own life. for he had unfortunately for the last ten years committed innumerable offences; and therefore, if mercy could be shewn, his fellow sufferer was more deferving of it than himself: all he could hope for was the indulgence of a little more time than was commonly allowed in these cases, to make his peace with God. The recorder declared that it was not in his power to grant either, and then pronounced the fentence to be, that they be executed on Monday following, and that their bodies be delivered to the furgeons for diffection; which was executed accordingly.

Such quantities of ice came down the river this day with the land-waters on the ebb-tide, as to block up some of the arches of London-bridge. The navigation of the river above bridge is already much impeded thereby. Such an accumulation, on so short a frost, is rather rare in this country.

At a common hall, the livery of London instructed their representatives in parliament to move or support a motion in the house of commons, for censuring the ministers, for having taken upon themselves to send the money of the people of Great Britain to the emperor of Germany, during the sitting of parliament, without the consent of parliament.

This morning, when the turnkeys of Newgate were preparing to remove the convicts fentenced to Botany Bay, among whom was the celebrated major Semple, who, it feems, had flattered himself with the hopes of pardon, pardon, he requested permission to return to his cell, which was granted. Under pretence of searching for some necessaries, in the presence of Mr. Kirby, jun. he suddenly drew a knife, and stabbed himself in the body. He now lies extremely ill, resuses every kind of sustenance, and declares he is determined to put an end to his existence.

27th. Dublin. The following are copies of letters received by the right hon. the lord mayor.

" My Lord,

"I am directed by my lord lieutenant to acquaint your lordship, that his excellency has received intelligence from lieutenant-general Dalrymple, stating, that a fleet had been seen steering for Bantry Bay, which it was supposed was French; also, that the Kangaroo sloop of war had passed through the said fleet the 21st instant, and having reported to vice-admiral Kingsmill that it appeared to belong to the enemy, had sailed for England, to give information to the admiralty.

"Under these circumstances, his excellency has thought it expedient to take all precautionary measures, in case the enemy should attempt a landing, and his excellency has the sullest reliance on the zeal and loyalty of the citizens and inhabitants of Dublin, which have already been so conspicuous, to second and sacilitate the measures which, in case of emergency, it will be necessary for the government to adopt.

Thave the honour to be, &c. &c. Thomas Pelham."

To the right honourable the lord mayor, Ec.

Dublin-Castle, 29th Dec. 1796.

" My Lord,

" The last accounts from general Dalrymple are by his aid-de-camp, captain Gordon, who left Bantry at ten o'clock on Tuesday, A. M. and arrived here this morning. Seventeen sail of French ships were at that time at anchor on the lower part of Bear island, but at such a distance that their force could not be afcertained. A lieutenant of a French frigate was driven on thore in his boat, in attempting to quit his vessel, which was dismasted, to the admiral. He confirms the account of the fleet being French, with hostile views to this country, but does not appear to know whether the whole fleet, which confifted of about seventeen sail of the line, fifteen frigates, and, including transports and luggers, amounted to fifty fail, were all to re-affemble off Bantry. General Hoche was on board, commanding a confiderable force.

I have the honour to be, my lord, your lordship's most obedient fervant, T. Pelham."

This afternoon lord Malmef-bury arrived in town from France; the negotiation at Paris having been abruptly broken off by an order for his quitting Paris in 48 hours.

the horses coming to market being seized for the use of the army, the citizens are likely to suffer the greatest inconvenience; for now no persons will venture to town with their cattle or provisions; hence the necessity of applying to gentlemen of large study, whose immediate duty and interest it is to come forward at this season, not only only with their lives and fortunes, but also with their cattle.

To obviate this inconvenience, the mayor has published to the following effect:

"The mayor defires that the countrymen will bring in as usual, to the markets of Cork, all kinds of corn, potatoes, milk, and butter, and every other supply of provisions. He declares and assures to them, their horses, cars, &c. &c. will not be taken, or be molested in the least.

"The horses that have been given, and taken for the use of the army, are well fed with hay and oats, and proper attention paid to them, and the owners will be entitled to five shillings per day for each horse, and each man one shilling, while out on duty.

"The mayor requests and calls on all gentlemen of the city, who have not already sent their horses on duty, to send him in their numbers, that, in case more be wanted, he may know where to call for them.

Wednesday, December 28."

Gross produce of the revenue of the post-office for three years, to April 5, 1795:

The year ending April 5, L. s. d

1793, - - 627,592 12 0 1794, - - 691,268 11 9 1795 - - 705,319 10 9

The gross produce for the year ending April 5, 1796, as near as can be taken, amounts to 787,3041.

The Norwich bills of mortality for the last year stand thus: christened, males 467, semales 430; buried, males 477, semales 570. Thirty-one sewer births than in the year 1795, and a decrease in burials of sitty-one.

The hop duty of the last year; rough puffing, amounts only to 77,241l. as appears by the followsing correct returns from the several districts; viz.

Kent - 45,563
Suffex - 13,100
Worcester - 10,050
Farnham - 4,501
Estex, North Clays, &cc. 4,027

Total, L.77,241:

The exports of British and for reign manufactures and merchandize from this country in the year 1795, amounted to 27,123,3381.—and in 1796, to 29,904,6351.—Majority in favour of the last year, 1,781,2971.

The quantity of Porter, brewed by the first twelve houses in the London Porter Brewery, for the last two years, ending on the 5th instant each year, is as follows:

	1795.	1796.
	Barrels.	Barrels.
Whitbread	158800	202000
. Thrale	122300	137800
Shum	101700	110700
Hanbury	99000	109100
Goodwin	70500	97500
Calvert (F)	83400	97900
Meux	121000	96600
Calvert (J)	56600	67000
Elliot	46700	58200
Clowes	40000	55700
Steventon	394c o	45806
Phillips	38800	42600

The increase of the quantity of porter, brewed since the beginning of the present reign, is immense.

During the year ending in 1761 the quantity brewed in London amounted to 975,217 barrels of thirty-fix gallons each. The number

er of brewers was then fifty two.
lut in the year ending July, 1795, he quantity brewed by only twelve rewers exceeded the above by 800 barrels.

The number of Bankrupts fince he commencement of the present var, is nearly as great as during he whole period of the American var. From 1775 to 1782 inclu-ive, there were 3742; from 1793 to 1796 inclusive, 3608. The difference is therefore only 134.

Naval Officers. — The number of officers of his majesty's sleet, under the description of admirals, captains, masters and commanders, and lieutenants, made up to the end of this year, and just published under the direction of the admiralty board, is,

Admirals of different ranks - 97
Captains - - 494
Masters, and commanders 289
Lieutenants - - 1560

Total 2840

193 |

70

There has been no promotion of admirals fince June 1795; 52 post-captains have been made in the course of the last year, 92 masters and commanders, and 225 lieutenants.

The following is a list of vessels, of different nations, that have paid the Sound duties, from Dec. 31, 1795, to Dec. 31, 1796:—

4455 British Danish 2157 Swedish 2505 1773 Prussians Pappenburgers 232 Dantzic 349 Hamburgh 40 120 Oldenburgh 93 Bremen

Rostock

Lubeck

 Courland
 —
 —
 7

 Russia
 —
 —
 7

 America
 —
 —
 169

 Portuguese
 —
 —
 14.

 Spaniards
 —
 —
 25

 Dutch
 —
 —
 1

Total — 12,113 ships.

From the Sound lift for the years 1792, 3, 4, 5, and 6, it appears that the commerce of Europe to the northern states has fluctuated every year for these five years past; but at last seems to have so far recovered itself, that, in 1795, it has. arrived to the same pitch as in 1772, there being only one ship more in the latter period than the former. It also appears that the commerce of Europe to thole states was less by 300 ships in 1795 than in any former year fince 1792, which must be attributed to the hard winter and long frost, which must be severely felt in the northern feas. The British commerce has still kept up its prosperity, and all the five years is at the head of the list; while those of the Dutch, which used to be next, has dwindled from 2181 to none in 1795, and only one in 1796; and the French, from 128 in 1790, to 25 in 1792, and not one ship any year after.

BIRTHS in the Year 1796.

Jan. 4. Countess of Aboyne, a daughter.

7. Princess of Wales, a princess.

14. Lady of Richard Brinsley Sheridan, esq. M. P. a son.

Lady of col. Gerard Noel Edwards, M. P. a daughter.

Hon.

Feb. 16. Lady of Samuel Whitbread, jun. esq. M. P. a son.

50] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

Hon. Mrs. Leigh, of Addelstrop, Oxfordshire, a daughter.

18. Lady Brownlow, a daugh-

19. Lady of fir William Elliot, of Stobbs, bart. a son.

27. Lady Le Deipencer, a daughter.

28. Lady of lord Kilmaine, a daughter.

March 1. Lady of fir James Bland Burges, bart. a fon.

18. Lady Eliz. Spencer, a fon.

Lady of William Cunliffe Shawe, efq. M. P. a fon.

Hon. Mrs. Vaughan, lady of Dr.

Vaughan, a daughter.

22. Counters of Oxford, a daughter.

- 25. Viscounters Fielding, a son and heir.
- 27. Lady of fir Gilbert Heathcote, bart. a son.

30. Lady of George Sumner, esq. M. P. 2 son.

31. Duchess of Leinster, a son.

April. 4. Lady of fir John Turner bart. a fon.

Lady of sir John Dryden, bart. a son.

9. Lady of the hon. lieut. col. Forbes, a fon.

12. Lady of sir William Smith;

bart. a daughter.

Lately, lady of Reginald Pole

Carew, M. P. a daughter.

May 6. Lady of Alexander Allardyce, M. P. a daughter.

9. Countess of Cassilis, a daughter.

15. Lady of fir Thomas Which-cote, bart. a daughter.

18. Marchion. of Blandford, a fon.

31. Countess of Darnley, a daughter.

June 11. Lady of Richard Ald-worth Neville, esq. a son.

16. Lady of fir John Sinclair, bart. a daughter.

21. Lady Susan Ryder, a daugh-

July 1. Mrs. Ainsworth, wife of Mr. I homas Ainsworth, of Layland, in Lancashire, of her twenty-ninth child.

29. Lady Charlotte Duncombe, a fon.

Countess Paulett, a son.

Lady of Charles Duncombe, eq. M. P. a ion and heir.

zug. 1. Lady Rous, a son.

5. Vitcountets Milfintown, a son.

10. Lady Sondes, a fon.

11. Lady of fir William Rowley, bart. a fon.

16. Countess of Dalkeith, a daughter.

21. Marchioness of Titchfield, a son and heir.

25. Lady of fir Thomas Turton, bart. a daughter.

31. Lady Cuningham, a daugh-

Hon. Mrs. Temple, a fon.

Sept. 13. Lady Augusta Clavering, a son.

20. Lady Elizabeth Loftus, a fon.

22. I ady Cathcart, a daughter.

30. Lady of fir James Sanderfon, bart. a daughter.

Dowager countels Winterton, a fon.

OA. 2. Lady George Murray, a fon.

3. Lady of Thomas Anson, esq. M. P. a son.

16. Lady of fir Montague Burgoyne, bart. a son and heir.

26. Counteis of Breadalbane, 4

Nov. 3. Lady of the right hon. Henry Addington, speaker of the house of commons, a daughter.

7. Lady of William Manning.

esq. M P. a son.

9. Lady of fir Charles Oakley, bart, a son.

MAR-

MARRIAGES in the Year 1796.

Jan. 6. George Henry Rose, esq. M. P. for Southampton, and son of George Rose, esq. secretary of the treasury, and M. P. for Christchurch, to miss Duncombe, daughter and coheires of the late Thomas Duncombe, esq.

10. Lady Wilson, relict of the late judge Wilson, to captain Griffiths of the navy.

Feb. 6. Thomas Gardiner Bramston, esq. eldest son of Thomas Berney Bramston, esq. M. P. for Essex, to miss Blaauw, daughter of William Blaauw, esq.

9. Earl of Powerscourt, to miss Brownlow.

Robert Liston, esq. ambassador to the Sublime Porte, to miss Henrietta Marchant, of Antigua.

28. Earl of Guildford, to miss Coutts, daughter of Thomas Coutts, esq. banker, in the Strand.

March 1. Henry Thornton, esq. M. P. to mis Sykes, daughter of Joseph Sykes, esq. of West Ella, Yorkshire.

Lately, James Dalrymple, esq. to the countess dowager of Haddington.

- 16. Hon. Thomas Parker, brother to the earl of Macclesfield, to miss Edwards, daughter of Lewis Edwards, esq. of Talgerth, Merionethshire.
- 29. Sir Robert Wilmot, bart. to mis Grimston, daughter of the late Robert Grimston, esq. of Neswick, Yorkshire.

April 16. Earl Temple, to lady Anne Elizabeth Brydges, daughter of the late duke of Chandos.

19. Edward Wilbraham Bootle, esq. M. P. to mis Taylor, daughter of the rev. Edward Taylor, of Bi-frons, Kent.

27. Sir Thomas Henry Liddell, bart. to mis Maria Simpson, daughter of the late John Simpson, esq. of Bradley.

26. Mr. Taylor, surgeon, at Sevenoaks, to lady Louisa Stanhope, daughter of earl Stanhope.

Lord Porchester, son of the earl of Carnarvon, to mis Ackland, daughter of Lady Harriet Ackland.

Lately, capt. Talbot, to Lady Elizabeth Strangeways, daughter of the earl of lichester.

May 3. Hon. and right rev. dr. William Stuart, bishop of St. David's, to miss Penn, daughter of the late hon. Thomas Penn, esq. proprietor of Pennsylvania.

11. Sir Edmund Head, bart. to mis Western, of Cokethorpe, Oxfordshire.

Thomas Sherlock Gooch, esq. eldest son of Sir Thomas Gooch, bart. to mis Whittaker, sister of Abraham Whittaker, esq. of Lyston-house, Herefordshire.

14. Hugh Dillon Massey, esq. eldest son of sir Hugh Massey, bart. to mis S. Hankey, daughter of the 'late Thomas Hankey, esq.

June 3. George Wright, esq. only son of sir James Wright, bart. to mise Maclane, only daughter and heiress to the late Charles Maclane, esq. of Okingham.

11. Sir George Glyn, bart. to miss Catharine Powell, daughter and coheires of the laterev. Gervas Powell, of Lanhara, in Glamorganshire.

25. Sir Richard Gamon, bart. M.

P. to Lady Amelia Cooke.

Sir Nigel Bowyer Gresley, bart.

to miss Garway of Worcester.

27. Rev. Charles Talbot, second fon of the hon. and rev. Charles Tal-E 2 bot, bot, to lady Elizabeth Somerset, daughter of the duke of Beaufort.

30. Hon. William Leeson, brother of the earl of Miltown, to miss Buchanan.

July 4. Lord Andover, to miss Coke, daughter of Thomas William Coke, esq. of Holkham, Norsolk, M. P.

Lieutenant Sloper, son of general fir Robert Sloper, K. B. to miss Kent, daughter of 'Thomas Kent, esq. 1ps-wich.

5. Lord Blayney, to the hon. miss Alexander, daughter of lord Caledon.

16. Dr. Spencer Madan, bishop of Peterborough, to miss Vyse, sister of general Vyse.

25. Lieutenant-colonel Pigott, to mis Mary Monckton, daughter of the hon. John Monckton.

26. William Wingfield, esq. to lady Charlotte Digby, sister of the earl of Digby.

Aug. 3. Hon. William Hay Carr, brother to the earl of Errol, to miss Elliot, daughter of Samuel Elliot, esq. of Antigua.

6. Lieutenant-colonel Denzil Onflow, to the hon. miss Petre, daughter of lord Petre.

9. Joseph Mawbey, esq. son of sir Joseph Mawbey, bart, to mis Henchman, daughter of Thomas Henchman, esq. of New Burlington-street.

12. Sir William Ramsey, of Banff, bart. to mis Biscoe, of Edward-street, Portman-Iquare.

11. Francis John Brown, esq. M. P. for Dorset, to miss Francis Richards, daughter of the rev. John Richards, of Langbridge, Dorset.

30. Robert Dundas, esq. son of the right hon. Henry Dundas, to mis Saunders, daughter of the late admiral sir Charles Saunders.

Sept. 2. Sir Thomas Parkyns, bart. to miss Boultkees of Leicester.

6. Sir John Davis, bart. to miss Lemon, daughter of fir William Lemon, bart.

22. Edmund Hornby, esq to lady Catharine Stanley, daughter of the earl of De:by.

20. Sir Thomas Gage, bart. to mis Charlotte Campbell, cousin to lord Cawdor.

Oct. 1. Rev. Samuel Wilson Warneford, of Broughton, Oxford-shire, to miss Loveden, daughter of Edward Loveden Loveden esq. of Buscot Park, Berks.

7. Lord Templetown, to lady Mary Montagu, daughter of the earl of Sandwich.

11. John Thomas Stanley, efq. eldest son of sir John Stanley, bart to the bon. mis Holroyd, daughter of lord Sheffield.

Nov. 18. John Wodehouse, esq. eldest son of sir John Wodehouse, bart. to miss Norris, only daughter of the late John Norris, esq. of Wilton Park, Norfolk.

Bruhl, to miss Chowne, heires of the late Thomas Chowne, esq.

Dec. 10. Hon. Cropley Ashley, brother to the earl of Shastesbury, to lady Anne Spencer, daughter of the duke of Marlborough.

PROMOTIONS in the Year 1796.

Jan. 16. Major-general Prince Edward—a lieutenant-general.

Feb. 27. John earl of Bute—vifcount Mountjoy, earl of Windsor, and marquis of the county of Bute.

20. Walter Farquhar, M. D.—a bart.

Rear-admiral Hugh Clobery Christian-K. B.

27. David

27. David Smyth, esq. of Methven—one of the commissioners of justiciary in Scotland.

Allan Machonochies, esq.—one of the lords of session in Scotland.

March 10. Robert Liston, esq. ambassador to the Sublime Porte—envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States of America.

Edward Thornton, esq. —secretary of legation to the said United States.

12. Earl Howe—admiral of the fleet and general of marines.

Lord Bridport—vice-admiral of Great Britain.

Hon. William Cornwaliis—rearadmiral of Great Britain.

Cipt. sir Edward Pellew, knt.—a baronet.

- 18. Captain Charles Mitchel—a knt.
- 21. William Bellingham, efq.—a bart.
- 23. William Watson, esq. a knt.
- 24. Samuel lord Hood—master of Greenwich hospital, and one of the commissioners or governors thereof.

April 5. George Pownall, esq.—a knt.

16. George earl of Stamford—baron Delamere and earl of Warrington.

29. Earl of Kinnoul and fir Grey Cooper, bart.—privy-counfellors.

30. John Coxe Hippisley, Wharton Amcotts, Edmund Cradock Hartopp, Thomas Turton and Robert Baker, esqrs.—baronets.

May 3. Earl of Leven and Melville—his majesty's commissioner to the general assembly of the church of Scotland.

- 11. Francis d'Ivernois, esq.—a
 - 18. Charles earl of Northampton

—lord-lieutenant of Northamptonshire.

14. Lieutenant-generals, sir D. Lindsay, bart. E. Maxwell Brown, Eyre Massey, George Warde, Flower Mocher, sir R. Sloper, K. E. Staates Long Morris, Ralph earl of Ross, sir R. Pigot, barr. sir J. Dalling, bart. Russel Manners, Thomas Hall, James Grant, sir W. Fawcett, K. B. William marquis of Lothian, K. T. sir C. Grey, K. P. sir Thomas Spencer Wilson, bart. George Morrison, Thomas Clarke, and Charles Rainsford—to be generals in the army.

Major-generals Anthony George Martin, Benjamin Gordon, hon. Thomas Bruce, George Ainslie, James Adeane, Edward Smith, Thomas Bland, Felix Buckley, Charles William Lyon, Henry Watfon Powell, Thomas Stirling, George Garth and Richard Grenville—to be lieutenant generals in the army.

Colonels, George Bernard, of the 84th foot, George Nugent, of the 85th foor, John Bowater, of the marines, Thomas Averne, of the marines, Thomas Duval, half-pay of the marines, James Barker, half-pay of the 56th foot, John Campbell, of the marines, Charles Tarrant, of the engineers in Ireland, William Lewis, of the marines, John Barclay of the marines, William Macormick halfpay, William Maddox Richardfon, of the 64th foot, John Freke, half-pay of the 39th foot, Richard England, of the 24th foot, William Keppel, of a West India regiment, John H. Hutchinson, of the 94th foot, John Hamilton, of the late &1 & foot, Alexander Hay, of the 109th foot, Thomas Goldie, of the late 82d foot, Robert Douglas, of the 47th foot, Simon Fraser of the 3d foot, Thomas Davis, of the artillery, Robert Manners, of the 3d foot guards, William Loftus, of the 24th dragoons, William Myers, of a West India regiment, Frederick George Mulcaster, of the engineers, Oliver Nicols, of a West India regiment, Alexander Mercer, of the engineers, George Hewitt, of the 92d foot, and James Hartley, of the 75th foot—to be major-generals in the army.

E 3

Colonels, Patrick Ross, Erskine, Robert Stuart, Thomas Geils, Joseph Bilcliffe, Edward Ellerker, Gabriel Johnston, George Deare, William Sydenham, Edward Rawstorne, James Nichol, Charles Ware, and George Conyngham—to be major-generals in the East Indies

only.

28. Charles lord Hawkesburyearl of Liverpool.

28. Samuel baron Hood, of Ireland-viscount Hood of Great Britain.

31. Francis earl of Moray, of Ireland—baron Stuart of Castle Stuart, in Invernessihire.

John earl of Galloway—baron Steward of Garlies, in the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright.

James earl of Courtown of Ireland -baron Saltersford, in Cheshire.

George earl of Macartney, in Ireland—baron Macartney of Parkhurst, in Surry.

John Christian Burton, viscount Downe of Ireland—baron Dawnay of Cowick, Yorkshire.

George viscount Middleton, of Ireland—baron Brodrick, of Peppes Harrow, Surry.

Alexander baron Bridport of Ireland-baron Bridport of Great Britain.

Sir John Rous, bart.—baron Rous. Sir Henry Gough Calthorpe, bart. —baron Calthorpe.

Sir Peter Burrell, bart.—baron Gwydir.

Sir Francis Basset, bart.—basset De Dunstanville...

Edward Lascelles, esq. - baron, Harewood.

John Rolle, esq.—haron Rolle. John Campbell, esq.—lord Cawdor.

June 1. William Campbell, esq. —governor of the Bermuda 1stands.

6. Edward Cooke, elq.—under fecretary in the military department of the chief secretary's office in Ireland.

Barry earl of Farnham and Sackville Hamilton, esq.—privy-counfellors of Ireland.

July 12. Lady Willoughby de Eresby—lady of the bedchamber to the princess of Wales.

13. Captain Thomas Williams of the royal navy—a knt.

16. Sir Joshua Vanneck, bart. baron Huntingfield, of the kingdom of Ireland.

Robert Smith, esq -baron Car rington of the kingdom of Ireland.

Major general Henry lord Mulgrave — governor of Scarborough Castle.

Major-general Thomas Musgrave governor of Gravefend and Tilbury.

Colonel William Goodday Strutt -deputy-governor of Stirling Caffle.

20. Sir John Morshead, bart. furveyor-general to the prince of Walts.

Sir William Cuningham, bart.one of the state council to the prince of Wales, for the principality of Wales.

Thomas Tyrwhitt, esq. private secretary to the prince of Walcaprivy-feal and auditor of the duchy of Cornwall.

23. Francis James Jackson, elq. -ambassador to the Ottoman Port.

Charles

Charles Medows Pierrepont—baron Pierrepont and viscount Newark.

Charles earl of Liverpool—to bear the arms of Liverpool, together with his family arms, by the express desire of the corporation of Liverpool.

Hon. John Rodney—commissioner of the victualling-office.

Marquis Townshend—governor of Jersey.

General sir William Fawcett, K. B.—governor of Chelsea Hospital.

Robert Cullen, esq.—lord of the session in Scotland.

The prince of Wales colonel of the 10th regiment of dragoons.

August 2. Generals John duke of Argyll, Jessrey lord Amherst, Studholme Hodgson, George marquis Townshend, lord Frederick Cavendish, and Charles duke of Richmond—field-marshals.

20. Robert viscount Castlereagh

-earl of Londonderry.

Sept. 1. Hon. Arthur Paget, secretary of embassy to the court of Madrid.

Benjamin Garlike, esq.—secretary of legation to the court of Berlin.

21. John earl of Chatham—prefident of the council.

Dupplin, his fon—lord Lyon king at arms for Scotland.

OA. 10. General Henry Lawes, earl of Carhampton—commander in chief of the forces in Ireland.

Nov. 3. Major-general fir Ralph Abercromby, K. B.—colonel of the 2d regiment of dragroons.

Major-general Welbore Ellis Doyle —colonel of the 53d regiment of toot.

Major-general Gerard Lake—colonel of the 73d regiment of foot.

General lord Adam Gordon—go. vernor of Edinburgh Castle.

Lieutenant-general Charles Rainsford—governor of Tinmouth Castle.

30. John duke of Roxburgh—a privy-counsellor.

30. Lieutenant-colonel Charles

Green—governor of Grenada.

Dec. 3. Major-general John Graves Simcoe—governor of such parts of St. Domingo as are in the possession of the British.

3. Major-general the honourable Charles Stuart—general in Portugal only.

3. Major general Simon Fraser
—lieutenant general in Portugal

only.

3. Colonel fir James St. Clair Erskine, bart.—brigadier and adjutant general in Portugal only.

3. Colonel William Anne Villettes—biigadier-general in Portugal

only.

3. Brevet-major Robert Stuart—deputy adjutant-general and lieute-nant-colonel in Portugal only.

Lieutenant - colonel Hildebrand Oakes—quarter-master-general, with the rank of colonel in Portugal only.

15. William Elliot—minister plenipotentiary to the elector palatine, and minister to the diet of Ratishon. -

DEATHS in the Year 1796.

Jan. 7. Frances viscountess Kenmore.

10. George, lord Harvey.

13. Mr. John Anderson, F.R.SS.
London and Edinburgh, and professor of natural philosophy in the university of Glasgow, in the 70th year of his age, and 41st of his professorship. He was author of E 4 many useful and ingenious inventions, and lived to see, besides other works, five editions of his valuable institutes of physicks.

16. In his 56th year, Henry-William Portman, etq. of Bryan-fione-place, co. Dorfet; whose large chates in the west of England, and in the county of Middle-fex comprising the ground-rents of Portman-square, and several streets in its neighbourhood), devolve to his only son, Henry Berkley P. esq. M. P. for the city of Wells.

Mr. Chas. Leving, bart.

18. Hon. Robert Fitzmaurice Deare.

19. Wm. lord Belhaven.

Sir William Burrell, bart, LL D. chancellor to the bithop of Worcelter, 1764; F. R and A. SS. 1754; and committioner of excite, 1774. He was third fon of Peter Burrell, efg. of Beckenham, Kent; admitted of St. John's college, Cambridge, where he fludied the civil law, and proceeded Li.B. 1775, and LL.D. 1780. He married, April 13, 1773, Sophia, daughter of Charles Raymond, efq. of Valentine-house, Effex, who was created a baronet May 3, 1774, with remainder, in default of maleidue, to William Burrell, etq. of Beckenham, and his heirs-male by Sophia his wife, by whom he has left two fons and two daughters.

his 30th year, Samuel Crumpe, M.D. M. R. I. A. He was gifted with talents, and possessed of information, that promised to raise him to an high degree of eminence in his profession, and in the literary world. He had acquired no small celebrity, as an author, by the publication of "An Inquiry into the Nature and Properties of Opium," and of "An Essay on the best Means of providing Employment for the People; which last was honoured with a prize-medal by the royal Irish academy, and procured him admission among the members of that body.

27. Sophia Maria Josepha, vifcounters Southwell, of Ireland.

29. Dowager lady Throckmortos. Lately, in his 80th year, Mr. John Fyfield, of Stanbridge, near Romfey, a man of a most eccentric turn of mind and great fingularity of conduct; the manor of Stanbridgehe inherited from his ancestors, and it had been many generations in his family. He was of a penurious difposition, yet would scarcely ever fuffer any of the timber on his eftate to be felled, though it abounded with the finest in the country, a great deal of which was yearly perithing; the price of 50 guines had indeed once tempted him to part with his far famed oak-tree, but he repented of his bargain, and was happy to repurchase it, almost immediately after, at a higher price. All repairs of his mansion were prohibited, as an ufeless extravagance that would bring him to poverty; and whilft fuch a fuperfluity of materials as would amply have repaid the expences, and rendered his habitation comfortable, were rotting at his door, he choice rather to reside in it with the roof open in many places to the heavens, with hardly an apartment that afforded shelter from the weather. and with the joitts and floors rotting with the wet that entered: the out-buildings were in a fimilar state of decay, and their repair was alike prohibited. He was totally blind for many of the latter years. of his life, when his chief enjoyment was a pint of strong beer, which he usually quaffed twice or thrice a week at the Duke's Head, at Great Bridge (about a mile from his own house), whither he was led by a boy that confiantly attended him. For a long feries of time he had a strong antipathy to the making of a will, confidering it as a prelude to a speedy death; but the arguments of his late wife, whose influence, repressed turned into an harmless channel many of his singularities, and her representations of the unprovided state of his younger children, at length prevailed over his prejudices, and induced him to leave them handsome legacies. With all his oddities he had a heart open to frequently friend thip, and has given fubiliantial proofs of his regard for those who could indulge him in them. His landed estates, which are pretty confiderable, go to his eldeft fon, and are supposed to have sufficient timber on them, in want of felling, to pay the legacies.

Feb. 7. At Oxen heath, Kent, in his 87th year, fir Francis Geary, bart. admiral of the white. was created a buronet by the title of fir Francis Geary, of Polesden, Surrey, in confequence of his marrying Miss Bartholomew, a Kentish lady.

9. Viscountess Llandaff of Ireland.

13. Elizabeth, lady of fir John Smyth, bart. of Sydling St. Nicholas, in Dorfetshire; by whom the had feveral children, three only furviving her. She was the daughter and sole heiress of Robert Curtis, esq. of Willsthorpe, co. Lincoln, barrifter at law, and niece of Matthew Wyldbore, esq. of Peterborough, member for that city.

Aged 81, his ferene highness Henry-Augustus, reigning prince of Hohenloe Ingelfingen, chief of the illustrious house of that name. He was born July 11, 1715.

15. Thomas Arthur, viscount

Southwell, of Ireland.

In his 64th year, Mr. Emanuel Elam, of Leeds, formerly a confiderable American merchant, and one of the people called quakers. He had retired from bufiness feveral years ago, with a fortune of nearly 200,000l. It was this gentleman and his brother Samuel who were the principal purchasers of the valuable estate which was fold in October latt, belonging to the marquis of Salisbury, near Leeds, for 155,000l The elder Mr. Thelusson offered 155,000l. and James Armitage, eq. of Hunflet, near Leeds, 154,000l. Mr. Leatham, of Barton, near Malton, and Mr. Dowker, one of the tenants, were the other purchasers.

17. Jas. Macpherson, esq. M.P.

Aged 51, M. Dombey, a celebrated French botanist, who was feveral years employed by the king of Spain, in collecting and describing the plants and other natural productions of Peru. After his return from that country he retired to Lyons, and continued to refide there till lately, when he was appointed by the national convention, to undertake another voyage to America, for the purposes of natural hittory. He accordingly embarked at Brest for Philadelphia; but the ship he was on board was taken by the English and carried into Antigua, where he died.

At Vienna, in his 77th year, count Trautmansdorff, the emperor's chamberlain.

March 8. Sir Wm. Chambers, knt,

At Shrewsbury, Lady Knowles, widow of the late admiral sir Charles Knowles, bart.

10. The hon. John Forbes, aged 82, the oldest officer in the navy, and general of marines. He was appointed post-captain in 1736, rear admiral in 1747, and admiral in 1758. In 1781 he was appointed admiral of the fleet. He was remarkable, above all other men, for his extenfive and universal knowledge of naval affairs, having studied them in all their branches, with a perseverance, and observed upon them with an acuteness and judgment altogether unparalleled. His mind was capable of embracing the greatest and most complicated objects; and, having bent it towards the fludy of that profession of which he was allowed, by the universal voice of his contemporaries, to be a principal ornament, he attained fuch a fummit of nautical 1kill as rendered him the oracle of all those who were most eminent, whether in the direction of the fleets of this nation, or in the equally arduous task of superintending the civil departments of the different branches of the marine. In the earlier part of his life, he was peculiarly noticed as an able, enterprifing, and intrepid officer. He ferved with much reputation under Sir John Norris, and was no less distinguished as captain of the Norfolk, of 80 guns, in the action of Matthews and Lestock with the combined fleets of France and Spain, when his gallantry contributed in a high degree to fave his brave friend admiral Matthews, whose fecond he was in that engagement. So bright was his honour, and so clear his reputation in those turbulent days, that though his evidence on the trial of the admirals went wholly against Admiral Lestock, yet that officer was often heard to declare, "that Mr. Forbes's testimony was given like an officer and a gentleman." In lord Chatham's war, admiral Forbes was felected as the ablest assistant the first lord. could have in the management of the Admiralty, and conducted himfelf in a manner highly creditable to his abilities, and eminently ferviceable to his country. When the warrant for executing the unfortunate admiral Byng was offered for fignature at the Admiralty Board, admiral Forbes refused to fign it, at the same time humbly laying at his late majesty's feet his A copy of the paper. objections. given by the admiral to his majesty on that occasion, may be seen in Smollet's History of England.

During a late administration it was thought expedient to offer a / noble lord, very high in the naval profession, and very deservedly a favourite of his severeign and his country, the office of general of the marines, held by admiral Forbes, and fpontaneously conferred upon him by his majefty as a reward for his many and long fervices. A message was sent by the ministers, to fay it would forward the king's service if he would resign: and that he should be no lofer by his accommodating the government, as they proposed recommending to the king to give him a pension in Ireland of 3000l. per ann. and a peerage, to descend to his daughter. To this admiral Forbes fent an immediate answer; he told the ministers, the generalthip of the marines was a military employment, given him by his majesty as a reward for his services; that he thanked God he had never been a burthen to his country, which he had ferved during a long life to the best of his ability; and that he would not condescend to accept of a pension or bargain for a peerage. He concluded by laying his generalship of the marines, together with his rank in the navy, at the king's feet, entreating him to take both away if they could forward his service; and, at the same time assuring his majesty, he would never prove himself unworthy of the former honours he had received, by ending the remnant of a long life as a pensioner, or accepting of a peerage obtained by political arrangement. His gracious master applauded his manly spirit, ever after continued him in his high military honours, and, to the day of his death, condescended to thew him strong marks of his regard.

that

freet, Dublin, after a lingering illness, in her 90th year, the countess-dowager of Aldborough.

13. At her house in Great Cumberland-street, lady Bridget Tollemache, relict of Mr. Tollemache (brother to the Earl of Dyfart) and mother of major Tollemache, who lost his life in the service of his country, at the fiege of Valenciennes. Lady Bridget was daughter of chancellor earl Northington, and successively the wife of Mr. George Fox Lane and the hon. Mr. Tollemache, who was a captain in the navy, and fell in an unfortunate rencontre at York, with major-general, then captain, Pennington of the guards. By Mr. Tollemache she had an only fon, Lionel-Robert, who fell honourably in the trenches before Valenciennes. Lady Bridget struggled under this severe stroke nearly two years, with all the fortitude that a great mind could call forth, and at length expired the victim of her parental affections. The character of this accomplished woman naturally took its various colouring from the strange vicissitudes of her fortune. Her mind, however, was always elevated and commanding; and, though the facrificed fomewhat to fashionable life, she ever kept aloof from those vices which have so long disgraced it. To a strength of intellect, which she derived from her noble fire, she added a delicacy of imagination, and a brilliancy of wit peculiar to herfelf.

15. Countess of Ludlow.

17. Suddenly, in Manchester-square, the marchioness of Winchester, wife of George Powlett, esq. who on the death of the late duke of Bolton, succeeded to the title of marquis of Winchester.

19. At his house in Lincoln'sinn fields, of a rheumatic sever, Gorge Bond, esq. one of his majesty's serjeants at law; whose professional eminence was deservedly acquired by persevering industry in the laborious pursuit of legal knowledge.

Of the gout in his stomach, in. his 33d year, Mr Stephen Storace, whose abilities as a composer are fufficiently known by those original airs in the dramas of "The Haunted Tower," "No Song No Supper," " My Grandmother," &c. &c. Few men in any province of genius have more rapidly ascended to same and independence. His style of compofition was formed upon the Italian model; and, in his airs for many voices, and in choral energy, he followed the musicians of Italy. with great success. He was distinguished in private life for shrewdness, penetration, and knowledge of mankind. His first composition for Drury-lane theatre was "The Doctor and Apothecary," which was performed on the day of his death.

19. Sir Hugh Palliser, bart. admiral of the white.

21. In his 77th year, fir Thomas Rookwood Gage, bart. of Hengrave, co. Suffolk, and of Coldhamhuil. He was the eldest of the two fons of John, fecond fon of fir William Gage, bart. by his wife Elizabeth daughter of Thomas Rookwood, esq of Coldham-hall. On the death of her father the became fole heirefs of all his efforcs. Thomas married, 1747. daughter of William Knight, ot Kingetby, co. Lincoln, etq. whom he has iffue a fon, Thomas, his fucceflor, and three daughters.

22. Lady of fir Thomas Parkyns, bart.

25. At Ranclagh the counters of Crequy Canaples, widow of Hugues comte de Crequy Canaples, of Orville, in the province of Artois. She was daughter of Edward Comerford, of Leeds, Yorkthire, M. D.

28. Lady Wildmay

At Berne, in Switzerland, where he had long been retired from motives of economy, after confiderable expenditure on parliamentary elections, and afterwards, by preference of fituation, for health, Spencer Compton, eighth earl of Northampton, in which title he facceeded his brother, in 1763. He married first Jane, daughter of Henry Lawton, efq. of Northamptonshire, who died in 1767, leaving iffue a fon Charles, born 1760, and a daughter, Frances, born 1758. His feeond lady was Miss Anne Hougham. His lordship was appointed one of the chamber, Nov. 25, 1760; elected recorder of Northampton, Nov. 1. 1763; and constituted Iord-lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county of Northampton, July 19, 1771; and president of the General Hospital and Preservative Society of the county. He is succeeded by his only son, Charles, ninth earl.

Much lamented, the rev. Benjamin Sowden, minister of the English Episcopal Church at Amster-He was justly esteemed for his learning, his extensive acquaintance with science, and the . r amiable qualities of his heart. A difcustion of his father's having written or published lady W. Montague'sletters, which he only possessed, may be feen in the Gentleman's Magazine, vol. LXIV. His father printed five fermons: 1. on the fast, 1747; 2. on the death of the prince of Orange, 1750; 3. at the funeral of the rev. Barthomew Loftus, 1751; 4. Ordination, 1752; 5. on the death of king George II. 1760.

de Welderen, fister to lord Howard, and Mrs. Parker, the wife of compte de Welderen, many years minister from Holland to this country.

10. Sir Archibald Edmonstone, bart.

water, on her way to the Hotwells, aged 19, lady Anne-Maria Montague, daughter of the late and fifter of the prefent duke of Manchester.

13. At his feat at Whitwell, co, York, aged 31, fir Bellingham Graham, bart. He was son of the late fir Bellingham, and has a fister married, abroad, to col. Greville.

16. Suddenly, James, 10th lord Somerville Somerville, one of the fixteen peers for Scotland. He succeeded his father, James, 1766; and is succeeded in title and estates by his nephew, son of his brother Hugh.

At Aberdeen, in his 77th year, George Campbell, D.D. F. R.S. Edin. late principal and professor of divinity in the Marischal college and university of Aberdeen.

May 3. The right hon. lady Gertrude Cromie

At Hampton Court Palace, in her 71st year, Anna Catharina Rumpsfoon Warmen-huyen, dowager baroness du Tour, motherin-law to Baron Nagel.

13. At Drumtheugh, near Edinburgh, the hon. James Erskine of Alva, one of the senators of the College of Justice. He was admitted an advocate, Dec. 4, 1743, appointed one of the barons of the Exchequer, May 27, 1754, and on the 20th May 1761 was appointed one of the lords of the session, and took the title of lord Barjarg, which title he afterwards altered to lord Alva.

19. At her house in Hertsord-street, lady Charlotte Finch, eldest daughter of Daniel seventh earl of Winchelsea and third earl of Nottingham. She formerly enjoyed the place of governess of the royal nursery, with an appointment of Socl. per annum.

Bath, Henry Thomas Cary, visc. Falkland, and baron Cary in Scotland. He had reached Melksham, on his way to London, but being too ill to proceed, returned to Bath. He was born in 1766, and succeeded his grandfather, the late viscount, in 1785. Dying without issue, his brother, the hon. Charles John Cary, succeeds him.

At Chestersield, aged 48, the hon. Eliz. Horton, eldest sister of the Earl of Derby, and lady of the rev. Thomas Horton, rector of Bradsworth, co. York.

At Woolwich, Gen. Broome, of the artillery. He rose from the situation of a private to the high rank of a general officer, merely by his personal merit. He was a captain of artillery at the time of the trial of lord George Sackville, in which he appeared as a principal evidence against his lordship.

31. Aged 64, in Harcourt place, Dublin, the rt. hon. William Burton Conyngham, one of his majesty's most hon privy council, teller of the exchequer, and one of the commissioners for executing the office of high treasurer in Ireland, treasurer of the Royal Irish Academy, F.A.S. Lond. brother of the late Francis Pierpoint Burton. baron Conyngham (father of the present viscount Conyngham) and nephew of Henry earl Conyngham, in compliance of whose will he took the name of Conyngham; and uncle to the present lord, to whom his estates devolve. Our readers will recollect him as the munificent patron of Mr. Murphy, in his journey to, and description of, the monaftery of Batalha, which Mr. Conyngham had himfelf vifited, and made some sketches of. with two other gentlemen who accompanied him in his travels through Portugal, 1783. "These iketches, which are very correct representations of the original, gave Mr. Murphy fo high an idea of that building as to excite in him an earnest desire to visit it; and Mr. Conyngham having generously offered him his patronage and support, he set out from Dublin, in a trading vessel, and arrived at Oporto in January, 1789." Mr. Murphy concludes his preface with " acknowledging his obligations to this gentleman, by whole munificence he was enabled to carry on The Portuguese have his work. too much gratitude not to add their acknowledments to him also for having made known the merits of this inimitable structure. The perfon who presented it to the worldwas a private gentleman a native of Ireland, who, induced by no other motive than a love of the fine arts, and a with for the advancement of science, has expended upwards of 1000l. in refcuing this noble edifice from the obscurity in which it has lain concealed for ages. I have taken the liberty to dedicate this work to him, in confideration of his exemplary liberality, and as an humble teftimony of my everlasting gratitude and respect." To the dedication is prefixed a portrait of Mr. Conyngham painted by Stuart, and engraved by Schiavonetti. Mr. Conyngham subscribed for ten copies of the work. Ireland will feel itself indebted to Mr. Conyngham for the institution of a Society of Antiquaries, in 1780, confisting of himself as president, Mr. Archdall, author of the Irish Monasticon and Peerage, Mr. O'Connor the differtator, Colonel Vallancey the etymologist, Dr. Ellis, a physician, who created a Society of Natural History, Mr. Ledwich, and Mr. Beauford. Things went on very well till governor Pownall addressed a letter to them, which Mr. Ledwich answered in the " Collectanea Hibernia," No. XL; and by the lively, jocular way in which he then wrote, offended col.

Vallancy who expatriated him from his Collectanea, and from a fociety which immediately ceased. this fociety held together, we might have expected it to have engraved and illustrated that fund of drawings of Irish antiquities from the time of the Druids to the Reformation, which Mr. Conyngham was then making at a great expence, which he was ready to communicate to every person whose pure fuits were congenial with his own, and which we hope he has taken iome measures to render perpetual.

June 6. At her house in Sloanestreet, Knighsbridge, of a cancer in her breast, the countess of Susfex, fecond wife to the prefent earl, and daughter of Jn. Vaugan, efq. of Bristol.

In his 70th year the rev. Thomas Cole, L. L. B. and vicar of Dulverton. He was of Queen's college, Cambridge, where he took the degree of L. L. B. in 1751. He was author of "The arbour, or the rural philosopher," 4to. 1756, reprinted in Dodsley's collection of Poems; "Discourses on luxury, infidelity, and enthufiasm," 12mo. 1760, at which time he was affishant preacher at St. Paul's Covent Garden; and "The life of Hubert, a narrative, descriptive, and didactic poem," book I. 8vo. 1795.

Of the yellow fever, at sea, on board the Majestic, of 74 guns, in which he was coming home from the West Indies, two days before she made the land, fir John Laforey, admiral of the blue. He was made a post-captain in 1758; a rear-admiral in 1789; a vice admiral in 1793; a baronet in 1794; and an admiral in 1795. On the 21st his remains were interred at Plysmouth with grand military honours.

Plymouth

At Madrid, aged 80, the duke de Crillon Mahon, captain-general of the Spanish armies. It is cal--culated that he had been in 68 different engagements. He commanded the Spanish armies with the greatest success in the war of 1780, against the English, and in that war took the island of Minorca from them. After having ferved long in France, his native country, at the conclusion of the seven years war he passed, with the approbation of the French government, into the fervice of Spain, where he acquired the first military rank. Not having taken any part in the last war of the Spaniards against the French, he had a very active share in the conclusion of the peace which terminated it. The title of duke of Mahon, destined to perpetuate the remembrance of his victories, has palled to the youngest of his fons by a third marriage. The two eldest sons of the duke de Crillon were both members of the constituent assembly of France.

At Donauschiz, in his 39th year, the reigning prince of Furstenberg.

the right hon. counters of Traquaire, daughter of the late George Ravenscroft, esq. of Spalding, co. Lincoln.

16. At his house in Grosvenor-square, after a long and painful illness, sincerely regretted by all his friends, and particularly by those of the profession he belonged to, for which he had always stood forward a zealous advocate and sincere friend, sield-marshal the rt. hon. sir George Howard, k. b. one of his majesty's most honorable privy council, colonel of the first or king's regiment of dragoon-guards, governor of Jersey, and M. P. for Stamford.

16. In Upper Brook-street, in his 69th year, the right hon. William Gerrard Hamilton, formerly secretary in Ireland. By his death there lapses an Irish pension of 2000l. a year; and the bulk of his sortune goes to William Hamilton, esq. of Lincoln's-inn-fields. He was usually denominated single speech Hamilton.

At his feat at Kentchurch, co. Hereford, in his 68th year, John Scudamore, esq. a few weeks before elected, for the sixth time, to represent the city of Hereford in parliament, by the unanimous voice of the citizens. His death was occasioned by a cold, caught, after hunting in his park, by the too sudden check of perspiration; every effort of the ablest of the saculty to preserve his life was ineffectual.

At Paris, the duke de Chatelet. This unfortuate peer, after securing some part of his property in England, returned to France with the hope of rescuing more; but, before he could attain his object, was discovered, and arrested by the deputy on mission in the department de la Somme. He had. however, taken such precautions, that his emigration could not be traced; and might, perhaps, have escaped, had not a Jacobin, whose brother was cook in an English nobleman's family, produced a letter, which stated the duke's having dined with lord —— on a particular day, and even the other company who were present, and the conversation which passed at table. Mons. de Chatelet, surprized, unprepared prepared for such evidence, and unable to resute it, was sent to Paris, and guillotined; and in his sate were involved several innocent people, one of them a young English lady, because the happened to be in a house where the duke thept one night.

August 2. After a long and painful illness, in his 77th year, at his seat at Patthull, co. Staff. General sir Robert Pigot, bart. He is succeeded in title and estate by his eldest son, lieut. col. George Pigot.

5. At Little Chelsea, lady Gordon, daughter of Thomas Allop, of Loughborough, gent. and fecond wife of Samuel Philips, of Gerendon-hall, co. Leic. efq. Mr. Philips, who concluded the too shortlived race of a most respectable and worthy family, March 16, 1774, at the age of. 65, left his noble mantion at Gerendon, with an income of 7000l. a year, to his widow; who was afterwards married to Sir Will. Gordon, K. B.; but, on the death of this lady, the estates deteend, agreeably to the will of Mr. Philips, to Thomas March, esq. of More Critchell, co. Dorset, his maternal cousin, who has just obtained the royal licence to affume the furname and arms of Philips; in addition to those of March.

Wm. Johnson Temple, LL. B. of Trinity-hall, Cambridge, 1766, formerly rector of Mamhead, co. Devon, to which he was presented by the earl of Lisburne, and exchanged it for St. Gluvias. He published "An Essay on the Clergy, their Studies, Recreations, Doctrines, Influence, &c. 1774," 8vo; and wrote the character of Gray, which has had the honour to be adopted both by Mr. Mason and

Dr. Johnson in their accounts of that poet.

After a long illness, at the Bell inn, Northfield, being then on his way to Abergavenny, in Wales, Sir Joseph Brooke, bart. of Seaton, in Yorkshire. His brother, Samuel Brooke, esq. of the city of Dublin, succeeds to the title and estate. Sir Richard, the late baronet, died in his 38th year, at Norton priory, in Cheshire, March 11, 1795.

At his house in Grosvenor-square, Wm. Drake, of Shardcloes, co. Bucks, esq. lord of the borough, and patron of the rectory of Agmondesham, or Amersham, in that' county, LL. D. (William Drake, appears as member for that borough in 1661.) He married, Feb. 9, 1747, Miss Raworth, of Sambroke-court, Basinghall-street, with She died many years 100,000l. fince. They had iffue, 1. Wm. Drake, LL. D. M. P. for Amersham, who died May 19, 1795. He married, Feb. 17, 1778, the fole daughter and heires of William Hutley, esq. M. P. for Salisbury, by his wife, daughter and co-heirels (with the wife of Mr. Alderman Kirkman) of Robert Marsh. esq. some time governor of bank. She died in about a year, aged 20, without issue. He married, 2dly, Aug. 21, 1781, Rachael. fole daughter and heires of Jeremiah Ives, esq. alderman of Norwich, with 100,000l. She died in a few years, leaving two daugh-2. Thomas Drake Tyrwhitt, esq. succeeded his brother as member in the last parliament for Amersham, and is now re-chosen. He married Miss Wickham, by whom he has 11 children, and now poffesses Shardeloes. 3. Rev. John Drake, LL. D. rector of Amerfham, ham, married Miss Wickham, sister to the former. 4. Charles Drake Gerrard, etq. chosen with his brother, at the last election, M. P. for Amersham. 5. A daughter, married to the Rev. Mr. Francke, of Suffolk. 6. A daughter, unmarried,

S.pt. 1. At Brighthelmstone, in the 68th year of his age, the Right Hon. David Murray, earl of Mansfield, president of the council, justice-general of Scotland, keeper of Scone, chancellor of Mareschalcollege, Aberdeen, joint clerk of the court of king's bench, LL. D. and K. T. and formerly a member of the university of Oxford. lordship was the only fon of lord viscount Stormont (elder brother to that diffinguished character the first earl of Mansfield), and bore that title till his late uncle's death, when he succeeded to his fortune and the earldom. He had refigned the office of lord justice general of Scotland, on being appointed lord prefident of the council. His eftates in Scotland do not exceed occol. a year; but the property he inherited from the great earl, and the accumulations arising from rigid occonomy in his own expences, are immente. A green ribband becomes vacant by his death; who was, except the duke of Queensberry, the oldest knight of the most antient order of the thisile. He was educated at Westminster school, and from the college there was elected, in 1744, student of Christ Church, Oxford. His proficiency in classical knowledge at both those seminaries of learning, and his diftinguished reputation as a scholar, are well his contemporaries. to Many of his Latin compositions still remain, and prove his taste and Vol. XXXVIII.

mastery in that language. continued through life, notwithstanding his constant employment in business, to cultivate at his leifure hours the learned languages, and with fuch diligence, that it is thought he has left few better, or more critical, Greek scholars behind him. Upon the death of his father, in 1748, which happened not very long after he had finished his fludies at Oxford, he travelled abroad for several years; and, soon after his return, was elected one of the fixteen peers for Scotland. In 1756, he was appointed envoy to the court of Dresden, and remained at that court during its residence at Warlaw, and till he was named one of the three ambassadors for the intended congress of Augsbourg. He returned to England in 1762, and the next year was appointed ambatfador to the court of Vienna, where he continued till 1772. In 1772, he was appointed ambaffador to the court of France, where he continued till the war. In 1779, his majetly was graciously pleated to name him secretary of state for the Northdepartment. He held the feals till the change of administration in 1782; and in 1783 returned into office, with a part of the administration he had acted with before, as president of the council. He quitted, with his friends, at the end of the same year, and again returned with them into power in 1784, in his former fituation of president of the council.

His remains were brought in funeral state, and, on the 9th, according to his own express desire, privately interred in the same vault with his uncle and aunt, the late earl and countess of Mansfield, in the north aisle of Westminsterabbey. His heart is carried to Kumlington, the family feat of his lordship, in the county of Dumfrics.—On the arrival of the cavalcade at the church, two of the bearers having got the cosin on their shoulders, the horses of the hearfe took fright by the preflure of the multitude; by which means, the other men not being prepared, amount in old rents to near 10,000l. the weight became too preponderant for those in front, and the coffin fell with great violence on the ground; the foot part of which bilged, part fell out with a number of the nails and embellishments, and the concussion was so great that the leaded receptacle was much thattered, and a quantity of water issued from it.—His lordship was twice married; first to a Saxon lady, Henrietta, counters of Bunan, at Wariaw, in 1759, by whom there is now no iffue living but lady Elizabeth, married to Geo. Finch Hatton, efq. in 1785; fecondly, to Louita, third daughter to the late, Glencairn. ford Catheart, in 1776, by whom he has left four fons and a daughter. He is facceded in his honours and estates by his eldest son, David-William, born March 7, 1777, the present earl, who but lately let out on his travels, and is now at the university of Leipsic. 17. Mr. J. W. Dodd, of Drurylane theatre, an excellent actor. tle began his theatrical career in the North of England, afterwards was the principal performer on the Norwich flage, and on 3d October, 1765, appeared the first time at Drury-lane, in the character of Faddle, in The Foundling. Since that period he had uniformly been engaged at the fame theatre.

21. At Bath, Sir John Danvers, of Swithland, in the county of Leicester, bart. He has bequeathed his immense landed estates and perforal property to his only child, the Hon. Mrs. Butler, wife of the Hon. Augustus Butler (second son of the counters of Lanesborough) who has taken the name of Dan-Sir John's real effates in Leicestershire and other counties, per ann. in which the property of timber is immense: the personal estate confiss of near 200, cool. in funded money, cath. and bank By a former will, the family of the male branch of the Danvers were made sole heirs; but this was lately revoked foon after the birth of his daughter's fon.

22. At Fareham, the Right Hen. James Lord Cranston. His Lordthip was lately appointed governor of Grenada, and was preparing to take his departure for his govern-

Rev. and right hon. John, earl of 27. At Edinburgh, in his z6th year, Mr. John Medina, limner, grandion to fir John Medina, an eminent historical and portrait painter of Scotland, in the last beginning of this century. His peculiar talent was the refeuing from decay and ruin fome of the best collections of pictures in Scotland; a recent instance of which was afforded in the collection of kings in the palace of Holyrood-house, the renovation of which will long appear a monument of his merit, if it be meritcrious to restore fictitious likenesses.

Utt. 6. After a long and severe illness, lady Dashwood, the lady of :fir Henry Dathwood, bart. of Kirtlington park, co. Oxford, lady of ed-chamber to the princesses, governess of the royal nursery, con-house. She was the ellaughter of the late Mr. Gra-formerly a member of the cil in Bengal, and niece to the ord Newhaven; and married atton-park, July 17, 1780, lenry Dashwood, by whom she everal children, of whom the was appointed a page at Juliana Maria, dowager of Denmark.

In a very advanced age, fir Hopkins, knt. alderman of ard of Cattle-Baynard. Havermerly been in the common il, he was the father of the ration. He was elected alderin 1782; sheriff in 1784; nayor in 1792.

At Edinburgh, John, 5th Ballenden, heritable uther of ourt of Exchequer in Scot-

He was presumptive heir dukedom of Roxburgh, and stensive possessions belonging grace the present duke, who issue. Lord Ballenden marmulatto woman, Mrs. Sarah ng, from Montego-bay, Ja; but by her, who died about elvemonth ago, had no chil-

Archibald earl of Egling-

n whom neither titles could a nor pains depress; who her honours to modestly upon that, while her dignity enlove. She was only daughf Charles Bruce, 3d earl of bury, by his wife Caroline, her of gen. John Campbell, afterwards duke of Argyll. She was married 1747, but had no iffue. She was interred in the family vault in the cathedral at Chichefter.

16. At Castle ditch, co. Hereford, at the seat of his brother, lord Sommers, Thomas Sommers Cocks, esq. of Downing-street. He was oth son of John Cocks, esq. of Castle-ditch, born 1737, partner with his brother James in a capital banking-house at Charing-cross, with Biddulph and Co. and married, 1768, Anne, daughter of Alexander Thistlethwayte, esq of Southwich, Hants, by whom he had issue.

19. Mrs. North, lady of the bishop of Winchester.

The most noble Thos. Thynne, marquis of Bath, knight of the garter, groom of the stole to his majesty. He was born Sept. 24, 1734, and married in 1759, to the lady Elizabeth Cavendish Bentinck, sister to the duke of Portland.

21. Sir William Dick, bart. Sir Edmund Head, bart.

Dec. 12. After a tedious indifposition, heightened by severe domestic assistions, which terminated in the dropfy in the cheft, the right rev. Dr. William Buller, lord bishop of Exeter. Besides the gallant col. Buller, who was flain on the continent, he lost two sons by consumption. He was of Oriel college, Oxford, where he proceeded A. M. 1759; thence removed to Christ-church, where he took the degrees of B. and D. D. 1781'; was appointed dean of Exeter, and, on the promotion of Dr. Horne. dean of Canterbury, in which he was installed June 22, 1790. the death of Dr. John Ross, 1793, he was advanced to the bishoprick of Exeter, and was consecrated Dec. 2, that year. His remains were privately interred on the 17th in Exeter cathedral.

F 2 h

17. In Weymouth-street, Portland-place, William Pickett, esq. formerly partner with Mr. Theed, afterwards with Mr. Rundell, silversnith, on Ludgate-hill, which business he carried on alone in Bond-street. He was elected alderman of Cornhill ward in May, 1783; and filled the office of the-riff in 1784, and lord-mayor in 1789.

At Dublin, aged 60, the right hon, baron Trimelflown. His lordthip was fecond baron of the kingdom of Ireland.—He was, we believe, the 14th who held that title in lineal defeent from Robert Barnewall, created baron Trimelitown, 1461, by Edward IV. for his good and faithful fervices in Ireland; and whose grandson John was chancellor of Ireland in 1534. Archdall's peerage, published 1789, does not mention the late lord, ending with his predecoffor Thomas, igth lord, who enrolled lineself in the Iriin volunteer army on the a-Jarm of invation, 1779 and 1780. A younger brunch of the Barnewall family had the title of viscount Kingdand 16.6.

Sir Rob. Heiketh Jaxon, bart.

of Rufford-hall, Lancashire.

28. Prince Lewis, record fon of the king of Prukia.

gate, the right hon, lord William Murray, 2d brother of his grace the duke of Athol.

SHERIFFS approved for the lear

Berks, Michael Anthony, of Shippon.

Bedfordshire, George Brooks, of Flitwick.

Bucks, Thomas Hibbert, of Chalfont-house.

Cumberland, James Graham, of Barrock-lodge, etqrs.

Cheshire, the hon. Booth Grey, of Wincham.

Cambridge and Huntingdon, J. Gardener, of Chatteris.

Cornwall, John Enys, of Enys, elgrs. Devonthire

Devonthire, fir Bourchier Wray, of Tawtock, bart.

Dorfetthire, Thomas Bowyer Bowyer, of Iwern-minster, esq.

Derbyshire, fir Robert Wilmot, of Osmaston, bart.

Filex, Jackson Barwis, of Marthalls.

Gloucestershire, Samuel Peach Peach, of Upper Torkington.

Hertfordthire, John Sowerby of Lilley.

Herefordshire, Abraham Whitaker, of Liston.

Kent, John Mumford, of Sutton at clone.

Leicestershire, James Richards, of Athby de la Zouch.

Lincolnthire, William Earl Wel-

by, of Denton.

Monmouthshire, Henry Barnes, of Monmouth.

Northumberland, Adam Mansfield Lawson Decardonnell, of Chirton.

Northamptonshire, Allen Edward Young the younger; of Orlingbury.

Norfolk, Thomas Brown Evans, of Kirby Bedon.

Nottinghamshire, J. Wright, of Nottingham.

Oxfordshire, William Lowndes Stone, of Brightwell.

Rutlandshire,

Rutlandshire, R. Tomlin, of Edith Weston.

Shropshire, Ralph Leake, of Longford.

Somersetshire, John Tyndale Warre, of Hestercombe.

Staffordshire, Henry Vernon, of Hilton.

Suffolk, John Clayton, of Sibton. Southampton, H. Maxwell, of Ewthot-house.

Surry, Thomas Sutton, of Moulfey.

Suffex, John Fuller, of Rosehill. Warwickshire, Edward Croxall, of Shustock

Worcestershire, T. Hill the younger, of Broom.

Wilts, Gilbert Trowe Beckett

Turner, of Penleigh.

Yorkshire, Godfrey Wentworth Wentworth, of Hickleton, esqrs.

SOUTH WALES.

Caermarthen, J. William Hughes, of Tregyth.

Pembroke, Nathaniel Philips, of Slebetch.

Cardigan, Edward Warren Jones, of Llanina.

Glamorgan, Herbert Hurst, of Gabalva.

Brecon, P. Champion Crespigny, of Tallyllyr.

Radnor, John Pritchard, of Dolyvelin, efors.

NORTH WALES.

Merioneth, Thomas Lloyd, of Cumhusion.

Anglesea, J. Morris Conway, of Cellening.

Carnarvon, J. William Lenthall, of Mainan.

Montgomery, John Dickin, of Welch Pool.

Denbighshire, J. Hughes of Horseley-hall, esqrs.

Flint, Sir E. Pryce Lloyd, of Pengwern-place, bart.

APPENDIX to the CHRONICLE.

From the London Gazette.

Letter from Major General Whyte, to Sir R. Abercromby.

Demerary. TN obedience to your excellency's L commands, I left Barbadoes on the 15th instant, with a detachment of the artillery, and part of the 30th, 03d, and 90th regiments, amounting to 1200 men, escorted by the Malabar, Undaunted, la Picque, and Babet frigates, with the Granada transport, and five schooners and floops, and on the 21st made the land, when the Scipio joined the fleet. That evening, when the tide made, the Babet and la Picque frigates, with the Granada transport, passed the bar, with the schooners and boats of the fleet, and came to anchor, within random shot of the fort, at the entrance of the river; and having, during the night, prepared every thing for attack, at day-light appeared in force, when I fent a flag of truce by li utenant- colonel Hislop of the 39th regiment, summoning the governor to furrender the colony and its dependencies to Britannic majetiy's his forces, agreeable to the terms which I have the honour to inclose, and which the governor and council accepted. The unanimity with which the fervice was carried on between the fleet and army was pleasing to sil concerned, and Mr. Higgins acc quitted himself with much propriety and utility. Captain Parr, who commanded the fleet, has affifted and supplied us from the fleet ibberally: and I have the fatisfaction to inform your excellency, that; from every information I have received, and from above feverity Thips being actually loaded with the produce of the country, new in the river, (most of which will? be fent to England) and from every: account of the fertility of the foil, it is a most important acquisition. to Great Britain.

The colony of Bernice, adjoining to this, being a separate government, I shall direct my attention to it without delay: and I shall leave lieutenant-colonel Histop in the command here, agreeable to your excellency's directions.

The Thetis, a Dutch frigate of 24 guns, and a cutter of 12 guns, are added to the fleet; and captain Parr has given directions for defining or bringing down the river a French brig privateer of force.

I have the honour to be, &c.
(Signed) JOHN WHYTE, maj. gen.
Sir Rulph Abercromby, K. B.
Ec. Ec. Ec.

By major-general John Whyte, commander of his Britannic manie jesty's land forces, &c. &c. &c.

and captain Thomas Parr, commander of his Britannic majetty's thips, &c. &c. &c.

These are requiring you, the governor and council, military and naval forces, of the colony of Demerary and its dependencies, to surrender the said colony to his Britannic majesty's forces under our command, and to place the said colony under his majesty's protection, and quietly and peaceably to submit to his majesty's government.

In which case the inhabitants shall enjoy sull security to their persons, and the free exercise of their religion, with the sull and immediate enjoyment of all private property, whether on shore or assort (excepting such as may appear to belong to the subjects of the French republic) according to their ancient laws and usages, or such other as may be determined upon previous to the colony's being placed under his majesty's government, upon the most liberal and beneficial terms.

That in the event of the colony's remaining under the British government at the conclusion of a general peace, it shall enjoy such commercial rights and privileges as are enjoyed by the British colonies in the West Indies. With regard to the military and naval forces, that the officers and men of the land forces shall, if agreeable to themselves, be received into the British pay, with leave, at the restoration of the Stadtholder, to return into his fervice. Each non-commissioned officer and foldier shall receive, upon taking the oath of allegiance to his Britannic majesty to serve him faithfully during the war, where it may be thought proper to employ him, the sum of one hundred guilders

The officers to receive, under the same conditions, the allowance of two hundred days bat, baggage, and forage money, as paid to the British officers.

The officers and men of the marine forces cannot be taken into the British service until his majestv's pleasure shall be known, but shall receive pay according to their rank, and every indulgence that can be allowed.

That the governor and all civil officers, after having taken the oaths of allegiance to his majesty, which will be administered by major-general Whyte, are (if they chuse) to remain in their respective fituations, (excepting those who have shewn a decided partiality to the French interest) the governor only refigning the military command. Should fuch liberal terms be refused, the governor, council, and all concerned, must be answerable for the consequences, as an immediate attack will be made by the land and fea forces, which will render every refistance vain.

M jor-general Whyte and capt, Parr give the governor one hour, and no more, from the delivery of this by lieutenant-colonel Histop, to accept or not.

(Signed) John Whyte, maj-gen. Thomas Parr, captain royal navy.

Dated on board h's majesty's ship Babet, of the rive: Demerary, Airil 20, 1796. A true copy, John Whyte.

GENTLEMEN,

It is out of my power as yet to give a decisive answer to your summons.

mons, demanding the furrender of this colony to his Britannic majefty's forces, as my duty requires me to lay it before the council, to whom it is also addressed, but which is not assembled at this moment. I will, however, call the members present together, and return about twelve o'clock an answer.

I have the honour to remain, &c. (Signed) Anthony Beauton, governor of Demerary.

Demerary, 22.: April, 1796. To their excellencies general Whyte and commodore Parr.

> On board the Babet frigate, Sir, April 22, 1796.

We have been honoured with your letter in answer to our's of yesterday's date, summoning the colony of Demerary to surrender to his Britannic majesty's arms, requesting, for the reasons therein mentioned, to have until twelve o'clock this, forenoon to assemble the council to assist you in the determination.

The reasonableness of the request induces us to grant it; but you will be aware, that if an answer is not returned on or before that time no further delay can be made, and you alone must be answerable for the consequences, and you will please also to observe, that from the very liberal terms offered, no deviation whatever can be admitted.

We have the honour to be, &c. (Signed) John Whyte, maj-gen.
Thomas Park, captain royal navy.

To his excellency the governor of Demerary.

Fort William Frederick. Demerary, 22d April, 1796.

GENTLEMEN,

We, the governors, members of the council, and commanders of the military and naval forces of the colony, in council of war affembled, having attentively perused the summons, dated of yeilerday, and addressed to us by your excellencies, demanding the furrender of faid . colony to his Britannic majesty's forces, also the terms thereunto annexed, have, after mature deliberation, resolved to accept said terms, and on them to furrender faid colony and its dependencies as demanded, whereof we hereby give you notice; also that our colours will be struck on the landing of your forces; it will depend on the feveral officers and troops to decide for themselves as to the offers made them, and we have the honour to fubscribe ourselves, &c.

(Signed) ANTHONY BEAUJON, governor.

J. Fran. Well, maj.
C. Fizicher, com.
P. P. Luyhen.
Thomas Cuming.
A. Meextens.

By order of the council,

M. Sinne, sec. ad int.

To their excellencies general Whyte and commodore Parr, commanders of h:s Britannic majisty's forces of Demerary.

From the London Gazette, July 2.

Admiralty Office, July, 1796.

Copy of a letter from vice admiral Onflow, corumanding his majefty's thips and vessels at Plymouth, to Mr. Nepean, dated June 30. 1796.

Herewith

Herewith I have the pleasure to inclose a letter from captain Tomlinson, of his majesty's sloop La Sussistante, containing particulars of his success in capturing the Morgan French privateer, and recapturing the six English merchant ships named in the inclosed list, that had been taken by her, and which you will be pleased to lay before my lords commissioners of the admiralty

So complete a piece of service, performed by a vessel of such small torce as the Suffishere, I am perfuaded their lordships will admit, reslects great credit on captain Tomlinson, his officers, and men.

La Suffisante, Plymouth, June 30, 1796. Sir,

I beg leave to acquaint you, that his majesty's sloop La Sussisante, under my command, has retaken two English merchant ships, on the 27th inft. near the ifle de Bas (from Oporto, loaded with wine.) gained intelligence from the prifor ners, that the French privateer which they belong to, carried fixteen guns and ten iwivels; and that on the preceding day the was to the northward of Scilly, in chace of feveral English vessels: I therefore immediately dispatched the prizes, with orders to go to Plymouth, and stood in for the French coast, between Ushant and the isle de Bas, in hopes of meeting her on her return, or any other prizes that the should send into Morlaix or Brest.

On the following morning I had the good fortune to discover the above mentioned privateer, and four loaded merchant ships, (her prizes) standing towards us; and, as I setched within gun shot of the privateer, we gave her several broadsides as we passed on opposite tacks; and, on our putting about to follow her, she made the fignal for her prizes to disperse. They were then about seven miles from us to the N. W.

At one P. M. we fetched very near her lee quarter, and opened a well-directed fire of musquetry upon them from forward, which obliged them to strike before we could get alongside to bring our great guns to bear upon her.

As the greatest dispatch was necessary to enable us to overtake the prizes, which were endeavouring to escape by steering on different directions, I ordered lieutenant Pickford to take command of the privateer, to fend the French captain and officers on board the Suffilante immediately, and then to make fail and affift me in taking the merchant ships, which service. was performed very much to my satisfaction, he having taken two of them, one of which I had not the least hopes of his being able to come up with, as she was very far to the windward.

To the spirited and active behaviour of the officers and crew of the Suffisante, I consider myself in a great measure indebted for our success, which is as complete as I could wish it to be, for, exclusive of the privateer, which is a fine copper-bottom brig, capable of doing much mischief, we have likewise retaken six valuable English merchant ships, which are all that she had captured.

Inclosed, I have the honour to transmit you a list of the prizes, and their cargoes, and am,

Sir, &c.

Nichotas Tomlinson.

To vice-admiral Onslow, commander in chief at Plymouth.

List of vessels retaken by the Suffisher, Nicholas Tomlinson, esq. commander, on the 27th and 28th of June, 1796.

Draper, burthen 200 tons, of Dublin, from Oporto, bound to Dublin, laden with 400 pipes of wine, and 11 bales of cotton.

Brothers, burthen 180 tons, of Liverpool, from Oporto, bound to Liverpool, laden with 350 pipes and 30 hogsheads of wine, and 72 bales of cutton.

Mary Ann, burthen 170 tons, of Dublin, from Oporto, bound to Dublin, laden with 272 pipes of wine, 11 bags of cotton, and 5 catks of vinegar.

Ann, burthen 170 tons, of Dublin, from Oporto, bound to Dublin, laden with 303 pipes of wine, 15 boxes, and 20 batkets of lemons.

Vine, burthen 110 tons, of Lancaster, from Oporto, bound to Lancaster, laden with 108 pipes and four hogsheads of wine, 175 bags of cotton, three tons and a half of cork, lemens, &c.

Eliza, burthen 160 tons, of Dublin, from London, bound to Dublin, laden with 250 chefts of tea, 250 barrels of porter, a quantity of steel, and other dry goods.

NICHOLAS TOMLINSON.

The London Gazette, July 2.

Articles of Capitulation of the Island of St. Lucia.

ART. 1. The island of St. Lucia, the Morne Fortune, and its dependencies, together with all the effects belonging to the French Republic, thall be faithfully delivered to the generals of the British forces.

Anf. Agreed to.

2. Property and persons of every description shall be placed under the protection of the law; and passports shall be granted to such persons as may wish to leave the island.

Anf. All property and inhabinants will be subject to and under the protection of the English laws. Perfors withing to quit the island must obtain permission of the governor or commander of the island.

3. No inhabitant shall be difturbed, molested, or banished, on account of his opinions, or for having held any place under the French republic.

Anf. Agreed to, as answered in the second article.

4. The agent general, the commander in chief, and the forces of the republic, who have defended the island, shall march out with the honours of war, and deliver their arms; the officers only being allowed to keep their swords: they shall be treated as prisoners of war, and sent back to France as soon as possible.

Ans. The first part of this article granted, but the troops must remain prisoners of war until exchanged.

5. The British forces shall take possession of the Morne Fortune at the hour which may be appointed for that purpose, and the French garrison shall march out with their arms and baggage, drums beating, and colours slying.

Anf. The fort to be put into the potlession of the British troops to-morrow at noon; the garrison to march out of the fort in the manner desired. The garrison to occupy houses in the neighbourhood of the fort, until vessels shall be provided for their reception.

6. The

6. The garrison shall pile their arms at the place which may be appointed for that purpose, and shall immediately be sent to France. The officers shall be allowed to take with them their wives and children.

Anf. The arms to be piled on the glacis without the fort. Answer has already been given as to the disposal of the garrison. The officers may dispose of their wives and children as they please.

7. The agent general of the exeeutive directory, his aides-de-camp, fecretary, and other persons attached to him, shall be allowed to keep all papers and effects belonging to his office. The same favour shall be granted to the commander in chief and all the officers of the garrison.

Ant Agreed to; but all papers relating to the state of the island, public works, and all plans and maps, to be given up.

8. The volunteers ferving with the French forces shall be allowed to keep their knapfacks.

Anf. Agreed to, according to the return given in by the commander in chief.

9. No person shall be plundered or insulted, on account of the opinions he has hitherto professed.

Anf. Agreed to.

10. Two vessels of the republic, lying in the harbour, shall be granted to the agent of the executive directory, to serve as covered boats. The crews of these two vessels shall, however be considered as prisoners of war.

Anf. Refused; but every accommodation that can be desired by the agent general of the executive directory shall be granted, colour, shall be allowed to return immediately to their respective homes, without insult or molestation.

Ans. Agreed to.

12. The fick and wounded of the garrison shall be taken care of in the same manner as the English, and, on their recovery, shall be entitled to the same terms as the other prisoners.

Ans. Agreed to.

13. All the articles of this capitulation shall be faithfully and strictly observed by both parties.

Anf. Agreed to.

Additional Articles.

Proper officers to be named by the agent general and commander in chief, to take the necessary orders for the surrender of Gros Islets. Souffriere, and Vieux Fort, and other posts that may be occupied in the island. The means of conveyance shall be found for the said officers. Stores and provisions of all-kinds to be delivered by the French commissaries to the British commissaries authorised to receive them on the surrender of the different posts.

(Signed) RALPH ABERCROMBY. HUGH C. CHRISTIAN. GOTTENS.

GOYRAND. Morne Duchasseaux, St. Lucia, May 25, 1796.

Articles of Capitulation of Colombo, in the island of Ceylon.

Preliminary Article.—John Gerand Van Angelbeck, counsellor of India, governor and director of the Dutch possessions in the island of Ceylon, offers to deliver up to colonel colonel Stuart, and captain Gardner, commanding the English troops, the fortress of Colombo, upon the following conditions, at the expiration of three days.

Ant. Major Patrick Alexander Agnew, adjutant-general of the British troops in the island of Ceylon, by virtue of the powers delegated to him by colonel James Stuart, commanding the British army, and Alan Hyde Gardner, esq. captain of his majesty's ship Heroine, and senior officer of the naval force before Colombo, confents to accept of the furrender of the fort Colombo, on the undermentioned terms, provided the capitulation is figured this evening, and the fort delivered to the British troops to-morrow morning at ten o'clock, in the manner stipulated in the following articles.

Art. I. In this capitulation shall be included the town of Gale, and the fort of Caliture, with all their dependencies, lands, domains, &c. of the hon. Dutch East India Company; and the governor shall issue orders to the commander and council of Gale, and the commandant of Caliture, for the actual surrender, according to the contents of this capitulation.

Anf. Granted.

Art. 2. The fort, with all its dependencies, artillery, ammunition, flores, provisions, and all other effects belonging to the company, with the plan and papers relative to the fortifications, thall bona fide be delivered up, without concealing or keeping back any thing.

Anf. Granted. The surveys of the districts of the island of Ceylon, and its coasts, with all the other public plans, to be included.

Art. 3. And as the banks at Colombo, as well as Gale, are two years in arrear, the delivery thall take place according to the balances now actually existing, and a reasonable time be allotted to the commercial fervants here, and at Gale, with their allistants, to finish their books; and they shall during that time receive the pay and emoluments fixed for their fervices. As the fmith, cooper, house carpenter, the overfeer of the arienal, and the brick-maker, receive every thing by indent, their accounts thall be examined by our accountants, and paid by the English: on the other hand, the above mentioned artificers and overfeers are responsible for the articles issued to them.

Anf. One year, or eighteen months, if absolutely necessary, shall be allowed, for the purpose of arranging the books; during which time a reasonable salary shall be paid to the servants of the Dutch company necessarily employed in this department. The accounts of the artizans shall be examined and liquidated.

Art. 4. All public papers shall also be faithfully delivered over; but attested copies of all the public and secret consultations held during his short government, and which he has not had an opportunity of forwarding to Holland or Batavia, shall be given to governor Van Angelbeck, to enable him to answer for his conduct, according to the existing circumstances.

Anf. Granted.

Art. 5. The returns and merchandize of the company, which are partly laden on board the thips Berlicum and Enfgezenheid, now lying in the roads and partly stored in private houses, as well as those at Gale, shall also be faithfully delivered by the commissaries, who shall be appointed by the governor, to major Agnew, who is authorized by the government of Madras to receive them.

APPENDIX to the CHRONICLE.

Ans. All merchandize, stores, and public property, of every defeription, either laden on board the thips now anchored under the guns of the fort, deposited in publictiores, or distributed in the houses of individuals; as well as all public property placed in a fimilar manner at Gale, Caliture, or any other part of the island of Ceylon, depending on these governments, thall be delivered up by the committaries, who thall be named by the governor Van Augelbeck to major Aguew, the major appointed by the government of Madras to receive them, in three weeks from this.

Art. 6. But as the company has of late borrowed money upon interest, of their fervants and inhabitants, and, when in want of ready money, have iffued (kredi& breeven) promillory notes, to the amount of about five lack of rix-dollars, of which, however, at least one half is in the treatury, with a promise to realize the fame; and as feveral iervants have their pay and emoluments in the hands of the company, for which they have no other fecurity but their property, the above mentioned debts shall be paid out of them, and the notes discharged, which can occation the lefs confideration, as the returns alone, taking the fine cinnamon at only three rupees a pound, the pepper at one hundred rupees per candy, cardamoms at one rupee a pound, and the piece goods and other merchandize at the invoice price, will amount to about twenty-five lacks of rupees, and all the debts, pay, and notes in circulation not above fix lacks. The copper doodees shall continue current for one stiver.

Anf. As Mr. Van Angelbeck has affured the officers commanding his majefty's naval and land forces before Colombo, that a refusal to comply with the demand contained in the 6th article, will be attended with the total ruin of the colony, they confent to the following arrangements regarding the paper currency of this island, provided, the public property of the Dutch company is found to be conformable to the statement contained in this article. The English government of Ceylon will take up the promillory notes of the Dutch government which are still in circulation, provided they do not exceed the fum of 50,000l. sterling, and isfue certificates for the amount, bearing an interest of three per cent per ann. payable half yearly, which certificates shall be in force so long as the diffricts of Ceylon, extending from Matura to Chilau, shall be in possession of the English, and no Should these districts be reflored to the Dutch, the responsibility of payment will necessarily revert to them, in which event the original notes of the Dutch government shall be restored to the proprictors, in exchange for the certificates granted by the British government. The officers commanding the British forces are not authorized to provide for the payment of the arrears due to the fervants of the company. This must be left to the future determination of his Britannic majesty.

The copper coin of this island must find its own value in the course of exchange.

Art. 7. All private property, without exception, shall be secured to the proprietors.

Anf. Granted, with the exception of all military and naval itores, which, in every instance, must be deemed public property.

Art. 8. In which is expressly ineluded the funds of the orphan house, or the college for the administration of the effects of infant children, and of the committee for managing the poor funds, as also the two thips now in the roads Enigezindheid) (Berlicum and which belong to individuals in Holland, and are chartered by the company, as shall be proved.

Anf. Granted, with exception of the ships, which must be deemed public property.

Art. 9. The garrison shall march out with the honours of war; pile their arms, by command of their own officers, on the ciplanade, and again return to their barracks. The officers to keep up their side-arms; the clevangs and crees of the noncommissioned officers and private Malays to be locked up in chefts, and on their departure, on being tet on shore, to be returned to them.

Anf. Granted.

Art. 10. The European officers, non-commissioned and privates of the battalion of the Dutch troops, and the detachment of the Wirtemberg regiment, doing duty with it, as well as the artillery and seamen, shall be transported in English ships from hence to Europe or Batavia, according to their choice, with permission to carry along with them their women, children, neceffary servants, and baggage. None of the officers, however, shall be moved from hence against their will, as many of them and married, and have their property here; and in case any of them wishing to depart, time shall be allowed them to arrange their affairs to go where they please, on their parole of honour not to ferve in this war against England, until they shall be exchanged.

Anf. The European officers, noncommissioned officers and privates; as well of the Dutch battalion, of the regiment of Wirtemberg, the artillery, engineers, and marine, must be confidered as prifoners of war, and as fuch they will be treated with that attention which the British government has ever shewn to those whom the fortune of war has placed in its power. The whole shall be sent to Such of the officers as defire to return to Ceylon, for the reasons mentioned in this article, will have permission to do so, on giving their parole of honour not to ferve during the present war against the English. Those who may defire to return to Europe thall be permitted to to do, on the fame conditions, but without any claim on the British government for pay and allowance of any description.

Art. 11. As there are some native born French in garrison, they shall be transported to the French islands if they choose it.

Anf. The French of the garrison will be considered as prisoners of war, and fent to Madras.

Art. 12. The Malays that do not choose to remain here, shall be transported in English ships, with their women and children, to the island of Java.

Ans. The Malay troops shall be fent from hence, with their wives and children, to Tutacoren, and from from thence by easy marches to Madras. They shall be subsisted while they remain prisoners, and if not taken into the British service, shall, at a convenient time, be sent to the island of Java, at the expence of the British government.

Art. 13. These transportations shall take place at the expence of the English, and until that time the military, Europeans as well as Malays, shall continue to enjoy their pay, as well as emoluments, as was customary in the company's service. None of the military shall be forced, or even persuaded, to enter into the service of his majesty, or the honourable English company.

Anf. The military officers, European and native, shall receive the same pay allowed to them in the Dutch service. The noncommissioned and privates shall be subsisted according to the regulations of the British government for the prisoners of war. None shall be forced to enter the service of Great Britain against their confent.

Art. 14. The Sepoys and Moormen in the service thall have liberty to return to their birth place.

Ans. Granted.

Art. 15. The Chingaleefe Lafcars, being soldiers, according to the nature of their service, and the burghers and civil servants by the laws of the colony being obliged to take up arms for its defence, it shall not tend to prejudice those people.

Anf. Granted.

Art. 16. The governor Van Angelbeck, the commander of Gale, Fretz, and all the other political or commercial fervants, not required in their official capacities for the purposes mentioned in article 3. thall have permittion to remain as private individuals at Colombo, Gale, or other place on the island.

or to betake themselves elsewhere. In the first case, a reasonable means of subsistence shall be allowed to each, according to his rank. In the last, they shall be permitted to carry their essects along with them, without payment of any tax or duty whatever, but then all allowance to cease.

Ans. Granted, with this exception, that as the commanders of the British forces before Colombo are not authorized to grant the sub-sistence required, this subject must be referred to the decision of the government of Port St. George.

Art. 17. The respective vendue masters here and at Gale shall be maintained during the collection of the outstanding balances, in right of the preserence granted those people by the company.

Anf. Granted, for all balances now outstanding.

Art. 18. The clergy and other ecclefiaftical fervants thall continue in their functions, and receive the fame pay and emoluments as they had from the company.

Ans. Granted under the same exception annexed to the 16th.

article.

Art. 19: The citizens and other inhabitants shall be allowed to follow their employments, and enjoy all the liberties and privileges as the subjects of his majesty.

Anf. Granted.

$.

Art.20. The native servants in the different departments shall be continued in their employs during their good behaviour.

Ans. Granted, subject to such regulations as the British government may hereafter judge necessary.

Art. 21. The eastern princes,. Tommogoms, and other men of rank here as state prisoners, and who receive a monthly subsistence, thall continue to receive it, according to the list which thall be given in.

An. Granted, while they remain in Ceylon.

Art. 22. All notarial papers, fuch as wills, bills of purchase and sales, obligations, securities, bonds, &c. that continue in force, and the registers of them be presented by commissaries appointed on both sides to that purpose.

Ant. Grantet.

Art. 23. All civil falts depending in the council of juttice, thall be decided by the large council, according to our laws.

Art. Grapted; but they must be decided in twelve months from this date.

Art. 24. The deferters who are here thall be pardoned.

Anf. All defectors from the English service must be unconditionally given up.

Art. 25. The above articles of capitulation thall be faithfully fulfilled and continued by the figuratures of the officers commanding his majety stea and land forces, Colonel James Stuart, and Captain Alan Hyde Gardner; and in cafe of any thing appearing obfcure, it thall be faithfully cleared up; and if any doubts thall arife, it thall be confirmed for the benefit of the befieged.

Ans. Granted.

Art. The garrison shall march out, agreeably to the 9th article, at ten o'clock to morrow morning, when the gate of Deltt shall be delivered to a detachment of the British troops. The governor Van Angelbeck will order an officer to point out the public magazines, posts, and public stores, that guards may be placed for their security, and the preservation of order in the garrison.

Done in Colombo, this 15th day of February, 1706.
(Signed) J. Gran. Angelbeck.
(Signed) P. A. Agnew, adj gen.
Approved and confirmed, (Signed) J. STUART.

A. H. GARDNER.

Articles of Capitulation which lieutenant-general fir Ralph Abereromoy, K. B. commander in chief of his majesty's forces in the West Indies, grants to the French government in St. Vincent's, the 11th of June, 1796. Art. 1. The garriton of the Vigic and its dependencies to march out this day at twelve o'clock, and lay down their arms.

2. The negroes, &c. are to return to their respective proprietors.

3. The rest of the garrison become prisoners of war. The officers are allowed to retain their swords, and all are allowed to keep their private effects.

4. Such persons as have been guilty of murders, or of burning houses or estates, must be subject to the judgment of the laws of the island.

5. The commandant of the French troops shall cause to be given up, as soon as possible, all the posts which the French troops are in possession of in this island; and the said troops are to become prisoners, upon the conditions granted to the garrison of the Vigie.

6. The commandant of the French troops shall be responsible that all artillery, ammunition, and stores, of every kind, shall be delivered up to the British troops in the order they are now in, and any injury or waste committed on them from this time, will be considered as a breach of faith.

7. By the fourth article it is understood that all persons, except such as come under the meaning of that article, are for this time pardoned for having departed from their allegiance to his majesty.

8. In addition to the first article, the commander in chief consents that the garrison should march out with the honours of war.

(Signed) R. ABERCROMBY. T. WOLLEY.

We, the undersigned, administrators of the French army in this island, accept the above articles of capitulation, subject to the sanction of the delegated commissary, and of the military committee.

(Signed)
G. Audibert.
com. del.

CH. SUGUE, administrator.

BOUNY, commandant en second.

(For the commander in chief of the republican army,

D. VICTOR, aid-de-camp.

Marinier.)

Terms of Capitulation agreed upon by major-general Oliver Nicolls, commanding his majesty's forces in the island of Grenada, and captain Jossey, commanding the troops of the French Republic in the same island.

Art. 1. The posts under the command of the above commandant Jossey, viz. Mabonia, or Dugaldstone, the Vigie, or the hill of Gouyave, and Dalincourt, shall be surrendered to the arms of his Britannic majesty.

2. The battalion, of which the said captain Jossey is commandant, the artillery, and the commissariat of the French republic, comprehending, however, no person not formerly free, shall be prisoners of war, and remain so till exchanged.

Vol. XXXVIII.

3. The garrison of each post shall march out with the honours of war, and lay down their arms in such place as will be pointed out to them, after which they will be conducted to the most convenient place till they can be embarked.

4. All guns, ordnance stores, commissary's stores, public papers, and effects, belonging to the French republic, or actually in the posts occupied by their troops, are to be delivered up faithfully to the proper officers who will be sent to receive them.

5. The officers will retain their swords, and both officers and men their baggage.

6. The post of Mabonia will be taken possession of as soon as the capitulation is signed; and of Gouyave an hour afterwards; the post of Dalincourt at sour o'clock this afternoon.

(Signed) OLIVER NICOLLS, major-gen.

Jossey.

London Gazette Extraordinary.

Parliament-street, Nov. 3, 1796.

A Dispatch, of which the following is a copy, was this day received by the right hon. Henry Dundas, one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, from major-general Craig, commanding his majesty's troops at the Cape of Good Hope, dated Camp, on the shore of Saldanha Bay, August 19, 1796.

I have great fatisfaction in reporting to you the event of an attempt which has been made by the enemy, and which has terminated to the honour of his majesty's arms, in the entire capture of the fquadren of Dutch thips of war, deftined for the purpote of retaking this fettlement.

Having made every arrangement within my means, by the effablishment of a fmall pott, and the laying the read by a fufficient number of the few men which I had been able to mount, for watching Saldanha Bay, I received a report on the 3d indant, transmitted in fourteen hours, that nine thips had appeared off that could on the preceding afternoon, which I immediately communicated to vice-admiral fir George Keith Elphinstone. By the fime report there appeared to be the firongest probability that his majesty's brig the Hope had been ciptured by them; and as there was no further account of them that day, I concluded that the information which they had received, by that means, of our firength here, had induced them to continue their route, and that they would fiand far to the westward perfore they doubled the Cape, to avoid fir George's fleet, which had put to ha as foon as was possible after the receipt of the intelligence.

In order, however, to omit no precaution, I fent up Lieut, M'Nab, with a few mounted men, to watch the Eay more narrowly; and from him I received a report, on Saturday night the 6th instant, at twelve o'clock, that the same number of thips which had formerly been reported had anchored that morning in the Bay, and that there was no doubt of their being enemies. I lost not a moment in sending directions to Simon's Town, from whence, by the general willingness and activity which prevailed amongit all ranks, five veilels were dispatched by nine o'clock, in quest of the admiral, with the informa-

As it fortunately happened that the 25th and 27th light dragoons, with part of the 19th, and the whole of the 33d regiments, were in Simon's Bay, I could be under no apprehension for the safety of the colony from any force which could be landed from nine ships of war. It became, however, an object of infinite importance to the welfare of the settlement; to prevent any body of the enemy from throwing themselves into the coun-At the fame time the fecurity of the Cape Town became an object of particular attention, both from the reasonable expectation, that the enemy would not have come with such a force, without a prospect of a junction with some other-armament, and from the possibility of the admiral being prevented from doubling the Cape by the north westerly winds which usually. prevail at this feafon, and which would carry the enemy in fix hours from Saldauha to Table Bay. was therefore with particular fatisfaction that I found myfelf poffelled of a force adequate to both these objects.

No time was loft in making the necessary arrangements in a country totally unused to a movement of this nature. The troops began their march on Sunday morning, necessarily by divisions, on account of subsistence. The burgher st-

nate was affembled, to whom I exposed my intentions, to which they expressed the most ready com-Waggons were every where demanded by them, and furnithed with cheerfulness. valry was necessary, but the appointments of the 28th were on board a ship which had sailed in quest of the admiral. Those of the 25th were also on board ship in Simon's Bay, and we had not above fifty horses. The appointments were brought up, and I did not scruple, on such an occasion, to require all faddle horses, without exception, to be brought in, which were valued by two members of the court of justice, and two officers of the 28th dragoons, and paid for on the spot, to the entire satisfaction of the owners.

By these means, sir, leaving major-general Doyle in the command of the troops at, and about Cape Town, amounting to near 4000 men, and brigadier-general Campbell in the immediate command of the town, I, on the morning of the 16th instant, reached Saldanha Bay, at the head of the advanced guard, confisting of the light infantry, a body of Hottentots, and fifty of the 25th light dragoons, aflifted by brigadier-general McKenzie, the remainder of whose corps, confisting of the grenadiers, the 78th and 80th battalions, fifty more of the 25th, and one hundred of the 28th light dragoons, in all about 2500 men, with two howitzers and nine field pieces, arrived there also in an hour after.

In the mean time the admiral had returned to False Bay, and on there receiving the first accounts of the enemy being in Saldanha Bay, had put to sea again with the utmost expedition; and we had the satisfaction, from the heights from whence we descended to the shores of the Bay, to see him, with all his fails crowded, advancing with a fair wind directly to the mouth of the harbour, though still at fome distance. One of the enemy's frigates, which lay near the shore to cover their watering, cannonaded us very britkly as we defcended the heights, though without effect, and we returned their fire with as little, having at that time only three-pounders with us; but a howitzer being brought up, a few shells were thrown with great precision by captain Robertfon, who probably would have destroyed her; but perceiving that our fleet was then entering the Bay, and that there was no possibility of her escaping, I desisted, from firing, thinking it more for his majesty's interest that she should share the fate of the remainder of the squadron, the capture of which appeared to me to be inevitable, than that we should risk the defiroying her, from a vain punctilio of obliging her to strike to us. We then employed ourselves in making the necessary dispositions for affording fuch affifiance as might be in our power, in the event of the obstinacy of the enemy admiral to attack obliging the them, as well as fuch as would be expedient in case they should run their ships on shore, neither of which, however, I thought probable. I was accordingly informed, by a letter from fir George the following morning, that the whole had furrendered themselves to him.

The means by which this event has been accomplished, fir, has not afforded any opportunity to his G 2 majesty's merely's troops of displaying that bravery in his service, which I am oscinient they would have thewn, had the occasion presented ittelrabable the utmost alacrity and chear-fulness, under almost every privation, except that of meat, during a match of ninety miles, through to have any merit, I can with truth present them to his majery's troops

This mored, tir, has never yet. I believe, been attempted bridly body of troops, however and le and, permit me to affere you. It is been attended with fuch unconsmon difficulties, that it never could have been accomplished but by the display of the qualities I have mentioned in the troops, and a union of extraordinary exertions in all the departments concerned. In these all have equal claim to my acknowledgemenes; but I cannot difpense without particularizing the intelligence and activity with which, regardless of the uncommon fatigue which attended it, Lieutenant M'Nab. of the oSth regiment, with about twenty or his mounted men, performed the fervice allotted to him of watching the enemy, and preventing any communication with them, from the first moment of their coming into the Bay, till our arrival.

It is, fir, with very particular fatisfaction that I have further to report that I have received, on this eccation, every politible affilhance from his majelty's subjects of the colony.

The burgher senate have discharged the duty imposed upon them with the greatest readiness, impartiality, and activity, whilst their requisitions and orders on the inhabitants for their waggons, cattle, and horses, having been complied with with a chearfulness which could, I am satisfied, only proceed from a conviction of the presence to be given to his majesty's mild and paternal government over the wild system of anarchy and contusion from which they were furnishing the means of being effectually detended.

This will be delivered to you, fir, by my side decamp, captain Baynes, who has been in this country fince the first arrival of his majesty's troops under my command, and to whose intelligence and active assistance I have been, on every occasion, highly indebted. I beg leave, fir, most humbly to recommend him to his majesty's notice.

I have the honour to be, With the greatest respect, Sir, &c. &c.

J. H. CRAIG.

Admirally Office, Nov. 3, 1796.

Dispatches, of which the following are copies, (brought by captain John Aylmer, of his majesty's thip Tremendous) were this day received from the hon, vice admiral fir George Keith Elphintione, K. B.

Menarch, Saldanba Bay, Sir, Aug. 19,1796.

I have the honour to inclose a list of a Dutch iquadron under the command of rear-admiral Engelbertus Lucas, tent hither for the reduction of this colony, but which were compelled to furrender by capitulation, on the 17th instant, to the detachment of his majesty's thips under my command, named in No. VII. on the terms also inclosed. For further particulars I beg leave to refer you to the accompanying detail of the proceedings of the squadron from the 4th to the 18th instant, and I hope the lords committioners of the admiralty will approve the measures I have taken, so essential to the British commercial interests in the East.

The ships are all coppered, and in good condition, excepting the Castor, whose rudder is defective.

In justice to the officers and men I have the honour to command, it is my duty to observe, that, in consequence of the most violent tempestuous weather I ever beheld, and the very unpleasant situations in which the squadron was at times placed, they cheerfully, and much to their credit, underwent a degree of satigue hardly credible.

Captain Aylmer will have the bonour of presenting these dispatches. I beg leave to mention him to their lordships, as a respectable gentleman and an active officer.

I have the honour to be,
With great esteem, sir,
Your most obedient,
humble servant,
G. K. Elphinstone.
Evan Nepean, Esq.

Monarch, Saldanha Bay,
Sir, Aug. 19, 1796.
I have the honour to inform you, that intelligence was received at Cape Town, on the 3d inftant, of a number of ships having been seen in the offing, at Saldanha Bay, which was confirmed on the 5th.
In consequence of this every preparation was made for putting to fea immediately, with the squadron under my command; but from the Monarch's main-mast being out, and the tempestuous weather, I was not able to quit the anchorage in Simon's Bay until the 6th, when we proceeded to sea.

On getting under weigh an officer from the shore came on board to inform me, that a number of sails had been seen the preceding night in the offing, near False Bay; I then resolved to steer to the southward and west; in expectation of their having taken that course.

The squadron continued cruizing in the most tempestuous weather 1 have ever experienced, which damaged many of the ships, and at one time the Ruby had five feet water in her hold: we were joined at sea by his majesty's ship Stately, Rattlesnake, and Echo sloops. On the 12th I returned, with a fresh breeze blowing from the fouth east, and, upon anchoring in Simon's Bay, the master attendant came off with information that the ships seen, consisting of nine sail, had put into Saldanha Bay on the 6th, the fame day on which I had proceeded to fea; that they remained there by the last advice, and that four ships had been dispatched in quest of me to communicate this welcome intelligence.

I immediately made the fignal to fail, but the Crescent, had got ashore; the wind blew strong, and increased on the following day to a perfect tempest, in which the Tremendous parted two cables, drove, and was in great danger of being lost, so that, notwithstanding every exertion, and the most anxious moments of my life, we could not get out until the 15th.

On the 16th the squadron arrived off off Saldanha Bay at sun-set, and the Crescent, which had been ordered a-head to discover information and to report, made the signal for the enemy, consisting of three ships of the line, three frigates, and other ships, being moored in the Bay.

The fquadron stood on into the Bay in the order of failing, but the night coming on, and the rear being too far extended for action, I judged it expedient to come to an anchor within shot of the enemy's Thips, and, perceiving their numbers very inconsiderable in comparison with the force under my command, I confidered it my duty, and an incumbent act of humanity, to address the Dutch officer in command, and consequently forwarded the letter to him, of which the inclosure No. III. is a copy, by Lieutenant Coffin, of the Monarch, with a flag of truce; to this I received a verbal return, that a positive reply should be sent in the morning at day-break. I was fearful the enemy might attempt to thips, and therefore injure the ordered Lieutenant Coffin, to return immediately with my letter No. IV. to which he brought back the reply No. V.

On the 17th, at nine in the morning, a Dutch officer came on board with a flag, and presented proposals of terms for capitulation, which you will observe in the correspondence, with my remarks and definitive letter; and at five P. M. the terms contained in the inclosed copy were ultimately agreed upon, but it was impossible to take possession of the thips until the 18th, on account of the stormy weather.

It affords me the highest satisfaction, therefore, to communicate to my lords commissioners of the admiralty, that a fquadron of thips belonging to the United States, under the command of his excellency rear-admiral Engelbertus Lucas, has furrendered to the Britith force under my command, confisting of three ships of the live, two fine frigates, two of 28 guns, and a floop of 18 guns, all completely coppered, flored, and victualled, together with a large ladened ftore ship, the names of which are described in the inclofure No. VI. and the British ships, to whom they are prizes, in the inclosure No. VII.

The consequent joy of this fortunate event is much augmented from the consolatory reflection on its accomplishment without effusion of human blood, or injury to either of the enemy's or British ships, not a single shot having been fired.

I must, however, beg leave to observe, that any resistance on the part of the enemy could only have occasioned the wanton sacrifice of a few lives; and I doubt not, that had their numbers been adequate to the contention, their conduct would have confirmed the acknowledged merit at all times recorded to the martial spirit of subjects of the United States; and I can with fimilar confidence affure you, that the officers and men under my command, would have exhibited a conduct equally creditable to themselves.

The repeated advices communicated in your letters, respecting the enemy's forces destined to this quarter, agreed so correctly with the intelligence I obtained by other, means, that I have long been expecting their arrival, and was thereby thereby enabled to be perfectly prepared to receive them, and conftantly to keep a vigilant look-out.

I have the honour to be,
With great effeem, fir,
Your most obedient,
Humble servant,
G. K. Elphinstone.

Evan Nepean, 1 sq.

No. III.—To his excellency the admiral, or the officer commanding the ships of the United States now lying in Saldanha Bay.

Sir,

It is unnecessary for me to detail the force I have the honour to command, because it is in your view, and speaks for itself; but it is for you to consider the efficacy of a resistance with the force under your command

Humanity is an incumbent duty on all men, therefore, to spare an effusion of human blood, I request a surrender of the ships under your command, otherwise it will be my duty to embrace the earliest moment of making a serious attack on them, the issue of which is not difficult for you to guess

I have the honour to be, &c.

(Signed) G K. ELPHINSTONE.

His majestr's ship Monarch, Saldanha Bay, Aug 16, 1796.

No. IV.—To his Excellency the Rear-admiral, commander in chief of the Dutch ships lying in Saldanha Bay.

Sir,

I am this instant honoured with your verbal answer to my letter of this date, and delivered to me by lieutenant Cossin, of the Monarch.

If I understand him right, it is, that a flag of truce sublists between your excellency, on the part of the States General, and myself, on behalf of his Britannic majesty, and. as was demonstrated by my displaying a flag of truce before I difpatched the first letter delivered to you by lieutenant Coffin, and which truce is to continue until day-light in the morning. therefore, my duty to require a positive assurance, that no damage shall be done to any of the ships or vessels of war, public stores, or effects, that may be placed under your command, otherwise I thall not confider myself in duty bound to restrain an immediate áttack, or to treat such prisoners as may fall into my hands in a manner fuitable to my general inclinations or his majesty's offers in similar cases.

I have the honour to be, &c.

(Signed) G. K. Elphinstone. His majesty's ship Monarch, Saldanha Bay, aug. 16, 1796.

No. V.—To his excellency admiral G. K. Elphinstone, commander in chief of his Britannic majesty's squadron.

Excellency,

The two letters delivered to me' by your officer, from want of an interpreter, have taken a long time to translate.

Your excellency may rest asfured of receiving a positive answer to-morrow morning, and that during this time no damage whatever shall be done to the vessels of my squadron, which I promise you upon my honour.

This time is necessary to call to my aid the captains of the frigates.

G 4 detached detached at the bot om of the Bay, in order to hold a council of war, whom I am obliged to essemble on account of responsibility.

I have the hono ir to be, &c.

(Signed) ENGELBERTUS LUCAS.

On board the Dortrecht,

Aug. 16, 1796.

To his Excellency vice-admiral fir G K. Elphinstone, &c. &c. &c.

Excellency,

Agreeable to my promise, I send you a copy of terms of capitulation, which I doubt not you will grant. In this hope I am

Your excellency's obedient fervant,

(Signed) ENGULBERTUS LUCAS.

Dortrecht, at anchor in Sale

danha Bay, Aug. 17, 1796, second year of the Bataviun republican liberty.

Articles of capitulation agreed upon in Saldanha Bay this 17th of August, 1796, between his excel-Iency Rear-admiral Engelbertus Lucas, commander in of the fquadron of the United States now lying in Saldanha Bay, and the hon. fir George Keith Elphinstone, knight of the most honourable and military order of the Bath, viceadmiral of the blue, and commander in chief of his Britannic majesty's ships and vessels in the Indian feas, at the Cape of Good Hope, and of those now lying in Saldanha Bay.

Art. 1. Rear admiral Lucas will deliver up to vice-admiral Elphintione the squadron under his command, upon the conditions of the capitulation underwritten.

Anf. The vice-admiral is actuated by principles of humanity to prevent the effusion of human blood, and considers the surrender of the Dutch squadron as a matter of necessity and not of choice.

2. The British admiral shall appoint two ships as cartels, the frigates the Braave and Sirene, in which, the rear-admiral, his officers and midshipmen, and ship's crew, shall be permitted to proceed, without hindrance, to Holland, and the officers shall keep their side arms.

Ans. Inadmissible, by reason that the cartel ships sent from Toulon and various other places, under similar circumstances, have been detained, and their crews imprisoned, contrary to the laws and usage of war, and the general good faith of nations; but officers becoming prisoners shall be allowed to keep and wear their swords and side arms, so long as they behave with becoming propriety, and shall be treated with the respect due to their rank.

III. The Dutch admiral, his officers and crew, shall retain their private property without being searched, and the remainder of the crew who cannot be received on board the frigates are to be sent to Holland in such manner as the British admiral shall judge proper.

Ans. Private property of every denomination will be secured to the proprietors to the fullest extent, in consequence of British acts of parliament and his Britannic majesty's positive orders, as well as from the general known disposition of British officers to treat with the utmost liberality those who become their prisoners.

IV. They

IV. They shall be provided with such quantities of provisions as may be necessary for those who embark on board the two frigates, and to be so provided from the Dutch ships.

Anf. Answered by fixth article.

V. These cartel ships, on their arrival in Holland, shall be sent to England, and there delivered to his Britannic majesty.

Anf. Already answered by the second article.

VI. The crew shall be permitted to go on shore for refreshment after their long voyage.

Anf. This must depend upon the major-general commanding the troops on shore, but the commander in chief will use his utmost exertions to render the situation of every individual as comfortable as possible, as to victualling, lodging, and every accommodation, either on board or on shore, as can be procured or reasonably expected; and he will dispose of such as become prisoners as similarly to their inclinations as his duty to his sovereign and the interests of his country will admit.

The fick shall be received into his majesty's hospitals, and taken care of equally with the British fick.

It is furthermore the commander in chief's duty and inclination to fend such to Europe as become prisoners, by the most speedy and convenient conveyances.

VII. The national flags of Batavia shall continue to be displayed on the Dutch ships so long as their crews remain on board.

Ans. The Batavian colours must be struck so soon as the ships are taken possession of by his Britannic majesty's officers.

(L.S.) G. K. ELPHINSTONE. ENGELBERTUS LUCAS. John Jackson, Secretary to the British commander in chief:

tary to the commander in chief of the Dutch squadron.

To his excellency rear-admiral Engelbertus Lucas, commander in chief of the squadron of the United States, now lying in Saldanha Bay.

Sir,

I have had the honour to receive your letter, with the proposals of capitulation, and I have now the honour to inclose you my letters and answers thereunto, which I hope will be acceptable. I have mentioned to captain Clarisse my inclination to accommodate your Excellency, and the other officers inclined to return to Europe upon their parole, with the Maria store ship, or in British vessels, of which there are many at the Cape; but any of the public armed ships I dare not presume to permit to depart.

Your excellency may rest assured of every good office within my reach. Should the inclosed articles not meet with your approbation, you will be pleased to order the slag of truce to be hauled down, as a signal that either party may commence hostilities.

I have the honour to be,
With great respect, sir,
Your most obedient,
Humble servant,
G. K. Elphinstone.

His Britannic majesty's ship Monarch, Saldanha Bay,

Aug. 17, 1796.

No. VI.—A list of ships late belonging to the United States, under the command of his excellency rear-admiral Engelbertus Lucas, which surrendered on the 17th of August, 1796, to a detachment tachment of the squadron of his majesty's thips under the command of the hon. sir George Keith Elphinstone, K. B. in Saldanha Bay.

Dortrecht, Rear-admiral Lucas, 66 guns, 370 men.

Revolution, captain Rhnebende,

66 guns, 400 men.

Admiral Tromp, captain Valkenburg, 54 guns, 280 men.

Castor, captain Clarisse, 44 guns,

240 men.

Braave, captain Zoetmans, 40 guns, 234 men.

Bellona, captain Valk, 28 guns,

130 men.

Sirene, captain De Cerf, 26 guns, 130 men.

Havik, captain Bezemer, 18

guns, 76 men.

Maria (storeship), ——, 112 men.——Total 341 guns, and 1972 men.

N. B. Many of the guns are brais, besides which they are well furnithed with caronnades.

They have four field pieces of land artillery on board. The troops are under the command of the rear-admiral; lieut. colonel Henri is adjutant-general, and monf. Grandecourt, commandant of artillery.

G. K. ELPHINSTONE.

Monarch, Saldanha Bay, August 19, 1796.

No. VII.—A list of his majesty's ships of the detachment of the squadron under the command of the hon. sir George Keith Elphinstone, K. B. to which the Dutch squadron, under the command of his excellency Engelbertus Lucas, surrendered on the 17th of August, 1796, in Saldanha Bay.

Monarch, 74 guns, 612, men, vice-admiral the hon. fir George Keith Elphinstone, K. B. captain John Elphinstone.

Tremendous, 74 guns, 590 men, rear-admiral Thomas Pringle:

captain John Aylmer.

America, 64 guns, 491 men, commodore John Blanket.

Stately, 64 guns, 491 men, captain Billy Douglas.

Ruby 64 guns, 491 men, captain Jacob Waller.

Sceptre, 64 guns, 491 men, captain W. Essington.

Trident, 64 guns, 491 men, captain E. O. Oiborne.

Jupiter, 50 guns, 343 men, captain George Lossack.

Crescent, 36 guns, 264 men, captain Edward Buller.

Sphynx, 24 guns, 155 men, captain Andrew Tod.

Mosell, 16 guns, 121 men, captain Charles Brisbane.

Rattlesnake, 16 guns, 121 men, captain Edward Ramage.

Echo, 16 guns, 121 men, captain

John Turner.

Hope, floop, captain Thomas Alexander.

Monarch, Saldanha Bay, August 19, 1796.

London Gazette, Nov. 29, 1796.

A dispatch from the governor and Council of Madras, dated Fort St. George, June 22, 1796, of which the following is a copy, has been received by the Court of Directors of the East India Company, and by them communicated to the right hon. Henry Dundas, one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state.

Honorable Sirs,

We have particular satisfaction in in offering to you our fincere congratulations on the complete fuccess which has attended the operations of rear admiral Rainier in the eastern seas; and judging that an early communication of this event might be of material use to his majesty's ministers, we have determined to forward this letter by the route of Bushorah.

It appears by the rear-admiral's dispatches, dated the 27th of March and 11th of April last, and which reached us on the 18th instant, by the Orpheus frigate, that the British troops were in possession of the islands of Amboyna and Banda, with their several dependencies, comprising, as it was thought, the whole of the Dutch islands, excepting Fornate, yielding cloves, nutmegs, and mace. This acquisition has been attained without the smallest loss on our side.

Amboyna and its dependencies were delivered up on the 16th of February, and Banda and its dependencies on the 8th of March. Copies of the capitulations are inclosed.

The admiral speaks in the handfometh manner of the activity and alacrity with which every duty was performed by the forces under his command, both naval and military; and dwells particularly on the perfect harmony which all along sublisted between the officers and men in both services. hoves us on this occasion to convey to you the high fense we entertain of the able and spirited conducti displayed by rear-admiral Ramier, whose hearty co-operation with us in every meafure conducive to the public weal demands our warmeft acknowledgements; and whilst we feel affured of your entire approbathis government, to give effect to the arrangements framed by his majetty's ministers for securing the Durch settlements in India, it is, nevertheless, incumbent upon us to declare, that the accomplishment of this great object has been chiefly obtained by the zealous and cheerful support which we have had the good fortune to experience from the officer entrusted with the execution of it.

We shall do ourselves the honour of transmitting, by the first sea conveyance, copies of all the papers received from the admiral, which will enable you to form an accurate opinion of the value of those islands. At present we can only give you a summary of his proceedings.

The admiral found in the treasury at Amboyna 81,112 rix dollars, and in store 515,940 pounds weight of cloves; in the treasure at Banda 65,675 rix dollars, and in store 84,777 pounds of nutmegs, and 19,587 pounds of mace, besides merchandize and other stores at each place, upon which no value had been then put.

We are preparing to send a reinforcement of troops for the better protection of those valuable islands; and, as the admiral has advised us that he is short of provisions, and in want of a supply of naval and military stores, it is our intention to forward an adequate stock of every necessary article.

We have great pleasure in acquainting you, that the company's possessions on this coast are in a state of perfect tranquillity; and that we have no reason to believe that any designs are in agitation

hv

by the native powers hostile to your interests.

We have the honour to be, &c.

(Signed) HOEART.

Alured Clarke. Edw. Saunders.

G. W. FALLOFIELD.

Capitulation of Amboyna, translated from the original Dutch,

Feb. 16, 1796.

NOT finding ourselves equal to withstand the great force with which we have been furprized, we the underfigned governor and council do hereby give up this settlement, with all its dependencies, and place the same under the protection of his Britannie majesty, upon the conditions mentioned to us in the letter of the right hon. the governor of Madras; and that is, upon condition that we may keep all our private property, and be allowed a reasonable subsistence; that the inhabitants be guaranteed in the fecure possession of their private properties; and that the fenior and junior servants of the civil establishment, the clergy, the military, and marine, receive their usual pay.

It is upon the above conditions that we shall, to-morrow morning, give over all the guards of the fort to the troops of his Britannic majesty, after receiving the ratification of this instrument by his excellency the commodore.

Done at Amboyna, in the castle of Victoria, on the above date.

(Signed)

A. CORNABE.

(Dutch co. feal) T. Ostrowski.

Eneas Mackay. Eron Fyzabal.

Secretary.

Approved of and acceded to,

(Signed) P. RAINIER.
(English seal) W. C. Lennon, his excellency Peter Rainier, efq. commodore, commanding the fea and land forces of his Britannic majesty in these seas, and F. Van Boeckholtz, governor of Banda, &c. &c.

IN confideration of our great want of provisions, and the greatforce with which the British have appeared before this fettlement, and to refift which would bring defiruction and defolation on the harmlet's inhabitants of this place, we therefore think it prudent, for the fake of humanity, and from our confidence in the honour and generofity of the English, to accept. of the terms offered to us, and to deliver into their hands this fortand fettlement, with all its dependencies, upon the following conditions, viz.

That private property be kept fecure to every individual of this fettlement, whether in or out of the company's service; that the servants of the company, civil and military, be kept in their respective stations; as far as may be thought necessary for the administration of justice; and the civil government of the place, the governor alone particularly excepted, as the government must, of course, be vested in the English; that the mili-. tary continue to receive their pay, and are not to be forced into the British service contrary to their wishes; and the civil servants also to be continued on their present pay; and fuch an allowance made for the provision of the governor as his excellency the commander of the British forces may think ade-The governor, however, and any other fervants of the company, shall be permitted to retire from the service, either to Batavia or elsewhere, whenever a convenient opportunity shall offer.

Upon these conditions we, the undersigned, consent to deliver up Fort Nassau, the settlement of Banda, and all its dependencies, to the troops of his Britannic majesty tomorrow morning, upon receiving a copy of this capitulation, ratisfied and signed by his excellency the British commander. The keys of all the public property, and all accounts properly authenticated, shall be immediately delivered over to the British, and the government entirely vested in them.

Fort Nassau, Banda Neira, March 8, 1796.

(Signed) T. VAN BOECKHOLTZ. A. H. VUEGE.

(L. S.) F. SAIGANG. E. MAZEE.

(L. S.) P. D. HAAN. M. WALLELOO.

Approved and accepted of, (Signed)

(L. S.) P. RAINIER.

True copies.

(Signed) W. C. JACKSON, Sec.

Copy of a circular letter to the lieutenants of counties on the sea coast, dated Whitehall, November 5, 1796.

My Lord,

AS it would materially add to the difficulties which already oppose themselves to any attempts, which it is possible the enemy may be induced to make upon our coast, if the live and dead stock of individuals residing near the sea-coast was capable of being instantly removed and secured, for the benefit of the proprietors, I am commanded to recommend it to your lordfhip to exert your influence in causing to be made out, as speedily as possible, an account of live and dead stock, in such of the parishes of the county of Sussex as are within ten or twelve miles of the sea.

With respect to the mode of making out the account required, I take this opportunity of transmitting to your lordship the form in which it has been executed by the voluntary exertions of the gentlemen of the county of Dorset; and shall beg to submit it for your lordship's consideration and adoption, unless where it may be found necessary to deviate from it, in consequence of local circumstances and situations.

With respect to the mode in which it is proposed to remove such live and dead stock, in case it should be necessary, your lord-ship will communicate with the commander in chief of the district in which the county of Sussex lies, and will concert with him such previous measures for this purpose as may be judged requisite.

The meeting which I have defired your lordship to call on the subject of my circular letter of this day's date, will afford you an opportunity of submitting this letter to the consideration of the deputy-lieutenants and the magistracy of the county of Sussex, and will consequently lead to the immediate adoption of such measures as shall be necessary to enable the return to be made, which I am persuaded your lordship will be of opinion is so much to be wished for.

I am further to inform your lordship, that the lords commifsioners of the treasury have received his majesty's pleasure, that they

s may be necessary for defraying any expences which may arise, in consequence of such possible removal of live and dead stock as I have supposed, as well as of any particular losses which may eventually be occasioned thereby.

Although this circumstance is such as must obviate every possible objection to the measure, I am nevertheless consident, that all those whom it may concern would, exclusively of every personal consideration or motive, join with the utmost alacrity in the execution of a measure which has for its object the general safety of the country.

I have the honour to be, &c.

PORTLAND.

Copy of a letter from the chancellor of the exchequer to the lord mayor.

Downing-street, 1st Dec. My Lord,

ITAKE the liberty of transmitting to your lordship a copy of a letter which I have thought it my duty to write to the governor and deputy governor of the bank, and of the memorandum therein referred to, which it is their intention to lay before a court of proprietors this day. I have the satisfaction of thinking that the plan therein suggested is likely to receive the greatest countenance from many great mercantile bodies and respectable houses in the metropolis.

The repeated proofs which the citizens of London have given of their zeal and public spirit, leave me no doubt, that, if it appears likely to promote the interests of the country at this important critis, it will receive their chearful support in their individual capacity, as well as that of the corporate body, and of the different public com-It is unnecessary for me to state the effect which such an example would produce throughout the kingdom. With this view I would request your lordship, if you fee no impropriety in the measure, to take as speedily as possible such steps as you may think most advifeable for bringing the fubject under the confideration of the common council, and of the different public companies, and for ascertaining to what extent they may be inclined to contribute to the fuccess of the plan, in the event of its receiving the approbation of parliament.

I have the honour, &c.

W. PITT.

Copy of the chancellor of the exchequer's letter read at the Bank.

THAT under the present circumifances it feemed peculiarly necessary that provision should be made for the services of the enfuing year, without having recourse to the accustomed way of raising money by a loan, at the present price of the funds. It was therefore in contemplation to propole to parliament that one-fourth of the income of individuals of a certain class should be applied to that purpose, to be repaid according to the terms specified in the inclosed memorandum. There were itrong reasons to believe that many gentlemen would voluntarily fubscribe a larger proportion than what might be required of them, but the extent of contribution greatly depended on the examples that might be given, particularly on that which might be held out by the bank of England. He therefore earnestly hoped that the court of directors of the governor and company of the bank of England, and the proprietors, impressed with that zeal which they had always manifested for the public good, and convinced of the importance of the present crisis, would be induced to take the lead in a measure so highly conducive to the maintenance of public credit, and which would strongly tend to the acceleration of a permanent and honourable peace.

APPENDIX to the CHRONICLE.

Account of the total net produce of all the permanent taxes for one year, ending October 10th, 1796.

Cuftoms	-				£. 3,232,345	s. I†	d.
Excise	-	-	-		6,461,908	10	7 I
Stamps	-	-	Tribute	•	1,212,669	7	6
•				£	10,906,62	3 15	3

INCIDENTS.

Confolidated letter money —	156,000 0	O
——————————————————————————————————————	391,492 11
Seizures fince 25th October, 1760 — —	6,333 17
Profers Do	641 12	3
Letter money Do. — —	311,000 0	-
Alum mines Do. — —	960 0	•
Rent of a light house Do. — — —	6 13	4
Alienation duty Do. — —	- ° °	o
Compositions Do. — —	2 13	4
6d per lb. on pensions — — —	40,905 0	i
is. per lb. on do.	30,763 16	4
Houses and Windows since 10th October, 1766	349,336 15
Inhabited houses Ann. 1778 —	140,803 0
Hawkers and Pedlars, fince 24th June, 1710 —	4,410 0
Hackney coaches Ann. 1711 — — —	• • • •	,O
Ditto — 1784 — —	12,700 0	•
Male servants — 1785 — —	95,736 16
Four wheel carriages Do. — —	161,727 7	3 1/2
Two wheel do. Do. —	41,621 4	9 I
Horses — Do. — —	120,811 8	31
First fruits — — —	3,771 11	5
Tenths — — —	9,938 14	_
Arrears of duties repealed	1,994 18	2
•	- / / .

£. 1,891,703 19 11½

DÚTIES

DUTIES, Anno 1791.

Sugars ·	-			194,470	8	10
British spirits	•	•	-	18,128	,O	.0
Foreign do.				123,718	0	•
Bills and receipts	*		-	177,171	3	9
Game duty				15,488	I	4
f. 10 per cent. on	assessed taxe	s 	••••	86,123	12	4
Arrears of duty on	malt					-
•			. ***
		_	£	615,099	6	3
		-	-		-
	DUTI	ES, Anno 1	794.
Reisich Cairie				19 505	_	•
British spirits	_		_	18,505	0	0
Foreign do. Spirit licences		Marie	-	127,795	0	0
Glass —			-	44,000	0	.0
Brick and Tiles	(Cuchama)	-		43,222		0
Ditto —	(Customs)	-	-	245	11	7.
	(Excise)		-	59,345	0	0 .
Paper —	(Customs)			4,383	14	3
Ditto —	(Excise)			167,975	0	0 ;
Slates and Stones		-		16,756		8 '
. Attorneys articles				18,574	2	9
			£.	. 500,802	I	3_
. .	DITTI	7 			استوری د
•	1011	ES, Anno 1	795.			(
British spirits	•			20,396	0	0
Foreign ditto		-	-	128,485	0	0
Wines —			p-morphilips	541,897	0	•
Tea -		شية مسيه	-	205,999	0	0
Coçoa and Coffee	-		*	14,394		0
Fruit, Silk, &c.	trings.		*	111,764	4	6
Stamps —	-			46,404	13	7
Ship policies	Oració eso	-		91,543	4	1
Hair powder certif	icates	with the same of t	-	183,736	3	•
Sweets —		-	*	9,726	o .	0.
Receipts -		*	-	7,051	6	I
Coals —	-		-	11,060	7	7
		•
		-	f . 1	,372,365	18	10-
			X ,
	DUTIF	S, Anno 17	·96.	•		•
m 1 10 m		-	-	.	_	_
Tobacco and Snuff	>	-		119,378	0	0
Salt —		~		24,000	0
. Horse dealers' licen	ices		(Final)	589	12	O
				Aa	ditic
			I		. 1

				-
ional tol. per co	ent. —	- 1	. 20,355	0	0	,
s (Customs)	_		44,270	3	15
(Excise)			851		0	•
8	-	-	1,340	0	80
ies:		_	1,894	0	0
$,	400	0	0
ty on ditto	_	-	1,300	0	•
		_	1,395	0	0
		£.	215,772	15	14	1
		-		مجمع		ı

Total in the Year ending Oct. 10, 1796.

chequer, Oct. 17, 1796.			_	JAMES FI	HER.
ties	1796	-	- , £	15,286,596 215,772	1 61 15 1
•	1795			1,372,366	1R 10
•	1794	_	-	500,802	1 3
ties	1791	_		615,099	6 3
cidents		_	-	1,891,703	19 11
mps	_	-	_
cife			_	6,461,608	10 7
ıstoms		-	- 1	. 3,232,345	17 1
			-	-

order to shew a comparative state of the above duties, with those year ending on the 10th of October 1795, we subjoin the totals it year.

TOTAL OF DUTIES IN 1795.

florns cife	_	_	-	-	£. g,157,645 7,166,635	11	d. 4₹ 9₹
imps					1,207,551	13	7
cidents	-	-			1,821,740	15	8 ‡
ities	1791	_			699,954	14	9₹
F _e	1794	_	_		596,648		31
Fa.	1795				1,015,696	10	t i 🧸

parative View of certain public Circumstances in the respective Periods of 1783-4 and 1795-6.

of the 3 per cent. Confol. Jan. 27, 1784, 55 — May 2, 1796, 66 Price

Price of India stock, -	_ Yan 47	, 1784,	•	TAS
Ditto —	•	, 1796,	Ł	•
Total value of imports,		1783,	10.9	25,000
Ditto (including prize-goods to	the amount	./03,	-3,3	-21000
of £.907,000)		1795,	22.T	75,000
Total value of exports,		1783,		41,000
Ditto, —		• •		· .
Value of British manufactures of	exported.	1795,	•	170,000 109,000
Ditto —	aported,	1783,		26,000
		1795,	_
Foreign produce exported, Ditto,		1783,	_	32,000
Cotton-wool imported, on the a	werage of five	1795,		143 000 lbs.
	rectage of the years to 1783 inclusive,				200,000
Ditto, to 1795 inclusive,			30,0	000,000
Walne of Drivide manchendide				* .
Value of British merchandise e	xported to the	0-	4	San aan
East Indies,		1783,		21,951
Ditto —	CAAliana an Asia C	1795,	2,2	129,444
Nett revenues of the different				NT
the East India company abo	ove the charges	• , • •		None.
Ditto,		1795,		500,000
Amount of East India company	's laies,	1783,		36 3,800
Ditto,	errore	1795,	ار0	191,894
	•	Vessels,	`	Tous.
British ships entered inwards,	1783,	7,690	1	812,960
Ditto, —	1795,	10,174		262,568
British ships cleared outwards	1783,	7,729		870 ,270 .
Ditto,	1795,	10,133	1,	164,919
Total number of ships belonging		Tons,		Men.
to the British empire, 17		1,395,074		108,961
Ditto, — 17	94, 16,802	1,589,162		119,194
Amount of permanent taxes, or	-			£.
average, to the 5th of Jan		-	9,	876,000
Amount of the same taxes, as	fter making all allowances for the interm	ediate changes and arrangements of the	revenue, on a			• three years' average, to t	the 5th of Ja-			ه.
nuary, 1795, —	-		12,	381,000
Navy-debt, outstanding and ut	provided,]	Dec. 1783,	15,	510,767
Ditto,		y 2, 1796,		300,000
Bank advances, April 5, 1783,		-		279,000
Ditto, May 2, 1796,	£.11,132,000		•
Of which last sum provision				• has actually been made				. • ' • '
for funding —	5,030,000	•		•
→			6.	104.00
·	•		-,

APPENDIX to the CHRONICLE.

amount of out-standing debts and demands, and floating and unfunded debt, in Ja- nuary, 1784 (exclusive of two millions to American sufferers, the debentures for which have since been discharged),— bitto, May 2, 1796,————————————————————————————————————	27,000,000 None.
inking Fund, — 1783	None.
Ntto, - May 2, 1796
Amount of revenue (including the land and	-,,,, malt) below the computed expenditure, on a peace-establishment of 15 millions, in 1782, — — —	4 000 000
	2,000,000
mount of revenue (including the land and malt) above the computed expenditure, on a fimilar peace-establishment, with the addition of increased charges for the debt incurred by the present war, in 1795, —	A 100 000
medited by the present war, in 1795, —	3,400,000

In Account of all the Wheat fold in the Corn Market, in Mark-lane, from Christmas 1795, to Christmas 1796.

		-
From	Jan 7.	English.		Foreign.
to		Qrs.		Qrs.
Sept.	26.	104.011		287.772
Oà.	3.	2,695		6,385
	10.	1,981		5,046
	17.	2.710		6,061
	24.	1,894		4,732
	31.	3,477		1,751
Nov.	7.	3,991		1,728
	14.	4,080		2,161
. q.	21.	3,184		5,418
	28.	4,444		2,322
Dec.	5.	3,526		2,511
₁	12.	5,290		525
	19.	4,000		941
	26.	138		190
Wedt	efdays	1 770		-30
	nd	28,510		47.411
Friday		(20,3.4		27,411
41140	1 **	-
		175,140		254.054
		-/3,.40		354,954
				175,140
			Ti	510
			4.1	5.45

Prices of Bread per Quartern Loaf, during 1796.

January.	.	July.
7 — — 14 — — 21 — —	s. d. 1 3 1 3 1 3 1 3		11 11 10 10 10
· February.		August.
4 — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — —	1 3 1 3 1 3 1 3	4 — — o	101 101 101 91
March.		September.
10 — — 17 — — 24 — —	1 3 1 3 1 3	18 — — o 15 — o 22 — o 29. — o	8‡ 8‡ 8‡ 8*
April.		October:	•
7 — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — —	I 2 I 0½ O IO O IO	6 — — o 13 — — o 20 — — o 27 — o	81 81 81 81 81
May.		November.	l.
5 .— — 12 —— — 26 —— —	0 10 0 10 0 10 0 10 ¹ / ₂	3 — — · o 10 — — o 17 — — o 24 — o	8 ‡ 8 ‡ 8 ‡
June.		December.
2 — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — —	0 10½ 0 10¾ 0 11 0 11 0 11	1 — — 0 8 — — 0 15 — — 0 22 — — 0	8 1 8 1 81 81

A general

A general Bill of Christnings and Burials from December 8, 1795, to December 13, 1796.

THE DISEASES AND CASUALTIES OF THIS YEAR.

A Bortivear	ndStill-	Falling	Sickness	I	Piles .	1	Burnt	.16
born			malignant			14	Dropped do	wn dead 5
Abscess	24	ver,	Sarlet Fe	ver,	Quinsey		Drowned
\mathbf{A} ged	997	Spott	ed Fever,	and	Rash	-	Eaten by li-
Ague	6				Rheumatism		Excessive D
Amputation	7	Fistula		3	Rickets		Executed*
Apoplexy	113	Flux		8	Scurvy	3	Found Dead	8
Asthma and	Phthi-	French	Pox	2 ∠	Small Pox	3548	Fractured	. 1
lic ·	316	Gout		109	Sore Throat	21	Frighted	I
Bedridden	9	Gravel,	Strangury	,and	Sores and Ulce	rs 9	Killed by	Falls and Bleeding	15	_		32	Spafm	1	other Åc	cidents 56
Bursten and	Rup-	Grief		6	Spitting blood	3	Killed by a ture	19	Head.	lch	4	St. Anthony's l		Killed by F
Cancer	65	Headm	ouldshot, he		Stoppage in th	e Sto-	Killed then	nselves 23
Chicken Pox			head, and				Murdered	Ğ
Childbed	202	ter in	the Brain	70	Suddenly	112	Poisoned	1
Cold	ĬĬ	Laundic	e	72	Swelling	. 3	Scalded	. 7
Cholic, Gripes,	Twist-	Jaw-loc	ked	2	Swine Pox	1	Shot	X
ing of the G		19		3	Teeth	362	Smothered	2
Confunption		Inflam		368	Thrush	50	ುt abbed	· 1
Convultions	3798	Letharg	S Y	4	Γumor in the v			I
Cough and Ho				2	Vomiting and	loo.e-	rrain:	2
Cough		Lunatio		87	nefs	· 3 -	Suffocated	I
Croup		Meafles			Worms	12	Tooth ach	Ť
Dropfy		Mortifi			Bit by a mad dog	g 2		`
Evil	•	Paify			Broken Limbs	2	•	Total 288
	•					•	•

Christened { Males 9648 } 18826. Buried { Males 9882 } 19288.

* There have been executed in Middlesex and Surry, 32; 8 of which number were for murder and of the whole number (12 only) have been reported to buried (as such) within the Bills of Mortality.

WHEREOF HAVE DIED,

Under Two Years	6772 - Thirty and Forty	1537 -Eighty and Ninety	357
Between Two and Five	2840 — Forty and Fifty	1 4 - Ninety and a Hundred	55
-Five and Ten	900—Fifty and Sixty	1328 A Hundred	I
-Ten and Twenty	621 - Sixty and Seventy	IIIs A Hundred and Two	, I
-Twenty and Thirty	1211—Seventy and Eighty	892 A Hundred and Four	I, DECREASED IN THE BURIALS THIS YEAR 1891.

Substance of the act for the more effectually preventing seditious meetings and assemblies.

1. NO meeting of any description of persons, exceeding the number of 50 persons (other than except any meeting of any county, riding, or division, called by the lord lieutenant, custos rotulorum, or sheriff, of such county; or a meeting called by the convener of any county or stewartry in that part of Great Britain called Scot-H 3 land; or any meeting called by two or more justices of the peace of the county or place where fuch meeting shall be holden; or any meeting of any city or borough, or town corporate, called by the mayor or other head officer of fuch city, or borough, or town corporate; or any meeting of any ward or division of any city or town corporate, called by the alderman or other head-officer of fuch ward or division; or any meeting of any corporate body) shall be holden, for the purpose or on the pretext of confidering of or preparing any petition, complaint, remonstrance, or declaration, or other address to the king, or to both houses or either house of parliament, for alteration of matters established in church or state, or for the purpose, or on the pretext, of deliberating upon any grievance in church or flate, unless previous notice be given by feven householders in some newspaper. The notice not to be inserted, unless the authority to do so be written at the foot thereof. The notice and authority is to be preserved, and produced to a justice if required; and a penalty of 50l. for inferting notice without such authority, &c.

2. Notice may be given to the clerk of the peace, who shall forthwith fend a copy to the justices. Such notice to be effectual.

3. Meetings without notice to be deemed unlawful assemblies.

4. If 12 or more persons, asfembled contrary to this act, shall continue together one hour after being required by a justice, &c. to disperse, they shall suffer.

5. Proclamation to be made in the following form:

"Our fovereign lord the king chargeth and commandeth all perfons being affembled, immediately to disperse themselves, and peaceably to depart to their habitations. or to their lawful bufiness, upon the pains contained in the ist, made in the 36th year of king George the third, for the more effectually preventing feditions meetings and affemblies. fave the king."

6. If, in meetings holden purfuant to notice, any matter shall be propounded or deliberated upon, purporting that any thing by law established may be altered except by authority of king, lords, and commons, &c. a magistrate mey order them to disperse; and if 12 or more persons shall continue together an hour thereafter, they shall fuffer death.

7. Justices at meetings on notice . may order persons, propounding or maintaining propositions for altering any thing by law established, except by authority of the king, lords, and commons, &c. to be taken into custody; and in case of refistance may cause proclamation to be made as aforesaid; and, if 12 or more shall continue together an hour thereafter, they shall suffer death.

8. Magistrates may resort to asfemblies, and act; and may require the affishance of peace officers.

9. Persons not dispersing within an hour after proclamation may be apprehended; and, if killed or maimed by reason of their resistance, the magistrate, &c. indemnified.

10. Persons obstructing magistrates attending, or going to attend, meetings, or obstructing persons proclaiming, proclaiming, to suffer death. Persons assembled, to whom proclamation ought to have been made if the same had not been hindered, continuing together to the number of 12 or more, for an hour after such hindrance, to suffer death. Persons at such assemblies opposing the taking offenders into custody to suffer death.

- 11. Sheriffs depute, &c. in Scotland, to have the same power as justices, in England. Persons convicted of selonies in Scotland, to incur the pain of death and confiscation of moveables
- concerning supposed public grievances, where money is paid for admission, unless previously licensed, to be deemed disorderly places; and the persons opening or using them, to forfeit 1001. &c. And the persons managing the proceedings, and the persons paying or receiving money for admission, or delivering or receiving tickets, to forfeit 1001.
- 13. Persons appearing as master, &c. of such places liable to prosecution.
- 14. Magistrates who, by information on oath, have reason to suspect that any place is open for delivering lectures, &c. may demand to be admitted; and, in case of refusal, the place to be deemed disorderly, and the person refusing admittance to forseit 1001.
- mittance to any licensed place at the time of delivering lectures, &c. and, if resused, it shall be deemed disorderly, and the person resusing admittance shall forfeit 1001.
- 16. Justices may license places for delivering lectures; and may revoke them.

- 17. Forfeitures to be recovered by action of debt in any of his majesty's courts of record at Westminster, or in the courts of justiciary or exchequer in Scotland; provided that, if any action or suit shall be brought against any person for any thing done in pursuance and in execution of this act, the defendant may plead the general issue; and if a verdict pass for the defendant, or the plaintiff discontinue his or her action, or be nonfuited, or judgment be given against the plaintiff, then such defendant shall have treble costs.
- 18. Nothing in this act to extend to any lectures or discourses to be delivered in any of the universities of these kingdoms, by any member thereof, or any person authorized by the chancellor, vicechancellor, or other proper officers of such universities respectively.
- 19. No payment made to any school-master or other person by law allowed to teach and instruct youth, in respect of any lectures or discourses delivered by such school-master or other person, for the instruction only of such youths as shall be committed to his instruction, shall be deemed a payment of money for admission to such lectures or discourses within the intent and meaning of this act.
- for the suppression of punishment of offences herein described.
- 21. Act to be openly read at every epiphany quarter-session of the peace, and every lect or law day.
- by virtue of this act, unless the prosecution shall be commenced within six calender months after the offence committed; and no.

H 4 action

action to be brought for any of the penalties imposed by the act, unless brought within three calendar months next after the offence committed.

23. The act to commence and have effect within the city of London, and within twenty miles thereof, from the day next after the day of patting it; to commence and have effect within all other parts of the kingdom, from the expiration of feven days next after the day of patting it; and to continue in force for three years from the day of pating, and until the end of the then next fession of parliament.

Average Prices of Corn for the Year 1796.

	Wheat.		Barley.	Oats.	Beans.
January	11	6	48	$3 O^{\frac{1}{2}}$	5 5\frac{1}{2}
February	11	81	4 8 1	3 0 4	5 61
March	12	6₹	4 II I	3 I	5 73
April	10	53	4 8½	$2 10\frac{3}{4}$	$5 \ 3\frac{3}{4}$
May	9	$5\frac{3}{4}$	4 3 4	2 9	5 0
June	10	03	4 3	2 8	4 103
July	10	1	4 3	2 8	4 9
August	9	5 I	4 3 \(\frac{1}{4} \)	$2 8\frac{1}{2}$	4 91
September	9 8	0	4 2	26	4 2
October	7	7	4 2	2 5	4 2
November	7	5	4 5	2 5	4 2
December	7	4	4 6	2 3 ‡	4 0 1
Gen. Average	9	I 2	$\frac{1}{4}$ $5^{\frac{1}{4}}$	2 8½	4 10

STATE of the BAROMETER, THERMOMETER, and HYGROMETER, for the Year 1796.

SUPPLIES granted by PARLIAMENT for the Year 1796.

NAVY.

	£. 5.720,600 624,152 708,400 500,000	1 8 0 0
ARMY.
DEC. 2, 1795. For 49,000 men as guards and garrisons, Forces in the plantations, Difference between British and Irish pay, Additionals to troops in the East Indies, Recruiting land forces, contingencies, &c. Subsistence paid to innkeepers, &c. General and staff officers, Staff officers, &c. on general Clarke's expedition, Full pay to supernumerary officers, Allowance to the paymatter-general, &c. Reduced officers of the land forces and marines, Reduced horse guards, Officers late in the service of the states-general, Reduced officers of British American forces, Allowances to several officers of ditto, Embodied militia and fencible infantry, Contingencies for ditto, Clothing for the militia, Fencible cavalry, Allowances for ditto	1,358,624 1,666,900 40,195 8,345 360,000 120,000 103,642 9,259 127,779 143,490 118,873 126 1,000 52,500 7,500 917,294 210,000 108,538 470,636 115,000	3460018113810001019
Extraordinaries, — Dec. 4.	2,646,99•	19 10.
Extraordinaries, APRIL 26, 1796. MAY 2.	885,673	_ •
Scotch military roads and bridges, MAY 3.	4,500	0 0
Subfidy to the king of Sardinia, — MAY 7.	200,000	• •
Chelsea pensioners, — —	146, 0 57	4 2 Vidowi

APP

Widows' pention

Extraordinaries f Foreign troops, Completing barrs

Land service for 1 Ditto, previous to Ditto, unprovide Sea service, ditto Land service not s

Services previous

Civil establishmen Ditto, Nova Scot Ditto, New Brur Ditto, St. John's Ditto, Cape Brete Ditto, Newfound Ditto, Bahama It Salary of the chie Ditto, of Domin Civil establishmen To discharge exc

To discharge exc Vote of credit,

To fatisfy navy, 'His majefty's fervi French refugees, Allowance to Am Profecutions, &c. Printing journals Publishing weekl Mr. Whittam for _ 119	1/90.

Mr. Gunnell, for ditto, —			~ *		_
Address money, —			29,921	, ,	6
Convicts on the Thames,					•
			8,685	11	1
Ditto at Langston and Portsmouth,			12,072	I	6.
Expences on account of New South W		_	15,088	•	104
Ditto, on account of Mr. Hastings' pro	decution,		5,000	-	0
Purchase of the parliament office,			2,741	16	O _X
Superintendance of the Alien Act,			2,232		44
Stationary shipped for Upper Canada,			306	19	04
For reduction of the national debt,			200,000	0	0
American and East Florida sufferers,	-		197,803	5	5 1
Ditto, —	-		53,387	7	5 ‡ 6
African forts, —			20,000	-
Turkey company, —			5,000
Board of Agriculture, —			3,000
British Museum, —	_
	_		3,000	0	Ö
May 10	.			_	_
Veterinary college, —			1,500	0	Ð
	-			-
		£.13	,821,430	I	25
			-	-
DEFICI:	ENCY	•			_
May 2, 1	796.		£.	s.	d.
Deficiency of Grants in 1795,	_	2,	347,954	10	92
	52,552 I				- •
	11,899 9				٠
	54,665 17
Miscellaneous services, 13,8				_
▼		_
Deficiency, — 2,3	47,951 10	24
C an .	00 500	67
£.37,5	88,502 0	04
Management Co.	•			••
	.,, .	. 7.
Ways and Means for raise	_	plies fo	Y _ 1		•
Nov. 10,	1795.		£.	s.	4
Land and malt-tax, —		2	,750,000	0	Q
Dec. 8	•				•
Annuities, —	•	18	,000,000	0	0
FEB. 11, 1	796.				•
rxcocouci duos.		2	,500,000	0	0
Exchequer bills, —— Feb. 15	-	3	,500,000	o	0

Land and malt-tax,

DEC. 8.

Annuities,

FEB. 11, 1796.

Exchequer bills,

FEB. 15.

Ditto,

APRIL 19.

Annuities,

MAY 2.

Profit of a lettery, 600,000 tickets, at £13,

MAY 7.

Surplus of the confolidated fund,

Surplus of the confolidated fund,

2,750,000 0

3,500,000 0

APRIL 19.

3,500,000 0

3,500,000 0

3,500,000 0

£.38,030,000 0 0 Public

APPENDIX to the CHRONICLE.

Public Acts passed in the Sixth Session of the Seventeenth Parliament of Great Britain.

Nov. 23, 1795.

Land and malt bills.

An act to prohibit the exportation of corn, meal, &c. and to permit the importation thereof, for a limited time.

Dec. I.

An act to prohibit for a limited time, the making of starch, hair-powder, &c. from wheat and other articles of food, and for lowering the duty on the importation of starch, &c.

An act to prohibit the exportation of candles, tallow and soap for a limited time.

Dec. 18.

An act for the safety and prefervation of his majesty's person and government, against treasonable and seditious practices and attempts.

An act for the more effectually preventing feditious meetings and affemblies.

An act for the better relief of the poor in the hundreds, towns, and districts in England, incorporated for their better maintenance and employment.

Dec. 19.

An act for raising eighteen millions by way of annuities. Dec. 24.

. Mutiny bill..

An act to permit bakers to make and fell certain forts of bread.

An act to amend so much of an act, made in the 9th year of Geo. I. entitled, "An act for amending the laws relating to the settlement, employment, and relief of the poor," as prevents the distributing occasional relief to poor persons in their own houses, under certain circumstances and in certain cases.

March 7, 1796.

Marine mutiny bill.

An act for increasing the rates of subsistence to be granted to inn-keepers and others, on quartering soldiers.

May 14.

An act for the better regulation of mills.

An act for the further support and maintenance of curates within the church of England.

May 18.

An act for continuing the encouragement and rewards of persons making certain discoveries for finding the longitude at sea, or making other useful discoveries and improvements in navigation.

An act to exempt dairies, and cheese and butter warehouses, kept solely as such, from the duties on Windowlights.

Trial of Mr. William Stone, for High Treason.

THURSDAY, Jan. 28, came on in the court of king's bench the trial of Mr. W. Stone, who has been under confinement for two years, on a charge of high treason. About eighty names were called over before the jury was formed as follows:

J. Leader, gent. J. Mayhew, esq. J. Etherington, teaman

T.Cole, brewer Cha. Minier, seedsman

Dan. Dyson, esq. | I. Dimsdale, T. Burnett, esq.

W. Sumner, filverimith ·

J. Larkin, oilman

Peter Taylor, block-maker W. West, brewer

coach-maker.

Mr. Barlow read the indictment which confisted of two counts, including fourteen overt acts of treafon; charging the prisoner with traitoroufly conspiring with his brother John Hurford Stone (then in France) to destroy the life of the king, and to raise rebellion in his realms; with holding correspondence with the persons in power in France, and collecting the sense of the people of this country, in order to ascertain whether an invasion might be successfully attemped, and with fending such information to the enemy. He was further charged with traitoroufly corresponding with the rev. Mr. Jackson (some time since capitally convicted of high treason, who died before the day of execution), in learning the probable success of invading Ireland; and with ous uteful articles to the enemy.

the circumstances of the case at full length; the leading features tending to thew the criminality of

of which appeared to be, that Stone had a brother, J. H. Stone, settled at Paris, who confidered himself, in fact, as a Frenchman; which appeared particularly from one of his letters, in which he faid " We have declared war against you. Holland will foon be in our possession, and England will afterwards follow." With this brother, by means of Jackson lately convicted of high treason in Ireland, Stone kept up a correspondence, and gave him all the information he could procure, to be communicated to the French government, as to the probability of fuccess which might attend an invasion of England by France. In the course of this enquiry it appeared that Stone had communications with Mr. Sheridan, lord Lauderdale, William Smith, efq. M. P. and others; and that from the information he obtained he become fatisfied that from the general loyalty of the people here an invafion was by no means likely to fucceed. But that in Ireland fuccess was more probable. Jackson was accordingly sent there, and supplied with money by Stone to obtain fuch intelligence, and to lay fuch plains as might tend to affift the views of the French. It appeared that Stone communicated to his brother the little prospect of the fuccess of an invasion here, in order to diffuade those exercising the powers of government in France from undertaking a scheme likely to be so fatal to their interests.

The attorney-general alluded to several letters between the prisoner having fent intelligence and vari- under the fictitious name of Enots (Stone reversed), his brother, Jack-The attorney general then stated son (in the name of Popkins). Horne Tooke, and others;

the prishners concluding a very able and argumentative speech by coserving, that the counsel for the primar might thy, that he had alte i for the interest of England, it tilmudi as, lattrad of pronoting, he had gruscused an invasion! But how could that be faid? for if he knew or on intention of invaton, and had not communicated Lis knowledge to thefe most bound and multi-computent to countract is, he product a his country from ; hill, a declive adventage, by the less that would accoue to the erenn from their filling; and by r readr, ing them, he proved himnot equally their friend, and the my of England: it he had been ter fingland, the way was very short; but his conduct clearly thewed he had been for France. It therefore remained with the detendant to make his innocence appear. His projectly, his honour, and his life, depended now on his earti tion or his acquittal. The jury were invelod with a very feleran and very important duty. were called upon to grant equal inflice to the defendant and to rociety. As they must guard themiches against any impressions which the mifrepresentations of the profecutors might make upon their minds to must they have an equal guard against any salse improfitions made by the counsel for the defendant. In the deliverance they were to make, if the evidence was inconclusive, they would readily acquit him; but if the proofs satisfactory, the country called for his conviction,

William Smith, esq. M. P. Mr. Sheridan, and lord Lauderdale, were called as witnesses to relate some conversations they had with Stone on the subject of the state of this country; the general result of which appeared to be, that they considered him as a weak enthusian, who was definous of bringing of about a peace, for the sake of favouring what he considered principles of freedom.

between Jackien and Stone, seve; ral letters of the former were produced, particularly one which pointed out the particular parts of liteland most favourable to an invasion by the French; and Mr. Cockayne, the evidence against valid in Ireland, was called, and stated the whole of his connection with Jackson, nearly the same as he did on that trial.

At half past ten the courts with consent of counsel, adjourned to, in nine o'clock the next day. And at nine on Friday morning, the court proceeded on the trial.

The first evidence produced was a parcel of letters from the prisoner to Mr. I'itt; in which Stone pretended to make some discoveries, as to the designs of the French, by garbled extracts from his brother's letters, which were themselves produced, to shew the unfairness of the prisoner's conduct in this particular. A letter from Mr. Pitt was read expressing his doubts as to the authenticity of the prisoner's information.

The counsel for the crown then proved the correspondence between the prisoner and Jackson in Ireland; which being read, closed the evidence for the prosecution.

Mr. scrieant Adair then rose to open the evidence for the prisoner, and to observe on that for the profecution. The former consisted only of evidence to character—on the itter the learned serjeant eninto a long and accurate dism, in a very elaborate, feeling, interesting manner. He beby observing, that the jury called upon to discharge a important, sacred, and awful

They were entrusted, on the and, with the vindication of the of their country, and the fafethe community, of which themselves formed a part; the fortune, the character, ne life of a fellow-subject, were nitted to their deliberation on The dearest interests ther. e unfortunate man at the bar in their hands! He must call infortunate, for whether guilinnocent of the crime with h he was charged, no man in tuation, and having submitted e fufferings to which he had subject, let the innocence of eart be as pure as it might, be called fortunate. The St of the jury might put his at of danger, and restore to him iberty to which he had long a stranger; but no verdict of s could place him in the fituhe was in on the day before as apprehended.

ter endeavouring to explain notives which might proba-Stuate the prisoner, as arising vanity or affectation of connce, Mr. serjeant Adair prod to state what he considered e outline of the facts of the in the following close and ious way-" A person of the of Jackson came over from by the way of Hull, in the cter of an American mer-, with letters of recommendfrom Mr. J. H. Stone, to Mr. one, the prisoner. Mr. Stone. L. XXXVIII.

during his relidence in London, shewed him some civilities, and advanced him money on his brether's account.

" Soon after he went over to Ireland, where he was tried and convicted of high treason, and died; and during his relidence in Ireland, Mr. Stone furnished him with fome statements of the internal situation of this kingdom. question for the decision of the jury then was, whether, under these facts, they were persuaded from what Stone knew of Jackson, that he gave Jackson these statements as information for the enemy, with the criminal intention stated in the indictment; or for the purpose of averting an impending calamity from his country? The facts were clear as funshine, and this was the only question that arose upon them. He called upon them, therefore, to confider, whether there was sufficient evidence of an overt act of treason, and if there was, it was not the encouraging of an invasion, but the prevention of that event, from which fo much evil would have been confequent. Jackson was convicted for high treason, in persuading the French to invade this country; whereas the prisoner was accused of high treason, and the overt act with which he was charged was prevehting an invasion. But if the motive for causing an invasion was criminal, how could the motive for preventing an invalion be criminal alfo?

The learned serjeant then went at length into the evidence produted; and concluded by calling feveral witheffes to prove the publicity with which Mr. Stone comtioner proceaded to reason upon those data as follows:

If it be true that the territorial and funded rental is fixty millions per annum,

Then is it true, also, that five shillings in the pound, on such a rental, will raise a revenue of fifteen millions.

If it be true that we now pay ten fhillings in the pound to raise a revenue of fifteen millions.

Then is it true also, that we pay five shillings in the pound more than we have any occasion to pay.

If it be true that the trading part of the nation can always contrive to create for themselves an exemption from state burdens,

Then it is true also, that the landed and funded proprietors are, and have all along, to their irreparable loss, been the principal, if not the sole paymasters of all imposts, and consequently that little or no injury will be done to that body of men, but that great and lasting advantage will accrue to them, and to their posterity, by changing the mode, as here proposed, of collecting the revenue.

Your petitioner, therefore, most humbly prays, that he may be permitted and authorised to charge his real estates with the payment of thirty thousand pounds, or with the payment of fuch other fum, be the same more or less, as may be ascertained by this honourable house, to be his proportionate thare of the public debt, posing the said public debt to be parcelled out for payment among the several proprietors of lands, houses, mines, waters, tythes, rents, in any way arifing therefrom, monies fo secured, and public funds.

And your petitioner further prays, that his faid estates may be made subject to the payment of interest on the sum to be so charged as above, at the rate of sour pounds per cent. or any other rate of interest, be the same more or less, which may appear to this honourable house to be his proportionate share of the annual charge of the said public debt, supposing the same to be transferred as aforesaid.

And your petitioner further prays, that he may be permitted and authorised to pay in future his proportionate share of the civil list and peace establishment, by an annual pound rate, the quantum of which pound rate to be ascertained by this honourable house, in like manner as before has been mentioned.

And your petitioner further prays, that as often as the exigencies of government may provide a further aid, he may be permitted and authorised to pay his proportionate, fliare of the fame, by fuch as seditional pound rate as may be ascertained by this honourable house to be sufficient to accumulate the fum which would fall to his lot of payment, supposing the whole annual fupply to be raifed. within the year, and parcelled out for payment among the feveral proprietors aforefaid.

And your petitioner further prays, that he may be permitted and authorised to make such temporary, and such permanent payments, as have been severally named and assented to on his part, by half yearly instalments, and that the same may be declared to be accepted in full satisfaction of his proportionate share of all taxes, customs, duties and parliamentary imposts, laid already, or which may be laid on the subjects of this country, or their concerns. And your petitioner shall ever pray.

FRANCIS BLAKE."
STATE

STATE PAPERS.

Majesty's most gracious Speech to Houses of Purliament, 19th y, 1796.

My Lords, and Gentlemen, IE public business being now concluded, I think it proper to his session, and at the same time quaint you with my intention ing immediate directions for g a new parliament.

attention during the present, have been of peculiar imice; and the measures which ave adopted, have manifested continued regard to the safety relfare of the people.

e happiest effects have been ienced from the provisions I you have made for repretedition and civil tumult, and straining the progress of prinsubversive of all established nment.

that the high price of have formed a principal obf your deliberation; and your ity in investigating that subas strongly proved your auxestre to omit nothing which tend to the relief of my e, in a matter of such genencern. I have the greatest ction in observing that the re of those difficulties is in t degree removed.

ientlemen of the House of Commons.

ust in a more particular manner return you my thanks for the liberal supplies which you have granted to meet the exigencies of the war. - While I regret the extent of those demands which the present circumstances necessarily occasion, it is a great consolation to me to observe the increasing resources by which the country is enabled to support them. These resources are particularly manifested in the state of the different branches of the revenue, in the continued and progressive state of our navigation and commerce, in. the steps which have been taken for maintaining and improving the public credit, and in the additional provision which has been made for the reduction of the national debt.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I shall ever reslect with heartfelt fatisfaction on the uniform wisdom, temper, and firmness which bave appeared in all your proceedings since I first met you in this place. Called to deliberate on the public affairs of your country in a period of foreign and domestic tranquillity, you had the happiness of contributing to raise this kingdom to a state of unexampled profperity. You were suddenly compelled to relinquith the full advantages of this fituation, in order to relift the unprovoked aggression of an enemy whole hostility was directed against all civil society, but more particularly against the 13

happy

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1795. 118]

l:appy union of order and liberty established in these kingdoms. The nature of the system introduced into France, afforded to that country, in the midst of its calamities, the means of exertion beyond the experience of any former time. Under the pressure of the new and unprecedented difficulties arising from such a contest, you have thewn yourselves worthy of all the blessings that you inherit. By your counfels and conduct, the constitution has been preserved inviolate against the designs of foreign and domestic enemies; the honor of the British name has been afferted; the rank and station which we have hitherto held in Europe has been maintained; and the decided fuperiority of our naval power has been established in every quarter of the world.

You have omitted no opportunity to prove your just anxiety for the re-establishment of general peace on fecure and honourable terms; but you have at the same time rendered it manifest to the world, that while our enemies shall perfift in dispositions incompatible with that object, neither the refources nor the spirit of Englishmen will be wanting to the fupport of a just cause, and to the defence of all their dearest interests.

A due fense of this conduct is deeply impressed on my heart. / truft that all my subjects are animated with the same sentiment, and that their loyalty and public fpirit will enfure the continuance of that union and mutual confidence between me and my parliament, which bell promote the true dignity and glory of my crown, and the genuine happiness of my Leople.

His Majesty's most gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, 6th October, 1796.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

IT is a peculiar fatisfaction to me, in the present conjuncture of affairs, to recur to your advice, after the recent opportunity which has been given for collecting the sense of my people, engaged in a difficult and arduous contest, for the preservation of all that is most dear to us.

I have omitted no endeavour for fetting on foot negotiations to restore peace to Europe, and to secure for the future the general The steps which I tranquillity. have taken for this purpose have at length opened the way to an immediate and direct negotiation, the issue of which must either produce the defirable end of a just, henourable, and folid peace for us, and for our allies, or must prove beyond dispute, to what cause alone the prolongation of the calamitics of war must be ascribed.

I shall immediately send a perfon to Paris, with full powers to treat for this object, and it is my anxious wish that this measure may. lead to the restoration of general peace: but you must be sensible that nothing can so much contribute to give effect to this defire, your manifesting that we possess both the determination and the refources to oppose; with increased activity and energy, the farther efforts with which we may have to contend.

You will feel this peculiarly neces fary at a moment when the enemy has openly manifested the intention of attempting a descent on these kingdoms. It cannot be doubted what would be the iffue of such an enterprize; but it besits your wisdom to neglect no precautions that may either preclude the attempt, or secure the speediest means of turning it to the consusion and ruin of the enemy.

In reviewing the events of the year, you will have observed that, by the skill and exertions of my navy, our extensive and increasing commerce has been protected to a degree almost beyond example, and the fleets of the enemy have, for the greatest part of the year, been blocked up in their own ports.

The operations in the East and West Indies have been highly honourable to the British arms, and productive of great national advantage; and the valour and good conduct of my forces, both by sea and land, have been eminently conspicuous.

The fortune of war on the continent has been more various; and the progress of the French armies threatened, at one period, the utmost danger to all Europe; but from the honourable and dignified perseverance of my ally the Emperor, and from the intrepidity, discipline, and invincible spirit of the Austrian forces, under the auspicious conduct of the archduke Charles, such a turn has lately been given to the course of the war, as may inspire a well-grounded confidence that the final refult of the campaign will prove more disaftrous to the enemy than its commencement and progress for a time were favourable to their hopes.

The apparently hostile dispositions and conduct of the court of Madrid have led to discussions, of which I am not yet enabled to acquaint you with the final result; but I am consident that whatever may be their issue, I shall have given to Europe a farther proof of my moderation and sorbearance; and I can have no doubt of your determination to defend against every aggression, the dignity, rights, and interests, of the British empire.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

I rely on your zeal and public fpirit for fuch supplies as you may think necessary for the service of It is a great fatisfaction the year. to me to observe, that, notwithstanding the temporary embarrassments which have been experienced, the state of the commerce, manufactures, and revenue, of the country, proves the real extent and folidity of our resources, and furnishes you with such means as must be equal to any exertions which the present crisis may require.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The distresses, which were in the last year experienced from the fearcity of corn, are now, by the blessing of God, happily removed, and an abundant harvest affords the pleasing prospect of relief in that important article to the labouring classes of the community. Our internal tranquillity has also continued undisturbed; the general attachment of my people to the British constitution has appeared on every occasion, and the endeavours of those who wished to introduce anarchy and confusion into this country, have been repressed by the energy and wisdom of the laws.

I 4

l:appy union of order and liberty established in these kingdoms. The nature of the system introduced into France, afforded to that country, in the midst of its calamities, the means of exertion beyond the experience of any former time. Under the pressure of the new and unprecedented difficulties arising from such a contest, you have thewn yourselves worthy of all the blessings that you inherit. By your couniels and conduct, the constitution has been preserved inviolate against the designs of foreign and domestic enemies; the honor of the British name has been afferted; the rank and flation which we have hitherto held in Europe has been maintained; and the decided fuperiority of our naval power has been established in every quarter of the world.

You have omitted no opportunity to prove your just anxiety for the re-establishment of general peace on secure and honourable terms; but you have at the same time rendered it manifest to the world, that while our enemies shall persist in dispositions incompatible with that object, neither the resources nor the spirit of Englishmen will be wanting to the support of a just cause, and to the defence of all their dearest interests.

A due sense of this conduct is deeply impressed on my heart. I trust that all my subjects are animated with the same sentiment, and that their loyalty and public spirit will ensure the continuance of that union and mutual considence between me and my parliament, which best promote the true dignity and glory of my crown, and the genuine happiness of my people.

His Majesty's most gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, 6th October, 1796.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

IT is a peculiar satisfaction to me, in the present conjuncture of affairs, to recur to your advice, after the recent opportunity which has been given for collecting the sense of my people, engaged in a difficult and arduous contest, for the preservation of all that is most dear to us.

I have omitted no endeavours for fetting on foot negotiations to restore peace to Europe, and to secure for the future the general tranquillity. The steps which I have taken for this purpole have at length opened the way to an immediate and direct negotiation, the issue of which must either produce the defirable end of a just, honourable, and folid peace for us, and for our allies, or must prove, beyond dispute, to what cause alone the prolongation of the calamities of war musi be ascribed.

I shall immediately send a perfon to Paris, with full powers to treat for this object, and it is my anxious wish that this measure maylead to the restoration of general peace: but you must be sensible that nothing can so much contribute to give effect to this desire, as your manifesting that we possess both the determination and the resources to oppose; with increased activity and energy, the farther efforts with which we may have to contend.

You will feel this peculiarly necesfary at a moment when the enemy has openly manifested the intention of attempting a descent on these kingdoms. It cannot be doubted

what

STATE

what would be the issue of such an enterprize; but it besits your wisdom to neglect no precautions that may either preclude the attempt, or secure the speediest means of turning it to the confusion and ruin of the enemy.

In reviewing the events of the year, you will have observed that, by the skill and exertions of my navy, our extensive and increasing commerce has been protected to a degree almost beyond example, and the fleets of the enemy have, for the greatest part of the year, been blocked up in their own ports.

The operations in the East and West Indies have been highly honourable to the British arms, and productive of great national advantage; and the valour and good conduct of my forces, both by sea and land, have been eminently conspicuous.

The fortune of war on the continent has been more various; and the progress of the French armies threatened, at one period, the utmost danger to all Europe; but from the honourable and dignified perseverance of my ally the Emperor, and from the intrepidity, discipline, and invincible spirit of the Austrian forces, under the auspicious conduct of the archduke Charles, such a turn has lately been given to the course of the war, as may inspire a well-grounded confidence that the final refult of the campaign will prove more disaftrous to the enemy than its commencement and progress for a time were favourable to their hopes.

The apparently hostile dispositions and conduct of the court of Madrid have led to discussions, of which I am not yet enabled to acquaint you with the final result; but I am consident that whatever may be their issue, I shall have given to Europe a farther proof of my moderation and sorbearance; and I can have no doubt of your determination to defend against every aggression, the dignity, rights, and interests, of the British empire.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

I rely on your zeal and public spirit for such supplies as you may think necessary for the service of the year. It is a great satisfaction to me to observe, that, notwith-standing the temporary embarrass-ments which have been experienced, the state of the commerce, manufactures, and revenue, of the country, proves the real extent and solidity of our resources, and surnishes you with such means as must be equal to any exertions which the present crisis may require.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The distresses, which were in the last year experienced from the fearcity of corn, are now, by the bleffing of God, happily removed, and an abundant harvest affords the pleasing prospect of relief in that important article to the labouring classes of the community. Our internal tranquillity has also continued undisturbed; the general attachment of my people to the British constitution has appeared on every occasion, and the endeavours of those who wished to introduce anarchy and confusion into this country, have been repressed by the energy and wisdom of the

I 4 To

120] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

To defeat all the defens of our enemies, to refture any people the bleffings of a featre and honourable peace, to maintain inviolate their religion, laws, and liberty, and to deliver down unimpaired to the latest posterity the glory and happiness of these kingdoms, is the constant wish of my heart, and the uniform end of all my actions. In every measure that can conduce to these objects, I am consider of receiving the firm, zealous and affectionate support of my parliament.

Protest of Earl Fitzwilliam against the Address of the House of Lords to the Throne on his Majesty's Speech announcing the opening of a Negotiation for Peace with the French Republic.

Dissentient,

1st. Because, by this address, amended as it stands, the sanction of the lords is given to a series of meafures, as ill judged, with regard to their object, as they are derogatory from the dignity of his majesty's crown, and from the hopour of this kingdom. The reiteration of folicitations for peace to a species of power, with whose very existence all fair and equitable accommodat on is incompatible, can have no other effect than that which it is notorious all our foli-They citations have hitherto had. must increase the arrogance and ferocity of the common enemy of all nations; they must fortify the credit, and fix the authority of an odious government over an enslaved people; they must impair the confidence of all other powers in the magnanimity, constancy, and fidelity of the British councils; and it is much to be apprehended it will

of that energy, and to lower that spirit which has characterised in former times this high-minded nation, and which, far from sinking under missortune, has even risen with the difficulties and dangers in which our country has been involved.

2d. Because no peace, such as may be capable of recruiting the firength, economizing the means, augmenting the resources, and providing for the fafety of this kingand its inseparable connections and dependencies, can be had with the usurped power now authority in France, exerciling considering the description, the and the conduct, of character, those who compose that government; the methods by which they have obtained their power, the policy by which they hold it, and the maxims they have adopted, openly professed, and uniformly acted on, towards the destruction of all governments not formed on their model and subservient to their domination.

3d. Because the idea that this kingdom is competent to desend itself, its laws, liberties, and religion, under the general subjugartion of all Europe, is presumptuous in the extreme, contradictory to the supposed motives for our present eager solicitations for peace, and is certainly contrary to the standing policy both of state and commerce, by which Great Britain has hitherto flourished.

4th. Because, while the common enemy exercises his power over the several states of Europe in the way we have seen, it is impossible long to preserve our trade, or, what cannot exist without it.

OU

our naval power. This hostile system seizes on the keys of the dominions of these powers, without any confideration of their friendship, their enmity, or their neutrality; prescribes laws to them as to conquered provinces; mulcts and fines them at pleasure; forces them, without any particular quarrel, into direct hostility with this kingdom, and expels us from fuch ports and markets as she thinks fit; insomuch that (Europe remaining under its present slavery) there is no harbour which we can enter without her permission, either in a commercial or a naval character. This general interdid cannot be begged off; we must resist it by our power, or we are already in a state of vassalage.

5th. Because, whilst this usurped power shall continue thus constituted, and thus disposed, no security whatever can be hoped for in our colonies and plantations, those invaluable sources of our national wealth and our naval power. This war has thewn that the power prevalent in France, by intentionally diforganizing the plantation system (which France had in common with all other European nations), and by inverting the order and relations therein established, has been able with a naval force. altogether contemptible, and with very inconfiderable fuccours from Europe, to baffle in a great measure the most powerful armament ever sent from this country into the West Indies, and at an expense hitherto unparalleled, and has, by the force of example, and by the effects of her machinations, produced, at little or no expence to herself either of blood or treasure, uniyersal desolation and ruin, by the general destruction of every thing valuable and necessary for cultivation, throughout several of our islands, lately among the most flourishing and productive. The new system, by which these things have been effected, leaves our colonies equally endangered in peace as in war. It is therefore with this general system (of which the West India scheme is but a ramification) that all ancient establishments are essentially at war for the sake of self preservation.

6th. Because it has been declared from the throne, and in effect the principle has been adopted by Parliament, that there was no way likely to obtain a peace, commonly safe and honourable, but through the ancient and legitimate government long established in France. That government in its lawful succession has been solemnly recognized, and affiftance and protection as folemnly promised to those Frenchmen who should exert themselves in its restoration. The political principle upon which this recognition was made is very far from being weakened by the conduct of the newly-invented government. Nor are our obligations of good faith, pledged on such strong motives of policy to those who have been found in their allegiance diffolved, nor can they be so, until fairly directed efforts have been made to secure this great fundamental point. None have yet been employed with the finallest degree of vigour and perseverence.

7th. Lecause the example of the great change made by the usurpation in the moral and political world (more dangerous than all her conquests) is by the present procedure confirmed in all its force. It is the first successful example surpsished by history of the subversion of the antient government of a great country, and of all its laws, orders, and religion, by the corruption of mercenary armies, and by the feduction of a multitude bribed by confication to fedition, in defiance of the fense, and to the entire destruction of almost the whole proprietary body of the nation. The fatal effects of this example must be felt in every country. New means, new arms, new pretexts, are surnished to ambition; and new persons are intoxicated with that poison.

122] ANNÜAL REGISTER, 1796.

8th. Because our eagerness in fuing for peace may induce the persons exercifing power in France erroneously to believe, that we act from necessity, and are unable to continue the war; a perfuation which, in the event of an actual peace, will operate as a temptation to them to renew that conduct which brought on the present war, neither shall we have any of the usual securities in peace. In their treaties they do not acknowledge the obligation of that law, which for ages has been common to all They have not the same Europe. ientiments nor the same ideas of their interest in the conservation of peace, which have hitherto influenced all regular governments; they do not in the same manner feel public distress, or the private misery of their subjects; they will not find the same difficulty on the commencement of a new war to call their whole force into sudden action, where, by the law, every citizen is a foldier, and the person and properties of all are liable at once to arbitrary requisitions. On the other hand, no attempt has been made to shew in what manner, whether by alliances, by force, military or naval, or by the improvement and augmentation of our finances, we shall be better able to resist their hostile attempts, after the peace, than at the present hour. If we remain armed, we cannot reap the ordinary advantage of peace in economy; if we disarm, we shall be subject to be driven into a new war, under every circumstance of disadvantage, unless we now prepare ourselves to suffer with patience and submission whatever insults, indignities; and injuries, we may receive from that insolent, domineering, and unjust, power.

9th. Because the inability of humbling ourselves again to solicit peace, in a manner, which is a recognition of the French republic; contrary to all the principles of war, the danger of peace if obtained, the improbability of its duration, and the perseverance of the enemy throughout the interval of peace in their mischievous system, is not conjecture, but certainty. It has been avowed by the actual governors of France, at the very moment when they had before them our application for a passport. They chose that moment for publishing a state paper, breathing the most hostile mind. In it they stimu: late and goad us by language the most. opprobious and offenfive. They frankly tell us, that it is not our interest to defire peace, for that they regard peace only as the opportunity of preparing fresh means for the annihilation of our naval By making peace they do not conceal that it will be their object-" to wrest from us our maritime preponderancy—to re-establish what they invidiously call the freedom of the seas; to give a new impulse to the Spanish; Dutch, and French marines; and to carry to the highest degree of prosperity prosperity the industry and commerce of those nations," which they state to be our rivals, which they charge us with "unjustly attacking, when we can no longer dupe," and which they throughout contemplate as their own dependencies, united in arms, and furnishing resources for our future humiliation and destruction. They refort to that well known and conflant allufion of their's to ancient history, by which representing " France as modern Rome, and England as modern Carthage," they accuse us of national perfidy, and hold England up, as an object to be blotted out from the face of the earth." They falsely affert that the English nation supports with impatience the continuance of the war, and has extorted all his Majesty's overtures for peace "by complaints and reproaches;" and, above all, not only in that passage, but throughout their official note, they shew the most marked adherence to that infidious and intolerable policy of their system, by which they, from the commencement of the revolution, fought to trouble and subvert all the governments in They studiously disjoin Europe. the English nation from its sovereign.

Because, having acted 10th. throughout the course of this awful and momentous crifis upon the principles herein expressed, and after having on the present occasion, not only fully reconsidered, and jealoufly examined their foundness and validity, but gravely attended to, and icrupulously weighed the merits of all those arguments which have been offered to induce a dereliction of them, conscientiously adhering to, and firmly abiding by them, I thus folemnly record them, in justificacation of my own conduct, and in discharge of the duty I owe to my king, my country, and general interests of civil society.

WENTWORTH FITZWILLIAM.

Message from his Majesty to the House of Lords, 12th Dec. 1796.

George R.

HIS majesty is concerned to acquaint the house of lords that his endeavours to preserve peace with Spain, and to adjust all matters in discussion with that court by an amicable negotiation, have been rendered inessectual by an abrupt and unprovoked declaration of war on the part of the Catholic king.

His majesty, at the same time that he fincerely laments this addition to the calamities of war, already extended over so great a part of Europe, has the fatisfaction to reflect that nothing has been omitted on his part which could contribute to the maintenance of peace, grounds confistent with the honour of his crown, and the interest of his dominions; and he trusts, that, under the protection of divine Providence, the firmness and wisdom of his parliament will enable him effectually to repel this unprovoked aggression, and to afford to all Europe an additional proof of the spirit and resources of the British nation:

G. R.

M stage from his Majesty to the House of Lords, 17th Dec. 1796.
G. R.

HIS Majesty thinks proper to acquaint the bouse of peers, that he is at present engaged in concerting measures with his allies, in order order to be fully prepared for the vigorous and effectual profecution of the war, if the failure of his majefty's earnest endeavours to effect a general peace, on secure and honourable terms, should unfortunately render another campaign unavoidable. And his majesty will not fail to take the first opportunity to communicate the result of these discussions to the house. In the interval his majetty conceives that it may be of the greatest importance to the common cause, that his majesty should be enabled to continue fuch temporary advances for the fervice of the emperor as may be indispensably necessary, with a view to military operations being profecuted with vigour and effect at an early period; and his majesty recommends it to the house to confider of making such provision as may appear to them to be most expedient for this purpose.

124]

G. R.

Message from his Majesty to the House of Piers, 26th Dec. 1796.
George R.

that his majefty acquaints the house of lords, that his earnest endeavours to effect the restoration of peace have been unhappily frustrated, and that the negotiation in which he has been engaged has been abruptly broken off by the peremptory resusal of the French government to treat, except upon a basis evidently inadmissible, and by their having in consequence required his majesty's plenipotentiary to quit Paris within 48 hours.

His majesty has directed the several memorials and papers which have been exchanged in the course of the late discussion, and the account transmitted to his majesty of its final result, to be laid before the house.

From these papers, his majesty trusts, it will be proved to the whole world that his conduct has been guided by a fincere defire to effect the restoration of peace on principles fuited to the relative fituation of the belligerent powers, and effential for the permanent in-. terests of his kingdom, and the general security of Europe: whilst his enemies have advanced pretensions at once inconsistent with those objects, unsupported even on the grounds on which they were professed to rest, and repugnant both to the system established by repeated treaties, and to the principle and practice which have hitherto regulated the intercourse of independent nations.

In this fituation his majesty has the consolation of reflecting, that the continuance of the calamities of war can be imputed only to the and exorbitant views of his enemies; and his majesty look. ing forward with anxiety to the moment when they may be disposed to act on different principles, places in the mean time the fullest reliance, under the protection of Providence, on the wildom and firmness of his parliament, on the tried valour of his forces by fea and land, and on the zeal, public fpirit, and resources of his king. doms, for vigorous and effectual support in the prosecution of a contest, which it does not depend on his majesty to terminate, and which involves in it the security and permanent interests of this country, and of Europe.

> G. R. Note,

STATE

Note, transmitted to M. Barthelemi, by Mr. Wickham, March 8, 1796.

THE undersigned, his Britannic majesty's minister plenipoteniary to the Swiss Cantons, is authorized to convey to monsieur Barthelemi, the defire of his court to be made acquainted, through him, with the dispositions of France, in regard to the object of a general pacification. He therefore requelts monfieur Barthelemi to transmit to him in writing, (and after having made the necessary enquiries) his answer to the following questions:

r. Is there the disposition in France to open a negotiation with his majesty and his allies for the reestablishment of a general peace, upon just and suitable terms, by fending, for that purpose, ministers to a congress, at such place as may hereafter be agreed upon?

2. Would there be the disposition to communicate to the underfigned, the general grounds of a pacification, such as France would be willing to propose; in order that his majesty and his allies might thereupon examine in concert, whether they are fuch as might serve as the foundation of a negotiation for peace?

3. Or would there be a defire to propose any other way whatever, for arriving at the same end, that of a general pacification?

The undersigned is authorized to receive from monsieur Barthelemi, the answer to these questions, and to transmit to his court: but he is not authorised to enter with him into negotiation or discussion upon these subjects.

Berne, March 8, 1796. (Signed) WICKHAM. Note, transmitted to Mr. Wickham, by M. Barthelemi, March 26, 1796.

The undersigned, ambassador of the French republic to the Helvetic Body, has transmitted to the executive directory the note, which Mr. Wickham, his Britannic majesty's minister plenipotentiary to the Swiss Canton, was pleased to convey to him, dated the 8th of March. He has it in command to answer it by an exposition of the fentiments and dispositions of the executive directory.

The directory ardently defires to procure for the French republic a just, honourable and solid peace. The step taken by Mr. Wickham would have afforded to the directory a real fatisfaction, if the declaration itself, which that minister makes, of his not having any order, any power to negotiate, did not give room to doubt of the fincerity of the pacific intentions of his court. In fact, if it was true, that England began to know her real interests; that she wished to open again for herself the sources of abundance and prosperity; if she fought for peace with good faith, would the propose a congress, of which the necessary result must be, to render all negotiation endless? or would the confine herself to the asking, in a vague manner, that the French government should point out any other way whatever, for attaining the same object that of a general pacification?

Is it that this step has had no other object than to obtain for the British government the favourable impression which always accompa-. nies the first overtures for peace? may it not have been accompanied with.

with the hope that they would produce no effect?

However that may be the executive directory, whose policy has no other guides than openness and good faith, will follow, in its explanations, a conduct which shall be wholly conformable to them. Yielding to the ardent defire by which it is animated, to procure peace for the French republic, and for all nations, it will not fear to declare itself openly. Charged by the conflitution with the execution of the laws, it cannot make, or listen to, any proposal that would be contrary to them. The conftitutional act does not permit it to confent to any alienation of that, which, according to the existing laws, constitutes the territory of the republic.

With respect to the countries occupied by the French armies, and which have not been united to France, they, as well as other interests, political and commercial, may become the subject of a negotiation, which will present to the directory the means of proving how much it desires to attain speedily to a happy pacification

Baile, the 6th of germinal, the 4th year of the French republic, 26th of March, 1795.

(Signed) BARTHELEMI.

Note of observation.—The court of London has received from its minister in Switzerland, the answer made to the questions which he had been charged to address to monsieur Barthelemi, in respect to the opening of a negotiation for the re-establishment of general tranquillity.

This court has feen, with regret, how far the tone and spirit of that answer, the nature and extent of the demands which it contains, and the manner of announcing them, are remote from any dispofition for peace.

The inadmissible pretension is there avowed of appropriating to France all that the laws actually existing there may have comprized under the denomination of French territory. To a demand such as this is added an express declaration, that no proposal contrary to it will be made, or even listened to: And this, under the pretence of an internal regulation, the provisions of which are wholly foreign to all other nations.

While these dispositions shall be persisted in, nothing is lest for the king but to prosecute a war equally just and necessary.

Whenever his enemies manifest more pacific sentiments, his majesty will at all times beeager to concur in them, by lending himself, in concert with his? allies, to all fuch meafures as fhall' be best calculated to re-establish general tranquillity, on conditions just, honourable and permanent; either by the establishment of an congress, which has been so often, and so happily, the means of reitoring peace to Europe; or by-afpreliminary discussion of the principles which may be proposed, on eitheir fide, as a foundation of a general pacification; or, lastly, by an impartial examination of any other way which may be pointed out to him for arriving at the same ialutary end.

Downing-street, April 19, 1796.

Explanatory Article, framed by the Commissioners for carrying into effect the Treaty between Great Britain and America.

WHEREAS.

UEREAS by the third article e treaty of amity, commerce, lavigation, concluded at Lonon the nineteenth day of Noer, one thousand seven hunand ninety-four, between his nnic majesty and the United s of America, it was agreed it should at all times be free is majesty's subjects, and to itizens of the United States, also to the Indians dwelling ther fide of the boundary line ed by the treaty of peace to United States, freely to pass epass, by land or inland naion, into the respective terri-; and countries of the two acting parties on the conti-of America (the country in the limits of the Hudson Company only excepted), and avigate all the lakes, rivers, waters thereof, and freely to on trade and commerce with other, fubject to the proand limitations containthe faid article: eas, by the eighth article of reaty of peace and friendship luded at Grenville, on the day of August, one thousand 1 hundred and ninety-five, ben the United States, and the ons or tribes of Indians called Wyandots, Delawares, Shases, Ottawas, Chippewas, Puitimies, Miamis, Eel River, as, Kickapoos, Piankashaws, Kaikaikias, it was stipulated no perion should be permitto reside at any of the towns or ing camps of the faid Indian. s as a trader, who is not fured with a license for that pur-, under the authority of the ed States; which latter stition has excited doubts whether in its operation it may not interfere with the due execution of the faid third article of the treaty of amity, commerce, and navigation: and it being the fincere defire of his Britannic majesty, and of the United ' that this point should' be so explained as to remove all doubts, and promote mutual fatissaction and friendship: and for this purpose his Britannic majesty having named for his commissioner, Phineas Bond, esq. his majesty's conful general for the middle and fouthern states of America (and now his majesty's charge d'affaires to the United States); and the president of the United States having named for their commissioner Timothy Pickering, efq. fecretary of state of the United States, to whom, agreeable to the laws of the United States, he has entrusted this negotiation: they, the faid commissioners, having communicated to each other their full powers, have, in virtue of the same, and conformably to the fpirit of the last article of the said treaty of amity, commerce, and navigation, entered into this explanatory article, and do by these presents explicitly agree and declare, that no stipulations in any treaty fubicquently concluded by either of the contracting parties with any other state or nation, or with any Indian tribe, can be understood to derogate in any manner from the rights. of free intercourse and commerce fecured by the aforefaid third article of treaty of amity, commerce, and navigation, to the subjects of his majesty, and to the citizens of the United States, and to the Indians dwelling on either fide of the boundary line aforefaid; but that all the fuld persons their remain at વાર પ્રાપ્ય કર્યો છે. અને પ્રાપ્ય ાર્ધ કેલ્લો કર્યો

full liberty freely to pass and repass, by land or inland navigation, into the respective territories and countries of the contracting parties, on either fide of the faid boundary line, and freely to carry on trade and commerce with each other, according to the stipulations of the said third article of the treaty of amity, commerce, and navigation.

This explanatory article, when the same shall have been ratified by his majesty and by the president of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of their fenate, and the respective ratifications mutually exchanged, shall be added to and make a part of the faid treaty of amity, commerce, and navigation, and shall be permanently binding upon his majefty and the United States.

In witness whereof we, the faid commissioners of his majesty the king of Great Britain and the United States of America, have figned this explanatory article, and thereto affixed our Done at Philadelphia, this fourth day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ninety-fix.

P. Bond, (L. S.) TIMOTHY PICKERING, (L. S.)

And whereas the faid explanatory article has by me, by and with the advice and confent of the senate of the United States on the one part, and by his Britannic majesty on the other, been duly approved and ratified, and the ratifications have fince, to wit, on the fixth day of October last, been duly exchanged: now therefore, to the end that the said explanatory article may be executed and observed with punctuality and the most fincere regard to good faith' on the part of the United States, I hereby make known the premiles; and enjoin and require all persons bearing office, civil or mie litary, within the Utited States, and all others, citizens or inhable tants thereof, or being within the fame, to execute and observe the: article accordfaid explanatory ingly.

In testimony whereof I have caused the seal of the United: States to be affixed to thefe presents, and signed the same:

with my hand.

Given at the city of Philadela! phia, the fourth day of No-" vember, in the year of our; Lord one thousand seven! hundred and ninety-fix, and of the independence of the United States of America the. twenty-first.

(L. S.) Geo. Washington. By the President,

TIMOTHY PICKERING, Secretary of state.

Treaty between his Britannic Majesty and the Landgrave of Heffe Darms stadt, signed at Frankfort, the 10th day of June, 1796.

BE it known to those whom it" may concern, that his majesty the king of Great Britain, and his ferene highness the Landgrave of Hesse Darmstadt, in consideration. of the strict ties which unite their interests, and having judged that, in the present fituation of affairs, 1 it would contribute to the reciprocal welfare of Great Britain, and of 'the dominions of Hesse Darmstads, to cement and strengthen, by a new ... treaty of alliance, the connection which

h subsists between them, his nnic majesty, in order to ree the object relative to this , has thought proper to nomi-Charles Craufurd, his envoy t imperial and royal armies; his ferene highness has nomil on his part, for the same purthe baron Charles of Barkhis privy councillor, and dir of the council of war; who, furnished with the necessary powers, have agreed to take alis of the present treaty, the formerly concluded between t Britain and Hesse, the fifth ctober, one thousand seven red and ninety-three, to adopt parts of it as may be applicao the present circumstances, fettle, by new articles, those s which it may be necessary gulate otherwise: and as it is offible to specify each particuase, every thing which shall ppear to be determined in a le manner, either in the prereaty or in the former treaty, be fettled with equity and in conformity to the same iples which have been adoptformer instances.

in virtue of this treaty, bein virtue of this treaty, bei his majesty the king of Great in and his serene highness the rave of Hesse Darmsladt, heirs and successors, a strict ship, and a sincere, sirm, and int union, so that the one consider the interests of the as his own, and shall strive omote them with good faith ich as possible, and to prevent omove all disturbance and in-

His majesty the king of Great in desiring to have in his ser-L. XXXVIII.

vice a body of troops, to be employed wherever he may think proper, excepting in the East Indies, or on board the fleet; and his ferene highness, wishing for nothing more than to give his majesty this fresh proof of his attachment, engages, by virtue of this article; to fet on foot three battalions of infantry, forming a body of two thousand two hundred and eighty-four men, according to the annexed specifica-These troops shall be ready to pass in review before his Britannic majesty's commissary the fourteenth day of July of the present year, at Darmstadt, and to begin their march the following day for the place of their destination. The general whom his Britannic majefty shall appoint commander in chief in the countries where these shall serve, shall have authority to employ them, either together or in detachments, and even to disperse them amongst the different islands or districts of his command, in the manner which he shall judge the most advantageous for his majesty's fervice. It being, notwithstanding, well understood, that these troops thall always remain under the intmediate orders of their own chiefs. —The faid corps shall confist of men disciplined and exercised, and well armed and equipped.

3. In order to defray the expences to which the serene Landgrave shall be put for the equipment of the said corps of troops, his Britannic majetty promises to pay to his serene highness for each man thirty crowns banco, the crown being reckoned at fifty-three sols of Holland, or at four shillings and nine-pence three farthings English money, of which payment shall be made immediately after the review, and according to the effective state as shall then be verified. All the camp necessaries, as likewise all the horses, waggons, draft-horses, valets de bat, and waggoners, who may be necessary for the troops, as well for transporting the equipages, provisions, ammunition, utenfils, fick, and other objects of every kind, as for the field-pieces, with their implements, and artillery men, shall be furnished by his Britannic majefly wherever they may be wanted.

4. Besides the levy-money slipulated in the preceding article, his Britannic majesty shall cause to be paid to every officer, as also to every one employed, not a fighting man of equal rank, the fum of three months pay according to his rank, and upon the fame footing as his national troops, in order to facilitate the expence of his private equipment, which payment shall be made immediately after the fignature of the prefent treaty.

5. His majesty the king of Great Britain engages himself, in like manner, to pay to the ferene Landgrave an annual fubfidy during the fix years this treaty is to continue. This subsidy shall commence from the day of the fignature, and it shall be paid at the rate of eighty thouland crowns banco per annum. The payment of this subsidy shall be made regularly, without abatement, every quarter, to the agent of his highness in London.

6. These troops shall remain in the service and at the disposition of his Bri annic majesty during six years, and his majesty shall allow them during this term—1. Every thing that is necessary for their subsistance; namely, pay, bread, forage, and, in general all emoluments, as well ordinary as extraordinary, attached to every rank on the fame footing that he allows them to his British troops in the different places of their destination; and for this purpose the statements of payment shall be annexed to the. present treaty. 2. Medicines and fustenance for the fick and wounded, with a place and the necessary means of conveyance wherein they may be treated and taken care of, precisely on the same footing as the national British troops, by their own physicians and surgeons. The pay inall commence from the day of the review, according to the effective state in which the said corps shall be delivered, which shall be verified by a table, figned by the respective ministers of the high which Iball contracting parties, have the fame force as if it had been inferted word for word in the present treaty.

7. As in the before-mentioned table the strength of each company, of which four make a battalion, amounts to one hundred and fixty-. three foldiers, it must be observed, that in this number are comprised feven men unarmed, intended, according to the established custom in the Hessian service, to serve as fervants to officers; and it is agreed upon that these men shall nevertheless pass muster as soldiers in every respect.

8. As it is to be feared that, notwithstanding the care made vie of it will not be possible entirely to prevent desertion until the arrival of the troops at the place of embarkation, and his serene highness promising to employ every means in his power that the faid corps shall be embarked complete, it is agreed upon, that there shall be at the faid review ten supernumerary men per company, to supply the place of deferters on the march; so that, in case, on the arrival of the corps at the port, the number of supernumeraries shall exceed that of the deferters, the remainder may be distributed amongst the battalions, and added to the amount, in order to increase, in such case, the levy money, pay, &c. and his highness engages himself moreover to cause the said corps to be escorted by a detachment of cavalry, in order to pick up deserters, procure quarters, &c. &c. it being well understood that the expences, as well of the march as of the return of the detachment of cavalry, shall be defrayed by his majesty.

- 9. All the objects of pay and maintenance shall be calculated according to the table of the annual review, fo that the vacancies happening from one review to another thall not make any alteration in the state of payment. His majesty shall cause these objects to be paid advance from two to three months, either by affignments payable in favour of the Hessian commissioner upon whatever chest of his majesty may be nearest to the faid commission, or in ready money to his ferene highness's agent in London.
- no. A fresh review shall take place regularly every year. His majesty shall give three months notice of the number of recruits necessary to complete the corps, which number shall be fixed according to the official report of the first day of April, so that the recruits shall be ready to be delivered to the English commissary the 1st day of July, at the place of the first review, or one month after, at such port in Germany, or at such place on the frontiers of the empire, as his majesty may chuse for their reception. The form of their delivery shall be deemed to be that of the new review, and the total of the number of effective men remaining, according to the report of the month of April, added to that of the recruits delivered to the British commissary, shall be considered as the effective state of the new period, and shall not vary until the review of the following year.

recruit, armed, equipped, disciplined, and exercised, the sum of twenty crowns banco; and his highness the Landgrave takes upon himself the expences of transport to the place of embarkation, as well as of escort, which are to be reimbursed by his Britannic majesty.

12. As during the continuance of this treaty, it will necessarily occur, that officers or foldiers, either for family reasons, on account of preferment, or for fickness, will be obliged to return home, his majefty takes upon himself the expences of their transport in the two former cases, as far as the frontiers of the empire, and in the latter to their own country; his highness promifes, in return, to replace the noncommissioned officers and soldiers to whom he may give permission to return for any other reason than that of fickness, at his own expence, and without requiring the confideration for recruits fixed in the preceding article, referring to himfelf nothing but the transport from the frontiers of the empire unto the place of their destination.—Moreover, his highness will never recal an officer or foldier without urgent K 2 caule.

132]

cause, or without having acquainted his majesty thereof; and he will take care that the number of officers thall be always complete.

13. The most serene Landgrave being at the charge of furnishing the faid corps with arms and cloathing, in consequence of the pay upon the footing of English troops, as agreed upon in these articles, his majesty shall cause indemnification to be made for fuch loss only in cloathing, arms, and accoutrements, as shall be occasioned by some accident of war or voyage; as well as for every expence incurred in the transport of the several articles to the troops, and also of every thing they may stand in need of. ing well understood that the aforefaid articles shall be delivered to English commissary at the fame time as the recruits of the year, in order that the same vessel may convey both.

14. In case an officer shall lose his equipage, either on his rout or by some accident of war, his majesty shall grant him the same indemnification as English officers are allowed in fimilar cases.

15. As foon as his ferene highness shall have put the corps in a state to march, within the term agreed upon, he shall be considered as having fulfilled his preliminary engagements; so that the payment of the levy money, subsidy, and pay shall take place according to the aforesaid determination, even in case his majesty, on account of some unforeseen event, should not think proper to have the corps reviewed, or to cause it to march or embark.

16. If before the period of the review, his Britannic majesty shall find himself disposed to renounce this treaty entirely, his ferene highness shall receive, under the title of indemnification; 1st the levy 2d. The equipage money money. 3d. Three allowed to the officers. months pay for the whole of the troops, according to the table annexed to the second article, &c.

4th. One year's fubfidy.

17. At the end of fix years, his Britannic majesty shall send back the corps at the disposal of his highness, in the same state in which it was taken into his fervice, and being at the entire expence of trainsport until their arrival at Darm-It being understood that his majesty shall not pay the levy money for the men who may be wanting at that time, except in the case where he shall have failed to inform the ferene Landgrave of it fix months before hand, in order to fave his highness the expence of a new completion. If by accident the return should be retarded, the treaty shall be tacitly prolonged for one year, in every respect, and a certain fum shall be agreed upon as an equivalent for levy money, in proportion to the present arrangement.

18. If his majesty should think proper, after the expiration of the fix years fixed for the duration of this treaty, to keep the faid corps for fome years longer, his highness consents to it beforehand; and as it will be then only necessary to make an arrangement respecting the levy and equipage-money for the officers, which will be calculated according to the proportions of the present treaty.

19. His ferene highness reserves to himself the jurisdiction over his troops, as well as all dispositions respecting promotion, discipline, and interior administration.

20. His

20. His Britannic majesty grants to his highness the sum of 15,000l. sterling, to answer the first expences of equipping this corps; payment of which shall be made immediately after the signature of this treaty, and shall be carried to the account of levy-money.

delivered up on both sides, and neither the soldiers, nor any other persons belonging to the corps of Hesse Darmstadt, shall be permitted to settle in the dominions of his

Britannic majesty.

In witness whereof, we the underfigned, authorised by the full power of his majesty the king of Great Britain on one side, and of his serene highness the reigning Landgrave of Hesse Darmstadt, on the other, have signed the present treaty, and have caused the seals of our arms to be affixed thereto.

Done at Frankfort, this 10th day of June, 1796.

(L. S.) C. CRAUFURD.

(L. S.) C. B. DE BARKHAUS.

Letter from Sir Gilbert Elliot, Viceroy of Corfica, to the governor of Porte Forrajo.

THE French troops have taken possession of the city of Leghorn, the cannon of the fortresses have been directed against the ships of the king in the road, and the property of his majesty's subjects at Leghorn has been violated, not-withstanding the neutrality of his royal highness the grand duke of Tuscany, and the reiterated protestations of the French to respect st.

There is likewise reason to believe, that the French have the fame defign upon the fortress of Porto Ferrajo, hoping, by such means, to facilitate the defigns that they meditate against the kingdom of Corfica. These circum-Itances have determined us to prevent the defigns of the enemies of the king, who are equally hostile to his royal highness, by placing at Porto Ferrajo, a garrison capable of defending that place; our only' intention being to prevent that fortress, and the whole island of the Elbe, from being taken possession of by the French. We invite and request you, fir, to receive the troops, of his majesty, which will appear before the place, under the following conditions:

1. Porto Ferrajo and its dependencies shall remain under the government of the grand duke. The Tuscan shag shall not cease to be respected, and the administration shall not be altered in any respect; persons, property, and the religion of all the inhabitants shall be respected. The English commanders shall be careful that their troops observe strict discipline.

2. The officers and foldiers composing the Tuscan garrison, shall continue to do duty, if they think proper. All persons employed in civil or military capacities shall be continued in their employments, if they conduct themselves properly.

3. The preceding conditions shall be exactly observed, and with the utmost good faith, as far as shall be consistent with the safety of the place.

4. We promise, in the name of his majesty, in the most solemn manner, to let his majesty's troops retire, and to put the place into the hands of his royal highness in its present state, when a peace takes place, or immediately after all danger of a French invasion is at an end.

K3 takes

If you refuse, sir, to agree to propositions so conformable to the interest of his royal highness, and which are so just and necessary to our safety, the officer who is charged with the expedition, has orders and power sufficient to force the place; in which case the possession of it will not be limited by any condition.

Not doubting but that prudence and attachment to the true interests of his royal highness will induce you to consent to the only expedient which can save Porto Ferrajo, and preserve the island of the Elbe from the most cruel scourge.

I have the honour, with the utmost regard and esteem, &c.

Articles proposed by the Governor and town of Porto Ferrajo, and accepted the 10th July by the commander of the English troop:.

ART. 1. The English troops shall be received into the place, and the conditions, regulated by his excellency the viceroy, Elliott, shall be fully observed, so that nothing may alter the law of neutrality imposed upon Tuscany, and which should be inviolably maintained.

2. Whenever troops or ships of nations at war shall appear before the city or port, neither the garrison nor any inhabitant shall be bound to take up arms, either in favour of the English or any other party.

3. The island of the Elbe, and especially Porto Ferrajo, being in want of provisions, the commanders of the English troops shall take care to fend all necessary provisions for the inhabitants to purchase, in order that they may not be exposed to perish by samine.

4. The people of Porto Ferrajo being very numerous, and having but few houses, it will not be possible to lodge the English soldiers in private houses. They flatter themselves the commanders will have the goodness to take this object into consideration.

5. As the arrival of the Britannic troops has been sudden and unforeseen, the commanders are entreated to agree to a convenient time for preparing quarters and necetsary lodgings.

Proclamation by Gordon Forbes, major general and commander in chief of all his Britannic Majesty's forces at St. Domingo, to all the planters of the Spanish part of the said Island.

SPANISH PLANTERS,

YOUR king has ceded to the actual government of France the vast and rich territory occupied and cultivated by your forefathers and you upwards of three centuries. This treaty is on the point of being carried into execution; commiffioners fent by the executive directory are already arrived in your colony, and prepare the destruction of your property in the fame manner as they have effected it in the rich French colony contiguous to yours. Beware, brave Spaniards, of the treacherous infinuations of those enemies of all moral and religious principles, which form the basis of social life. High minded, loyal, and generous, like your forefathers, you want but a hint of what awaits you. Zealously attached to the worship of the true God, and the august blood of your kings, you, no doubt, prefer the loss and facrifice of your property to the misfortune and difgrace of submitting to the yoke of these new masters of your territory. Follow then, gallant Spaniards, that noble impulse of reason, honour, feeling. Depart! the dominions of the Spanish monarch are open for you: go, honourably to live and die there in the shade of your altars, and under the protection of your king. But if any among you, chained down by necessity to the foil they cultivate, should not be able to leave it, let them not be uneasy: his majesty lends them his powerful and protecting hand. wish they would, for their own happiness, fully rely on the generosity and beneficence of so great a monarch. What other fovereign has fought with more zeal and glory for the facred cause of religion, royalty, and humanity, against the fool-hardy innovators, who are bent on exterminating them from the whole furface of this globe. I have read, brave Spaniards, the oftenfible instructions given by the directory to the commissioners of the republic; I have perused the proclamations of those hypocritical and perverse agents, whose first mission to St. Domingo was marked with insurrections, with the firing of the plantations, and the affaffination of their owners. The choice of fuch men fufficiently shews the misfortunes you have to expect. Read and confider, brave Spaniards, the papers I have just quoted: compare the promises which they hold out with those the republic has made to every nation it wished to seduce. What advantages did it not hold out to its own colonies, to Savoy, Belgium, Holland; in short, to all countries wherein it has established its strange regime!-Well, contemplate the horrid and deplorable fituation to which are now reduced those provinces, once fo populous and flourishing, and judge, brave Spaniards, what would be the refult of your credulity. Impressed with your dangers, and feeling for your misfortune, I offer you my support. A faithful interpreter of the beneficent disposition of his majesty, I promise and guae rantee to you, under his banners, fafety to your persons and property. Whatever is facred to you, your religious worthip, your prietts, your laws, your customs, your privileges, shall be preserved to you, and you shall alto enjoy the advantage of the most extensive and flourishing commerce in the world. You have frequented our posts, and know the liberty, good faith, and plenty Calculate the which reign there. extent of those advantages, and prepare yourselves to receive the only power able to grant them. As foon as the protection of your, fhall be withdrawn from you, and you are given up the new masters of your territory, arm against them, and on the first fignal you give me of your determination, I will fly to your affiftance, and unite my whole force with yours, to repel and exterminate our common enemy.

Given in the king's house, at Port-au-Prince, the 12th of July, in the year of our Lord 1796, and the 35th of his majesty's reign.

G. FORBES.

By order of his excellency,

JAMES ESTEN, secretary.

Order

138] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

Order of Council, at the Court at St. Famos's the 12th of October, 1796, present, the King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

WHEREAS his majesty has received, intelligence that some ships belonging to his majesty's subjects have been, and are detained in the port of Genoa; his majesty, with the advice of his privy council, is thereupon pleased to order, and it is hereby ordered, that no ships or vessels belonging to any of his majesty's subjects be permitted to enter or clear out for Genoa, or any port within the territory of the republic of Genoa, until further orders: and his majesty is further pleased to order, that a general embargo, or stop, be made of all Genoese ships or vessels whatsoever, now hereafter or which within, shall come into any of the ports, harbours, or roads, within the kingdom of Great Britain, together with all persons and effects on board the faid ships and vessels; but that the utmost care be taken for the preservation of all and every part of the cargoes on board any of the said ships, so that no damage or embezzlement whatever be sustained.

And the right honourable the lords commissioners of his majesty's treasury, the lords commissioners of the admiralty, and the lord warden of the Cinque Ports, are to give the necessary directions herein as to them may respectively appertain!

(Signed) W. FAWKENER.

Orders of Council at the Court at St. James's, the 9th November, 1795, present the King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

WHEREAS his majefty has received information, that divers unjust seizures have been made in the ports of Spain of the ships and goods of his majesty's subjects, and that acts of hostility and unprovoked aggression have been committed by the ships of his Catholic majesty, on ships and vesfels of his majesty and of his subjects: his majesty, therefore, being determined to take such measures as are necessary for vindicating the honour of the crown, and for procuring reparation and fatisfaction for his injured subjects, is pleased, by and with the advice of his privy council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, that general reprisals be granted against the ships, goods, and subjects of the king of Spain, fo that as well as his majesty's fleets and ships, as also all other ships and vessels that shall be commissioned by letters of marque or general reprisals, or otherwise, by his majesty's commissioners for executing the office of lord high admiral of Great Britain, shall and may lawfully seize all ships, vessels, and goods, belonging to the king of Spain, or his subjects, or others inhabiting within the territories of the king of Spain, and bring the same to judgment in any of the courts of admiralty within his majesty's dominions; and to that end, his majesty's advocate-general, with the advocate of the admiralty, are forthwith to prepare the draught of a commission, and present the same to his majesty at this board, authorifing the commissioners for executing the office of lord high admiral, or any person or persons by them empowered and appointed, to issue forth and grant letters of marque and reprifals, to any of his majesty's subjects or othes whom the commissioners shall deem fitly qualified in that behalf, for the apprehending, seizing, and taking the ships, vessels and goods belonging to Spain, and the vaffals and subjects of the king of Spain, or any inhabiting within his countries, territories or dominions; and that such powers or clauses be inferted in the faid commission as have been usual, and are according to former precedents. And his majesty's faid advocate-general, with the advocate of the admiralty, are also forthwith to prepare a draught of a commission, and preient the same to his majesty at this board, authorizing the faid commissioners for executing the office of lord high admiral, to will and require the high court of Admiralty of Great Britain, and the lieutenant and judge of the faid court, his furrogate or furrogates, as also the several courts of admiralty within his majesty's dominions, to take cognizance of, and judicially proceed upon, all and all manner of captures, leizures, prizes, and reprifals of all ships and goods that are or shall be taken, and to hear and determine the fame; and, according to the course of admiralty and the laws of nations, to adjudge and condemn all such ships, vessels, and goods as shall belong to Spain, or the vassals and subjects of the king of Spain, or to any others inhabiting within any of his countries, territories, and dominions; and that fuch powers and clauses be inserted in the said commission as have been usual, and are according to former precedents; they are likewise to prepare and lay before his majesty, at this board, a draught of such instructions as may be proper to be sent to the courts of admiralty in his majesty's foreign governments and plantations, for their guidance herein; as also another draught of instructions for such ships as shall be commissioned for the purposes arfore-mentioned.

Order of Council relative to Trade to and from the Cape of Good Hope.

At the Court at St. James's, the 28th of December, 1796, present the King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

WHEREAS by an act passed in the present session of parliament, intituled, "An act to authorise his? majefly, for a limited time, make regulations respecting the trade and commerce to and from the Cape of Good Hope," it is enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for his majesty, by and with the advice of 'his privy council, by any order or orders to be iffued from time to time, to give such directions, and make such regulations, touching the trade and commerce to and from the fettlement of the Cape of Good Hope, and the territories and dependencies thereof, as to his majesty in council shall appear most expedient and falutary, any of the acts of parliament therein referred to, or any usage, law or custom, to the contrary notwithstanding.

And whereas during the time the faid fettlement, with the territories and dependencies thereof, were in the possession and under the government of the states general of the United Provinces, or of the honourable the general East

136] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

Order of Council of the 3d September.

AT the court at Weymouth, the 3d of September 1796, present the king's mcst excellent majesty in council.

Whereas an act passed in the thirty-third year of his majesty's reign, intituled, "An act more effeetually to prevent, during the present war between Great Britain and France, all traitorous correspondence with, or aid or assistance being given to his majesty's enemies;" and another act patied in the thirty-fourth year of his majesty's reign, intituled, " An act for preventing money or effects, in the hands of his majesty's subjects belonging to or disposable by persons resident in France, being applied to the use of the persons exercifing the powers of government in France, and for preserving the property thereof for the benefit of the individual owners thereof."

And whereas another act, passed in the thirty-fourth year aforesaid, intituled, "An act for more effectually preserving money and effects, in the hands of his majesty's subjects, belonging to or disposable by persons resident in France, for the benefit of the individual owners thereof."

And whereas it is expedient that fuch licence and authority should be granted as is herein after given and granted; his majesty, taking the same into his royal consideration, is pleased, by and with the advice of his privy council, by this order to grant, and accordingly, with such advice, by this order, doth grant licence, according to the authority given by the said acts respectively, or some of them, to all persons residing or being in Great Britain, either on their own account or credit, or on the account or credit, or by the direction of any other perion or perions whomsoever, or wheresoever relident or being, to fell, fupply, deliver, or fend for the purpose of being fold, supplied, or delivered, and agree to fell, supply, deliver, or fend for fuch purpole, and either on their own account or credit, or on the account or credit, or by the direction of any other person or persons whomsoever and wherefoever refident or being, to cause or procure to be fold, supplied, delivered, or fent for fuch purpole as aforefaid, or to authorise or direct any other person or persons whomsoever, or wheresoever resident or being, to sell, supply, deliver, or send as aforesaid; or to aid or affift in so selling, sup-. plying, delivering, or authorifing or directing to be fold, supplied, delivered or fent; and also to buy or procure, or contract or agree to contract or procure, or cause to be bought or procured, or authorise or direct any other person or perions whomsoever, or wheresoever refident or being, to buy or procure, or to contract or agree to buy or procure, or aid or affift in buying or procuring, or authorifing or directing to be bought or procured, any goods, wares, merchandizes, or effects mentioned in the faid acts, or any other goods, wares, merchandizes, or effects, (except such as are herein after mentioned) whether of the growth, production or manufacture of this kingdom, or of any foreign country, to or for the use of any persons residing in the territories of the United Provinces, or in the Auftrian Netherlands, or in any part of. Italy, or for the purpose of being ing fent into any part or place within the same respectively.

Provided nevertheless, that all 1uch goods, wares, merchandizes, and effects, be exported from this kingdom, and in thips or Vessels belonging to persons of some state or country in amity with his majefty, and that such exportation be made under the usual conditions and regulations; and that fecurity he given by bond, in fuch' penalty, by fuch persons, and in fuch manner, as shall be directed by the commissioners of his majesty's customs, and that the faid goods, wares, merchandizes, and effects, shall be exported to the places proposed, and to other; and that a certificate shall be produced, within fix months from the date of the bond, under the hand of the British consul or viceconful refiding at the port or place at which fuch goods or commodities fhall be landed; and if no viceconful thall be there resident, then under the hands of two known British merchants residing there; and if no Britith merchant shall refide there, then under the hand of the chief magistrate of the place, testifying that the faid goods have been all duly landed at that port or place.

Provided also, that nothing herein before contained shall be construed to licence the exportation, sale, sending, supplying, or delivering of, or in any manner to relate to any arms, ordnance, ordnance stores, gunpowder, bullets, pitch, tar, hemp, masts, timber, sail-cloth, cordage, saltpetre, or any naval or military stores whatsoever, nor to relate to any store or article whatsoever, intended for the use of the armies, troops, fleets, ships, or vessels of the enemies of his majesty; or any articles which are specially prohibited by any other act or acts of parliament, other than the acts before mentioned, to be exported, sold, supplied, or delivered, as aforesaid; or in any manner to affect the provisions of any other act or acts of parliament; or to licence or authorize the several acts, matters, and things aforesaid, further or otherwise than as the same might be affected by the several beforementioned acts of parliament.

Provided also, that every person who shall take the benefit of this licence and authority, shall take the fame upon condition, that if in case of any proceeding, civil or criminal, under the provisions of any of the acts herein before mentioned, or any thing alledged to have been done contrary thereto, any question shall arise whether the thing done was authorized by the licence hereby given, the proof that fuch thing was done under the circumstances, and according to the terms and conditions of this order, shall lie on the persons claiming the benefit hereof.

And his majetty, with the advice aforesaid, is hereby further pleased to order, that this licence and order shall remain and be in force and effect until the 25th day of December next ensuing, unless the same shall be sooner revoked.

And the right honourable the lords commissioners of his majesty's treasury, and the Lords commissioners of the Admiralty, are to give the necessary directions herein, to them respectively appertaining.

(Signed) W. FAWKENER.

138] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

Order of Council, at the Court at St. Fames's the 12!b of October, 1796, present, the King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

WHEREAS his majesty has reccived, intelligence that fome thips belonging to his majesty's subjects have been, and are detained in the port of Genoa; his majefty, with the advice of his privy council, is thereupon pleased to order, and it is hereby ordered, that no ships or vessels belonging to any of his majesty's fubjects be permitted to enter or clear out for Genoa, or any port within the territory of the republic of Genoa, until further orders: and his majesty is further pleased to order, that a general embargo, or stop, be made of all Genoese ships or vessels whatsoever, now which hereafter shall come into any of the ports, harbours, or roads, within the kingdom of Great Britain, together with all persons and effects on board the faid thips and vetfels; but that the utmost care be taken for the prefervation of all and every part of the cargoes on board any of the faid ships, so that no damage or embezzlement whatever be sustained.

And the right honourable the lords commissioners of his majesty's treasury, the lords commissioners of the admiralty, and the lord warden of the Cinque Ports, are to give the necessary directions herein as to them may respectively appertain.

(Signed) W. FAWKENER.

Orders of Council at the Court at St. James's, the 9th November, 1796, present the King's Most Excellent Wajesty in Council.

WHEREAS his majefty has received information, that divers unjust seizures have been made in the ports of Spain of the ships and goods of his majesty's subjects, and that acts of hostility and upprovoked aggression have been committed by the ships of his Catholic majesty, on ships and vesfels of his majesty and of his subjects: his majesty, therefore, being determined to take fuch measures are necessary for vindicating the honour of the crown, and for procuring reparation and fati-faction for his injured subjects, is pleased, by and with the advice of his privy council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, that general reprifals be granted against the ships, goods, and subjects of the king of Spain, fo that as well as his majesty's fleets and ships, as also all other ships and vessels that shall be commissioned by letters of marque or general reprisals, or otherwise, by his majesty's commissioners for executing the office of lord high admiral of Great Britain, shall and may lawfully seize all thips, vettels, and goods, belonging to the king of Spain, or his subjects, or others inhabiting within the territories of the king of Spain, and bring the same to judgment in any of the courts of admiralty within his majesty's dominions; and to that end, his majesty's advocate-general, with the advocate of the admiralty, are forthwith to prepare the draught of a commission, and present the fame to his majesty at this board, authorifing the committioners for executing the office of lord high admiral, or any person or persons by them empowered and appointed, to issue forth and grant letters arque and reprifals, to any of majefty's subjects or othes n the commissioners shall ifitly qualified in that behalf, ie apprehending, seizing, and g the ships, vessels and goods iging to Spain, and the vassals ubjects of the king of Spain, y inhabiting within his counterritories or dominions; and fuch powers or clauses be inin the faid commission as been usual, and are accordo former precedents. And his fty's faid advocate-general, the advocate of the admiralre also forthwith to prepare a tht of a commission, and prethe same to his majesty at this 1, authorizing the said comoners for executing the office rd high admiral, to will and ire the high court of Admiof Great Britain, and the enant and judge of the faid t, his furrogate or furrogates, to the feveral courts of admiwithin his majesty's dominito take cognizance of, and ially proceed upon, all and nanner of captures, seizures, s, and reprisals of all thips goods that are or shall be n, and to hear and determine fame; and, according to the ce of admiralty and the laws ations, to adjudge and conn all such ships, vessels, and ls as shall belong to Spain, ne vassals and subjects of the of Spain, or to any others biting within any of his coun-, territories, and dominions; that fuch powers and clauses iserted in the said commission ive been usual, and are accordto former precedents; are likewise to prepare and lay before his majesty, at this board, a draught of such instructions as may be proper to be sent to the courts of admiralty in his majesty's foreign governments and plantations, for their guidance herein; as also another draught of instructions for such ships as shall be commissioned for the purposes arfore-mentioned.

Order of Council relative to Trade to and from the Cape of Good Hope.

At the Court at St. James's, the 28th of December, 1796, present the King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

WHEREAS by an act passed in the present session of parliament, intituled, "An act to authorise his majesty, for a limited time, to make regulations respecting the trade and commerce to and from the Cape of Good Hope," it is enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for his majesty, by and with the advice of his privy council, by any order or orders to be iffued from time to time, to give such directions, and make fuch regulations, touching the trade and commerce to and from the fettlement of the Cape of Good Hope, and the territories and dependencies thereof, as to his majesty in council shall appear most expedient and falutary, any of the acts of parliament therein referred to, or any ulage, law or custom, to the contrary notwithstanding.

And whereas during the time the said settlement, with the territories and dependencies thereof, were in the possession and under the government of the states general of the United Provinces, or of the honourable the general East

India

14c] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

India company in the Netherlands, it was usual to admit the ships and vessels belonging to the subjects of countries in amity with faidUnited Provinces into the ports of the faid fettlement, and of the territories and dependencies thereof, for repair and refreshment, and with that view, to permit the faid ships and vessels to carry on trade with the inhabitants of the faid fettlement, and of the territories and dependencies thereof: his majesty is hereby pleased to order, by and with the advice of his privy council, in pursuance of the powers veited in his majesty by the above recited act, and it is hereby ordered, that it shall be lawful, until further order, for all thips and vessels belonging to the Subjects of any country or state in amity with his majesty, to enter into the ports of the faid fettlement of the Cape of Good Hope, and of the territories and dependencies thereof, and to carry on trade and traffic with the inhabitants of the faid fettlement, and of the territories and dependencies thereof, and to import and export to and from the ports of the lettlement and of the territories and dependencies thereof, any goods, wares, or merchandife whatfoever, subject to the following exceptions, and subject also to such duties, rules, regulations, and referections, as thall be chablished by his majesty, or by the governor of the said lettlement, and of the territories and dependencies thereof, by virtue of authority derived from his majetty; and in the mean time subject to such duties, rules, regulations and reffrictions, as fubfifted and were in force before and at the time of the conquest of the faid settlement by the arms of his majesty, with such alterations as have been since made under the authority of the commander in chief of his majesty's forces at the said settlement: but it is his majesty's pleasure, that no goods, wares, or merchandise, which shall be imported into the said settlement, or the territories or dependencies thereof, from any part of his majesty's dominions shall be subject to any duty.

And it is his majesty's pleasure, that no goods, wares, and merchandife, the growth, produce, or manufacture of the countries to the eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, be imported into the faid lettlement, or the territories or dependencies thereof, except by the United Company of merchants trading to the East Indies; and that no fuch goods, wares, or merchandise, be permitted to be exported from thence, except for fea flores only, or by the United Company of merchants of England trading to the East Indies, or by their licence.

But it is his majesty's pleasure, that nothing in this order contained thall extend to prevent ships or vessels employed in the southern whale sithery from carrying on the same, in such and the same manner as might have been done if this order had not been made.

And it is also his majesty's pleafure, that no arms or artillery, gunpowder or ammunition, of any fort, be allowed to be imported into the said settlement, or the territories or dependencies thereof, except by the said United Company of merchants of England trading to the East Indies, or by licence from his majesty.

And

And it is his majesty's further pleasure, that the trade and commerce to and from the faid fettlement, and the territories and dependencies thereof, shall be subject to such of the laws of trade and navigation as would have affected the same if this order had not been made, except so far as fuch laws are contrary to this prefent order.

And the right honourable the lords commissioners of his majesty's treasury, and the lords commissioners of the Admiralty are to give the necessary directions herein as to them may respectively appertain.

STEPHEN COTTRELL.

Answer of the British Government to the Spanish Declaration War.

THE open aggressions of Spain, the violences committed against the persons and property of his majesty's subjects, and the unprovoked declaration of war on the part of that power, have at length compelled his majesty to take the neceffary measures for repelling force by force, and for vindicating the dignity of his crown, and the rights and interests of his people.

At the moment of adopting these measures, his majesty feels it due to himself to remove every doubt which can be thrown on the indisputable justice of his cause, and it will be easily proved, from the very reasons adduced by the court of Madrid in support of its declaration of war, that all the calamities which may enfue are folely to be attributed to the conduct of his enemies.

A simple reference to that declaration, and a bare enumeration of the vague and frivolous charges which it contains, would indeed be sufficient to satisfy all reasonable and impartial minds, that no part of the conduct of Great Britain towards Spain has afforded the fmallest ground of complaint, much less any motive sufficiently powerful for adding to the present calamities of Europe all the evils of a new and complicated war.

The only difficulty of a detailed. reply arises not from the strength and importance of the complaints alledged, but from their weakness and futility—from the confused and unintelligible shape in which they are brought forward, from the impossibility of referring them to any established principle or rule of justice, to any usual form or topic of complaint between independent governments, or to any of thole motives which can alone create the painful duty of an appeal to arms.

The acts of hostility attributed to his majesty in the manifesto of Spain, confift either of matters perfectly innocent and indifferent in their nature, or of imputed opinions and intentions of which no proof is adduced, nor any effect alledged; or, lastly, of complaints of the misconduct of unauthorised individuals; respecting all which his majesty has never failed to institute inquiry, where inquiry was necessary, and to cause justice to be done in the regular course of judicial proceedings. The very nature of fuch complaints affords a sufficient answer to the conclusion attempted to be drawn from them by Spain; and his majesty might have been well justified in declining all further discussion on points, on which it was manifested that no just motive of hostility could be grounded.

Such, however, was not his conduct. Anxious to avert from both kingdoms the calamities of war, he has repeatedly and vainly proposed to adjust, by friendly discussion, all points of difference which could subfift between the governments of two nations whose real interest were the same, and who had an equal concern in oppoing the progress of a common enemy.

This discussion having always been studiously avoided by the court of Madrid, it now remains only for his majesty to vindicate in this public manner his own cause, and to prove the futility of those pretences by which that court now feeks to colour its aggression.

The first point brought forward to support an accusation of ill faith is the conduct of the king's admiral at Toulon: who is charged with having destroyed those ships and naval stores of the enemy which he could not carry away with him; and with having afterwards undertaken an expedition to Corfica, without the knowledge or participation of the Spanish admiral. To an accufation of fuch a nature, alledged as a ground for war between two great nations, it can hardly be expected that a ferious answer should be given. is perhaps the first time that it has been imputed as a crime to one of the commanding officers of two powers acting in alliance, and making a common cause in war, that he did more than his proportion of mischief to the common enemy. And if it be really true that fuch a sentiment was entertained at Madrid, certainly no other justification can be necessary for not inviting the officers of that court to join in subsequent expeditions against the same enemy: at all events, it cannot be pretended that a cooperation between two allies (however cordial and fincere) in any one particular enterprize; could afterwards' restrain either of them from undertaking separately any other, to which his own force appeared in itself to be adequate.

The second instance of ill-faith attributed to his majefly, is the conclusion of a treaty of amity and commerce with the United States of America; a power with whom both Great Britain and Spain were at peace; with whom the king, as well as his catholic majesty, was perfectly free to contract any fuch engagements; and with whom the court of Madrid has actually concluded a fimilar treaty, with this difference only, that the stipulations of the British treaty can give no ground of offence or injury to any other power, while the Spanish treaty contains an article (that respecting the navigation of the Mississippi) which if it could have any force or effect at all, would be, on the part of Spain, a direct breach of treaty with Great Bitain, and a gross violation of the important and unquestionable rights of his majesty and his people.

The same ill-faith is said to have been manifested in the unwillingness shewn by the British government to adopt the plans proposed by Spain for haftening the conclusion of the war with France, (but what these plans were, is not stated) and also in omitting to comply with an application made by Spain for pecuniary succours, as necessary to enable her to act against the common enemy. The failure of fuch an application cannot certainly be matter of furprise to any one who confiders the fituation and conduct of Spain during the war. It can hardly be alledged, even as an excuse for the precipitate peace concluded by Spain, not only without the knowledge of her allies, but in contradiction to repeated and positive assurances; but it is difficult to conceive how fuch a refusal can be made the ground of hostility towards Great Britain, or with what confishency the inability of Spain to profecute the former contest without pecuniary aid from its ally, can have become a motive of engaging gratuitously in all the expences and difficulties of a new war against that very power.

With regard to the condemnation of the St. Jago, (a prize taken from the enemy by his majesty's naval forces) his majesty has only to reply to the injurious affertions on that subject in the Spanish manifesto, that the claims of all the parties in that cause were publicly heard and decided according to the known law of nations, and before the only competent tribunal; one, whose impartiality is above all suspicion.

The conduct of his majesty respecting the naval stores, which were claimed by Spain on board Dutch veilels, has been in like manner exempt from all blame, nor was any unnecessary delay interposed respecting those cargoes till the unequal conduct of Spain, and the strong and just suspicion of her hostile dispositions, made it impossible for his majesty to consent to supply her from the ports of his dominions with the means of acting against himself.

The next charge relates to the alledged misconduct of some merchant ships in landing their crews on the coasts of Chili and Peru, with a view of carrying on there an illicit commerce, and of reconnoitring the country. On this it is to be observed, that those views are not supported by any fact whatever; that if any act was in truth committed by individuals in those territories against the laws of the government established there, those laws might have been enforced upon the spot, and the court of London has always been open to receive and redress all complaints of that nature. But that what is affigued in the manifesto as a mere cover and pretext for fraud, namely, the exercise of the whale fishery by the English in those parts, is not, as there afferted, a right which the English " claim under the convention of Nootka." It is one, which was not then for the first time established, but solemnly recognized by the court of Madrid, as having always belonged to Great Britain, and the full and undifturbed exercise of which was guaranteed to his Majesty's subjects in terms to express as to admit of no doubt, and in a transaction fo recent, that ignorance of it cannot be pretended.

Such, it seems, were the offences of the british government, and fuch the jealousies and apprehenfion of Spain during the time when the courts of London and Madrid were united in the bands of alliance, and engaged in a common cause; and it is on motives as frivolous

144] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1795.

volous as these, that the court of Madrid began to project an offensive alliance with the king's encmies; a design which it now prosesses to have entertained from the moment when it separated itself from the common cause, but which was long after that period disguised under the most positive and explicit assurances of neutrality.

It is infinuated, that the good offices of his Catholic majesty for bringing about a general pacification, had been tendered Great Britain, and had been re-What degree of impartiality could have been expeded from fuch a mediation, the ditpositions which Spain now avows herself to have entertained at that period sufficiently shews; his majesty exercised his undoubted right of judging for himself and for his people, how far a negotiation commenced under fuch auspices was likely to contribute to the honour and interest of his dominions; and he now finds the propriety of his decision confirmed beyond a doubt, by the conduct and avowals of Spain.

It is next stated, that in the profecution of the war, in which Great Britain is engaged, views feem uniformly to have been directed to the annovance of the Spanish possessions in America. In support of this accusation are adduced an expedition directed against St. Domingo, the conquest of the Dutch colony of Demerary, and the supposed establishment of British commercial companies on the banks of the Missisppi, formed with a view of penetrating to the South Sea.

This latter point is one to which it is impossible to make a specific answer, because the British government has no knowledge of any fact to which it can refer. Within the Spanish territory, the Spanish government certainly possess both the right and the power to prevent individuals from trading. Within the American territory, his Majesty's subjects have by treaty a right to fettle and to trade; and they have also an express right freely to navigate the Missippi, by which the territories of Spain and of the United States are divided. from each other. Unless, therefore, it can be thewn that the Britith government has authorited any fettlement on the Spanish territory, this complaint can afford no pretence for holdility against his majesty.

With regard to the expedition against St. Domingo, and to the conquest of Demerary, it is impossible to refrain from remarking, that however highly the rights of neutral nations ought to be respected, and whatever delicacy his majesty might be disposed to feel towards those of a power so lately his ally, and not yet become his enemy —it is a new and hitherto unof claim of neutrality, which is to be circumfcribed by no bounds, either of time or place; which extends equally beyond the date, and beyond the limits of possession, and is to attach not to the territories of a neutral power itself, but to whatever may once have belonged to it, and to whatever may be fituated in its neighbourhood, although in the posfession of an actual enemy.

The subject, however, of St. Domingo, deserves to be more particularly adverted to, because the attempt on the part of Spain to cede

cedea part of that island to France, is a breach of that folemn treaty under which alone the crown of Spain holds any part of its American poisessions. The conclusion fuch an article, without the knowledge of an ally fo deeply concerned as Great Britain in that ftipulation, both in right and interest, was therefore an act, such as would have justified any meafures to which the court of London could have recourse; yet so earnest was the king's defire to maintain peace with Spain, that he repeatedly endeavoured to fix, by an amicable discussion with that court, the period when the right of Spain to the territory so ceded was to cease, in order that any operation, which it might become expedient for his troops to undertake there, might be directed against the French And although no explanation could ever be obtained from the court of Madrid on this fubject, his commanders on the spot were restrained from acting, and did not act against the Spanish part of the island, till the cession actually took place, by which it became, as far as the act of Spain could make it, a part of the territories of France.

To the accusations which make up the greater part of the remainder of the manifesto, respecting the detention or capture of merchant ships, or the violation of territory therein mentioned, it is sufficient to reply, that in every case of such a nature which has been brought to the knowledge of the British government, the most effectual measures have been instantly taken for instituting inquiry into the particulars of the transaction, for collecting the Vol. XXXVIII.

proofs necessary to ascertain the fact on which the charge is founded, and for submitting the whole to that regular course of proceeding in which justice is to be rendered in these cases, according to the established practice throughout Europe, and to the express stipulations of the treaties between Great Britain and Spain.

Amidst the wide and complicated operations of a naval war, extended over every quarter of the globe, it is not improbable that fome disorders and irregularities may have taken place, which the utmost vigilance of the government could not immediately difcover or repress; and that in the exercife of the undoubted right of a power at war, to fearch out and feize the property of the enemy, the rights of neutral nations may, in some instances, have been unintentionally exposed to temporary molestation. The same observation was not less applicable to Spain in her war with France; and the short interval that has elapsed since her declaration against Great Britain has amply shewn that fimilar complaints will arise from her conduct in the present war.

The utmost that can be demanded in such cases of a power at war, is, that it should shew itself ready on all occasions to listen to the remonstrances and reclamations of those whom it may have aggrieved, and prompt and expeditious in redressing their injuries, and in restoring their property: and to the readiness of the British government to sulfil these duties, in every case where they have been called upon to do so, even Spain herself may safely be called to bear witness. Nor would it be easy to cite

L

146] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

cite a more striking proof of the friendly disposition of the king's government, and of the particular attention manifested towards the rights and interests of Spain, than arifes from an impartial examination of the detail of what has passed on this fubject. It will be found that the causes of complaints, whether well or ill-founded, which have been brought forward, are much fewer than ever have occurred within the fame period in former And the court of Spain, when called upon to specify particulars on this head, is obliged to have recourse to an allegation of the depredations of Corfican privateers.

There remains but one ground upon which the court of Spain pretends to account to the world for the rash and perfidious step which it has taken in declaring war against England, and to excufe to Europe the calamities which cannot fail to refult from fuch a meafure; the supposed decree of arrest afferted to have issued against the Spanish ambassador at The fact, to the court of London. which this relates, must have been grossly millaken before it could be made to appear, even in the eyes of Spain, a fit motive for the flightest representation or plaint, much more a justifiable cause of war between the two kingdoms.

By the stress which is laid upon this transaction, who is there that would not be led to imagine that the law suit commenced against the Spanish ambassador, was attended with some peculiar circumstances of personal indignity? That the result was intentional, and originated with the British government? or that, on being apprised of the offence, the court of Loudon had shewn some unwillingues or delay in proceeding to the prosecution of the parties concerned in it?

Who but would be aftonished to learn that the process itself was no more than a fimple citation to answer at law for a debt demanded? that the fuing this process was the missaken act of an individual, who was immediately disavowed by the government, and ordered to be profecuted for his conduct, and who made, (but made in vain) repeated and submissive applications to the Spanish ambassador for forgiveness and interference on his behalf? that cases of the same nature have frequently arisen in England from the ignorance of individuals, and from the ready appeal to the laws which the happy constitution of the country admits and authorites, without the previous intervention or knowledge of any branch of the executive government; and that in all fimilar cases, and particularly in one which had occured only a few weeks before, precisely the same measures had been pursued by the government to vindicate the privileges of foreign ministers, and have uniformly, and without exemption, been accepted as completely adequate to that object, and fatisfactory to the dignity and honour of the fovereign whom the case concerned?

Such then are the frivolous motives, and pretended wrongs, which Spain has chosen to assign as the justification of her declaration of war against Great Britain. Such are the topics of complaint upon which his majesty has repeatedly offered the most unequivocal explanation; upon which he has long and earnestly endeavoured to persuade the court of Madrid to enter into a sull and amicable discussion, for the purpose of averting from his own subjects, from those of his Catholic majesty, and from Europe, the extremities of war.

∆:

When upon grounds of such a nature, and with the offer of negotiation repeatedly prefented to its choice, a power has wilfully wantonly chosen a in which its prosperity, its happiness, and its safety, are hazarded, and in which it will have as much to fear from the fuccess of its allies, as from that of its enemies it furely is not too much to prefume, that even in its own eyes, that power is not justified for the proceeding which it adopted, and that there must be some unassigned motive of irrefistible necessity, which induces it to pursue measures alike inconfistent with its interest and with its honour.

It will be plain to all posterity it is now notorious to Europe, that neither to the genuine wishes, nor even to the militaken policy of Spain, her present conduct is to be attributed; that not from enmity towards Great Britain, not from any resentment of past or apprehension of future injuries, but from a blind subserviency to the views of his majesty's enemies, from the dominion usurped over her councils and actions by her new allies, she has been compelled to act in a quarrel, and for interests, not her own: to take up arms against one of those powers in whose cause she had professed to feel the strongest interest; and even to menace with hostility another, against whom no cause of complaint is pretended, except its honourable and faithful adherence to its engagements.

Under these circumstances, his majesty forbears to enumerate the several grounds of just complaint which he has had occasion, on his part, to prefer to the court of Madrid, since the conclusion of the peace between France and Spain; the many and gross instances of unjust partiality towards his enemies, of undue protection afforded to their ships, and of injuries committed, and allowed to be committed, on those of his majesty and his subjects.

Confident of having acquitted himself to the world of any share in originating the present war, he finds in the manifest and unprovoked aggression of the enemy, a sufficient cause for calling forth the resources of his kingdoms, and the spirit of his subjects; and he commits to the Divine Providence the issue of a contest, which it was to the last moment his earnest endeavour to avoid, and which he now ardently desires to bring to a speedy and honourable termination.

Official Correspondence, published by the British Government, relating to the Negotiation for Peace between the French Republic and Great Britain.

No. 1.

Sir,

IN obedience to the orders of the king my master, I have the honour to transmit to you the enclosed note, and to request of you that you will forward it to his Danish majesty's minister at Paris, to be by him communicated to the executive directory.

148] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

The sentiments of your court are too well known to the king to admit of his majesty's entertaining any doubt of the satisfaction with which his Danish majesty will see the intervention of his ministers employed on such an occasion, or of the earnestness with which you, fir, will concur in a measure which has for its object the re-establishment of peace.

I have the honour to be, with the most perfect consideration,

Sir,

Your most humble, And most obedient servant, GRENVILLE.

To the count Wedel Jarlsberg, Sc. Sc. Sa.

No. 2.

Note.—HIS Britannic majesty, animated with the same desire, which he has already manifested, to terminate, by just, honourable, and permanent conditions of peace, a war which has extended itself throughout all parts of the world, is willing to omit nothing on his part which may contribute to this object.

It is with this view that he has thought it proper to avail himself of the consideratial intervention of the ministers of a neutral power, to demand of the executive directory passports for a person of confidence whom his majesty would fend to Paris with a commission to discuss, with the government there, all the means the most proper to produce so desirable an end.

And his majefty is perfuaded that he shall receive, without delay, through the same channel, a satisfactory answer to this demand, which cannot fail to place in a still clearer light the just and pacific dispositions which he entertains is common with his allies.

GRENVILLE.

Westminster, Sept. 6, 1796. No. 3.

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour to inform your excellency, that the note addreffed to the executive directory of France, in date of the 6th of the prefent month, was transmitted by M. Koenemann, charge d'affaires of his Danish majesty, to M. Delacroix, minister for foreign affairs at Paris, who promifed that an answer should be returned to it after it had been submitted to the confideration of the govern-Three days having clapfed in expectation of this answer, Mr. Koenemann went a fecond time to the minister abovementioned, who gave him to understand, that the executive directory had not permitted him to return an answer in writting, but that he was directed to express himself verbally to this effect:

"That the executive directory of the French republic would not, for the future, receive or answer any overtures or confidential papers transmitted through any intermediate channel from the enemies of the republic; but that if they would send persons furnished with full powers and official papers, these might, upon the frontiers, demand the passports necessary for proceeding to Patis."

I have the honour to be, with the most perfect respect,

My lord

Your excellency's most humble,
And most obedient servant.
(Signed) COMTE DE WEDEL
'ARLSBERG.

London, Sept. 3, 1796.

No. 4

No. 4.

Sir, Paris, Sept. 6, 1796.

I WAS indisposed at my country house when your excellency's courier brought me the letters which your excellency did me the honour to write to me on the 7th instant, together with the note of lord Grenville inclosed therein. off for Paris on the following day, where, after demanding an audience of citizen Delacroix, minister for foreign affairs, I prefented the note abovementioned, accompanied with another in my own name, in which I explained the motives that had induced me to undertake a meafure for which I had no authority from my court. He promited to fubmit the two notes to the inspection of the government, and to return me an answer immediately. Having waited for three days without receiving an answer, I went a fecond time to wait upon the minister, who, in a very dry tone, informed me, that the executive directory had not permitted him to return an answer in writing, but that he was directed to express himself verbally to this effect :

of the French republic would not, for the future, receive or answer any confidential overtures or papers transmitted through any intermediate channel from the enemies of the republic; but that if they would send persons surnished with full powers and official papers, these might, upon the frontiers, demand the passports necessary for proceeding to l'aris."

Such, fir, is the result of a meafure which I have taken at your request. I with, for the sake of humanity, that we may meet with better success at some suture period, but I fear that this period is still at a great distance.

I have the honour to be, with respectful attachment,
Sir,

Your excellency's most humble, And most obedient servant, KOENEMANN.

To his excellency the count Wedel Jarlsberg, とc. どc. どc.

No. 5.

IN demanding of the executive directory of the French republic, through the intervention of the ministers of a neutral power, a passport for a considential person to be sent to Paris, the court of London accompanied this demand with the express declaration that this person should be commissioned to discuss with the government all the means the most proper for conducing to the re-establishment of peace.

The king, persevering in the same sentiments, which he has already so unequivocally declared, will not leave to his enemies the smallest pretext for eluding a discussion, the result of which will necessarily serve either to produce the happiness of so many nations, or at least to render evident the views and dispositions of those who oppose themselves to it.

It is therefore in pursuance of these sentiments, that the undersigned is charged to declare, that as soon as the executive directory shall think proper to transmit to the undersigned the necessary passports (of which he, by this note, renews the demand already made) his Britannic Majesty will send to

L3 Paris

150] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

Paris a person furnished with full powers, and official instructions, to negotiate with the executive directory on the means of terminating the present war, by a pacification just, honourable, and solid, calculated to restore repose to Europe, and to ensure, for the time to come, the general tranquillity.

(Signed) GRENVILLE.

Westminster, Scott. 27, 1796.

To the minister for foreign officers, at Paris.

No. 6.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to lord Grenville a copy of the decree of the executive directory of the French republic, in answer to his note of the 27th September 1796, (O. S.)

He will there see a proof of the earnest desire of the French government to profit of the overture that is made to them, in the hope that it may lead to peace with the government of England.

I have the honour to fend him, at the same time, the passports required for the minister plenipetentiary, whom his Britannic majesty proposes to name to treat; and I request lord Grenville to accept the assurance of my personal wishes for the success of this negociation, as well as that of my most persect consideration.

Paris, 11 Vendemiaire, 5th year of the French republic.

No 7.

Extract from the Register of the Decrees of the Executive Directory.

The 9th Vendemiaire, 5th year of the French Republic, one and indivisible.

executive di rectory, upon THE confideration of the note addressed to the minister for foreign affairs by lord Grenville, dated September 27, 1796, withing to give a proof of the desire which it entertains to make peace with England, decrees as follows:

The minister for foreign affairs is charged to deliver the necessary passports to the envoy of England, who shall be furnished with full powers, not only for preparing and negotiating the peace between the French republic and that power, but for concluding it definitively between them.

True copy.

(Signed) L.M. REVELLIERE
LEPEAUX, president.

By the executive directory For the fecretary general.

(Signed) LE TOURNEUR.

Certified true copy.

The minister for foreign affairs, CH. DELACROIX.

By the minister.

J. Guiraudet, sec. gen,

No. 7.

LORD Malmesbury, who is appointed by the king to treat with the French government for a just and equitable peace, calculated to restore peace to Europe, and to ensure the public tranquillity for the time to come, will have the honour of delivering this letter from me to M. Delacroix.

The distinguished rank and merit of the minister of whom his majesty has made choice on this occasion, makes it unnecessary for me to say any thing in his recommendation; at the same time that it surnishes a fresh proof of the desire of his majesty to contribute to the success of this negotiation: for which object I entertain the most sanguine wishes.

Monsieur

Monsieur Delacroix will have the goodness to accept from me the assurance of my most perfect consideration.

(Signed) GRENVILLE.

Westminster, Oct. 13, 1796.

To the minister for foreign affairs, at Paris.

No. 8.

LORD Malmesbury, named by his Britannic majesty as his plenipotentiary to the French republic, has the honour to announce, by his secretary, to the minister for soreign affairs, his arrival at Paris; and to request of him, at the same time, to be so good as to appoint the hour at which he may wait upon him, for the purpose of communicating to him the object of his mission.

Paris, October 22, 1796.
To the minister for foreign affairs.

No. 9.

THE minister for foreign affairs learns with satisfaction the arrival of lord Malmetbury, plenipotentiary of his Britannic majesty. He will have the honour to receive him to-morrow at eleven o'clock in the morning, or at any later hour that may suit him, till two o'clock. He hopes that lord Malmesbury will forgive him for thus limiting the time, on account of the nature and the multiplicity of his occupations.

Ift Brumaire, An. 5. (October 22, 1796)

To lord Malmesbury, minister plenipotentiary from his Britannic majesty to the French republic, at Paris.

No. 10. LORD Malmeibury has the honour to thank the minister for foreign affairs for the obliging anfwer which he has just received from him.

He accepts with pleasure the first moment proposed, and will wait upon him to-morrow morning, at eleven o'clock precisely.

Paris, Oct. 22. To the minister for foreign affairs.

No. 11.

THE minister for foreign affairs has the honour to apprize lord Malmosbury, commissioner plenipotentiary of his Britannic majesty, that he has received from the executive directory the necessary powers for negotiating and concluding peace between the republic and his majesty.

To-morrow, if lord Malmesbury pleases, the respective powers shall be exchanged. The minister for foreign affairs will then be ready to receive the propositions, which lord Malmesbury is commissioned to make to the republic on the part of his Britannic majesty.

The minister for foreign affairs requests lord Malmesbury to accept the assurances of his high consideration.

(Signed) CH. DELACKOIX.

2 Brumaire, An. 5.

(OA. 22, 1796.)

No 12.

LORD Malmetbury has the honour to present his acknowledgements to the minister for foreign affairs for the communication which he has just made to him, and he will have the honour to wait upon him to-morrow, at the hour which he shall have the goodness to appoint, to receive the copy of the full powers with which he is furlished

152] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1795.

nished on the part of the executive directory; and as soon as they shall have been exchanged, he will be ready to commence the negotiation with which he is charged.

He requests the minister for foreign affairs to accept the assurances of his high consideration.

(Signed) MALMESBURY. Paris, October 23d, 1796.

No. 13.

Extract from the Register of the Decrees of the Executive Directory.

2 Brumaire, (22 Nov.)
5th year of the French republic, one and indiwifible.

THE executive directory, after having heard the report of the minister for foreign asairs.

The citizen Charles Delacroix, minister for foreign affairs, is charged to negotiate with lord Malmefbury, committioner plenipotentiary of his Britannic majetty, furnithed with full powers to prepare and negotiate peace between the French republic and that power, and to conclude it definitively between them. The directory gives to the faid minister all powers necessary for concluding and figning the treaty of peace to take place between the republic and his Britannic majesty. He thall conform himself to the instructions which shall be given He shall render a regular account, from time to time, of the progress and of the issue of the negotiation.

The present decree shall not be printed at this time.

A true copy.

(Signed) L. R. REVELLIERE LEPEAUX.

By the executive directory.

The feeretary general.

(Signed) LA GARDE.

Copy

The minister for foreign affairs, (Signed) CH. DELACROIS.

By the minister.

(L. S.) J. Guiraudet, fec. gen.

No. 14.

Memorial.—HIS Britannic majelty defiring, as he has already declared, to contribute, as far as depends on him, to the re-establishment of public tranquillity, and to enfure, by the means of just, honourable, and folid conditions of peace, the future repose of Europe; his majetty is of opinion, that the best means of attaining, with all postible expedition, that falutary end, will be to agree, at the beginning of the negotiation, on the general principle which shall serve as a basis for the definitive arrangements.

The first object of negotiations for peace generally relates to the restitutions and cessions which the respective parties have mutually to demand, in consequence of the events of war.

Great Britain, from the uninterrupted fuccess of her naval war, finds herself in a situation to have no restitution to demand of France, from which, on the contrary, she has taken establishments and colonies of the highest importance, and of a value almost incalculable.

But, on the other hand, France has made, on the continent of Europe, conquetts to which his majesty can be the less indifferent, as the most important interests of his people, and the most facred engagements

STATE PAPERS.

gagements of his crown are essen-ually implicated therein.

The magnanimity of the king, his inviolable good faith and his defire to reftore repose to so many nations, induce him to consider this situation of affairs as affording the means of procuring for all the belligerent powers just and equitable terms of peace, and such as are calculated to ensure for the time to come the general tranquillity.

It is on this footing, then, that he purposes to negotiate, by offering to make compensation to France, by proportionable restitutions, for those arrangements to which she will be called upon to consent, in order to satisfy the just demands of the king's allies, and to preserve the political balance of Europe

Having made this first overture, his majesty will, in the sequel, explain himself more particularly on the application of this principle to the different objects which may be discussed between the respective parties.

It is this application which will constitute the subject of those discussions, into which his majesty has authorized his minister to enter, as soon as the principle to be adopted as the general basis of the negotiation is known.

But his majesty cannot omit to declare, that if this generous and equitable offer should not be accepted, or if, unfortunately, the discussions which may ensue, should fail to produce the desired effect, neither this general proposition, nor those more detailed which may result from it, can be regarded, in any case, as points agreed upon or admitted by his majetty.

(Signed) MALMESBURY.
Millister plenipotentiary from his Britannic majesty.

Paris, Od. 24, 1795.

No. 15.

Extract from the register of the deliberations of the executive directory.

> Paris, 5 Brumaire, 5th year of the republic, one and indivisible.

THE executive directory orders the minister for foreign affairs to make the following answer to lord Malmesbury:

The executive directory sees with pain, that at the moment when it had reason to hope for the speedy return of peace between the French republic and his Britannic majesty, the proposal of lord Malmesbury offers nothing but dilatory or very distant means of bringing the negotiation to a conclusion.

The directory observe, that if lord Malmeibury would have agreed to treat teparately, as he was formally authorized by the tenor of his credentials, the negotiations might have been confiderably abridged; that the necessity of balancing with the interests of the two powers those of the allies of Great Britain, multiplies the combinations, increases the difficulties, tends to the formation of a congress, the forms of which it is known are always tardy, and requires the accellion of powers which hitherto have displayed no defire of accommodation, and have not given to lord Malmetbury himfelf, according to his own declaration,

tion, any power to stipulate for them.

Thus, without prejudging the intentions of lord Malmesbury; without drawing any conclusion from the circumstance of his declaration not appearing to accord with his credentials; without suppofing that he has received any fecret instructions which would destroy the effect of his oftenfible powers; without pretending, in thort, to affert, that the British government have had a double object in view — to prevent, by general propositions, the partial propofitions of other powers, and to obtain from the people of England the means of continuing the war, by throwing upon the republic the odium of delay occasioned by themselves; the executive directory cannot but perceive, that the proposition of lord Malmesbury is nothing more than a renewal, under more amicable forms, of the propositions made last year by Mr. Wickham, and that it presents but a distant hope of peace.

The executive directory farther observe, with regard to the principle of retrocessions advanced by lord Malmeibury, that fuch a principle, presented in a vague and isolated manner, cannot serve as the basis of negotiation; that the first points of consideration are, the common necessity of a just and solid peace, the political equilibrium which absolute retrocessions might destroy, and then the means which the belligerent powers may possess -the one to retain conqueits made at a time when it was supported by a great-number of allies, now detached from the coalition; and the other, to recover them at a time when those who were at first its enemies, have almost all, become either its allies, or at least neuter.

Nevertheless, the executive directory, animated with an ardent defire of putting astop to the scourge of war, and to prove that they will not reject any means of reconciliation, declare, that as foon as lord Malmesbury shall exhibit to the minister for foreign affairs sufficient powers, from the allies of Great Britain, for stipulating for their respective interests, accompanied by a promise on their part to subscribe to whatever shall be concluded in their names, the executive directory will haften to give an answer to the specific propositions which shall be submitted to them, and that the difficulties shall be removed, as far as may be confistent with the safety and dignity of the French republic.

A true copy.

(Signed) L. M. REVELLIERE LEPEAUX, prefident.

By the executive directory.

(Signed) LAGARDE, sec. gen.

A true copy.

The minister for foreign affairs,

CH. DELACROIX.

By the minister.

The secretary general,

J. Guiraudet.

No. 16.

Note.—The underfigured has not failed to transmit to his court the answer of the executive directory to the proposals which he wascharged to make, as an opening to a pacific negotiation.

With regard to the offenfive and injurious infinuations which are contained in that paper, and which are only calculated to throw new obstacles in the way of the accommodation which the French government professes to desire, the king has deemed it far beneath his dignity-to permit an answer to be made to them on his part in any manner what loever.

The progress and the result of the negotiation will sufficiently prove the principles by which it will have been directed on each fide; and it is neither by revolting wholly destitute of reproaches foundation, nor by reciprocal invective, that a fincere with to accomplish the great work of pacification can be evinced.

The underfigued passes, therefore, to the first object of discussion brought forward in the answer of the executive directory;—that of a separate negotiation, to which it has been supposed, without the fmallest foundation, that the underfigned was authorized to accede.

His full powers, made out in the usual form, give him all necessary authority to negotiate and to conclude the peace; but these powers prescribe to him neither the form, the nature, nor the conditions of the future treaty.

Upon these points, he is bound to conform himself, according to the long established and received custom of Europe, to the instructions which he shall receive from his court; and accordingly he did not fail to acquaint the minister for foreign affairs, at their first conterence, that the king his mafter had expressly enjoyned him to liften to no proposal tending to separate the interests of his majesty from those of his allies.

There can be no question then but of a negotiation which shall combine the interests and pretensions of all the powers who make a common cause with the king in the present war.

In the course of such a negotiation, the intervention, or, at least. the participation of these powers will doubtless become absolutely necessary; and his majesty hopes to and at all times the same dispositions to treat, upon a just and equitable bafis, of which his majetly, the emperor and king, gave to the French government to strik. ing a proof at the very moment of the opening of the present campaign.

But it appears, that the waiting for a formal and definitive authority on the part of the allies of the king, before Great Britain and France begin to discuss, even provisionally, the principles of the negotiation, would be to create a very uleless delay.

A conduct wholly different has been observed by those two powers on almost all similar occasions; and his majesty thinks, that the best proof which they can give, at the present moment, to all Europe, of their mutual defire to put a stop, as foon as possible, to the calamities of war, would be to fettle, without delay, the basis of a combined negotiation, inviting, at the fame time, their allies to concur in it, in the manner the most proper for accelerating the general pacification.

It is with this view that the underfigned was charged to propose at first, and at the very commencement of the negotiation, a principle, which the generosity and good faith of his majesty could alone dictate to him—that of making compensation to France, by proportionable restitutions, for the arrangements to which she will be required to consent, in order to satisfy the just pretensions of the king's allies, tion, any power to stipulate for them. Thus, without prejudging the intentions of lord Malmesbury; without drawing any conclusion from the circumstance of his declaration not appearing to accord with his credentials; without fuppofing that he has received any fecret instructions which would destroy the effect of his oftenfible powers; without pretending, in fhort, to affert, that the British government have had a double object in view - to prevent, by general propositions, the partial propofitions of other powers, and to obtain from the people of England the means of continuing the war, by throwing upon the republic the odium of delay occasioned by themfelves; the executive directory cannot but perceive, that the proposition of lord Malmesbury is nothing more than a renewal, under more amicable forms, of the propositions made last year by Mr. Wickham, and that it presents but a distant hope of peace.

The executive directory farther observe, with regard to the principle of retrocessions advanced by lord Malmetbury, that fuch a principle, presented in a vague and isolated manner, cannot serve as the basis of negotiation; that the first points of consideration are, the common necessity of a just and solid peace, the political equilibrium which absolute retrocessions might destroy, and then the means which the belligerent powers may possess —the one to retain conquests made at a time when it was supported by a great number of allies, now detached from the coalition; and the other, to recover them at a time when those who were at first its enemies, have almost all, become either its allies, or at least neuter.

Nevertheless, the executive directory, animated with an ardent defire of putting aftop to the scourge of war, and to prove that they will not reject any means of reconciliation, declare, that as foon as lord Malmesbury shall exhibit to the minister for foreign affairs sufficient powers, from the allies of Great Britain, for stipulating for their respective interests, accompanied by a promise on their part to subscribe to whatever shall be concluded in their names, the executive directory will haften to give an answer to the specific propositions which shall be submitted to them, and that the difficulties shall be removed, as far as may be confistent with the fafety and dignity of the French. republic.

A true copy.

L. M. REVELLIERE (Signed) LEPEAUX, prefident.

By the executive directory.

(Signed) LAGARDE, sec. gen. A true copy.

The minister for foreign affairs,

CH. DELACROIX.

By the minister.

The secretary general,

J. Guiraudet.

No. 16.

Note.—The underfigued has not failed to transmit to his court the answer of the executive directory to the proposals which he wascharged to make, as an opening to a pacific negotiation.

With regard to the offenfive and injurious infinuations which are contained in that paper, and which are only calculated to throw new obstacles in the way of the accommodation which the French government professes to desire, the king has deemed it far beneath his dignity dignity to permit an answer to be made to them on his part in any manner whatsoever.

The progress and the result of the negotiation will sufficiently prove the principles by which it will have been directed on each side; and it is neither by revolting reproaches wholly destitute of soundation, nor by reciprocal invective, that a sincere wish to accomplish the great work of pacisication can be evinced.

The underfigned passes, therefore, to the first object of discussion brought forward in the answer of the executive directory;—that of a separate negotiation, to which it has been supposed, without the smallest foundation, that the undersigned was authorized to accede.

His full powers, made out in the usual form, give him all necessary authority to negotiate and to conclude the peace; but these powers prescribe to him neither the form, the nature, nor the conditions of the future treaty.

Upon these points, he is bound to conform himself, according to the long established and received custom of Europe, to the instructions which he shall receive from his court; and accordingly he did not fail to acquaint the minister for foreign affairs, at their first conference, that the king his master had expressly enjoyned him to listen to no proposal tending to separate the interests of his majesty from those of his allies.

There can be no question then but of a negotiation which shall combine the interests and pretensions of all the powers who make a common cause with the king in the present war. In the course of such a negotiation, the intervention, or, at least, the participation of these powers will doubtless become absolutely necessary; and his majesty hopes to find at all times the same dispositions to treat, upon a just and equitable basis, of which his majesty, the emperor and king, gave to the French government so striking a proof at the very moment of the opening of the present campaign.

But it appears, that the waiting for a formal and definitive authority on the part of the allies of the king, before Great Britain and France begin to discuss, even provisionally, the principles of the negotiation, would be to create a very useless delay.

A conduct wholly different has been observed by those two powers on almost all similar occasions; and his majesty thinks, that the best proof which they can give, at the present moment, to all Europe, of their mutual desire to put a stop, as soon as possible, to the calamities of war, would be to settle, without delay, the basis of a combined negotiation, inviting, at the same time, their allies to concur in it, in the manner the most proper for accelerating the general pacification.

It is with this view that the underfigned was charged to propose at first, and at the very commencement of the negotiation, a principle, which the generosity and good saith of his majesty could alone dictate to him—that of making compensation to France, by proportionable restitutions, for the arrangements to which she will be required to consent, in order to satisfy the just pretensions of the king's allies,

and

and to preserve the political balance

of Europe.

The executive directory has not explained itself in a precise manner, either as to the acceptance of this principle, or as to the changes or modifications which it may defire to be made in it; nor has it, in thort, proposed any other principle whatever to answer the same end.

The underfigued, then, has orders to recur to this point, and to demand, on that head, a frank and precise explanation, in order to abridge the delays which must neceffarily refult from the difficulty of form which has been started by the executive directory.

He is authorized to add to this demand the express declaration, that his majesty in communicating to his august allies every successive step which he may take, relative to the object of the present negotiation, and in fulfilling, towards these sovereigns, in the most efficacious manner, all the duties of a good and faithful ally, will omit nothing on his part, as well to difpose them to concur in this negotiation, by the means the most proper to facilitate its progress, and infure its fuccess, as to induce them always to perfift in fentiments conformable to the wishes which he entertains for the return of a general peace, upon just, honourable, and permanent conditions.

(Signed) MALMESBURY.

Paris, November 12, 1796.

No. 17.

THE undertigned is charged, by the executive directory, to invite you to point out, without the smalleft delay, and expressly, the objects of reciprocal compensation which you propote.

He is, moreover, charged to demand of you, what are the dispofitions to treat, on a just and equitable basis, of which his majesty, the emperor and king, gave to the French government fo striking a proof at the very commencement of the campaign. The executive directory is unacquainted with it.— It was the emperor and king who broke the armistice.

(Signed) CH. DELACROIX. Paris, 22 Brumaire, (Nov. 12,) 5th year of the Erench republic.

No. 18.

THE undersigned does not hefitate a moment to answer the two questions which you have been instructed by the executive directory to put to him.

The memorial presented this morning by the underfigued propofes, in express terms, on the part of his majesty the king of Great Britain, to compensate France, by proportionable restitutions, for the arrangements to which she will be called upon to confent, in order to fatisfy the just pretensions of the king's allies, and to preserve the political balance of Europe.

Before the formal acceptation of this principle, or the proposal, on the part of the executive directory, of some other principles which might equally ferve as the bafis of a negotiation for a general peace, the underlighted cannot be authorized to defignate the objects of reciprocal compensation.

As to the proof of the pacific difposition given to the French government by his majesty, the emperor and king at the opening of the campaign, the undersigned contents himself with a reference to the following words contained in the note of baron Degelman, on the 4th of June last.

The

STATE

The operations of the war will in no wise prevent his Imperial majesty from being ever ready to concur, agreeably to any form of negotiation which shall be adopted, in concert with the belligerent powers, in the discussion of proper means for putting a stop to the farther effusion of human blood.

This note was presented after the armiftice was broken.

MALMESBURY.

Paris, November 12, 1796. No. 19.

THE minister plenipotentiary of his Britannic majesty requests the minister for foreign affairs to inform him, whether he is to confider the official note, which he received from him yesterday evening, as the answer to that which lord Malmesbury delivered yesterday morning to the minister for foreign affairs by order of his court. He applies for this information, that the departure of his courier may not be unnecessarily dalayed.

MALMESBURY.

Paris, November 13, 1796. No. 20.

THE underfigued, minister for foreign affairs, declares to lord Malmesbury, minister plenipotentiary from his Britannic majesty, that he is to confider the official note fent to him yesterday as the answer to that which lord Malmesbury had addressed to him on the morning of the same day.

CHARLES DELACROIX.

23 Brumaire, 5th year. November 13, 1796. No. 21.

LORD Malmeibury has just received the answer of the minister for foreign affairs, in which he declares that the official note which he sent to him yesterday is to be confidered as the answer to that which lord Malmesbury addressed to him on the morning of the same day.

Lord Malmesbury will transmit it, this day, to his court.

MALMESBURY.

Paris, November 13, 1796. No. 22.

THE undersigned, in reply to your second note of yesterday, is ordered, by the executive directory, to declare to you, that he has nothing to add to the answer which has been addressed to you. also instructed to ask you, whether, on each official communication which shall take place between you and him, it will be necessary for you to fend a courier to receive special instructions?

CHARLES DELACROIX. . Paris, 23 Brumaire, (Nov. 13,) 5th year. No. 23.

THE underfigued will not fail to transmit to his court the note. which he has just received from the minister of foreign affairs. declares likewise, that he shall dispatch couriers to his court as often the official communications made to him may require special instructions.

(Signed) MALMESBURY. Paris, Nov. 13, 1796. No. 24.

Note.—The court of London, having been informed of what has passed in consequence of the last memorial, delivered, by its order, to the minister for foreign affairs, does not think it necessary to add any thing to the answer made by the undersigned to the two questions which the directory thought proper to address to him.

That court waits therefore, and with with the greatest anxiety, for an explanation of the sentiments of the directory, with regard to the principle it has proposed, as the basis of the negotiation, and the adoption of which appeared to be the best means of accelerating the progress of a discussion so important to the happiness of so many nations.

The undersigned has, in consequence, received orders to renew the demand of a frank and precise answer on this point, in order that this court may know, with certainty, whether the directory accepts that proposal; or desires to make any change or modifications whatever in it; or lastly, whether it would wish to propose any other principle that may promote the same end.

MALMESBURY.

Paris, November 26, 1796.

No. 25.

IN answer to the note delivered yesterday, November 26, by lord Malmetbury, the undersigned minister for foreign assairs is instructed by the directory to observe, that the answers made on the 5th and 22d of last Brumaire contained an acknowledgement of the principle of compensation, and that, in order to remove every pretext for farther discussion on that point, the undersigned, in the name of the executive directory, now makes a formal and positive declaration of such acknowledgment.

In consequence, lord Malmesbury is again invited to give a speedy and categorical answer to the proposal made to him on the 22d of last Brumaire, and which was conceived in these terms: the undersigned is instructed by the execunate, without the least delay, and expressly, the objects of reciprocal compensation which you have to propose.

CH. DELACROIX.

Paris, November 27.

No. 25.

THE undersigned minister plenipotentiary of his Britannic majetty, in answer to the note dated this morning, which was sent to him by the minister for foreign affairs, hastens to assure him, that he will not delay a moment in communicating it to his court, from which he must necessarily wait for further orders, before he can explain himself upon the important; points which it contains.

(Signed) MALMESBURY. 'Paris, 27 November, 1796.

No. 27.

Note.—The underlighted is charged to transmit to the minister for foreign affairs the enclosed memorial, containing the proposals of his court, with respect to the application of the general principle already established as the basis of the negotiation for peace.

He will, with the utmost readiness, enter with that minister into every explanation which the state and progress of the negotiation will allow, and he will not fail to enter into the discussion of these propositions, or of any counter-project which may be transmitted to him on the part of the executive directory, with that frankness and that spirit of conciliation which correspond with the just and pacific intentions of his court.

(Signed) MALMESBURT.
Paris, December 17, 1796.

No. 28!

No. 28.

Corfidential memorial, on the principal objects of restitution, compensation, and reciprocal arrangement.

THE principle, already established as the basis of negotiation, by the consent of the two governments, is founded on restitutions to be made by his Britannic majesty to France, in compensation for the arrangements to which that power may consent, in order to satisfy the just pretensions of the allies of the king, and to preserve the political calance of Europe.

In order to accomplish these objects, in the manner the most complete, and to offer a fresh proof of the sincerity of his wishes for the re-establishment of general tranquillity, his majesty would propose, that there should be given to this principle, on each side, all the latitude of which it may be susceptible.

- I. His majesty demands therefore.
- 1. The restitution to his majesty, the emperor and king, of all his dominions, on the sooting of the status ante bellum.
- 2. The re-establishment of peace between the Germanic empire and France, by a suitable arrangement conformable to the respective interests and the general safety of Europe. This arrangement to be negotiated with his Imperial majesty, as constitutional head of the empire, either by the intervention of the king, or immediately, as his Imperial majesty shall prefer.
- 3. The evacuation of Italy by the French troops, with an engagement not to interfere in the internal affairs of that country; which should be re-established, as far as possible, upon the footing of the status ante bellum.

In the course of the negotiation, a more detailed discussion may be entered into of the surther measures which may be proper to adopt respecting the objects of these three articles, in order to the providing more effectually for the suture security of the respective limits or possessions, and for the maintenance of general tranquility.

II. With regard to the other allies of his Britannic majesty, his majesty demands, that there be referved to her majesty the empress of all the Russias a sull and unlimited power of taking part in this negotiation whenever she may think fit, or of acceding to the definitive treaty, and thereby returning to a state of peace with France.

III. His majesty also demands, that her most faithful majesty may be comprehended in this negotiation, and may return to a state of peace with France, without any cession or burthensome condition on either side.

IV. On these conditions his majesty offers to France the entire and unreserved restitution of all the conquests which he has made on that power in the East and West Indies, proposing at the same time that a mutual understanding should be established as to the means of fecuring, for the future, the tranquility of the two nations, and of confolidating, as much as possible, the advantages of their respective possessions. His majesty offers, in like manner, the restitution of the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, and of the fishery of Newfoundland, on the footing of the flatus ante bellum.

But if, in addition to this, his majesty majesty were to wave the right given to him by the express stipulations of the treaty of Utrecht, of opposing the cession of the Spanith part of St. Domingo to France, his majefly would then demand, in return for this concession, a compensation, which might fecure, at leaft in fome degree, the mainrenance of the balance of the respective possessions in that part of the world.

V. In all the cases of cessions or reflitutions which may come in question in the course of this negotiation, there should be granted on each fide to all individuals the most unlimited right to withdraw with their families and their property, and to fell their land and other moveable possessions; and adequate arrangements should be also made, in the course of this negotiation, for the removal of all requestrations, and for the fatisfaction of the just claims, which individuals on either tide may have to make upon the respective governments.

(Signed) M'ALMESBURY. No. 29.

Confidential Memorial on the Peace with Spain and Holland.

THE allies of France not having hitherto expressed any desire or disposition to treat with the king, his majesty might have forborne to enter into any detail on their account; but in order to avoid any delays prejudicial to the great object which the king has in view, and to accelerate the work of a general peace, his majetty will not refuse to explain himself in the first instance on the points which concern those powers. If then the Catholic king should defire to be comprehended in this negotiation, or to be allowed to accede to the definitive treaty, this would meet with no obliacle on the part of his Nothing having hitherto, majeity. been conquered by either of the two fovereigns from the other, no other point could, at the present moment, come into question but that of the re-etiablithment of peace, fimply, and without any reflitution or compensation whatever, except such as might possibly result from the application of the principle declared at the end of the fourth article of the memorial already delivered to the minister for foreign affairs.

But if during the negotiation, any alteration thould take place in the state of things in this respect, it will then be proper to agree upon ! the restitutions and compensations to be made on each fide.

With regard to the republic of the United Provinces, his Britannic majetly and his allies find themfelves too nearly interested in the, political fituation of those provinces to be able to confent in her favour to the re-establishment of the fratus ante bellum as with respect to the territorial possessions, unless France could, on her part, reinstate them in all respects in the fame political fituation in which they stood before the war.

If at least it were possible to re-establish in those provinces, agreeably to what is believed to be the wish of a great majority of the inhabitants, their ancient constitution and form of government, his majesty might then be disposed to relax, in their favour, from a very confiderable part of the conditions on which the present state of things obliged him to infift.

But if, on the contrary, it is with the republic of Holland, in its' present state, that their Britannic and Imperial majestics will have to treat, they will feel themselves obliged to feek in territorial acquisitions those compensations and that fecurity which fuch a state of things will have rendered indifpenfable to them.

Restitutions of any kind, in favour of Holland, could in that case be admitted in to far only as they shall be compensated by arrangements calculated to contribute to the security of the Austrian Netherlands, The means of accomplithing this object will be found in the cessions which France has exacted in her treaty of peace with Holland, and the policition of which by that power would in any case be absolutely incompatible with the security of the Austrian Netherlands in the hands of his Imperial majetty.

It is on these principles that his Butannic majesty would be ready to treat for the re-establishment of peace with the republic of Holland in its present state.—The details of such a discussion must necessarily lead to the consideration of what would be due to the interefts and the rights of the house of Orange.

No. 30.

My Lord,

Paris, December 20, 1796.

MR. ELLIS returned here from London on Thursday last the 15th instant, at five P.M. and delivered to me the dispatches No. 11 and 12, with which he was charged by your lordship.

Although nothing can be clearer, more ably drawn up, or more fatisfactory than the instructions they contain, yet as it was of the last importance that I should be com-Vol. XXXVIII.

pletely master of the subject before faw the French minister, I delayed asking for a conference till late on Friday evening, with a view that it should not take place till

Saturday morning.

He appointed the hour of eleven A.M. on that day, and it was near one before we parted. Although what is faid by M. Delacroix before he has communicated with the directory cannot be confidered as officially binding, and probably may, in the event, be very different from what I shall hear when he ipeaks to me in their name, yet as it is impossible they should not nearly conjecture the nature of the overtures I should make, and of course be prepared in some degree for them, it is material that your lordship should be accurately acquainted with the first impressions they appear to make on M. Delacroix.

I prefaced what I had to communicate with faying, that I now came authorized to enter with him into deliberation upon one of the most important subjects that perhaps ever was brought into difcussion—that as it's magnitude forbade all finesse, excluded all prevarication, suspended all prejudices, and that as I had it in command to speak and act with freedom and truth, I expected that he, on his part, would confider these as the only means which could or ought to be employed if he wished to see a negotiation, in which the happiness of millions was involved, terminate successfully. That, for greater precision, and with a view. to be clearly understood in what I was about to propose, I would give him a confidential memorial, accompanied by an official note, both which, when he had perused them, would speak for themselves. memorial contained the conditions, on the accomplishment of which his majefty confidered the restoration of peace to depend. The note was expressive of his majesty's readiness to enter into any explanation required by the directory on the fubject, or to receive any contreproje', resting on the same basis, which the directory might be difpoled to give in. That, moreover, I did not hefitate declaring to him, in conformity to the principles which I had laid down, and from which I certainly never should depart at any period of the negotiation, that I was prepared to answer any questions, explain and elucidate any points, on which it was possible to foresee that doubts or misconceptions could arise on the consideration of these papers. having faid thus much, I had only to remark, that I believed, in no fimilar negotiation which had ever taken place, any minister was authorized, in the first instance, to go so fully into the discussion as I now was.—That I was fure neither the truth of this remark, nor the manifest conclusion to be drawn from it, would escape M. Delacroix's observation.

I then put the two papers into his hands. He began by reading the note, on which of course he could only express satisfaction. After perufing the confidential memorial with all the attention it deferved, he, after a thort paule, to the powers of Europe. He said, the act of their conflitution, according to the manner in which it was interpreted by the best publicists, (and this phrase is worthy remark) made it impossible for the republic to do what we required. The Austrian Netherlands were annexed to it; they could not be disposed of without flinging the nation into all the confusion which must follow a convocation of the primary assemblies; and he said, he was rather surprized that Great Britain should bring this forward as the governing condition of the treaty, fince he thought he had, in some of our late conversations, fully explained the nature of their constitution to I replied, that every thing I had heard from him on this point was perfectly in my recollection, as it probably was in his; that though I had liftened to him with that attention I always afforded to every thing he said, yet I had never made any fort of reply, and had neither admitted nor controverted this opinion: that although I believe I could easily disprove this opinion from the spirit of the French constitution itself, yet the discussion of that constitution was perfectly foreign to the object of my mission; fince, even allowing his two positions, viz. that the retrocession of the Austrian Netherlands was incompatible with their laws, and that we ought to have known that beforehand, yet that there existed a droit public in Europe paramount to any droit public they may think faid, that it appeared to him to be proper to establish within their own liable to infurmountable objections; dominions; and that if their conthat it seemed to him to require stitution was publicly known, the much more than it conceded, and, in . treaties exitting between his mathe event not to leave France in a jefty and the emperor were at least situation of proportional greatness equally public, and in these it was clearly clearly and distinctly announced, that the contracting parties reciprocally promife not to lay down their arms without the restitution of all the dominions, territories, &c. which may have belonged to either of them before the war. date of this stipulation was previous to their annexing the Austrian Netherlands to France; and the notoriety of this ought, at the very moment when they had passed that law, to have convinced them, that, if adhered to, it must prove an infurmountable obstacle to peace. applied his maxim to the West India islands, and to the settlements in the East Indies; and asked him, whether it was expected that we were to wave our right of possession, and be required still to consider them as integral parts of the French republic which must be restored, and on which no value was to be fet in the balance of compensation. I also stated the possible case of France having lost part of what she deemed her integral dominions, instead of adding to them, in the course of the war, and whether then under the apprehension of still greater losses, the government, as now composed, should consider itself as not vested with powers sufficient to save their country from the impending danger, by making peace on the conditions of facrificing a portion of their dominions to fave the remainder. Delacroix said, this was stating a case of necessity, and such a mode of reasoning did not attach to the present circumstances. I readily admitted the first part of this proposition, but contended, that if the power existed in a case of necessity, it equally existed all others, and particularly in the case before us, since he himself had repeatedly told me that peace was what this country and it's government wished for, and even wanted.

M. Delacroix, in reply, shifted. his ground, and, by a string of arguments founded on premises calculated for this purpose, attemped to prove, that from the relative fituation of the adjacent countries, the prefent government of France would be reprehensible in the extreme, and deferve impeachment, if they ever suffered the Netherlands to be separated from their dominions; that by the partition of Poland, Russia, Austria, and Prussia, had increased their power to a most formidable degree; that England, by its conquests, and by the activity and judgment with which it governed its colonies, had redoubled its strength.—Your Indian empire alone, faid M. Delacroix with vehemence, has enabled you to subsidize all the powers of Europe against us, and your monopoly of trade has put you in possession of a fund of inexhaustible His words were, " Votre empire dans l' Inde vous a fourni les moyens de salarier toutes les puissances contre nous, et vous avez accaparé le commerce de manière que toutes les richesses du monde se versent dans vos coffres."

From the necessity that France should keep the Netherlands and the left bank of the Rhine, for the purpose of preserving its relative situation in Europe, he passed to the advantages which he contended would result to the other powers by such an addition to the French

M 2 domi-

Belgium (to use his dominions. word) by belonging to France, would remove what had been the fource of all wars for two centuries past, and the Rhine, being the natural boundary of France, would ensure the tranquillity of Europe for two centuries to come. did not feel it necessary to combat this preposterous doctrine; I contented myself with reminding him of what he had faid to me in one of our last conferences, when he made a comparison of the weakness of France under its monarchs, and its firength and vigour under its republican form of government. " Nous ne sommes plus dans la décrépitude de la France monarchique, mais dans toute la force d'une Republique adolescente," was his expression; and I inferred from this, according to his own reasoning, that the force and power France had acquired by its change of government was much greater than it could derive from any acquisition of territory; and that it followed, if France, when under a regal form of government, was a very just and constant object of attention, not to fay of jealouly, to the other powers of Europe, France (admitting his axiom) was a much more reasonable object of jealousy and attention under its present constitution than it ever had yet been, and that no addition to its dominions could be feen by its neighbours but under impressions of alarm for their own future fafety and for the general tranquillity of Europe. M. Delacroix's answer to this was so remarkable that I must beg leave to insert it in his own words.—"Dans le tems revolutionaire tout ce que vous dites, my lord, etoit vrai-rien n'egaloit notre puissance; mais ce tems n'existe plus. Nous ne pouvons plus lever la nation en masse pour voler au secours de la patrie en danger. Nous ne pouvous plus engager nos concitoyens d'ouvrir leurs bourses pour les verser dans le tresor national, et de se priver même du necessaire pour le bien de la chose publique."—And he ended by faying, that the French republic, when at peace, necessarily must become the most quiet and pacific power in Europe. I only observed, that in this cafe the patlage of the republic from youth to decrepitude had been very fudden; but that still I never could admit that it could be a matter of indifference to its neighbours, much less of necessary tecurity to itself, to acquire such a very extensive addition to its frontiers as that he had hinted at.

This led M. Delacroix to talk of offering an equivalent to the Emperor for the Austrian Netherlands, and it was to be found, according to his plan, in the secularization of the three ecclesiastical electorates, and several bishopricks in Germany and in Italy.

He talked upon this subjects as one very familiar to him, and on which his thoughts had been frequently employed.

He spoke of making new electors, and named, probably with a view to render his scheme more palatable, the stadtholder and the dukes of Brunswick and Wurtemberg as persons proper to replace the three ecclesiastical electors which were to be reformed.

It would be making an ill use of your lordship's time to endeavour to repeat to you all he said on this subject; it went in substance (as he himself confessed) to the total subversion of the present constitution of the Germanic body;

and

and as it militated directly against the principle which both his 'majesty and the Emperor laid down so distinctly as the basis of the peace to be made for the empire, I contented myself with reminding him of this circumstance, particularly as it is impossible to discuss this point with any propriety till his Imperial majesty becomes a party to the negotiation. I took this opportunity of hinting, that if on all the other points France agreed to the proposals now made, it would not be impossible that some increase of territory might be ceded to her on the Germanic fide of her frontiers, and that this, in addition to the duchy of Savoy, Nice, and Avignon, would be a very great acquiîtion of Arength and power. M.' Delacroix here again reverted to the constitution, and said that these countries were already constitutionally annexed to France. I replied, that it was impossible, in the negotiation which we were beginning, for the other powers to take it up from any period but that which immediately preceded the war, and that any acquisition or diminution of territory which had taken place among the belligerent powers since it first broke out, must necessarily become subject matter for negotiation, and be balanced against each other in the final arrangement of a general peace. You then perfift, faid M. Delacroix, in applying this principle to Belgium? I answered, most certainly; and I should not deal fairly with you if I hesitated to declare, in the outset of our negotiation, that on this point you must enterain no expectation that his majesty will relax or ever consent to see the Netherlands remain a part of France.

M. Delacroix replied, he saw no prospect in this case of our ideas ever meeting, and he despaired of the success of our negotiation. He returned again, however, to his idea of a possible equivalent to be found for the Emperor; but as all he proposed was the alienation or the dismemberment of countries not belonging to France even by conquest I did not consider it as deserving attention, and it is certainly not worth repeating to your lordship.

I need not observe that all the equivalents proposed however in-adequate to the exchange, were offered as a return for our consent that the Netherlands should remain a part of France, of course the admitting them in any shape would have been in direct contradiction to my instructions.

M. Delacroix touched very flightly on Italy; and in the course of our conversation did not bring this part of the subject more into discussion.

I must add, that whenever I mentioned the refloration of the Netherlands to the Emperor, always took care it should be understood that these were be accompanied by fuch further cessions as should form a competent line of detence, and that France could not be permitted to keep possession of all the intermediate country to the Rhine; and I particularly dwelt on this point, when I held out the possibility of admitting an extension of the limits of France on the fide of Germany. But as the French minister no less firenuously opposed the restitution of the Netherlands to the Emperor than I tenaciously insisted upon it, the further extension which, when he had perused them, would speak for themselves. memorial contained the conditions, on the accomplithment of which his majetty confidered the restoration of peace to depend. The note was expressive of his majesty's readiness to enter into any explanation required by the directory on the fubject, or to receive any contreproje', resting on the same basis, which the directory might be dif-That, moreover, poled to give in. I did not hefitate declaring to him, in conformity to the principles which I had laid down, and from which I certainly never thould depart at any period of the negotiation, that I was prepared to answer any questions, explain and elucidate any points, on which it was possible to foresee that doubts or misconceptions could arise on the consideration of these papers. having faid thus much, I had only to remark, that I believed, in no fimilar negotiation which had ever taken place, any minister was authorized, in the first instance, to go to fully into the discussion as I now was.—That I was fure neither the truth of this remark, nor the manifest conclusion to be drawn from it, would escape M. Delacroix's observation.

M 3

162] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

I then put the two papers into his hands. He began by reading the note, on which of course he could only express satisfaction. After perusing the considential memorial with all the attention it deserved, he, after a short pause, said, that it appeared to him to be liable to insurmountable objections; that it seemed to him to require much more than it conceded, and, in the event not to leave France in a situation of proportional greatness to the powers of Europe. He fail, the act of their conflitution, according to the manner in which it was interpreted by the best publicists, (and this phrase is worthy remark) made it impossible for the republic to do what we required. The Austrian Netherlands were annexed to it; they could not be disposed of without flinging the nation into all the confusion which must follow a convocation of the primary affemblies; and he said, he was rather surprized that Great Britain should bring this forward as the governing. condition of the treaty, fince he thought he had, in fome of our late conversations, fully explained the nature of their constitution to I replied, that every thing I had heard from him on this point: was perfectly in my recollection, an it probably was in his; that though I had liftened to him with that attention I always afforded to every, thing he faid, yet I had never made any fort of reply, and had neither: admitted nor controverted this opithat although I believe I could easily disprove this opinion from the spirit of the French. constitution itself, yet the discussion. of that constitution was perfectly foreign to the object of my mission; fince, even allowing his two pofitions, viz. that the retrocession of the Austrian Netherlands was incompatible with their laws, and that we ought to have known that beforehand, yet that there existed a droit public in Europe paramount to any droit public they may think proper to establish within their own. dominions; and that if their conflitution was publicly known, the treaties exitting between his majesty and the emperor were at least, equally public, and in thefe it was clearly.

clearly and distinctly announced, that the contracting parties reciprocally promife not to lay down their arms without the restitution of all the dominions, territories, &c. which may have belonged to either of them before the war. date of this stipulation was previous to their annexing the Austrian Netherlands to France; and the notoriety of this ought, at the very moment when they had pailed that law, to have convinced them, that, if adhered to, it must prove an infurmountable obstacle to peace. applied his maxim to the West India islands, and to the settlements in the East Indies; and asked him, whether it was expected that we were to wave our right of possession, and be required still to consider them as integral parts of the French republic which must be restored, and on which no value was to be fet in the balance of compensation. I also stated the possible case of France having loft part of what she deemed her integral dominions, instead of adding to them, in the course of the war, and whether then under the apprehension of still greater losses, the government, as now composed, should was confider itself as not vested with powers sufficient to save their country from the impending danger, by making peace on the conditions of facrificing a portion of their dominions to fave the remainder. Delacroix faid, this was stating a case of necessity, and such a mode of reasoning did not attach to the present circumstances. I readily admitted the first part of this propolition, but contended, that if the power existed in a case of necessity, it equally existed in all others, and particularly in the case before us, since he himself had repeatedly told me that peace was what this country and it's government wished for, and even wanted.

M. Delacroix, in reply, shifted. his ground, and, by a string of arguments founded on premises calculated for this purpose, attemped to prove, that from the relative fituation of the adjacent countries, the present government of France would be reprehensible in the extreme, and deferve impeachment, if they ever suffered the Netherlands to be separated from their dominions; that by the partition of Poland, Russia, Austria, and Prussia, had increased their power to a most formidable degree; that England, by its conquests, and by the activity and judgment with which it governed its colonies, had redoubled its strength.—Your Indian empire alone, said M. Delacroix with vehemence, has enabled you to subsidize all the powers of Europe against us, and your monopoly of trade has put you in poilesion of a fund of inexhaustible wealth. His words were, " Votre empire dans l' Inde votes a fourni les moyens de salarier toutes les puissances contre nous, et vous avez accaparé le commerce de manière que toutes les richesses du monde se versent dans vos coffres."

From the necessity that France should keep the Netherlands and the left bank of the Rhine, for the purpose of preserving its relative situation in Europe, he passed to the advantages which he contended would result to the other powers by such an addition to the French

M 2 domi-

ANNUAL REGI 164]

dominions. Belgium (to use his plus. A word) by belonging to France, would remove what had been the fource of all wars for two centuries past, and the Rnine, being the natural boundary of France, would enfure the tranquillity of Europe for two centuries to come, did not feel it necessary to combat this preposterous doctrine; I centented myfelf with reminding him of what he had faid to me in one of our last conferences, when he made a comparifon of the weakness of France under its monarchs, and its firength and vigour under its republican form of government. " Nous ne fommes plus dans la décrépitude de la France mmarchique, mais dans toute la force d'une Repub-Inque adolescente," was his expression; and I inferred from this, according to his own reasoning, that the force and power France had acquired by its change of government was much greater than it could derive from any acquifition of territory; and that it followed, if France, when under a regal form of government, was a very juit and confight object of attention, not to fay of jealouly, to the other powers of Europe, France (admitting his axiom) was a much more reasonable object of jealouly and attention under its present constitution than it ever had yet been, and that no addition to its dominious could be feen by its neighbours but under impressions of alarm for their own future fafety and for the general tranquillity of Europe. M. Delacroux's answer to this was fo remarkable that I must beg leave to infert it in his own words.--" Dans le tems revolutione e tout ce que cours dites, my lord, etait wrai-rien n'ega- the total subversion of lost notre puissance; mais ce temt n'existe constitution of the Gern nation en de la patr plus enga leurs bou. trefor nate. du necessus publique. that the I резсе, па most gaice Europe. ! this cafe th from youth 1 very fudden could admir matter of ind bours, muc! curity to iffe' very extensive tiers as that be

This led M. offering an equ peror for the $\Lambda \sim$ and it was to b to his plan, in of the three ecole and feveral bitho. and in Italy.

He talked upc. one very familiar i which his though. quently employed.

He spoke of ma ors, and remed, p view to render his palatable, the flac. dukes of Brunfwick berg as perfous prothe three ecclesia. which were to be res

It would be mak! of your lord(hip's til your to repeat to yo. on this fubject; it v stance (as be himfelf c and as it militated directly against the principle which both his 'majesty and the Emperor laid down so distinctly as the basis of the peace to be made for the empire, I contented myself with reminding him of this circumstance, particularly as it is impossible to discuss this point with any propriety till his Imperial majesty becomes a party to the negotiation. I took this opportunity of hinting, that if on all the other points France agreed to the proposals now made, it would not be impossible that some increase of territory might be ceded to her on the Germanic fide of her frontiers, and that this, in addition to the duchy of Savoy, Nice, and 'Avignon, would be a very great acquition of strength and power. M. Delacroix here again reverted to the constitution, and said that these countries were already constitutionally annexed to France. I replied, that it was impossible, in the negotiation which we were beginning, for the other powers to take it up from any period but that which immediately preceded the war, and that any acquisition or diminution of territory which had taken place among the belligerent powers fince it first broke out, must necessarily become subject matter for negotiation, and be balanced against each other in the final arrangement of a general peace. You then perfift, faid M. Delacroix, in applying this principle to Belgium? I answered, most certainly; and I should not deal fairly with you if I hesitated to declare, in the outset of our negotiation, that on this point you must enterain no expectation that his majesty will relax or ever consent to see the Netherlands remain a part of France.

M. Delacroix replied, he saw no prospect in this case of our ideas ever meeting, and he despaired of the success of our negotiation. He returned again, however, to his idea of a possible equivalent to be found for the Emperor; but as all he proposed was the alienation or the dismemberment of countries not belonging to France even by conquest. I did not consider it as deserving attention, and it is certainly not worth repeating to your lordship.

I need not observe that all the equivalents proposed however in-adequate to the exchange, were offered as a return for our consent that the Netherlands should remain a part of France, of course the admitting them in any shape would have been in direct contradiction to my instructions.

M. Delacroix touched very flightly on Italy; and in the course of our conversation did not bring this part of the subject more into discussion.

I must add, that whenever I mentioned the refloration of the Netherlands to the Emperor, I always took care it should be understood that these were be accompanied by fuch further cessions as should form a competent line of detence, and that France could not be permitted to keep possession of all the intermediate country to the Rhine; and I particularly dwelt on this point, when I held out the possibility of admitting an extension of the limits of France on the fide of Germany. But as the French minister no less firenuously opposed the restitution of the Netherlands to the Emperor than I tenaciously insisted ; upon it, the further extention of my claim could not of course become a subject of argument.

M 3

166] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1795.

I believe I have now, with a tolerable degree of accuracy, informed your lordship of all that the French minister said on my opening myself to him on that part of my instructions which more immediately relates to peace between Great Britain, his Imperial majesty and France. It remains with me to inform your lordship what passed between us on the subject of our respective allies.

On the articles referving a right to the court of St. Petersburg, and to that of Lisbon, to accede to the treaty of peace on the strict flatus ante beclum, the French minister made no other remark than by mentioning the allies of the republic, and by inquiring whether I was prepared to fay any thing relative to their interests, which certainly the republic could never This afforded me the opportunity of giving in the confidential memorial B. relative to Spain and Holland, and I prefaced it by repeating to him the Substance of the first part of your lordship's, No. 12.

Although I had touched upon the subject of the Spanish part of St. Domingo, when I had been speaking to M. Delacroix on the peace with France, yet as it did not become a matter of discussion between us till I came to mention the peace with Spain, I thought it better to place all that paffed on the fubject in this part of my dispatch; it was the only point on which he entered; but I by no means infer from his not bringing forward fome claims for Spain, that we are not to hear of any in the course of the negotiation; on the contrary, I have little doubt that many, and most of them inadmissible, will be made before it can end. however, was filent on them at this moment, and confined all he had to fay to combating the idea that Spain was bound by the treaty of Utrecht not to alieniate her posfessions in America. I had the article copied in my pocket, and I read it to him. He confessed it was clear and explicit, but that circumstances had so materially altered fince the year 1713, that engagements made then ought not to be confidered as in force now. I faid that the spirit of the article itself went to provide for distant contingencies, not for what was expected to happen at or near the time when the treaty was made, and that it was because the alteration of circumstances he alluded to was foreseen as possible, that the. clause was inserted; and that if Spain paid any regard to the faith of treaties, the must consider herfelf as no less strictly bound by this clause now than at the moment when it was drawn up. I went on by faying, that it did not, however, appear quite impossible that point might be settled without much difficulty; and that means might be devised that his Catholic majesty should not break his faith, and both England and France be equally fatisfied. I then held out to him, but in general terms, that either Spain might regain her poffession of St. Domingo, by making fome confiderable cession to Great Britain and France, as the price of peace, or that, in return for leaving the whole of St. Domingo to France, we should retain either Martinico or St. Lucia and Tobago. lacroix listened with a degree of attention attention to these proposals, but he was fearful of committing himself by any expression of approbation, and he dismissed the subject of the court of Madrid, by observing, that France never would forsake the interests of its allies.

Our conversation on those of its other ally, Holland, was much longer, as the wording of the memorial inevitably led at once deep into the subject.

M. Delacroix affected to treat any deviation from the treaty of peace concluded between France and that country, or any refloration of territories acquired under that treaty to France, as quite impracticable. He treated as equally impracticable any attempt at restoring the ancient form of government in the Seven United Provinces. He talked with an air of triumph of the establishment of a national convention at the Hague, and with an affectation of feeling, that by it the cause of freedom had extended itfelf over fuch a large number of people. He, however, was ready. to confess, that from the great loffes the Dutch Republic had fuftained in its colonies, and particudarly from the weak manner in which they had defended them, it could not be expected that his Majesty would consent to a full and complete restitution of them, and that it was reasonable that some should be facrificed; and lie asked me if I could inform him, how far our views extended on this point? I faid I had reason to believe that what his Majesty would require would be possessions and settlements which would not add either to the power or wealth of our Indian dominions, but only tend to secure to us their safe and unmolested possession. You mean by this, said M. Delacroix, the Cape. and Trincomale. I faid they certainly came, under that description, and I saw little prospect of their being restored to the Dutch. Delacroix launched forth on this into a most laboured differtation on the value of the Cape of Good Hope, which he did not confider at all as a port de relache, but as a possession which, in our hands, would become one of the most fertile and most productive colonies in the east; and, according to his estimation of it, he did not scruple to affert, that it would ultimately be an acquisition of infinitely greater importance to England than that of the Netherlands to France; and, if acquiesed in, should be reckoned as a full and ample compensation for them. He added, if you are masters of the Cape and Trincomale, we shall hold all our settlements in India, and the islands of France and Bourbon, entirely at the tenure of your will and pleasure: they will be our's only as long as you chuse we should retain them. You will be fole masters in India, and we shall be entirely dependant upon you. I repeated to him, that it was as means of defence, and not of offence, that these possessions would be infifted on, and that if the matter was fairly and dispassionately discussed, he would find that they offered us a great additional security, but no additional power of attack, even if we were disposed to disturb the peace of that part of the world. If these, and perhaps some few other not very material settlements belonging to the Dutch, were to be infifted upon, and if he would be pleased to enumerate all we should still have to restore to them, while they had nothing to reftore to England, it was imposfible not to confider the terms on which his Majetty propoted peace to Holland as generous and liberal.

M 4

M. Delacroix was not at all difpoied to agree with me on this point, and faid, Holland, stripped of these possessions, would be ruined. He then held out, but as if the idea had just crossed his mind, the possibility of indemnifying the Dutch for their lottes in India, by giving them a tract of territory towards the Meuse, (I could not find out whether he meant Aix la Chapelle, Liege, or the countries of Juliers and Berg) and hinted, that if this was not to be done, an additional fugar island might, perhaps, be ceded to the Dutch Republic. I told him all this might become a subject of future discussion, and I conceived, that if we could agree upon the more effential points, the treaty would not break off on these secondary confiderations. Our converfation had now been extremely long, and M Delacroix ended by Taying, that although he had taken upon himself to enter with me thus far upon the subject, yet I must not consider any thing he said as binding, or as pledging the Republic, till fuch time as he had laid the papers I had given him before the Directory; and in order to do this with more accuracy, he again asked me, whether in his report he was to flate the difuniting Eelgium from France as a fine qua mon from which his Majetty would not depart. I replied, it most certainly was a fine qua non from which Lis Majesty would not depart; and that any proposal which would leave the Netherlands annexed to France, would be attended with much greater benefit to that power, and loss to the allies, than the prefent relative fituation of the belligerent powers could entitle the French government to expect.

M. Delacroix repeated his concern at the peremptory way in which I made this affertion, and asked whether it would admit of no modification? I replied, if France could, in a contre projet, point out a practicable and adequate one, fill keeping in view that the Netherlands must not be French, or likely again to fall into the hands of France, such a propofal might certainly be taken into confideration.

M. Delacroix by no means encouraged me to explain myfelf more fully; he repeatedly faid, that this difficulty relative to the Netherlands was one which could not be overcome.

Just as I was taking leave of him, he begged of me to explain what was meant by the words in the memoire (A) in the 4th paragraph, beginning de s' entendre mutuellement sur les moyens d'assurer, and ending at leur possessions respectives. I told him, it referred to the destructive system adopted by France in the West Indies, and went to express a wish, that the two powers should agree on some general and uniform system of internal police in the lettlements there, which would-contribute to the fecurity of these possessions. to the respective countries, and at the same time to the happiness of every description of inhabitants in

M. Delacroix, a little hurt at my expression relative to the system adopted by France, endeavoured to recriminate on us; but he ended by faying, that they should ertainly be willing to concur in any arrangement relative to the regroes, which did not militate against the principles of their constitution. Here our conference ended, and as, during the whole course of it, I bore in my mnd the possibility, that although this, our first, might be the only favourable opportunity I should ever have of speaking on the general principles on which his Majesty wasdisposed to treat, I endeavoured by adverting more or lets to almost every point in my instructions, to enable M. Delacroix (if he reports faithfully) to state to the Directory what I faid, in fuch a manner as to put it out of their power o misconceive what were his Najesty's intentions, to remove all pollibility of cavil on this cak, and to bring them to a clearand diffinct answer, whether they would agree to open a negotiation on the principle of the status antebelum, or on one differing from it only in form, not in substance. hope in attempting to do this I did not, in the first instance, connuit myself, or discover more of my instructions than it became met do; and that in the conversation with M. Delacroix nothing eloped me which might, at some subequent period, hurt the progressof the negotia-I have, I beeve, given this conference nearly erbatim to your lordship; and I was particularly anxious to do this orrectly and minutely, as well the you may judge on the propriety of what I said myself, as that wat M. Delacroix faid to me my be accurately known, and remin on record.

It must, however, be remembered (as I obseved in the beginning of this dispatch) that he spoke for himself, as minister indeed, but not under the immediate instructions of the Directory, and this consideration will take a little away from the singularity of some of the positions he advanced.

I confess, my Lord, from the civility of his manners, and from his apparent readiness to discuss the subject, the impression which remained on my mind on leaving him was, that the negotiation would go on, but be liable to fo many difficulties, and some of them so nearly infurmountable, that knowing as I do the opinion of the Directory, I saw little prospect of its terminating fuccefsfully. I did not expect the conduct of the Directory would immediately be fuch as to evince a manifest inclination, and even determination, to break off on the first proposals; and I was not a little furprized at receiving, on Sunday, at three P. M. the enclosed letter A. from M. Delacroix: he fent it by the principal fecretary of his department (M. Guiraudet) who communicated to me the original of the arreté of the Directory, of which this letter, abating the alteration in the form, is a literal copy. ter perufing it, I atked M. Guiraudet whether he was informed of its contents, and this led to a short convertation on them. I told him that both the demands were fo unexpected that I could not reply to them off hand: that as to the first, it was quite unufual to fign memorials which were annexed to a note actually figued, and that I scarcely felt myself authorised to depart from what was, I believe, an invariable rule. That as to the second demand, made in fo peremptory remptory and unprecedented a way, I could, without much helitation, fay at once that it could not be complied with. M. Guiraudet lamented this much, and faid, that this being the cafe, he feared our principles of negotiation would never coincide. I agreed with him in my expressions of concern. We conversed together afterwards for some time, but nothing passed at all worthy remark. I told him I should send my answer the next day. On reflecting more attentively on the request that I would fign the two memorials which I had given in, it struck me that the complying with it pledged me to nothing, and that it was merely gratifying them on a point infilted on peevishly, and that the doing it would put them still more in the wrong.

As to the strange demand of an ultimatum, it was perfectly clear what it became me to say, and I hope that in the enclosed answer B, (which I sent yesterday morning at twelve o'clock) to M. Delacroix, I shall be found to have adhered as closely as possible to the spirit of my instructions.

Yesterday evening, at half past nine, M. Guiraudet brought me the note C, to which I immediately replied by the note D. They require no comment; and as I intend leaving Paris to-morrow, and travelling with all convenient speed, I shall so soon have it in my power to say the little which remains to say relative to this sudden, though perhaps not unlooked-for, close to my mission, that I need not trespass further on your lordship's patience.

I have the honour to be, &c. (Signed) MALMESBURY.

P. S. I thought it would be preper for his Majesty's minister at Vienna to receive the earliest intelligence of the negotiation being boke off, I therefore have dispitched a messenger to Vienna with a copy of the several papers which have passed between me and M Delacroix since our conference, and also a succinct account of what passed on it. The messenger less thi place to-day at three, P. M.

Light Hon. Lord Grenville, M. Gr. Gr. Gr. Gr.

No. 31.
Paris, 28th Frimaire, '
(Dec. 18,) 5th year.

THE Executive Directory has heard he reading of the official note figned by you, and of two confidentia memorials without fignatures, which were annexed to it, and which you gave into me yesterday am charged expressly by the Directory to declare to you, that it cannot listen to any confidential repet without a signature, and to equire of you to give into me, oficially, within four and twenty lours, your ultimatum, signed by you

Accept, Sir the assurance of my high confideration.

(Signed) CH. DELACROIX.

N. 32.
Paris, with December, 1796.
COY. (B.)

LORD Malresbury, in answer to the letter which the minister for for foreign affair had the goodness to transmit to im, through the hands of the seretary general of his department, rust remark, that in signing the oicial note which he gave in to tat minister, by order of his court he thought he had complied with all the usual formalities, and had given the necessary authenticity to the two confidential memorials which were annexed to it. Nevertheless, to remove all difficulties, as far as lies in his power, he willingly adopts the forms which are pointed out by the resolution of the Executive Directory, and hastens to send to the minister for foreign affairs the two memorials signed by his hand.

With respect to the positive demand of an ultimatum, Lord Malmefbury observes, that insisting on that point in so peremptory a manner, before the two powers shall have communicated to each other their respective pretensions, and that the articles of the future treaty shall have been submitted to the discussions which the different interests which are to be adjusted, necessarily demand, is to flut the door against all negotiation He, therefore, can add nothing to the affurances which he has already given to the minister for foreign affairs, as well by word of mouth, as in his official note; and he repeats that he is ready to enter with that minister into every explanation of which the state and progress of the negotiation may admit, and that he will not fail to enter into the difcustion of the proposals of his court, or of any counter project which may be delivered to him, on the part of the Executive Directory, with that candour and that spirit of conciliation which correspond with the just and pacific sentiments of his court.

Lord Malmesbury requests the minister for foreign affairs to accept the assurances of his high consideration.

No. 33.
THE undersigned minister for foreign affairs is charged by the Executive Directory, to answer to I ord Malmesbury's two notes of the 27th and 29th Frimaire (17th and 19th December, O. S.) that the Executive Directory, will listen to no proposals contrary to the constitution, to the laws, and to the treaties which bind the Republic.

And as Lord Malmesbury announces at every communication, that he is in want of the opinion of his court, from which it results that he acts a part merely passive in the negotiation, which renders his presence at Paris useless; the undersigned is further charged to give him notice to depart from Paris in eight and forty hours, with all the persons who have accompanied and followed him, and to quit as expeditiously as possible, the territory of the Republic.

The underfigned declares moreover, in the name of the Executive Directory, that if the British cabinet is desirous of peace, the Executive Directory is ready to follow the negotiations, according to the basis laid down in the present note, by the reciprocal channel of couriers.

(Signed) CH. DELACROIX.

Paris, 29th Frimaire (19th Dec.)

5th year of the French Republic, one and indivisible.

No. 34. (1).)

LORD Malmerbury haftens to acknowledge the receipt of the note of the minister for foreign affairs, dated yesterday. He is preparing to quit Paris to-morrow, and demands, in consequence, the necessary passports for himself and his suite,

172] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

He requests the minister for foreign affairs to accept the assurrances of his high consideration.

Paris, 201h December, 1796.

Credentials of Lord Malmefbury. Georgius R.

GEORGIUS Tertius, Dei gratia Magnæ Britanniæ, Franciæ, et Hiberniæ Rex, Fidei Defensor, Dux Brunavicensis et Luneburgensis, Sacri Romani Imperii Archi-Thesaurarius et Princeps Elector, etc. omnibus et singulis ad quos præsentes hæ litteræ pervenerint, salutem:

Cum belli incendio jam nimis diu diversis orbis terrarum partibus flagrante in id quam maxime incumbamus, ut tranquillitas publica tot litibus controversisque ritè compositis, reduci et stabiliri possit; cumque, eâ de causa, virum quemdam tanto negotio parem noftrà ex parte plenà auctoritate ad hoc tam magnum onus conficiendum munire decrevimus, sciatis igitur quod nos fide, industrià, ingenio, perspicacia, et rerum usu fi delis et dilecti confiliarii nostri Jacobi Baronis de Malmesbury, honoratissimi ordinis Balnei equitis plurimum confifi, eumdem nominavimus, fecimus et constituimus nostrum verum, certum, et indubitatum commissarium et plenipotentiarium, dantes et concedentes eidem omnem et omnimodam potestatem, facultatem, auctoritatemque necnon mandatum generale pariter ac speciale (itu tamen ut generale speciali non deroget nec à contra), pro nobis, et nottro nomine, cum ministro vel ministris, commissariis vel plenipotentiariis Reipublicæ Gallicæ pari auctoritate sufficienter instructo vel instructis, cumque ministris, commissariis, vel plenipotentiariis aliorum principum et statuum, quorum inter esse poterit, sufficienti itidem auctoritate instructis, tam fingulatim ac divifim, quam aggregatim ac conjunctim, congrediendi et colloquendi, atque cum ipsis de pace firma et stabili, fincerâque amicitia et concordia quantociès restituendis, conveniendi et. concludendi; eaque omnia quæ ita conventa et conclusa fuerint, pro nobis, et in rostro nomine subfignandi; superque conclusis tractatum tractatusvevel alia instrumenta quosquot et qualia necessaria fuerint, conficiendi, mutuoque tradendi, recipiendique omniaque alia que so onus supra dictum feliciter exequendum pertinent tranfigendi, tam amplis modo et forma ac vi effectuque pari, ac nos si interessimus, facere et præstare possemus, spondentes et in verbo regio promittentes nos omnia et singula, quæcumque a dicto nostro plenipotentiario transigi et concludi contigerint, grata, rata, et accepta omni meliori modo habituros, neque passuros unquam ut in toto; vel in parte à quoniam violentur, aut ut iis in contrarium eatur. In quorum omnium majorem fidem et robur, præsentibus manu notira regià fignatis, magnum nostrum, Magnæ Britanniæ figillum appendi fecimus. Quæ dabantur in palatio nostro Divi Jacobi die decimo tertio mensis Octobris, anno Domini millenimo septengentesimo nonagesimo sexto, regnique nostri trigesimo fexto.

Translation of the Credentials given to Lord Malmesbury.

George Rex.

GEORGE, by the grace of God, king of Great Britain, France and Ireland,

Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting.—Seeing that the lame of war has for a long time aged in the different parts of the globe; deeply occupied with the. project of terminating regularly so pany quarrels and diffentions, of eftoring and confolidating the mblic tranquillity; resolved for his purpose to chuse a man capable of a negotiation of this importance, and to invest him with full authoity to complete so great a work, e it known, that the fidelity, alents, genius, perspicuity, and experience of our faithful and dear counsellor James Baron Malmessury, knight of the most honourible order of the Bath, inspiring us with full confidence, we have named him, and he is appointed and constituted our true, certain, and accredited commissary and pleipotentiary, giving and conceding nim, in all respects, full and enire power, faculty, and authority; harging him besides with our general and special order to confer on our part, and in our name, with be minister or ministers, commisioners, and plenipotentiaries of be French republic, sufficiently nvested with equal authority, as vell as with the ministers, comnissioners, or plenipotentiaries of he other princes and states who nay take part in the present negoiation, also invested with the same uthority; to treat either leparately r together; to confer upon the neans of establishing a solid and turable peace, amity, and fincere oncord; and to adopt all resoluions and conclusions; to sign for is, and in our name, all the faid onventions or conclusions; nake, in consequence, every treaty or treaties, and all other acts, as he shall judge necessary; to deliver and receive mutually all other objects relative to the fortunate execution of the above-mentioned work; to transact with the same force and the same effect as we should be able to do if we affifted in person; guaranteering, and on our royal word promising, that all and each of the transactions and conclusions which shall be made determined by our faid plenipotentiary shall be made and agreed upon, ratified, accepted, and adopted with the best faith; that we thall never fuffer any one, either in whole or in part, to infringe and act contrary to them; and in order to give to every thing more fecurity and force, we have figued the prefent with our royal hand, and affixed to it the great seal of Great Britain.

Given in our palace at St. James's, 13th October, year of grace 1796, and of our reign the 37th.

Manifests of the British Government against France.

THE negotiation which an anxious defire for the restoration of peace had induced his majesty to open at Paris, having been abruptly terminated by the French government, the king thinks it due to himself and to his people to state, in this public manner, the circumstances which have preceded and attended a transaction of so much importance to the general interests of Europe.

It is well known that early in the present year his majesty, laying aside the consideration of many circumstances of difficulty and discouragement, determined to take such steps as were best calculated to open the way for negotiation, if nearly all her conquests, and those any corresponding defire prevailed on the part of his enemies. directed an overture to be made in his name, by his minister in Swifferland, for the purpose of ascerthe dispositions of the French government with respect to peace. The answer which he received in return was at once haughty and evative; it affected to question the fincerity of those dispositions of which his majesty's conduct afforded fo unequivocal proof; it raised groundless objections to the mode of negotiation proposed by his majesty (that of a general congress, by which peace has so often been restored to Europe); but it studiously passed over in filence his majesty's defire to what other mode would be preferred by France. It at the farie time afferted a principle which was stated as an indispensible preliminary to all negotiation —a principle under which the terms of peace must have been regulated, not by the usual considerations of justice, policy, and reciprocal convenience; but by an implicit submission, on the part of all the powers, to a claim founded on the internal laws and separate constitution of France, as having full authority to supersede the treaties entered into by independent states, to govern their interests to controul their engagements, and to dispose of their dominions.

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

A pretention in itself to extravagant could in no instance have been admitted, or even listened to for a moment. Its application to the prefent case led to nothing leis than that France should, as a preliminary to all discussion, retain particularly in which his majesty was most concerned, both from the ties of interest, and the sacred obligations of treaties: that she should in like manner recover back all that had: been conquered from her in every part of the world; and that the should be left at liberty to bring forward fuch further demands on all other points of negotiation, as fuch unqualified submission on the part of those with whom she treated could not fail to produce.

On fuch grounds as thefe it was fufficiently evident that no negotiation could be established: neither did the answer of his majesty's enemies afford any opening for continuing the discussion, since the mode of negotiation offered by his majesty had been peremptorily rejected by them, and no other had been stated in which they were willing to concur.

His majesty was however not discouraged even by this result from still pursuing such measures as appeared to him most conducive to the end of peace; and the wishes. of his ally the emperor correspon-. ding with those which his majesty had manifested, sentiments of a fimilar tendency were expressed on the part of his Imperial majesty at the time of opening the campaign; but the continuance of the same spirit and principles, on the part of the enemy, rendered this fresh overture equally unfuccessful.

While the government of France thus perfifted in obstructing every measure that could even open the way to negotiation, no endeavour was omitted to mislead the public opinion throughout all Europe with .

with respect to the real cause of the prolongation of the war, and to cast a doubt on those dispositions which could alone have distated the steps taken by his majesty and his august ally.

In order to deprive his enemies of all possibility of subterfuge or evasion, and in the hope that a just sense of the continued calamities of war, and of the increasing distresses of France herself, might at length have led to more just and pacific dispositions, his majesty renewed in another form, and through the intervention of friendly powers, a proposal for opening negotiations for peace. The manner in which this intervention was received indicated the most hostile dispositions towards Great Britain, and at the same time afforded to all Europe a striking instance of that injurious and offensive conduct which is observed on the part of the French government towards all other countries. The repeated overtures made in his majetty's name were nevertheless of such a nature, that it was at last found impossible to perfift in the absolute rejection of them, without the direct and undifguised avowal of a determination to refuse to Europe all hope of the restoration of tranquillity. A channel was therefore at length indicated, through which the government of France professed itself willing to carry on a negotiation, and a readincis was expressed (though in terms far remote from any spirit of conciliation) to receive a minister authorised by his majesty to proceed to Paris for that purpole.

Many circumstances might have been urged as affording powerful motives against adopting this suggestion, until the government of France had given fome indication of a spirit better calculated to promote the fuccess of such a mission, and to meet these advances on the part of Great Britain. king's defire for the restoration of general peace on just and honourable terms, his concern for the interests of his subjects, and his determination to leave to his enemies no pretext for imputing to him the consequences of their own ambition, induced him to overlook every such consideration, and to take a step which these reasons alone could justify.

The repeated endeavours of the French government to defeat this mission in its outset, and to break off the intercourse thus opened, even before the first steps towards negotiation could be taken; the indecent and injurious language employed with a view to irritate, the captious and frivolous objections raised for the purpose of obstructing the progress of the discussion; all these have sufficiently appeared from the official papers which passed on both sides, and which are known to all Europe.

But above all, the abrupt termination of the negotiation has afforded the most conclusive proof, that at no period of it was any real wish for peace entertained on the part of the French government.

After repeated evasion and delay, the government had at length consented to establish, as the basis of the negotiation, a principle proposed by his majetty, liberal in its own nature, equitable towards his enemies, and calculated to provide for the interests of his allies, and of Europe. It had been agreed that compensation should be made to France, by proportionable restitutions from his majetty's conquests on that power, for those arrangements to which the thould be called upon to confert in order to fatisfy the just pretentions of Lis allies, and to preferve the political balance of Europe. At the defire of the French government itself memorials were presented by his majetly's minister, which contained the outlines of the terms of peace grounded on the basis so established, and in which his majesty proposed to carry to the utmost possible extent the application of a principle fo equitable with respect to France, and so liberal on his majesty's part. The delivery of thele papers was accompanied by a declaration expressly and repeatedly made, both verbelly and in writing, that his majefly's minifter was willing and prepared to enter, with a spirit of conciliation and fairness, into the discussion of the different points there contained, or into that of any other propotal or scheme of peace which the French government might with to substitute in its place.

that

In reply to this communication, he received a demand, in form the most offensive, and in substance the most extravagant, that ever was made in the course of any negotiation. It was peremptorily required of him that in the very outfet of the business, when no answer had been given by the French government to his first proposal, when he had not even learnt, in any regular shape, the nature or extent of the objections to it, and much less received from that government any other offer or plan of peace, he should in twenty-four hours deliver in a statement of the final terms to which his court would in any case accede—a demand tending evidently to that the door to all negotiation, to preclude all discussion, all explanation, all posfibility of the amicable adjustment of points of difference - a demand in its nature preposterous, in its: execution impracticable, fince it is. plain that no fuch ultimate resolution respecting a general plan of peace ever can be rationally formed. much less declared, without knowing what points are principally objected to by the enemy, and what tacilities he may be willing tooffer in return for concession in those respects. Having declined compliance with this demand, and explained the reasons which rendered it inadmissible, but having, at the fame time, expressly renewed the declaration of his readiness to enter into the discussion of the proposal he had conveyed, or of any other which might be communicated to him, the king's minifter received no other answer than an abrupt command to quit Paris in forty-eight hours. addition to fuch an infult, any further proof were necessary of the dispositions of those by whom it was offered, fuch proof would be abundantly supplied from the contents of the note in which this order was conveyed. The mode of negotiation on which the French government had itself infifted, is there rejected, and no practicable means left open for treating with effect. The basis of negotiation, fo recently established by mutual. consent, is there disclaimed, and,. in its room, a principle clearly in. admissible is reasserted as the only ground on which France can conient

fent to treat: the very same principle which had been brought forward in reply to his majesty's first overtures from Switzerland, which had then been rejected by his majesty, but which now appears never to have been, in fact, abandoned by the government of France, however inconsistent with that on which they had expressly agreed to treat.

It is therefore necessary that all Europe should understand, that the rupture of the negotiation at Paris does not arise from the failure of any sincere attempt on the part of France to reconcile by fair discussion the views and interests of the contending powers. Such a discussion has been repeatedly invited and even solicited, on the part of his majesty, but has been, in the first instance, and absolutely, precluded by the act of the French government.

It arises exclusively from the determination of that government to reject all means of peace—a determination which appeared but too strongly in all the preliminary discussions; which was clearly manifested in the demand of an ultimatum made in the very outlet of the negotiation, but which is proved beyond all possibility of doubt by the obstinate adherence to a claim which never can be admitted—a claim that the construction which that government affects to put (though even in that respect unsupported by the fact) on the internal constitution of its own country, shall be received by all other nations as paramount to every known principle of public law in Europe, as superior to the obligations of treaties, to the ties of common interest, to the most pressing Vol. XXXVIII.

and urgent confiderations of general fecurity.

On fuch grounds it is that the French government has abruptly terminated a negotiation, which it commenced with reluctance, and conducted with every inclination to prevent its final fuccess. On these motives it is that the further effufion of blood, the continued calamities of war, the interruptions of peaceable and friendly intercourse among mankind, the prolonged distresses of Europe, and the accumulated miseries of France itself, are by the government of that country to be justified to the world.

His majesty, who had entered into the negotiation with good faith, who has fuffered no impodiment to prevent his profecuting it with earnestness and fincerity, has now only to lament its abrupt termination; and to renew, in the face of all Europe, the folern declaration, that, whenever his enemies shall be disposed to enter on the work of a general pacification, in a spirit of conciliation and equity, nothing shall be wanting on his part to contribute to the accomplishment of that great object, with a view to which he has already offered such considerable facrifices on his part, and which is now retarded only by the exorbitant pretentions of his enemies.

Westminster, 27th Dec. 1796.

Speech of Earl Counden, Lord Liqutenant of Ireland, to both Houses of Parliament, Jan. 21, 1796.

My Lords and Gentlemen, I HAVE received his majesty's commands to meet you in Parliament.

N

178] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

It gives me the most sincere satisfaction to be authorized to inform you, that notwithstanding the advantages which the enemy possessed at the commencement of the last year, and the successes which attended their operations in the former parts of the campaign, the general situation of affairs is on the whole most essentially improved.

The continued and brilliant successes of the Austrian armies upon the Rhine; the important captures of the Cape of Good Hope and of Trincomale by his majesty's forces, and the decided superiority of his sleets, are circumstances of the utmost importance to the common cause; and their effect is strengthened by the internal distresses, the ruined commerce, and increasing sinancial embarrassments of the enemy.

The crisis lately depending in France has led to an order of things in that country, such as will induce his majesty to meet any disposition to negotiation on the part of the enemy with an earnest desire to give it the fullest and speediest effect, and to conclude a treaty of general peace when it may be essected on just and suitable terms for himself and his allies.

The treaty of commerce between his majesty and the United States of America having been mutually ratisfied, I have ordered copies of it, by his majesty's command, to be laid before you.

I have the pleasure to announce to you, that her royal highness the princess of Wales has been happily delivered of a princess; an event, which, by giving additional stability to his majesty's august house, cannot fail to afford you the highest satisfaction. Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

I observe with the sincerest pleafure that notwithstanding the continued pressure of the war, the commerce and revenues of this kingdom have not in any degree fallen from that flourishing state of advancement, which in the last fession of Parliament was a subject of fuch just congratulation. circumstance affords a decifive proof that your prosperity is founded on a folid basis, and leads me to. indulge the flattering hope, that whatever additional burthens you may find it necessary to impose, will not be materially felt by the people.

I have ordered the public accounts and estimates for the enfuing year to be laid before you, and have no doubt of your readiness to provide such supplies as a due sense of the kingdom shall suggest, and the wise policy of strengthening his majesty's exertions for procuring a solid and permanent peace shall appear to render necessary.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

It is with regret that I feel myself obliged to advert to those fecret and treasonable associations, the dangerous extent and malignity of which have in some degree. been disclosed on several trials, and to the disturbances which have taken place in some parts of the kingdom. It has at the fame time been a source of great satisfaction to me to observe the successful and meritorious exertions of the magifa' trates in feveral parts of the kingdom, and the alacrity which his Majetty's regular and militia forces have univerfally manifested in aid. of the civil power, whenever they have been called upon for the preservation

ion of the peace, and support laws. It remains for your nce and wisdom to devise measures as, together with a nuance of those exertions, and dditional powers, which, by lvice of the privy council, I thought it necessary to estain different counties, will nt the return of fimilar ex-, and restore a proper revefor the laws of the country. e superior and increasing imnce of the agriculture and mactures, and particularly of the manufacture of the kingdom, command your utmost support. r the present situation of Euyou cannot fail to attend with iar vigilance to the general of provisions; and if circumes shall at any time render interpolition advisable, I have oubt of your adopting fuch ures as shall best apply to the ng necessity of the times.

am defirous of pointing your tion to the protestant charter ols, and other institutions of ic charity and improvement. our unanimity and zeal can r be of more importance than ne present crisis, in order to es the enemy with a thorough iction of the resources of his :sty's kingdoms, and to proa favourable termination to honourable efforts. His Mahas the fullest reliance on firmness and attachment, and ne fortitude, spirit, and perience of his people.

will be my ambition, as it is luty, to represent your zeal to Majesty's service; and it will my personal and most anxious to co-operate with your efforts e common cause in which we are all equally engaged and interested, and my utmost endeavours shall be used to secure the happiness and prosperity of this kingdom, and to protect and maintain its most excellent constitution.

Speech of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland to both Houses of Parliament, April 15, 1796.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

IN releasing you from farther attendance in parliament, I am peculiarly commanded by his majefuty to thank you for that conspicuous zeal and unanimity, so honourable to yourselves and so impressive on our enemies, which have marked your conduct through the whole session, in promoting by your energy and temper the interests of your country, and in supporting by your spirit and liberality the common cause of the empire.

His majesty has taken the steps which appeared most proper for setting on foot a negotiation for general peace, if the enemy should be disposed to enter into such negotiation on grounds consistent with the safety, honour and interest of his majesty's kingdoms and of his allies.

If his majesty's views in this respect should fail, he has no doubt that the valour of his subjects, the resources of his kingdoms, and the exertions of the powers engaged with him, will ultimately produce this desirable end.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

I am to thank you, in his majesty's name, for the cheerfulness and liberality with which you have provided for the current services of N 2

the year, and it affords me the highest satisfaction to reflect that these objects have been attained by burthens, so judiciously imposed, that they can scarcely affect the lower orders of the people. equally satisfactory to observe that your strength and prosperity remain undiminished, notwithstanding the pressure of the war, and it will be my endeavour to cherish your resources, and apply your liberality with economy and prudence.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

. The inquiries I had ordered to be made with regard to the produce of the last harvest, and the measures taken by you to prevent the export of grain, must relieve the public mind from an apprehension of scarcity. If any illicit means should be attempted, to evade the provisions of the laws, which have been enacted upon this important subject, I shall not be inattentive in exercifing those powers with which I am entrusted.

- The vigorous measures you have adopted for the suppression of infurrection and outrage, and the wife provisions you have made for preventing the extension of similar offences, must have the most salu-tary effects.

• The new regulation of licences under the superintendence of ma--gistrates, will tend to promote tranquillity and fobriety. The establishment of more frequent sessions of the peace will afford an easy and expeditious administration of justice in the different districts throughout the kingdom. beral increase of the salaries of the judges, and the alteration of the civil bill jurisdiction, for the convenience of the lower ranks of the. people, will ensure the constant and regular attention of his majerty's judges to the civil and criminal business that will remain to be done on the circuits.

These measures cannot but demonstrate to the people at large the firmness and the temper of parliament, which, whilst it is determined to repress the excesses of licentiousness and outrage, is at the fame time anxious to enfure to the country those permanent advantages of security, peace and good order, which are to be derived from a prompt and upright administration of justice.

I cannot too strongly recommend. it to you to give effect to these benefits by your example and prefence, and I am confident, that when you are relieved from your duty in parliament, all ranks and descriptions of his majesty's faithful subjects will feel themselves pretected by your exertions and authority in your different counties.

Your kind declarations in favour of my administration make the deepest impressions upon my feelings. If I have any claim to your confidence and good opinion, it arifes from the fidelity with which I have represented to his majesty your loyalty and zeal, and from the fincere defire I feel to conform my conduct to your fentiments.—Great Britain and Ireland form one empire; they are inseparably connected; they must stand or fall together; and we are all equally engaged, because we are all equally interested in the common cause of defending and upholding our religion, our laws, and our constitution.

Speech of Earl Gamden Lord Lieut. of Ireland to both Houses of Parliament, October 13, 1796.

My

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I have his majesty's commands to acquaint you, that he has thought it necessary to require your attendance in parliament at this early period, and to refort to your deliberative wisdom at a time when the ambitious projects of our enemies have threatened to interrupt the happiness and prosperity of his people, by making a descent on this kingdom and Great Britain. And although his majesty looks forward with the utmost confidence to the spirit, loyalty, and ability of his faithful people of Ireland to repel fuch an attack, it will yet become your wisdom to neglect no precautions which may preclude the attempt, or secure the speediest means of turning it to the confusion of the enemy.

His majesty has been graciously pleased to direct an addition to be made to the regular forces in this kingdom, by troops sent from Great Britain, the greater part of which is already arrived; and in pursuance of his majesty's commands, I have also encouraged the loyalty and zealous disposition, which has generally displayed itself, to associate in arms, under his majesty's authority, for the better security of property, and the preservation of tranquillity and good order.

In consequence of the steps which his majesty has taken to restore peace to Europe, and secure its future tranquillity, a way has at length been opened for an immediate and direct negotiation; and I am commanded to acquaint you, that it is his majesty's intention to send a person to Paris, with full powers to treat for the restoration of general peace.

The apparently hostile dispositions and conduct of the court of Spain has led to discussions, of which I am not able to acquaint you with the final result; but, whatever may be their issue, they cannot but afford to Europe a surther proof of his majesty's moderation and forbearance, and cannot fail to animate your utmost exertions in defending the dignity, rights, and interest of the empire against every aggression.

In reviewing the events of this year, it must afford you the greatest satisfaction to observe, that by the spirit and exertions of his majesty's navy, the commerce of this kingdom has been protected in a degree almost beyond example; and in no part more completely, than by the skill, activity, and bravery of the squadron stationed on the coasts of

The success of his majesty's arms in the East and West Indies, has been highly honourable and advantageous to the empire; and evinces, in the strongest manner, the valour and good conduct of his forces both by sea and land.

The steady and dignified conduct of the emperor, and the intrepidity of the Austrian forces under the command of the archduke Charles, have given so essential a change to the aspect of affairs on the continent, as to inspire a well-grounded considence that the final result of the campaign will be such as materially to promote his majesty's endeavours to obtain a safe and honourable peace for himself and his allies.

My Lords and Gentlemen,
The expediency of the vigorous measures which you, have adopted
N 3

182] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

in the last session of parliament, has been amply proved by the outrages, which they were intended to suppress having in a great measure subsided. I am, however, to lament, that in one part of the country good order has not yet been entirely restored, and that in other districts a treasonable system of secret confederation, by the administering of illegal oaths, still continues, although no means within the reach of government have been left untried to counteract it.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

I have ordered to be laid before you an account of fuch articles of expence as are not included in the estimate of the current year, and which the present circumstances have rendered necessary; and when you consider the great interests for which we are engaged, and the objects for which we are contending, I doubt not that you will grant the supplies which may be requisite for them with your accustomed chearfulness and liberality; and when the ordinary accounts and estimates for the entuing year shall be laid before you, I trust you will then proceed with the zeal you have always manifested in providing for the exigencies of the flate, and the honourable support of his majesty's government.

You will not fail at a proper time to continue your attention to the manufactures, the agriculture, and the commerce of the country, and to extend your accustomed benevelence to the protestant charterschools, and the other institutions of education and charity which have been so long softered by your liberal encouragement. The prosperity and resources of the kingdom, so highly improved by your meritorious care, still remain unimpaired by the pressure of war; and I trust to your unremitting attention for the further advancement of your national prosperity.

You have learnt the steps which his majesty has taken to procure the blessings of general peace upon a solid and permanent basis. Should these gracious endeavours of his majesty not be followed by the success which he has every reason to expect, he is satisfied that the affections, courage, and preservance, of his people, will enable him to frustrate the designs of our enemies, and to maintain the honour and dignity of his crown.

It will afford me the highest satisfaction to be aided at this important crifis by your advice, and I rely with a confidence you have taught me to indulge, upon your liberal interpretation of my conduct, and upon that support I have fo amply experienced fince I reccived his majesty's commands to repair to this country; and it will be peculiarly gratifying to me, if I should have the good fortune, in the administration of the king's government, to impress upon your minds the full extent of his majelty's paternal care of this kingdom, and of my own anxiety to promote, by every means, its interests, its fafety, and its prosperity.

A Proclamation by the Lord Licutenant . and Council of Ireland.

Camden,

WHEREAS by an act of parliament passed in this kingdom, in the 56th year of his majesty's reign, entitled entitled, "An act more effectually to suppress insurrections, and to prevent the disturbance of the public peace," it is enacted, that it shall be lawful for the justices of the peace of any county, assembled at a special session in manner by the faid act directed, not being fewer than feven, or the major part of them, one of whom to be of the quorum, if they judge fit, upon due confideration of the state of the county, to fignify by memorial, by them figned, to the lord lieutenant; or other chief governor, or governors of this kingdom, that they confider their county, or any part thereof, to be in a state of disturbance, or in immediate danger of becoming so, and praying that the lord lieutenant and council may proclaim fuch county, or part thereof, to be in a state of disturbance, thereupon it shall be lawful for the lord lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of this kingdom, by and with the advice of his majesty's privy council, by proclamation, to declare such county, or any part of such county, to be in a state of disturbance, or in immediate danger of becoming so, and also such parts of any adjoining county or counties as such chief governor or governors shall think fit, in order to prevent the continuance or extension of fuch disturbance.

And whereas twenty-four justices of the peace of the county of Down, (several of whom being of the quorum) being the major part of the justices of the peace duly assembled, pursuant to the said act, at a special session of the peace, holden at Hillsborough, in the said county, on Friday the 11th day of November instant, have, by memorial by them figned, fignified to his excellency the lord lieutenant, that certain parts of the faid county are in a state of disturbance, and have thereby prayed that the lord lieutenant and council may proclaim the parishes of Tullylish, Aghaderg, Donaghcloney, Moira, Maralin, and Seapatrick, being parts of the said county of Down, to be in a state of disturbance, of which all justices of the peace and other magistrates and peace officers of the said county, are to take notice.

Given at the council chamber in Dublin, the 16th day of November, 1796.

Decree of the National Assembly of the United Provinces for the Abolition of a privileged Church.

- 1. THERE cannot; nor shall be longer any reigning or peculiarly privileged church permitted in the United Netherlands.
- of the former states-general, tending to oppress the dissenting churches, are revoked and rendered void.
- 3. No distinctive dress shall be worn, or church ceremonies be exhibited except within the respective buildings of either religious persuasion. Nor shall any bells be rung, in future, for the service of the church.
- 4. A commission shall be appointed, as speedily as possible, to investigate all those difficulties, which are the remains of a predominant church; to examine into the funds of payment, and to devise regulations, in some wise, for the suture subsistence of teachers, and others connected with the church.

N 14

184] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

5. A circular missive shall be dispatched throughout all quarters of the republic, exhorting the proper persons to remit and do away all personal suppressive burdens laid on those of the dissenting churches, and requesting their immediate answer, for the satisfaction of this assembly.

13th August.

Proclamation of the National Assembly of the Batavian People against the Importation of British Manufactures.
The National Assembly, representing the Batavian People, to the Batavians, Health and Fraternity.

THE British minister issued on the 3d of this month a royal proclamation, by which, " the free navigation of Great Britain to the United Provinces is granted, as well as the exportation of all kinds of merchandize, except military and naval ammunition, provided they be exported under a neutral flag." France, however, is except-This is an artifice which the Batavian people see and properly appreciate—a lure which they difdain. Have we not sketched to the eyes of all Europe, in our manifesto of the 2d May of the preient year, the perfidious traits of the conduct of this same minister? Did we not evince in the most evident manner how this minister completed his want of faith, when on the flight of the last Stadtholder he seized more than a hundred ships richly laden, and several thips of war; when, deaf to every representation, he dared to appropriate this booty; when, by false advices, he enticed into the English ports several ships which were then at sea; when, violating the rights of nations, and confidering as nothing the most solemn treaties, he changed the protection which he had promifed, into a declaration of good and legal capture of the Dutch thips; when he endeavoured to get possession of our colonies in the most traitorous manner: when he effectively established himself in several of our mest important possessions; when he furnished money to the unnatural emigrants who were more inflaenced by love for the Orange party than for their country, and whom he continually excited to come and tear down the standard of liberty in their own country, and to waste it with fire and sword? In a word, is not the British minister the fworn enemy to the well-being. of the United Provinces, and is not he furious that the republic still exists? Let him delude himfelf with the artificial calculation of the consequences of the prefent measure! Let him imagine that his lure of the love of gain may either open a fource of finance; or in case the Batavian republic disdain it, may sow discord, inflame the spirit of party, and alienate the hearts of the people from the legitimate government! But your representatives, oh, Batavian people!.are and will remain, notwith standing, faithful to their destination; they will not engage in a meafure which would render the most essential service to the enemy of the nation, check the wife and great project of their grand ally, and retard that peace which is the object of our wisher.

The English people are on the eve of awaking, and of forcing the minister to accept an equitable and speedy peace. To avoid carefully every thing that may prolong the most terrible war of which hittory makes mention, is our most facred duty: and to spare no means that may hasten the moment of a peace suitable to the interests of the Batavian people, of their faithful ally, of the British nation itself, and of humanity—such is our most serious object.

facred

The momentary advantage of the few must not be balanced against the well-being of the public, the well-being and prosperity of the public which you wish, fellow-citizens, is our principal ob-We know that the British minister at this moment wants specie and circulating capital. has wasted millions of money and rivers of blood; the present meafore evinces his embarrassment. The glorious victories French have thut up several ports against the English, and will shut up still more. England, on the other hand, is full of her manufactures, of pillaged merchandize particularly of those articles with which our rich ships returned from the East Indies have furnished The British minister must besides make at this period his usual contracts in the Baltic for the maintenance of his marine, and for the supplying of his other wants: and without drawing upon the Dutch merchants, it appears, that he could not succeed in this. — Good faith, Batavian glory, feel all your dignity!

What Batavian heart is not filled with indignation, on confidering, that the enemy of our country swould offer us for fale those very effects which he has robbed us of fo shamefully? And is it permitted to us to hefitate a fingle moment, in consoling ourselves for this loss of gain, and in frustrating the grand object of this enemy? Citizens, his object is no other than to exchange for money innumerable British merchandize; 'the faculty of being able to dispose of the price of these purchases to his own advantage: to put an end to the just murmurs of the English people; to prolong the war, and, above all, to excite the indignation of the French republic, which the proclamation excludes from the free navigation. It is therefore, in virtue of all these motives, that we have thought proper to determine upon what follows, as we do determine by these presents.

Article. 1. It shall not be permitted to import into the United Provinces any British manufactures whatever, any British merchandize in general, and particularly any effects of whatever nature they are, which proceed from the effects laden on board the ships of the East India company, seized or carried to Great Britain, in any manner, or under any pretext, whether the said effects come directly from Great Britain, or by any other channel.

2. Upon the importation of all effects of this kind, they shall be first confiscated to the profit of the Batavian people, and deposited in proper magazines, in order to remain there in depot, and not to be fold until it shall be ulteriorly demanded on the part of: the Batavian people.

3. All persons who may have participated directly or indirectly in su h importation, or who may have favoured it, or to whose confignment such effects may have been addressed and expedited with shall be not knowledge, responsible, independently, only and besides confiscation of the effects, but shall be proceeded against before the judge of their domicile micile, as having entered into a connection with the enemy, to the ruin of the country, in case it appears, that after the promulgation of the proclamation they have had any knowledge of it, and have not informed the office of convoys and licences within twenty-four hours, or have not informed the administration of the place where they dwell.

- 4. It is also forbidden, under the same penalties, to the inhabitants of this republic, to accept or pay any bills of exchange drawn from Great Britain.
- 5. The exact execution of our present serious resolution is consided to our committee for the affairs of the marine, with the particular injunction to neglect no means to watch over such an importation, with the authority to establish in the necessary places, either in the towns or in the flat countries, such extraordinary surveyors, receivers, or clerks, as they shall judge necessary, in order to sulfil our intentions.
- 6. The committee for the affairs of the marine is qualified, in case of the feizure of the effects prohibited in Art. 1. to order de plano (without form of process) upon its responsibility, the confication, and to effect the deposit in the necessary magazines mentioned in Art. 2. In confequence, in this respect, the ordinary form of proceeding is fuspended in cases of frauds committed with regard to the marine rights, and to every contravention of the placards iffued on that lubjeer, which fhall remain fuspended with respect to those who shall prefent themselves as defenders in the affairs above-mentioned.
 - 7. The present proclamation

We direct and entreat the supremental authorities to make the necessary dispositions, in order that our present object may be duly effected; and more especially to direct allothe municipalities in each province, to lend every assistance to the committee for the affairs of the marine, and to support it against all opposition to the accomplishment of the duties imposed on our committee, by our present procedamation.

8. This proclamation shall be sent to the committees for the affairs of the marine, and for the East India trade, in order to serve as information and advice to them.

Done in the national affembly at the Hazue, Sept. 16, 1796, second year of Balavian liberty.

(Signed) J. J. Cambibra
D. Van Laer.

Proclamation of the States General of the United Provinces.

THE states general of the United Provinces to all those who may see or hear these presents, health and fraternity: Be it known, that in compliance with the wish and defire of the Batavian people, and, the approbation of the respective confederates, we have passed an act, according to which a general national affembly for the adminiitration of feederal affairs, as well as to form the plan of a constitution for all the republic, to be inh. mitted to the approbation or refufal of the Batavian nation, should: be convoked and put in activity. that this important work, of to great an interest for our country, has been conducted actually, under the divine benediction, by the chạice choice of the citizens having the right of fuffrage in all the republic, to the point that the members who will compose this general national affembly, and who will represent together all the Batavian people, have been effectively elected, or will be elected, are ready to begin their labours. In consequence whereof, we intreat and charge the elected members, forafmuch they are not yet arrived here, at the Hague, to repair there immediately, in order to affemble on Tuesday the first of March next, at the place destined, by eleven o'clock in the forenoon, that they may be enabled, by a commission to be named by us, conformably to the act passed to open their asfembly; that thus on the point of terminating our proceedings, at the moment when this affembly shall be constituted, we thought it our duty folemnly to inform, by our prefent proclamation, our fellow-citizens thereof, and to testify, in the first place, our gratitude to the Supreme Being, that in the midst of all the difficulties which have weighed down this republic fince the revolution of the month of Jan. 1795, and which have menaced even the total loss of its liberty and of its independence, we behold at last the defired issue of our continual cares, that our political liberty and independence have been confirmed, and that also the nation will fee itself perfectly and really reprefented by an affembly elected by herself, and which will be in effect honoured with her confidence, a circumstance which never yet happened to our ancettors; for which reason we may with good cause expect from it such a plan of a constitution, under the approbation of the whole people as may be proper to regulate and establish its happiness on a stable footing, and may also assure ourselves firmly that this affembly will employ the power and authority which have been trufted to it, in such a manner as may be necessary for the fafety and well-being of our country; by means of which all and each will be able to enjoy individual liberty, under the protection of the law to defend their own interefts in union with the general interests, and to assist the prosperity of the republic to advance in fuch a manner as that the may be restored to her ancient splendour, and that her importance abroad may be re-established and defended as in former times.

We pray and require, therefore, the representatives of the people in the respective provinces, the country of Drenthe and Batavian Brabant, to publith and affix our preient proclamation in all places where it is the custom to make fuch publication and affixing: we order at the same time, all and every one whom it may concern, to acknowledge the faid national affembly as fuch, and to obey it according to the act passed before; and we inform by the present, the military as well as others, that as foon as this national atlembly shall be solemnly constituted, they will pass immediately into the service of the faid affembly, and will be obliged to pay it the same obedience they have until now owed us; forasmuch as we declare, by our present proolamation, publicly and folemnly, that all authority which may have belonged to our affembly will then pass, with our consent consent, into the hands of the above-named national assembly.

Done and decreed in the abovementioned assembly of the lords of the states general of the United Provinces, at the Hague, this 19th day of February, 1796.

(Signed) By order,
HUBERT, VT.
W. QUARLES.

Proclamation of the Dutch National Convention for manning the Navy, published at the Hague, March 16.

CITIZENS OF THE NETHERLANDS!

Dear Countrymen,

THE unjust and destructive war in which we have been involved by the British ministry cannot but attract our whole attention. the first object of our solicitude, that by our courage and prudence in the conduct of it, we may procure an honourable peace, firmly establish our freedom, and maintain the independence of the state, and the glory of our ancestors. Our navy, under divine providence, is the natural and only means to fet bounds to the immeasurable infolence of the British ministry, and to defend our country, against their treacherous conduct and cruel treatment. To this object the endeavours of the best patriots have been uniformly directed fince the time when our heavy chains were broken by the affiftance of our French brethren, since the day when the Stadtholder left the Batavian shores, the day when we began to breathe a freer air, and were at liberty to exert ourselves for the improvement of the fources of our prosperity, our trade, our fisheries, our navigation, our colonies, and our manusactures. By their navy, sellow citizens, did our ancestors become. The Batavian flag was known, feared, and honoured in each of the four quarters of the world. Under our late government it was infulted, and became the ridicule of nations. It is therefore our first duty to restore our matine. The zeal of the committee of marine has done much, where nothing fcarcely had before been done. Its exertions were incessant. in the present state of our pavy, all hands feem to have lost the habits. and all hearts the inclination necessary for the service. The Batsvian youth are no longer accustomed to the laboufs requisite on board the armed fleets of their country. is our nation then less brave, less indignant against its enemies; or do we less love our native land than in the time of a Ruyter or a Tromp! -No, fellow citizens, no; far from us be such a thought! We rely with confidence on your patriotism; and cannot doubt but you will act with vigour in the present critical fituation of our country; for why should we conceal that such is our fituation, when to make it known must procure the remedy? thips, which are very numerous, and more than sufficient to secure us a superiority in our seas, and to cut off from the enemy all supplies of provisions and stores from the north, and thus compel them to peace—our thips are in want of men. The recruitings proceed with langour, and the measures hitherto taken have had little effect. Nor should this excite our wonder: they were of a partial nature, and not in consequence of the expression of the will of the affembly, representative of the whole Batavian re-This will is now made public.

known: supported by you it shall deliver our country. Let the people be called together in all the towns and villages of the Netherlands. Let the example of Haerlem be proposed to them; that town so zealous for liberty, that it has already raifed two hundred young men for the navy. Let all the constituted authorities remind the Batavian youth, that their country looks up to them for her defence; they will not be deaf to her call. The time of oppression is past. The fleet of the republic is under the command of true patriots, who do not confider their comrades as flaves, but as fellow citizens.— The attention of the representatives of the people will be continually directed to provide for the wants of the mariner, and they will confider the rewarding of heroifm and faithful fervice, as the most pleasing part of their great labours. Let, therefore, fathers exhort their ions; fisters, their brothers; and the people in general, the youth of the country, to acts of heroism, and to engage in the naval·fervice, to maintain the honour of the Batavian flag, and defend their native When they shall thus nobly have fulfilled their duty, they will find their reward in our tender care for them and their relatives, in the approbation of every noble mind, and the congratulations and gratitude of all their countymen.

VAN DE CASTEELE.

Manifesto against Great Britain, by the National Assembly representing the Batawian Nation.

THE Batavian nation, once more unjustly attacked by the kingdom of Great Britain, has just taken up arms. This nation, so often ill treated, oppressed, trod upon, and pillaged, under the mask of friendship, now animated and excited by liberty, and at length breathing for the first time after so long an interval, resumes the primitive energy of its brave and valorous character, courageously rears its head, and will no longer fuffer its prosperity to be undermined by envious neighbours. It will no longer allow itself to be dragged in the dust; and it will cease to be the fport of the infamous and ambitious ministers of England, who, by the dazzle of piratical treasures, blind the English nation, which fancies itself to be free, with respect to the terrible calamities they have brought on Europe, and on the whole of the human race. Batavian people will defend their rights and their independence; they will save their country from the ruin by which it is threatened.

Will Europe still doubt, that the Batavian republic has not rightfully drawn the fword from the sheath, when she is constrained to a just defence? Will Europe still doubt that the Batavian republic has been led to the very brink of utter destruction, by the disastrous policy of the same ministry? Europe still doubt that the regenerated Batavian republic will not, with the help of its illustricus ally, vigoroufly repel the arrogant domination of the English cabinet, and will not confolidate the liberty fo dearly and periloufly acquired, at the expence even of all by which the is interested?

When England attempted, by the force of arms, to subjugate her American colonies, which the had driven to a just insurrection, and when the scourge of war extended to other empires, the states general of the united provinces were careful to observe a strict neutrality; they did not suffer Dutch vessels to transport any other commodities to America, those excepted which were declared free by the express terms of treaties. The most efficacious precautions were carefully taken to prevent war-like stores from being conveyed to the American co-Jonies, as well as to prevent any fraudulent commerce from being carried on withthem; precautions which did not a little shackle and injure our own commerce to the West Indies.

when

It availed the republic, however, but little, to observe the conditions of treaties with exactness, as to what was by them prohibited; the English ministers consulting merely their temporary convenience, went so far as to dispute what these very treaties allowed; they would not fuffer the republic to enjoy those very advantages of treaty which England herself had enjoyed in a fimilar case; but violating the rights of nations, they condemned the cargoes as prizes to the crown, and employed the materials in the royal arfenals; other veilels were forfeited by the arbitrary sentences of partial courts of juffice. privateers and armed ships England, seeing that their piracies were legalized, multiplied their depredations, and the merchant veilels of Holland daily became the victims of their brutalities. Finally, the atrocities of the Britith ministers were carried to such a point, that they no longer respected the flag of the states, but carried a convoy of Dutch vessels into the ports of England, declaring ships richly laden to be lawful prizes, and violating, as well in Europe as elsewhere, our neutral territory. The only mode which could be adopted to put a stop to these witprecedented injuries, without; however, breaking with the kingdom of Great Britain, was employed by their high mightinesses. This mode confisted in joining. with all possible speed the alliance of the three northern powers, concerted by the empress of Russia, and destined to protect, by the force of arms, the rights of the neutral nations, each of them more or less violated by England.

Their high mightineffes, we fay, would have acceded to this treaty, had not an obstacle been thrown in the way by the perfidious mas chinations of the English cabinet. This was the figural which led England to break every tie, to diftribute letters of marque for making reprifals on the inhabitants of the republic and their possessions; and to declare open war against the A ministry to United States. which all means were alike, could not want pretexts for that purpole. It was not at the fame time difficult for their high mightinesses to demonstrate the frivolity of all these pretended grievances; but what purpose could this answer with a rapacious, obstinate, and unjust ministry, which was defirous to revenge on a peaceable ally the loss of the British colonies, and to anpeafe, for a time at least, by the booty obtained by an unforeseen attack, the murmurs of the English nation?

It was foon after learned, that the iquadrons and armed vestels of England captured, by virtue of orders already furnished, the Dutch vetless they fell in with beyond feas, without the imallest fuspicion on our fide, and against the faith of reaties. We learned the cruel nanner in which the island of St. Eustatia was devastated, by seizing on the possessions of the merchants, which. when collected, formed reasures; while richly laden vessels eturning from the ocean, were furorised unawares in the channel by imall vessels, which readily made them their prey. By fuch vile means, unworthy of a generous nation, did the British ministers dishonour the flag of their king; for can it be confidered in any other point of view, than that of acting, under the royal flag, the part of pirates?

The Batavian republic was at length, after so many losses, sorced to provide for her defence, to maintain her rights and independence by the dint of arms, and to protect her commerce and her possessions. Ah! if she could then have combated under the banners of liberty, how would the English ministry have repented of its rashness and perfidy! But the English cabinet knew all its influence in this coun-It was aware that it could fucceed in thackling within the republic the preparations of war: it was certain of finding in Holland partizans who would contrive to put into his possession our ships of war, and who would find the means to prevent the display of all our strength. The event soon proved that the English ministers were not mistaken. They mocked our feeble efforts, which, even before they they were carried into effect, were paralized in their outlet by the adherents they had in this the complete destruction of our country. These adherents supplied them with intelligence of all that was concerting here. Supported by the Stadtholderian influence, they even contrived to render nugatory the orders given by their high mightinesses for the junction of the Batavian squadron with the French fleet. It was easy for the English ministry, after such treafons; to obtain successes in that war. And this is what they call But when a particular occasion presented itself-when a fleet belonging to the states accidentally met with an opportunity to display its courage and its valour, the Batavian mariners, although novices in fighting, proved that they had not degenerated from the bravery of their ancestors. They drove the English fleet, covered with confusion and shame, into its own port, without having lost one of the merchant vessels they had under convoy.

A war carried on in fuch a way necessarily terminated in a treaty of peace burthensome to the States. Instead of being indemnished for the incalculable losses they had fustained in their commerce, they confidered themselves as fortunate to be enabled by the speedy assistance of the French forces, which checked the English in the two Indies, to fave a part of their posfessions; while they found themfelves obliged to yield to the enemy the important factory of Negapatnam on the coast of Coromandel; and to allow to British vessels the free navigation of the coasts of the Molucca islands, notwithstanding it might have been foreseen that the navigation of the English in those feas would tend to nothing less than trade in the East Indies.

We thall not enter into details concerning what patied in the fequel, when the Batavian nation, feeing how much its interests were constantly

ANNUAL RE Fg2]

cenflantly every where facilitied to those of its ancient rival, even by the persons appointed to defend. ka ngi ta, meditaled a fundamental - pe pegeneration in the form of the go-We flas! not retrace a Wernings to how England, knowing that the enlimiterion of the fornacions ulur- co parion of power and influence, on the part of the Stadtholder, woold also diminish its influence. M ân ti is republic. How, we fay, the Bruith minifry, far from interceding for the Estavian nation, or coming to its fuctour, when legions of foreign troops feized on thefe equatries, committing the most atronous diforders, pillages, and wiolenous, confidered, on the contra y, this devastation and this opprefligg with a muligrant fatisfaction; and concurred, when the mulchief was completed, in guaranteeing, in a foleron monner, the fyftem off a tyranny which refulted from it

the

þΓ

pe:

When the French nation, wearied with the insupportable tyranny. of kings, thook off its yoke, and formed itfell into an independent populate, the British ministers thought that they could not have a bener opportunity to difmember. a part of that fine empire. They accordingly united in the treaty concluded at Pshritz, on the 27th of August, 1791, by the princes of Germany. The French republic, well knowing that that of the United Provinces of the Netherlands would be confirmined by England to take a part in this plot againft its liberty, declared war against the British ministers, as well as againft their fubject William V. stadifielder of the Seven United the Provinces, and his partizans.—It tion traordinary spectacle which the citizens presented on all sides, holding out their arms to their connuerors as to their only deliverers. We saw the allied troops sack and plunder, and those who were called our enemies respect public and private properties.

It was thus that the Netherlands were delivered from their most The stadtdangerous enemies. holder abandoned, in a dastardly way, his country and his friends, and fought at asylum at the court of the king of England. Randard of liberty was planted in all places, while the French republic declared the Batavian nation Free, and re-established it in its primitive rights.

The British ministers, enraged at Yeeing this republic still exist without being in their hands, attempted at least to destroy it another way, by totally undermining its extensive commerce. Upwards of one hundred thips, the greater part richly laden, which either through foul winds, or as a measure of precaution, had sought shelter in British ports, as well as several Dutch ships of war, were laid under embargo, as if to prevent them from falling into the bands of the Their high mightinesses, French. fent commissioners is true, to London to claim them, monstrating by the most folid proofs, that the Batavian republic was no longer under the dominion of France, fince the folemn declaration of its independence, and that England ought to conduct itself towards the Batavian nation, as towards a free people; they added, that the Dutch merchants would not risque the entry of their vessels into the ports of the republic, if it Vol. XXXVIII.

was for no other purpose than to furrender them to the French. The British ministers had, however, already made up their minds to appropriate this booty to themselves; and to augment it, they disseminated on all fides false rumours touching the situation of affairs in this country, to the end that they might, in the same way, allure into their ports the merchant vessels belonging to the republic, which were still at sea. They have since entirely violated the rights of nations; and all the Dutch vessels, to which his majesty the king of Great Britain had granted his high protection, were, in violation of the treaty of Breda, perfidiously declared lawful captures.

But what puts the scal to the acts of hostility and bad faith which the present British ministers have exercifed against this republic, is the treacherous mode in which they have endeavoured to make themselves masters of her colonies. For this purpose they sent letters, figned by the Prince of Orange, and dated at Kew, the 7th of Feb. 1795, to several of the colonies of the republic of the Netherlands in the East Indies and to the Cape of Good Hope. In these letters, this perfidious and ci-devant minister and commander in chief of thefe states, after having abandoned all his posts, ordered, on his individual authority, the respective governors to put the colonies of the States under the protection of the British arms; that is to fay, in the artful and customary language of the English ministry, to surrender them to England. Notwithstanding this felonious stratagem has failed in the greater part of the colonies, through the fidelity of censtantly every where facrificed to those of its ancient rival, even by the persons appointed to defend its rights, meditated a fundamental regeneration in the form of the go-We shall not retrace vernment. how England, knowing that the limitation of the scandalous usurpation of power and influence, on the part of the Stadtholder, would also diminish its influence in this republic. How, we fay, the British ministry, far from interceding for the Batavian nation, or coming to its fuccour, when legions of foreign troops feized on thefe countries, committing the most atrocious diforders, pillages, and violences, confidered, on the contrary, this devastation and this oppression with a malignant satisfaction; and concurred, when the mifchief was completed, in guaranteeing, in a folemn manner, the fystem off a tyranny which resulted from it.

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1795. T92

When the French nation, wearied with the insupportable tyranny of kings, shook off its yoke, and formed itself into an independent republic, the British ministers thought that they could not have a better opportunity to diffmember a part of that fine empire. They accordingly united in the treaty concluded at Pilnitz, on the 27th of August, 1791, by the princes of Germany. The French republic, the valorous French well knowing that that of the United Provinces of the Netherlands would be constrained by England to take a part in this plot against its liberty, declared war against the British ministers, as well as against their subject William V. stadtholder of the Seven United Provinces, and his partizans.—It tion. We foon with is thus that the Batavian natio was once more drawn againft, will into this bloody war by its die pendence on those same minist its treasures were lavished, and arienals nearly emptied, to aid th extravagant plans of Pitt and his cabal. Auxiliary English troop were fent to this republic, when a defeat, fuffsined near the Meule by a part of the Franch atmy, had procured advantage, the army was forced to pais th frontiers, and thole to wage an offentive French territory. the victorious French enemies on all fides, to day the armies of the States retrograde frontiers. The re itself on the brink fince appearances poi: the theatre of war moved to the very provinces, and all inundated. Never w in so critical a posit war with Spain; bu brought about their Providences defeated plans of its enemies defirous rather that should be destroyed thould be free. permitted the croffing before them the Ei with fo much speed, t had not time to effect defign; they fied, bu was traced by fire and was nothing but their precipitate retreat th the republic from a t traordinary spectacle which the citizens presented on all sides, holding out their arms to their conquerors as to their only deliverers. We saw the allied troops sack and plunder, and those who were called our enemies respect public and private properties.

It was thus that the Netherlands were delivered from their most The stadtdangerous enemies. holder abandoned, in a dastardly way, his country and his friends, and fought at afylum at the court of the king of England. standard of liberty was planted in all places, while the French republic declared the Batavian nation free, and re-established it in its primitive rights.

The British ministers, enraged at Seeing this republic still exist without being in their hands, attempted at least to destroy it another way, by totally undermining its extensive commerce. Upwards of one hundred thips, the greater part richly laden, which either through foul winds, or as a measure of precaution, had sought shelter in British ports, as well as several Dutch ships of war, were laid under embargo, as if to prevent them from falling into the bands of the Their high mightinesses, French. fent commissioners is true, to London to claim them, monstrating by the most solid proofs, that the Batavian republic was no longer under the dominion of France, fince the folemn declaration of its independence, and that England ought to conduct itself towards the Batavian nation, as towards a free people; they added, that the Dutch merchants would not risque the entry of their vessels into the ports of the republic, if it Vol. XXXVIII.

was for no other purpose than to furrender them to the French. The British ministers had, however, already made up their minds to appropriate this booty to themselves; and to augment it, they disseminated on all fides false rumours touching the situation of affairs in this country, to the end that they might, in the same way, allure into their ports the merchant vessels belonging to the republic, which were still at sea. They have fince entirely violated the rights of nations; and all the Dutch vessels, to which his majesty the king of Great Britain had granted his high protection, were, in violation of the treaty of Breda, perfidiously declared lawful captures.

But what puts the feal to the acts of hostility and bad faith which the present British ministers have exercifed against this republic, is the treacherous mode in which they have endeavoured to make themselves masters of her colonies. For this purpose they sent letters, figned by the Prince of Orange, and dated at Kew, the 7th of Feb. 1795, to several of the colonies of the republic of the Netherlands in the East Indies and to the Cape of Good Hope. In these letters, this perfidious and ci-devant minister and commander in chief of thefe states, after having abandoned all his posts, ordered, on his individual authority, the respective governors to put the colonies of the States under the protection of the British arms; that is to fay, in the artful and customary language of the English ministry, to surrender them to England. Notwithstanding this felonious stratagem has failed in the greater part of the colonies, through the fidelity of their governors, it was impossible to prevent the Cape of Good Hope, from falling into the hands of the English; and several important possessions of these States, in the East Indies, have shared the same fate.

While all this was taking place, the British ministry conceived the plan of attacking also by land this free republic, and of employing for that purpose those soldiers, who being more attached to the prince of Orange than to their country, emigrated on the flattering promifes of England.—The fugitives were not only well received in the States of his Britannic Majesty in Germany, but were even kept in the pay of England; and if the desertion of the greater part of the army of the republic could have been brought about, there is no doubt but they would have been led against their country under English commanders, for the purpose of renewing here, if the fact were possible, the scenes of 1787: of kindling up, as in La Vendée, a disastrous civil war, and of thus destroying the Batavian republic by intestine commotions.

Is it therefore furprising that the Batavian nation, now free, leeks to reinforce itself against such unprecedented and numerous outrages, by an intimate alliance with a republic which fnatched it from the gripes of its enemics? A treaty of peace and alliance was accordingly concluded at the Hague, on the 16th of May, 1795, between the two free republics of France and Holland. That treaty of mutual defence by which the independent Batavian nation, supported by a powerful neighbour, and unthaken by the influence of a foreign minister, will be put into a conditation to employ for the future its forces against its aggressors, and of paying them in their own coin, has also been cemented.

His majesty, the king of Great Britain, after so many hostilities have been exercised, was at length pleased to proclaim, on the 19th of September, 1795, by his council of state, a manifesto of war against the republic, but in which no ground of complaint was alledged. His majesty, it is true, says in this manifesto, " that for some time divers acts of outrage, contrary to. the honour of his majesty's crown, and of the legitimate rights of bla fubjects, had been committed in the United Provinces, and that the ships of war which sailed from the . ports of the United Provinces, had received orders to take and fink all British vessels." The acts contrary to the honour of his majesty's crown which have been committed in the Netherlands, are the acts of his majesty's own troops, and the English nation will, undoubtedly, fooner or later, punish their authors; and with respect to the orders given to the ships of war of the republic, to repel violence by violence, has not the independent republic, so craelly treated, a right of refistance? his majesty had forgotten that the Netherlands were no longer under the stadtholderian yoke, and that his majesty's ministers had lost for ever, as we trust. for the fafety of the country, all influence over the independent Batavian republic.

It is therefore with a perfect confidence in that love of the country, in that energy, and in that courage with which liberty alone can inspire a nation, for:a long time insulted and oppressed, e independent Batavian naolemnly declares in the face ope, through the organ of timate representatives, that, I to defend itself against the f perfidy and violence of the jouring kingdom of Great 1, it will repel every act of fion on its liberty, its indeace, its rights, and its legipossessions; and that it will execution all possible means eive fatisfaction and indemor the incalculable lottes it istained through a persidious -in the firm hope that Divine lence, who has so miracupreserved this country from al ruin, will bless its arms, vill not allow violence and Hon ever to fix their fatal on its free territory. ne at the Hague, May 2, 1796, eond year of Batavian free-esto of Spain against Great Britain.

om.

Madrid, October 11.

Majesty has transmitted to councils a decree of the folgenor:

s of the principal motives that nined me to make peace with rench Republic, as foon as vernment had begun to afa regular and stable form, he manner in which Engbehaved to me during the of the war, and the just ist which I ought to feel for ture from the experience of ad faith, which began to be ested at the most critical moof the first campaign; in the er with which Admiral Hood d my squadron at Toulon, : he was employed folely in ruining all that he could not carry away himself; and afterwards in the expedition which he undertook against the Island of Corsica—an expedition which he undertook without the knowledge, and which he concealed with the greatest care from Don Juan de Langara, while they were together at Tou-lon.

This fame bad faith the English minister has suffered clearly to appear by his filence upon the fubject of all his negotiations with other powers, particularly in the treaty concluded on the 19th November, 1794, with the United States of America, without any regard to my rights, which were well known to him. I remarked it again in his repugnance to the adoption of my plans and ideas which might accelerate the termination of the war, and in the vague reply which Lord Grenville gave to my ambassador, the Marquis del Campo, when he demanded fuccours of him to continue it. He completely confirmed me in the certainty of his bad faith, by the injustice. with which he appropriated the rich cargo of the Spanish ship le St. Jago, or l'Achille, at first taken by the French, and afterwards retaken by the English fquadron, and which ought to have been reffored to me according to the convention made between my Secretary of State and Lord St. Helens, ambaffador from his Britannic Majesty; afterwards by the detention of all the ammunition which arrived in the Dutch thips for the supply of my squadrons, by affecting always different difficulties to put off the restitution of them. Finally, I could no longer entertain a doubt of the bad faith of England, when I learnt the frequent landing from her ships the coasts of Chili, upon to carry on a contraband trade, and to reconnoitre the shore under the pretence fishing for whales, a privilege which she pretended to have granted her by the convention of Nootka. Such were the proceedings of the British minister to cement the ties of friendship and reciprocal confidence, which he had engaged to maintain according to our convention of the 25th May, 1793.

0 2

Since I have made peace with the French Republic, not only have I had stronger motives for supposing an intention on the part of England to attack my possessions in America, but I have also received direct infults which perfuade me that the English minister wishes to oblige me to adopt a part contrary to the interests of humanity, torn by the bloody war which ravages Europe, for the termination of which I have not ceased to offer my good offices, and to testify my constant solici-

In fact, England has developed her intentions, has clearly evinced her project of getting possession of my territories, by fending to the Antilles a confiderable force, and against St. particularly destined Domingo, as the proclamations of her general in that island clearly demonstrate. She has also made known her intentions by the effablishments which her commercial companies have formed upon the banks of the Missouri, in South America, with a defign of penetrating through those countries to the South Sea. Finally, by the conquest which she has made of the colony of Demerary, belonging to the Dutch, and whose advantageous position puts her in a condition to get possession of posts still more important.

But there can no longer remain any doubt of the hostile nature of these projects, when I confider the frequent infults to my flag, the acts of violence committed in the Mediterranean by her frigates, which have carried away foldiers coming from Genoa to Barcelona, on board Spanish ships, to complete my armies; the piracies and vexations which the Corfican and Anglo-Corfican corfairs, protected by the English government of that island, exercise against the Spanish trade in the Mediterranean, and even upon the coafts of Catalonis, and the detention of different Spanish ships, laden with Spanish property, and carried to England, under the most frivolous pretences, and especially the rich cargo of the Spanish ship the Minerva, on which an embargo was laid in the most infulting manner to my flag, and the removal of which could not be obtained, though it was demonstrated before the competent tribunals that this rich cargo was Spanish property.

The attack committed upon my ambassador, Don Simon de las Casas, by a tribunal of London, which decreed his arrest, founded upon the demand of a very small fum, which was claimed by the. undertaker of an embarkation. Finally, the Spanish territory has been violated in an intolerable manner upon the coasts of Galicia and Alicant by the English ships the Cameleon and the Kanguroe. Moreover, Captain George Vaughan, commodore of the Alarm, behaved in a manner equally insolent and scandalous in the island of Trindad, where he landed with drums beating and slags slying, to attack the French, and to avenge the injuries which he pretended to have received, disturbing, by the violation of the rights of my sovereignty, the tranquillity of the inhabitants of the island.

commodore

By all these insults, equally deep and unparalleled, that nation has proved to the universe, that the recognizes no other laws than the aggrandisement of her commerce; and by her despotism, which has exhausted my patience and moderation she has forced me, as well to support the honour of my crown, as to protect my people against her attacks, to declare war against the King of England, his kingdom and vasfals, and to give orders to take the necessary measures for the defence of my domains and my fubjects, and to repulse the enemy.

Signed by the King, and the Seccretary of the Council of War.

Done at the Palace of St. Laurenzo, Oct. 5, 1796.

On Saturday, the 8th of October, war was proclaimed at Madrid in the usual form.

Letter of General Beaulieu, sent to the Genoese Government on entering the Genoese Territory.

Head Quarters, March 30, 1796.

Most Serene Republic,

THE circumstances of the war, and, above all, the insolence of an enemy whose unjust pretensions know no bounds, compel me, at length, to enter your territory, with a part of that force which has been entrusted to my command by his Imperial Majesty.

I am persuaded, that after what has passed at Genoa, your Republic will consider the Imperial troops as friends. Far be it that they should do you the least injury; their object is only to prevent the enemies of good order from invading your states, the defence of which is committed to me.

The republic may be affured that I shall consider its territories as a friendly country, and that the strictest discipline shall be maintained. All provisions, wood, and straw, shall be paid for in ready money. I require only quarters and a free passage for my troops; and I trust the most Serene Republic will issue proper orders that the troops of his Imperial Majesty may meet with no obstacle, and that every occasion of dispute may be avoided.

(Signed) BARON BEAULIEU, General of Artillery.

Address of the French Minister Feypoule, at Genoa.

Most Serene Doge,

THE executive directory of the French Republic have made choice of me to reside at the Republic of Genoa in quality of minister plenipotentiary.

On their part I assure the most ferene government of Genoa, of the lively interest the Republic of France takes in the prosperity and safety of the Genoese nation.

This sentiment is merely the consequence of the natural and reciprocal esteem of two people signalized by their courage and energy in the desence, and for the recovery of their liberty. Other powerful considerations ought to contribute to cement for ever the good harmony that subsists between Q 3

Genoa and France; the proximity of the two constries, the indultious activity of the inhabitants, the antiquity of their commercial and political connection, and, in fine, the remarkable fituation of the Genoese territory, bordering on two nations who have long meditated to divide it between them, and France who could reap no advantage in aggrandizement at her expence.

The Genoese nation, and its most ferene government, may rely on a constant succession of good offices on the part of the French nation, and reciprocally the French nation has a right to expect a loyal and fincere return on the part of the most serene government of Genoa. They have a right to think the latter will never give protection to those perfidious French, who are the contempt of the whole universe, to those emigrants who cowardly fled their country to conspire against it. The executive directory feel the full extent of the duty imposed on them by the confidence of a great nation, from a free, a generous, and magnanimous people.

The executive directory are about to crush the remains of those enemies who disturb the tranquillity of France, while their energetic measures have already guaranteed to Europe their immovable stability, and announce to all that the national power consided to them, ought and will be saithful and sincere in respect to foreign nations.

Truth and justice are the only basis of their diplomatica. In time, they trust they are worthy of that greatness and national generosity, not merely to limit their cares to the interest of France alone, but also to extend them to the happiness of those nations which have shewn themselves the sincere friends of the French. They may henceforward regard their equity and power, as forming the tutelary guide of their preservation.

I have the honour to present my credentials to the most Serene Doge, and to assure him, that in the exercise of my function, I shall ever be animated with an ardent desire to be personally agreeable to the serene government of Genoa, and to obtain the considence and the esteem of the Genoese nation.

Copy of the Note of the Envoy Extreordinary and Plenipotentiary of the French Republic, dated 22 Messider (July 10,) fourth year, to the Secretary of State.

FOR several days past movements have manifested themselves among the inhabitants of Genoa and its environs, the cause of which could not escape the undersigned, because it is injurious to the French Republic. It is falsely infinuated to the people, that the French wish to take away their property, their arms, their churches.

Under the eyes of the most serene government the priests deviate from the spirit of peace, which should be peculiarly characteristic of their speeches and actions; they inflame the imaginations of the people by religious ceremonies, grounded on the danger which the Genoese nation is supposed to run.
The women collect in great numbers, and repair in crowds to the churches, praying Heaven to protect them against the banditti who are come from the moun:ains.
These movements have been directed

rected against the French, in such a manner, that last Wednesday, July 6, a band of women assailed, on the bridge of Lavignano, two Frenchmen, who were peaceably taking a sketch of the bridge.

The underfigued cannot believe that the most serene government is provoking by any particular meature this alarm, which has no foundation, fince the French Republic is the friend of nations that are at peace with her; fince the respects their liberty, their commerce, and their property. These truths must be demonstrated to the senate of Genoa; and it cannot but be by some base perfidy that the instigators of the present ferment speak to the people of the just fate of Arquata, and divers places which the infurrection in Lombardy had changed into dens of affaffins and robbers.

As it is important to flop in its growth an evil which might prove tatal in its consequences, the underfigned requests the most serene government to take the measures in its power to undeceive the people, respecting the false impressions endeavoured to be made on them. The men who miflead them are known; the Genoese government can no longer fuffer their plots and infolent declamations against the French, without offending French Republic, and becoming responsible for the misfortunes which might attend upon a reciprocal irritation of minds. It ought to deprive the impostors of the faculty of deceiving, by all the exaggerations which they do not cease to devise and to circulate, by informing the people of the demands which General Buonaparte and the underfigned have really addressed to the senate, and of the general motives on which they were founded.

The underfigned begs the most serene government to communicate to him the effective measures which, in its wisdom, it shall resolve on, to prevent the consequences of the present ferment, in order that he may be able to acquaint the Executive Directory, and the general of the army of Italy, with its real dispositions.

(Signed) FAYPOULT.

Letter from the Commissary Director Sucy, to the Commandant of Fort La Lauterne.

> St. Pierre d'Arena, 25 Fructidor. SIR.

THE agents of the government here have guaranteed our landing goods in the harbour of St. Pierre d'Arena, nevertheless two English floops have gone out of port, and passed before your post, in order to carry off our vessel, and it was not till the floops were at a distance with their prize that you commenced firing, which you did not keep up, and which you discontinued when the English ships were within reach. Yet you cannot be ignorant of the fact, because we fired more than thirty times before you were disposed to oppose this violation of neutrality.

You will, Sir, acknowledge the receipt of the present.

(Signed) S. Sucy.

REPLY.

COMMISSARY DIRECTOR!

THE commandant of Fort Lauterne has the honour to acquaint you that he could never have imagined that the English sloops of war which came out of the har-

4 bour

200] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

bour would be guilty of a violation of neutrality, and the rather, as they had given their wo dot honour not to make reprifes for 24 hours after their departure; and even then not within cannon shot of the garrison.

For these reasons I could not interdict the departure of the sloop alluded to from this harbour.

As soon as I received the accounts of the violence committed on the French tartan, I gave directions for my batteries to prevent the accomplishment of the attempt began on the said tartan, and at the same time to maintain our neutrality.

If the effect of these directions has not answered my expectation, the miscarriage is not to be as-cribed to any neglect of mine.

I have the honour to be, With the most fincere esteem, fir,

Your obedient humble servant, BEDIANI, lieutenant-colonil. Fort Lauterne, 12th Sept. 1796.

Letter from his Excellency M. Barthelemy, Ambassador of the French Republic, to the Burgomasters, Chief Magistrates, Landamman, and Council of the Twelve Swiss Cantons.

Magnificent lords,

THE executive directory having thought proper to renew the credentials of several of the envoys of the French republic to foreign powers, has just transmitted to me those by which it has been pleased to accredit me to the very respectable Helvetic body, in quality of ambassador of the French republic. I enclose them in this.

I flatter myself, magnificent lords, that the knowledge you already have of my fentiments for all the members of the illustrious Helver tic confederation, will leave you no doubt of my zeal to cultivate the confidence of which you have already given me fuch fatisfactors proofs; and I also hope, magnificent lords, that you will be perfuaded beforehand, that, as the faithful interpreter of the constantly amicable dispositions of the French government to your country, I shall not cease to exert myfelf zealously in concurring to the fuccess of its views, in whatever may be the best calculated to strengthen the indisfoluble ties which constitute the happiness of the two nations, and to secure the tranquillity and prosperity of the Helvetic body.

I pray God, &c.
(Signed) BARTHELENS.
Baste, March 2, 1796.

Letter of the Executive Directory to the Highly Respectable Helvetic Body.

Very dear, great friends, allies, and confederates,

THE wish we entertain to keep up and cultivate a friendship and good understanding with you, induces us to appoint citizen Barthelemy to reside in Switzerland in quality of ambassador of the French republic.

The knowledge we have of the principles and fentiments of citizen Barthelemy, authorifes us to think that the choice we have made of him to fill this important polt, cannot but be agreeable to you. It is with this persuasion that we pray you, very dear great friends, allies, and confederates, to grant him a full confidence in whatever he may be charged to say to you from us, and more particularly when he shall express to you our wishes for the prosperity of the Helvetic body, our anxiousness to concur in whatever may contribute to its satisfaction, and to strengthen the bonds which unite the two republics.

STATE PAPERS.

Given at Paris under the seal of the French republic, 15 pluviose, sourth year of the French republic, one and indivisible.

REUBEL, President.
By the executive directory.
The secretary general.

LA GARDE.

By the minister of external relations, CH. DELACROIX.

Declaration of the Executive Directory, dated Paris the 16th Germinal (5 April) to the Senate of Basse.

THE executive directory is credibly informed, that last year a plan was formed to attack the French frontiers, by marching the corps of emigrants commanded by the prince of Conde, first into the Frickthal, and from thence through the territory from Basse, against department of the Upper Rhine, the Mont-Terrible, Doubs, and Jura; that this plan, so far from being laid aside, is again resumed; and that preparations are actually making to carry it into ef-This plan is supported by several inhabitants of Switzerland, who employ all their interest and influence to facilitate its execution. The known sentiments of several magistrates of Basle, and other inhabitants of note, are by no means qualified to appeale the solicitude of the directory on this head, it being notorious that they treat with as much aversion the friends of the French republic, as they shew predilection for whatever concerns the Imperial armies, and the interest of the emperor.

Thus it must be supposed, that in the execution of that plan, the enemy violated territory of the canton of Basle, the magistrates who compose the government of this city, would endeavour, by pleading the impossibility of resistance, to ward off the consequences of the violated neutrality of the canton; of course, there does not exist at present, sufficient security that its neutrality will be respected. Under these circumstances, the directory finds itself obliged to declare to the magistrates of the city and canton of Basse, that, unless they adopt vigorous, fufficient, and unfuspicious measures for the defence of their own territory, and the maintenance of the respect due to their neutrality, it is resolved to takeevery step that shall be requisite for the protection of the frontier departments against every kind of infult; and the directory renders them answerable for all the unhappy consequences that may result from the military operations which circumstances may require.

Letter from the Sovereign Council of Baste to his Excellency M. Barthelemy, Ambassador from the French Republic in Switzerland.

WE have received, with your excellency's letter of the 16th germinal, (5 April) a paper, coming from the executive directory, and as it appears extracted from their registers—we pass over this unusual form, because it is to be supposed that it was through mistake that the paper was so transmitted to us, and that without doubt the intention intention of the directory was folely to transmit to us, though the medium of the minister for foreign affairs, the result of their deliberations. But if the form surprised us, the contents of the paper excited our surprise in a much greater degree; of this our reply will convince your excellency.

The executive directory annonnce to us, that the corps of emigrants meditates an invasion of our territory. It does not belong to us to call in question the proofs which the directory fay they have received; we shall confine ourfelves to observe, that at the opening of each campaign mention has always been made of a project of this kind, and that nevertheless it has never been carried into execution; fo that we are fill to know, whether the reports that are fpread are merely a trick of war, or whether fuch a defign has been renounced either from the uncertainty of decifive fuccess, or the want of accordance with other events that were to concur with it; or finally, whether, and much more probably, it be, because the emperor, faithful to his engagement to respect our neutrality, has forbidden the peace of an independent people to be disturbed, who for feveral ages, contented with their limits, have taken no part in the diffentions of the great powers of Europe. In short, we can assure you that at present the danger, if danger does exist, does not appear to be imminent. corps of emigrants is at too great a distance from our frontiers; it does not form a sufficient force to dare to attempt an invasion, and we do not perceive yet preparations which are the forerunners of hostilities, and indispensable to the execution of hostilities.

The fecond point of the note of the executive directory concerns the defence of our territorry and the demand of a sufficient guarantee. No people can give such s guarantee. If belligerent powers, with their fortrefles, their arms, their efforts in every sense, cannot procure the guarantee, that their territory shall not be violated, much lefs can a neutral itate procure and affemble forces, whose mass would perhaps afford. more umbrage than it would inspire security. Besides the expence of fuch a force, and the provisions that it would require, above our means, the circumstances of the times weaken more and more. But there is another kind of guarantee, which we deem more fure than a great affemblage of troops; it is the firm resolution of all the governments of Switzerland, not to depart from the principles of neutrality which they have inherited from their ancestors, and of which all our neighbours have a positive conviction; it is the facred word, which the members of the Helvetic body, either feparately or united, in folemn diet, have given. It is the local difficulties that would attend a paffage through our territory, without being exposed to a certain loss from the measures of prudence, which the attacked canton might take, and without renouncing every hope of retreat, by the arrival of contingents from our confederates as zealous avenge the outrages offered to neutrality, as religious in the obfervance of the duties of neutrality. It is the dispositions taken to be warned in time of every species of danger, to circulate the alarm, and to be in a condition even to repel and punish aggression when the danger should have made its appearance. Finally, it is the experience and the fuccess of these dispositions, during four years of a war the most bloody of which modern history has preserved the remembrance.

. Diarned

We proceed to the acculations, which the executive directory have made against certain magistrates and private persons of our canton and of the other states of the Helvetic body. So vague an accufation, and of fuch a kind, is probably without example. The moral perion of the fovereign in republics is manifested only by resolutions emanating from the council of the state, and not from the particular opinions of individuals; and whatever be the difference of opinion amongst the latter, there is a first opinion, which is as general as it is effential and fundamental; it is the love of our country, and the deep and universal conviction, that neutrality is the batis of our political existence. It unites all minds, all counsels, all governments. invite the executive directory to confider here only the affembly. We are to be gained by proceedings of justice, benevolence, and friendthip; our hearts are to be alienated by indefinite reproaches and random suspicions. What if these suspicions should perhaps be founded only on documents, dictated by men, whose reprehensible views either of vengeance or malevolence, of ambition or cupidity, should have led them to exaggerate what is infignificant, to blacken what is innocent; and to disguise what our political actions in their true point of view would disclose?

Finally, the executive directory render us responsible for the fatal! effects which may refult from military operations. Governments, we know, are responsible for the faults which they commit with the intention of violating their But tranquillifed by our principles, and proud of the femie of the purity and equity of our measures, we accept this relie nsibility. We are one for all in the bosom of our councils, and it is in the same sense that we rely not only upon all our own resources, but upon all the members of the Helvetic confederation Responfibility can only alarm those who, breaking the ties which have united for several ages the two nations, should prepare evils of which human prudence cannot calculate the issue to their authors.

Very different sentiments have animated your excellency during the course of your painful mission. The executive directory have teftified in the renewal of your credentials their just and honourable We have no doubt fatisfaction. that they will receive with favourable dispositions the answer which we have the honour to address to your excellency, after having deliberated in concert with the Helvetic representitives.

We pray God to take you into his holy and powerful keeping.

(Signed) The burgomasters and council of the city and canton of Basse.

Baste, April 9, 1796.

Letter of M. Barthelemy, Ambaffader, from the French Republic, to the Canton of Bosle, 20th Florent, (May 9) 1796; Fourth Year of the French Republic.

, Magnificent

204] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

Magnificent Lords,

THE orders of the executive directory of the French republic oblige me to recall the attention of your honourable canton to the circumstances and motives which dictated the declaration of the directory, I was charged to transmit to you, on the 16th of germinal last. The answer you have made has not been such as was expected. Charged with the care of the defence of the territory of the republic, and of its glory, the executive directory was bound to look forward to events, and to render abortive, by denouncing to you, the projects of the enemies of France, and of its republican con-Mitution. It was bound to invite you to take measures capable of removing its apprehensions, and making its neutrality respected; and it has demanded of you what were these measures.

If the terms of its declaration were severe, it was because the object of it was ferious: it was because experience of the attempts and projects of our enemies, already more than once denounced, gave it reason to conceive inquietude and suspicion. It was because positive reports announced, that these projects were about to It was because it be renewed. was then necessary to be certain, as to the more than equivocal fentiments of many of the Helvetic states, some of whom had not dreaded to throw a doubt on the existence of the French republic, by refusing to pronounce on the acceptance of the credentials of its ambassador, deferring the and epoch of their determination by infulting and ridiculous delays.

When a government so powerful as that of the French republic is thus unacknowledged; when this neglect is founded on the regard which is thought due to criminal fugitives, whose whole proceedings tend only to harais their country, against which they are in a permanent conspiracy, while their measures tend only to involve in their fall the states blind enough to be missed by them; when the Swifs Cantons, the ancient allies of France, dare to hold a conduct so reprehensible, is it very surprising that the executive directory should, for a moment, withhold the aspect of kindness, to assume towards you that of inquietude? There are still other considerations, on which I believe I need not en-They are, doubtless, large here. painful, and belong to the guarantee, that the French republic expects to find in the fentiments and, affections of the governments and people of neutral itates.

Such are the views which have animated and still animate the executive directory. They expect from you, with the least delay, a frank and amicable explanation, capable of dissipating the doubts and reviving in our government the sentiments of good will. It has given me orders for my ultimate conduct, in case that your answer should not fulfil this end.

Answer of the Canton of Bafle to M.

Barthelemy, Ambassador of the French Republic, May 11, 1796.

WE see with real pain, by your excellency's letter of the 20th Florreal, that our sentiments seem to be misunderstood, and that we have reason to apprehend the executive directory of the French republic may suspend their dispositions of kindness towards us. When the war commenced, we declared for a neutrality, to preserve which has fince that time been the constant object of our cares, of our zeal, and of our solicitude; and no sacrifice has been avoided for maintaining it in proportion to the dangers to which it was in certain epochs exposed. Nothing afflicts us more profoundly, than when the sidelity of our conduct and the purity of our intentions seem to be doubted, since these form the most solid basis of our happiness, independence, and tranquillity.

clared

We pray your excellency to affure your government that we shall never depart from the principles that have been transmitted to us from our predecessors, and that our greatest ambition is to convey the deposit unimpaired to those who shall succeed us. This is the first duty of our fituations, and the true means of conciliating the confidence and the gratitude of our fellow-citizens. It is however, necessary to observe, that since our letter of the 9th of April, we have not confined ourselves to mere wishes for the maintenace of our Our uneafiness relaneutrality. tive to this object having been communicated to the minister of his Imperial majesty, he has written to us, by order of the emperor, that certainly he had not the least thought of acting, nor of permitting the emigrants to act against the cantons, in any manner which might disturb the tranquillity of their territory. We have prepared our fignals and our alarm guns, which, on account of the armistice and the winter feafon, had been neglected; and it is generally known that by these means a very great force can be affembled in a few days. We have exercised our troops, and they are ready to march on the first signal. They will be added to the contingents of the other cantons which affemble in our's, and are directed to redouble their vigilance in the posts confided to them. The representatives of the Helvetic body, deputed to us for confidering the state of affairs, for acting in the name of the whole confederation, and informing their constituents of every danger which may approach our flates, allow no means to escape them of consolidating the repose of the common country. We have written to our co-allies, to remind them of the treaties which unite us, and we have received the unanimous affurance that all are ready to fly to our affiftance and defend our frontiers.

We conclude, by praying your excellency to transmit those details to the directory; and, above all, to fortify them against the exaggerated reports that an excess of zeal may have occasioned.

Official Note, transmitted by Mr. Wickham, Minister Plenipotentiary from his Britannic Majesty to the Senate of Berne, the 26th of June, 1796.

MAGNIFICENT AND POWER-FUL LORDS.

IN consequence of the resolution agreed to and published by your state, respecting all the French indiscriminately who have taken resuge in your country, several of the heads of families of these unfortuate victims to their attachment to the ancient laws of their country, have addressed themselves to me, to obtain the means to repair to England, where they hope at last to find repote, and a secure asylum against the cruelty of their persecutors.

It is with extreme concern. magnificent lords, that I find myfelf obliged to reture their request, and to declare to all of them that I cannot grant a pallport to any of them until I have received orders from my court. I think it necesfury, magnificent lords, to communicate to you my refolution upon this subject, in order that the perions, to whom it relates, may not be suspected of any neglect or tardiners in obeying the ordonnance made respecting them. God forbid that, in taking such a resolution, I should pretend to set bounds to the munificence of my fovereign, or the generofity of his subjects, which I hope will exist as long as the monarchy itself. We have always, magnificent lords, a confidence that our means will be increased by divine favour, in proportion as they are employed in affifting the unfortunate.

But it is my duty, in this unforefeen case, to take no steps without having previously communicated to my coutt all the circumstances which have preceded, accompanied, and sollowed this measure, and entreated his Majesty to give me the most distinct orders for the regulation of my conduct in all that relates to this business.

I do not hefitate to avow that I have not been without hope that the delay, which might be caused by my resolution in the execution of the order against those who have no other asylum but England, would have offered to your lord-ships an opportunity of considering of every mitigating circumstance, of which this case is capable. Perhaps also this delay may lead those persons, who have urged this meafure, to think deliberately both upon its nature and the consequences which may ensue from it.

Whatever may be the event, magnificent lords, in adopting and communicating this resolution to your lordthips, if I can be the means of faving any one of those respectable families from exhanteing their last resources in taking a long and dangerous voyage, I thall think that I have performed my duty to my God and my king; and i dare aniwer, that whatever may be the affection and friendship which the king, my master, (after the example of his august predecessors) feels for your lordships, these sentiments must be much firengthened, when I shall have laid before him a fresh act of your's -of that generous and enlarged humanity which forms the distinguithed character of his reign, and • which our two nations have formerly exercifed to the unhappy refugees from that fame country.

With the fincerest wishes for the prosperity and happiness ofyour state, I am, Magnificent and powerful lords, your lordship's most devoted servant, (Signed) W. WICKHAM.

Articles of the Concordat agreed upon among the different Parties in Geneva, as well as the Resolution taken by the Syndics and Council on this Subject.

ART. I. RESPECT to the law, obedience to the magistrate, engage both parties united, to maintain the government at the risk of their lives, with dispatch, and entire readiness, as often as necessity require it, to suppress every insubordination or violence; ife the legitimate authority to pected, and the free and im-I administration of justice and

4

A full and entire abrogation the fentences pronounced by evolutionary tribunals, and icere and loyal abjuration of iblic and personal vengeance . against any individual what-

Such persons so proscribed, est assured of an inviolable n in the bosom of the union the citizens, for which we abour, and of which we thall an example.—This furely be pronounced by the nation, first article of the preliminapon which that union shall ınded.

A fincere mutual return, and able attachment of both parius united in the three funital principles, already coned by our primitive laws, and refent constitution; namely, cal equality, removal from coffices, and the separation vers.

The citizens who have hitherreffed a diflike to the revoluf 1792, declare, "That with t to the new legislation, now Rate of formation, they will e themselves in demanding i more moderate application I be made, with respect to emoval from office, and the tion of the powers, than which exitis at prefent; as he re-cstablishment of the of our ancient governwhich are not incompatible the three fundamental prin-announced above. The citi-

1792, acknowledge that these demands accord with the true interefts of the republic, and receive that declaration with pleasure; they confider it as inviolable and facred, and declare, on their part, that they will formally adhere to it.

5. The affembly decree, that this address shall be printed, made public, and tent to the fyndics and administrative council, desiring, that, in their wildom, they will incessantly consider of the means adapted to the public interest, and of folemnly confectating the reengagements contained ciprocal therein.

L. A. CONSTANTINE (Signed) BLANC.

Geneva, 31, August, 1795, Fourth Year of the Genevele Equality.

Extract from the registers of the administrative council.—Monday, August 31, 1795, fourth year of the Genevele equality.

Official Note of Count Bernflorff, Danish Minister of State.

THE tystem of his, Danish Majafty, uninfluenced by passions and prejudices, is merely governed by reason and truth, and constantly such modifications are adopted as are rendered both just and unavoidable by the obvious change in the posture of public affairs. So long as no other than a revolutionary government existed in France, his majesty could not acknowledge the minister of that government; but now that the French constitution is completely organized, and a regular government established in France, his majesty's obligation ceases in that respect, and M. Grouvelle will therefore be acknowledged in the attached to the revolution of usual form. For the rest, this slep remains remains an isolated measure, being neither more nor less than the natural consequence of circumstances, and an additional proof of the complete and truly impartial neutrality of the king.

208] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

February, 1796.

Citizen Grouvelle, Minister Plenipotentiary from the French Republic in Denmark, to his Excellency Count de Bernstorff, Minister of the Council of State to his Danish Majesty, and of the Department for Foreign Affairs.

Copenhagen, 27 Ventose, 4th Year of the Republic.

THE German papers, fir, have inserted the extract of an instruction, which appears to have been addressed in a circular manner by you to the minifiers of Denmark, at the different courts, and which concerns the resolutions adopted by his majesty, to give to the character of minister plenipotentiary from the French republic, in which character I have refided for two years and a half at this court, a fuitable publicity by admitting me to a private audience. every reason to consider this extract as authentic, and in this character I feel myself bound to address you. Of whatever reflections the principle and spirit of that extract may be susceptible, my design is not to comment upon it all. The government, whose representative 1 am, possesses, as well as myself, a scrupulous respect for the independence of governments, and even a regard for their private convenience. tyrannical and intriguing The fystem of aiking on every subject official explanations, would be as contrary to their principles as to my own character. To make an incident of a phrase, to attach a deplomatic importance to each word; to render the flightest discussed personal, to featon with arrogance the ennui of a laborious epificiary controverly, is a part which we have lately seen played by certain agents, who quarrel for want of business, who know not how to ferve their courts, but by infulting others, and who represent nothing more than the vices of their nations? ridicule and contempt are attached to them; their example is fit to be recollected, only because it is proper to be avoided. As the French republic makes it her glory to folk low a contrary fystem to that of the powers who acknowledge facts ministers, I honour myself for being a contrast to them in all my proceedings.

But, fir, I cannot dispense with fixing my attention upon the conclusion of the extract of your infiruction above mentioned, and seeing that the result is announced in terms which, by their too general acceptation, may lead to abulish interpretation. I have thought that it is necessary to have an amicable understanding with you.

In speaking of my admission, and of the public acknowledgment of my character, you say, that this: step is isolated, and means nothing but what it is in itself. Do you not apprehend that the disaffected will fee, in this mode of expression, fort of restriction, of implicit referve; that they may go so far as to suppose that it alludes to I know not what other declaration or anterior measure which may have been adopted to the same courts to which your ministers may have held this official language? That even attributing the publication to you, they may give a fort of credit to the inductions? Undoubtedly you will fee with pain that the public receives them; for however forced they may be, they injure the idea which the court of Denmark wishes always to give of the frankness of its proceedings. That after having so long delayed a measure, become necessary to her own confideration, as well as to the dignity of the republic, she might be again suspected of wishing to destroy the good effect fecretly, and to weaken whatever advantage the measure might produce to France. Would not this be a real inconvenience? I only wish to point out what in this concerns your own reputation.

On the other hand, fir, the government, now blished on a new constitution, refumes its rank among the other European powers. It will of course be extremely cautious not to incur the charge of inconfistency, nor to fuffer any stain to attach on its dignity, nor in any respect to sanction by injustice the detraction of its calumniators. The government well know the influence of public opinion, and will not fail to fet themselves right in the estimation of the world, when their adversaries are bufily employed in corrupting it.

Although they feel themselves far superior to flattery and ostentation, and direct all their operations with that considence which arises from the wisdom of their councils, and the energy of their measures; yet, the value they set upon their connection with Denmark, renders it impossion for them to behold with an eye of indifference, a circumstance which conveys a harsh reflection on their conduct. The abuse that might be made of your note, gave them much concern, and it was with extreme fatisfaction that they received a testimony of the rectitude of your intentions. A loyal government stoops not to a disavowal, because it afferts nothing but the truth. A wise government ought to contemn falle reports, but a benevolent government, or only an impartial one, will not reject overtures to an explanation, especially if it is demanded with amicable views.

Vol. XAXVIII.

It is with this view, fir, that I now discharge this important duty. a duty which, though painful, is still necessary to prevent an interruption of the existing harmony between our respective states, which ought to be united more closely than ever. If personal consideration were of any weight, I should give my opinion that this is not an unimportant object, and perhaps the occurrences, which preceded my admittion, were not of the most conciliatory nature, and may produce some embarrassments in the event, at least with respect to this The first observation fubmit to your wisdom, and the latter remark to your delicacy.

(Signed) GROUVELLE.

Answer of Count Bernstorff. SIR,

I AM very sensible and grateful for the sentiments expressed in the letter which I have had the honour to receive from you. They increase my esteem, and though I cannot add any thing to that which I have verbally pronounced to you, I enter with pleasure into your wishes; and I do not hesitate to give you friendly explanations, even on the objects

210] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

objects which do not admit of minitterial discussions. The instructions which I gave to some of the king's ministers at different soreign courts are of this kind: it is become public without our knowledge; it is nothing like a declaration to these courts. We have made no declaration; it is a fimple official inflruction, only defigued for the information of those to whom it is addressed, and which relates to the anterior correspondence, and which breathing only the justice rendered to the present French constitution, could not furely involve us in a dispute with her, but rather with those who do not love that conflitution. so clearly evident, that I should only weaken it by further explanation.

You know, besides, that your admission has been without the smallest reserve, absolutely in the usual and most solemn forms that we know. We never do things by half, and as you are witness of our conduct and proceedings, I should love to chuse you yourtelf as judge, and I depend upon your impartiality. In the same manner I intreat you to believe in the high consideration with which I am, &c.

Copenkagen, March 19, 1795.

Froclamation of the Queen of Portugal for making Lifbra a free Fort.

Donna Maria, by the Grace of God,

Queen of Portugal and the Algarves, &c. &c.

BERNSTORET.

BE it known to all to whom this law shall come, that taking into my royal confideration the many and very important advantages which would necessarily result to the commerce of the subjects of these kingdoms and their dominions, by the establishment of a free port; and well aware, that the port of Lifbon from its lituation, lecurity, and facility of navigation with the ocean, is preferable to these of other nations which have adopted, fimilar establishmen:s; conforming myself to the opinion of my royal board of commerce, agriculture, manufactures, and navigation, of thole kingdoms and their dominions, and of others of my council, very learned and zealous for the good of my royal fervice, and of the public utility—It is my will, and I am pleased to create and efiablish, at Junquiera, joining to the city of Lisbon, a free port, to take entire and due effect from the: first day of January, in the yest next ensuing of 1797, having deflined for its exercife and the deposit, the houses and warehouses of Fort St. John, with the ground? adjoining, whereon to build the further necessary accommodations, there to receive and deposit all goods and merchandize, of whatever quality or kind they may be, as well for foreign countries, (except for the present sugar and to bacco) as from national ports fituate beyond the Cape of Good Hope, for the purpole, at the option of the proprietors of the faid goods, of disposing of them for the internal. confumption of the kingdom, previded they are entitled to lawful entry, and on paying the customary duties, at the respective customhouses; or to be exported to foreign ports, or national ones beyond the faid Cape of Good Hope. on paying only towards the benefit of my royal revenue, for protection and deposit, the duty of r per cent. on the amount of their value, calculated on the invoice to be produced by the captains of the veilels, is, or their configuees, by . figned and certified on oath; iberty of franquin still, howto remain as heretofore, for ressels that shall require it, ding to the rules as established ne custom-house of this city; effing all other duties, and ing all and whatever dispois that may oppose or intringe e liberty and freedom, which constitute the advantages of stablishment.

٠.٠.

ather to animate and promote is capital, a concurrence and dance of articles of the first Lity, I am pleased to declare, all qualities of grain, meat, food, which are free from g duties inward, shall not enjoy the free liberty of extion, but shall be also free payment of the aforésaid contion imposed on other goods, continue to be received and tched through the same denents as heretofore.

case it should happen that the n of Portugal should enter into (which God forbid) with any r whose subjects might be ested in goods in the free · in which condition it is to nderstood the aforesaid grain, and food, are included, no t, embargo, lequestration, or (a), thall on that account be e thereon; but on the contrary, thall remain in the utmost om and fecurity, as it each ridual had them placed in his house, to dispose of them as nay judge most suited to his free port shall be constituted. French republic. r the superintendance of a ral comptroller, with the necessary officers under him that I. may be pleased to appoint; and it is my will to order, that he shall be independent of all and every. jurisdiction, and only subordinate to the tribunal of the royal board of commerce, through which will, be forwarded the necessary orders to meet occurring circumstances, and bring up to my royal presence. all representations tending to maintain, and preferve inviolate, the good faith of this establishment, in due conformity to the particular regulations which I have ordered to be formed for the government of the aforelaid administration, and officers employed in conducting it; and also to serve as a guidance to all captains of ships and their confignees, for their conduct on the entry and shipping of all goods: claiming the benefit of this inftitution.

Dated at the palace of Queliex, May 13, 1796.

Manifesto, or Declaration of the Queen of Portugal, against the Republic of the United States of the Aetherlands.

WHEREAS the Portuguese envoy extraordinary with the republic of the United States of the Netherlands, has, in his report of the 15th of June, transmitted to her majesty the copy of a letter which he received from the committee for foreign affairs of the republic, in which has been notified to him the fixed resolution of abstaining from all political communication with him, as representative of her majesty, the queen of Portugal, till se administration of the afore- the conclusion of a peace with the

Besides which, the said envoy, ultimately fignifies in his letter, that all commercial transactions had alto been fulpended: her majesty has therefore refolved, under the present circumstances, to suspend in a like manner, on her part, all commerce with the states general of the Netherlands, to prohibit her inbjects all transactions, of mercantile connections, with the subjects of the republic, and to forbid them all navigation to the harbours of the faid states.

Her majesty has been farther pleased to ordain, that all transactions in the interior of her dominions with the subjects of the United Provinces be suspended; and that their capitals shall, under no pretence, be carried out of the kingdom.

The departure of all Dutch ships, which are in the harbours under the dominion of her majesty, is also entirely stopped, because there they must remain under embargo till further orders.

That this resolution may reach the knowledge of every one, and be put in force, it has been publickly posted up.

> The fecretary of the tribunal of commerce,

RICOBONO GOMES (Signed) DE CARVALHO.

Lisbon, July 19, 1796.

The above manifesto was revoked two days after it was issued; and the Portuguese minister, M. Pinto, transmitted a letter on the 23d of July upon the subject to the Dutch ambassador at Lisbon, citizen Geldemeester. In this letter M. Pinto declares, "that the embargo laid on the Dutch ships in the Portuguese harbour had been taken off, that her majesty the queen of Portugal, wished for nothing more than to preserve peace and triendship with the Batavian republic; that the hoped there fubfitted no other cause of disagreement between both flates, and that the Dutch government would observe reciprocity with regard to the commercial connections; and that the temporary embargo had been occasioned by the measures manifested in Holland against Portugal, and her majesty thought it very strange that Portugal should not have been confidered like other friends of France who were at peace with the Batavian republic."

Copy of the Letter fent by the King of Naples to the Marquis del Valis who, after the receipt of it, fet at for Rome as Ambassador Extraordir nary, and concluded there the effect five and defensive Treaty between Naples and the Pope.

HIS holiness acquaints me by letter of his determination to reject the unjust and execrable conditious of the French, on which: account he demands of me, though rather late, speedy succour. withstanding this is against my one ginal plan, I hefitate not a moment to grant it to him, as it concerns. our holy religion, to which I have, constantly been devoted. holiness demands of me, at the same time, to send some person with whom he may confult on our common affairs, I have appointed you, the marquis del Vasto, for this purpose. Depart immediately, and! have at heart the honour of God and the holy church, the good of the state, and the tranquillity of my Subjects, who daily give fresh proofs of their attachment and fidelity to me.

Done in the camp of St. Germano.

> FERDINANDO REE-Proclamation

Proclamation of the King of Naples.

THE long war which still desolates Europe, which afflicts fo ma ny nations, and costs so much blood, and fo many tears, is not a mere political contest, but a religious war. Our enemies are the foes of chriftianity; not content with destroying it in the breafts of their own nation, they would also banish it from every quarter of the globe, and replace it by atheism or enthusiastic idolatry. Religion openly reprobates their projects. They aim at the overthrow of all princely government, and to attain this, they disturb the peace of nations, stimulate them to revolt against their lawful fovereigns, plunge them into the most dreadful anarchy, and fink them in an abysis of confusion and misery. Belgium, Holland, and fo many German and Italian provinces have become the wretched victims of their feduction, and thirst for plunder. Those unfortunate countries groan and lament, but in vain, under the vain despotism of their oppressors, while the calls of justice and humanity are unattended to. It was necessary that religion, the most powerful obstacle of their horrid projects, should be removed and destroyed, in order that this fence being once broken down, all laws, both divine and human, might be violated without thame or referve.

Religion, whilst it informs us of our duties, ought also to inspire us with courage. The religious citizen well knows that he was born for himself and for others; that at the moment of his birth he contracts the obligation to love his native land, to protect it in times of distress, and even to hazard his life in the defence of the country where he reposes in safety, and finds a livelihood for himself and his family, especially when that country is invaded by an enemy, who spares neither law nor property, neither life nor religion; who, wherever he makes his appearance, infults, profanes, and destroys the churches, breaks down the altars, persecutes the priests, and tramples under foot the most facred emblems of the church of Christ. is impossible that a citizen, devoted to the cause of religion, should remain unconcerned at the dangers which threaten his country; prompted by the impulse of his conscience, and a proper sense of his own welfare, he will haften to its defence, join the military force, and co-operate in a vigorous refiftance; he will place his confidence in the God of Hosts, who often strikes an unexpected blow, and disperses his enemies like chaff before the wind.

I myself will set you the example of zeal and courage; I will put myself at the head of my dearly beloved subjects, assembled for the defence of their country, fully relying on the protection of the King of Kings, and the Lord of Lords, who guides the counsels of princes, and enlightens their minds, if with fincerity they implore his holy Yet at the fame time I ihall neglect no proper means for procuring peace and tranquillity to the people whom Divine Providence has entrusted to my care. But in order to obtain this end, we ought not to neglect the necessary precautions, that we may be prepared for every event. Negociations for peace shall occasionally be fet on foot, but they must be carried on with arms in our hands, that we may not be obliged to submit to destructive and disgraceful conditions, which this enemy, so apt to avail himself of the weakness of his adversaries, might choose to dictate. For this purpose lend me your assistance, ye prelates of the realm, ye who are the depositaries and first defenders of our holy religion, and support my exertions with a zeal worthy of your apostolic mission. Summon the inhabitants of your dioceses to join me and my troops, to repel the enemy, if he should dare to approach our frontiers. Explain to them the justice and importance of our caute, and convince them that it is their bounden duty to concur in its Let the voice of the defence. church be heard through her ministers, and invite her children to support the cause of Go!, and to offer up prayers to him, that, in his mercy, he may grant us either a just peace, or a glorious triumph.

214] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

(Signed) FERDINAND.

Naples, May 18, 1796.

Edict of his Majesty the King of Naples and the two Sicilies, addressed to his Subjects.

We, FERDINAND IV. by the Grace of God, &c. &c.

since the time when peace was interrupted in Europe, we redoubled our care to preserve the public tranquillity, and to put the state in a safe condition of desence. We were, therefore, dispoted to augment our land and sea forces, and to raise a considerable host of brave warriors on the frontiers of this kingdom. We afterwards put ourselves at the head of our courageous troops, firmly resolved to use all the means in our power, and even to facrifice our royal person. These effective preparations, added to lawful and becoming steps to obtain peace, give us hopes that our dominions will forth with enjoy tranquillity. At the same time we ought not to conceal, that in order to gain the proposed end of our defigns, it is absolutely necessary to double the faid preparatious for the defence of the flate, and the acceleration of a lasting and honourable peace, and to station a still greater force than the present on the frontiers of our kingdom. We: address ourselves to all the classes. of our beloved subjects, and hereby do require them to contribute with all their power to the speedy augmentation of the army flationed in cantonments. We expect, amongst others, that the brave young men who have enrolled themselves for the defence of religion, the throne, and the country, will now repair without delay to the fromtiers, in order to put themselves under our immediate and personal command, with their brave comrades; and we hope that in confequence of this, other volunteers will, in greater number, repair to the cantonments, that we bring together a formidable army, and be enabled to fecure the fafety and tranquillity of the state, either by a permanent peace or by brilliant victories.

Done at Naples, Sept. 12, 1796.

Proclamation is fued at Petersburgh, re-, lating to Dutch Ships.

WE, count Alexander Nikolazenwitich, do hereby give directions for the immediate release and departure of all the Dutch vessels, together together with their respective crews, on which an embargo was laid laft year; but we also prohibit, by this proclamation, the entry of any vessel from that country into our ports, and fuch as do arrive thall be treated the same as French ships. In other respects they shall not be molelied.

The original was figured by her majesty.

CATHERINE.

Zarskofels, May 20, 1796.

Copy of a Discarch from Count Ofterman, Chanceliar to the Empress of Ruffia, o M. Bulzow, Ruffian Chargé à iffeires at Madrid, duted Peter jburgh, December 25, 1795.

SIR,

THE empress was already informed, through the public prints, of the treaty of peace concluded between Spain and the French, and unpleasant sensations which this unexpected and disagreeable transaction had produced in her Imperial majesty's mind, were greatly increased when this intelligence was confirmed by the minister of his catholic majesty. empress, however, has during the new connection which so happily subsitts between her and his catholic majesty, met with too many opportunities of learning the true fentiments of that prince, not to be thoroughly convinced that the concurrence of the most imperious circumitances can alone have determined him to act in direct opposition to his principles. No doubt it has been for him a task infinitely hard, to enter into negotiations with those, who with their own hands murde ed the chief of his il-Intirious family, and to conclude a peace with those disturbers of the tranquillity and fafety of all Europe. No one knows better than her Imperial majesty to value and appreciate all the difficulties and obstacles, which his Catholic majesty mast have had to surmount, before he could prevail upon himfelf to adopt a measure, which to all, appearance has been brought about through the most urgent necellity, and the most threatening danger.

Her Imperial majesty being at a loss to account for the motives which can have determined his Catholic majesty thus to insulate his interest from that of the coalition, cannot but persevere in the opinion, that notwithstanding this sudden change, his Catholic majesty will continue fincerely to interest himself in the success of the operations of the evangelic powers; and to far from throwing any obflacle in the way of the new meafures which those powers may find it necessary to pursue, rather support them by every means, which the fystem of neutrality he may, perhaps, think proper to adopt, does not preclude.

His Catholic majesty cannot yet have forgotten the high importance of the cause for which the coalesced powers are contending—to restore order and tranquillity, to lead the nations back to a sense of their duty, and to thield all Europe from most dangerous infection,— These are the important motives which have induced the coalesced powers to unite their counfels, and exert their joint efforts to render them triumphant.

It is for this purpose, that the three courts have just now, by means of a folenin treaty of alliance,

P 4 Arengthened threngthened the ties by which they were united. Their reciprocal intereft is therefore so intimately connected and interwoven, and their determination fo firm, that it would be impossible to obstruct the operations of one of them, without forcing the others most warmly to embrace his cause. Of this deacription is especially the situation of her Imperial majetty with respect to the king of Great Britain; fo that in case of need, her Imperial majesty would be obliged to assist and support him to the utmost extent of her power, but fortunately such connections subsist between his Catholic majetty and the king of Great Britain, in confequence of deveral treaties renewed in the year 1793, as can never cease to be dear to his Catholic majefty, and neither the conveniency nor usefulness of which can have been leffened by a change of affairs produced by the most imperious circumstances.

This important confideration, in addition to that which proceeds from the favourable disposition of his Catholic majetly towards the common caule, cannot but render her Imperial majetty perfectly eafy with respect to the conduct which his Catholic majetly is likely to purfue. Her Imperial majesty is of opinion, that it will be both candid and fincere, and it would be painful for her to suppose, that in any case whatever, his Catholic mojetly could favour mea-ures, tending to obstruct and oppose the avowed purposes of the three allied courts.

You, fir, will adopt the most proper means efficially to communicate to the ministry of his Catholic majetiv the tenor of this difpatch, and to make it the subject of a conference you are to require of the Prince of Peace.

(Signed) Count OSTERMAY.

The Answer of his Excellency the Prince of Peace to M. de Bulzin, dated Santa Cruz, March 17, 1796.

I HAVE received your letter of the 22d of February, with a copy of the dispatch, which you, Sir, have received from your court by the last courier from Loudon, and must return you in answer, that the King, my master, has with much pleasure learned the friendly terms, in which, on the part of her Imperial Majesty, be has been acquainted with the close alliance concluded with the courts of Vienna and London, which certainly cannot have been the refult of the circum stances which existed in Poland, at the time when the forces of her Imperial Najesty might have been employed at a point, where all. those monarchs who united for the preservation of their existence, and the mutual support of their rights. At that period, the King, my master, gave the strongett proofs of his grief at the misfortune of a beloved coufin, and forefaw that his dominions were drawing universal near that corruption, which refults from madness without bounds. He waged war against tyrants, but was unable to learn who they were, for he did not know, tollowing the capricious dictates of their levity, who were the good Frenchmen that defended ' the cause of their king. He was. only able to difeern, that but a few, victims of their fente of henour, were his true adherents, who followed him to the grave-The defire of the King, my master, was, however, to earnest, that notnotwithstanding the ill-founded hopes held out by the combined powers, he prosecuted the most vigorous and most expensive war. There was no sovereign but the King endeavoured to prevail upon, by the most advantageous proposals, to join his Majesty; notwithstanding this request was addressed to the Empress at different times, fince the last months of 1791, and during the year 1792, by M. de Galvez, Spanish minister in Russia, and M. de Zinowief, who refided in the fame quality at Madrid, but especially in October 1792, and December 1793, when M. de Amat, then Spanish chargé d'affaires at Petersburgh, and soon after M. de Oris, minister of his Catholic Majesty, had long conferences on this subject, the former with count Ofterman, and the latter with count Besborodko. withstanding all this, there did not exist the least circumstance which promised an active co-operation on the part of the Empress, nor does it appear that the occupation of Poland could have prevented her from co-operating in favour of the common cause. It was under these circumstances that the King, my master, no doubt from fear and apprehension of smister consequences for his kingdom, resolved to make peace, convinced, that if he were left without assistance in the war, that support, which might be promised him for the attainment of peace, would prove still less efficacious. This is the true fituation of Spain, and his Catholic Majesty obliges himself to fulfil whatever he has promised for the benefit of the common cause, in which at the same time he must, for the future, decline participation in any measure, which has no certain and confistent object.

(Signed)

Note sent by Baron de Budberg, Chargé d'Affairs from Russa, at Stockholm, to the Foreign Ministers, relative to the non-admission of M. de Schwerin, who went to Petersburg for the Purpose of notifying the marriage about to take place between his Swedish Majesty and the Princess of Mecklenburg Schwerin.

THE Empress having given orders to M. the Count d'Ostermann, to acquaint the Swedish ambassador, that the mission of M. de Schwerin not being agreeable to her Majesty, he could not be admitted; the chargé d'affairs (M. de Budberg) has received orders to declare that the motive of this refusal was founded as much on the unfriendly proceeding of the Regent, as on the principles of his political conduct with regard to Both the one and the other being diametrically opposite to those ties of affection, of friendship, and of good neighbourhood, which originally have been the basis of this sort of missions, and which have never been adopted between courts that were not united by fimilar ties, or being so, have not taken care to cultivate and fulfil the duties of them. That this was the situation, as to Russia, in which Sweden had been placed, fince the Duke de Sundermania, who holds the reins of government, not content with having formerly infulted her Majesty the Empress, in endeavouring to furprize her by infidious and delutive overtures and propositions, entered into a public treaty with the French atfembly, with those men who fulemnly folemnly infulted the memory of the late King, by crecting a monument to the memory of his execrable affaffin. That her Majesty the Empress was neither ignorant of the motive nor the object of those treaties. That it was notorious that the Regent had recently received from the French a fum of money to be employed in armaments, and that he was now in full negotiation with them for a treaty of alliance, the principal stipulations of which are directed against Russia; so that her Majesty the Empress had every reason to expect an approaching rupture on the part of Sweden, unless the King's coming of age, (which, happily for the repose of that kingdom and of the north, was an event not far distant,) should put a stop to it, and thereby avoid this lamentable extremity.

218] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1795.

Tenor of the Letters of Convocation addressed by the King of Prussia, as Duke of Magdebourg, and of the Duke of Brunswick, as Co-Director of the Circle of Lower Saxony, to the different States desiined to enjoy the Advantages of the Neutrality.

We, by the Grace of God, Frederic William, King of Prussia, &c. Charles William, Duke of Brunswick, &c.

THE apprehension of a speedy opening of a new campaign with France, and the new dangers to which Germany will be exposed by the chance of a war that has already been so fatal to her, have determined us, the King, in consequence of our solicitude and patriotic attachment, and in consequence of the pacific relations which we maintain with France, to distribute as much as possible to our co-estates of the north, the inestimable bleshing of repose and security from the troubles and misfortunes of war; that is to fay, as far as these states will on their part accord with our intentions, which are of general utility. To this end negotiations have already been entered into with the French government, relative to a new line of neutrality, and in order to be able with the more efficacy to affure that neutrality, and to afford protection and fafety to the states comprised within it, we, the King, are ready to march a confiderable army; and we, the Duke, have also taken a resolution to reinforce that army with our troops, the Electoral Court of Brunswick Lunenburg having also manifested the same intentions. These combined troops being therefore to protect. the neutrality of the north of Germany, it is as just as it is absolutely. indifpenfable, that they should be provided and provisioned by the states which shall enjoy this advantage, and that each, individually, should hasten in proportion to its means, to procure them the necesfary provisions. But this object requires on account of the urgency of circumstances, the most speedy The most proper dispositions. means for attaining this end is by the convocation of a common and extraordinary assembly of all the Upper States of the Circles of Lower Saxony, with the States of the Lower Rhine and of Westphalia, as well as of the other States that shall be comprised in the line of neutrality, in order that we may be able to deliberate upon this subject, and to regulate the diffribution of the maintenance of the troops upon an equitable footing. proportioned to the faculties of each tlate; for on the speedy furnishing: of the objects necessary for this main-.

maintenance will alone depend the maintenance of the common fafety of the north of Germany.

Those, therefore, whose territory is comprised in the said line of neutrality, and which confequently, will enjoy the benefit of this protection, being principally implicated in this cate, we have, in our quality of Prince and Director of the Circle of Lower Saxony, addressed to them conjointly the present Letter of Convocation, in order to unite them to affemble, by their deputies, furnithed with the necessary instructions on the 20th of the month of June, in the town of Hildeshein. We have no doubt that they acknowledge, in its full extent, the urgency of the case, and of the actual conjunctions, as well as of the importance it is to procure to the north of Germany 1ecurity and repote; and that in consequence they will adhere and contribute every thing that can attain the common end, fufficiently in time to avoid being surprised by danger.

We, the King, shall depute to the common assembly of the States, our intimate Counsellor Von Dohm, directorial minister to the Circle of the Lower Rhine and Westphalia, and plenipotentiary to the Electoral court of Cologne, surnished with necessary powers; and we entreat, very amicably, this assembly to give from this time faith and considence to all that he may propose on our part, upon the subject of the affairs in question.

April 22.

ROYAL PRUSSIAN EDICT.
Frederick William, by the Grace of God, &c.

WE have fignified to the ambassador of the French republic, Caillard, by a note from our cabinet ministry, that we will permit fuch national Frenchmen, who refide in our dominions as our temporary subjects, (Subditi temiorarii) and who have real right to the protection of the French nation, and. with to preserve those rights, to get their names inscribed in a register which will be opened for that purpose by the said ambassador, but in such a manner, that all those subjects shall, the fame as before, remain our temporary subjects, (Subditi temporarii) that they likewise shall submit to our laws, ordinances, and jurisdiction, and not make the least pretentions to any immunities granted by the law of nations only to ambaifadors, and the persons actually belonging to embatiles.

We have further given orders to inform the faid Caillard, that the national Frenchmen, qualified as above, are at liberty to wear the French national cockade in our dominions, but the wearing of the faid cockade is hereby rigidly forbidden to all other persons. It therefore results from these premises:

1. That the wearing of the cockade shall be confined to Frenchmen of the afore-mentioned description, together with the ambassador, and the persons belonging to the embassy.

2. That national Frenchmen shall all be entitled to have their names registered, the registering to relate only to their connection with France, and to leave them subject, as before, to our laws, ordinances, and jurisdiction, as our temporary subjects.

3. That all persons belonging to the French colonies established in our dominions; sarther, all Frenchmen in our service, by oath of allegiance >

allegiance and duty, even if they do not belong to the above-mentioned colonies; as likewise all those in general who are described by this article as our perpetual fubjects, (Subditi persetui) shall not have a right to have their names inscribed in that register, or to wear the French national cockade.

Berlin, 16 July.

Declaration of the King of Prussia, put against the Gates of the City of Au-remburg, July 5.

HIS majetty the king of Prussia, our most gracious Lord, makes known by this public notice to all magisterial persons, burghers and fubjects, and most graciously declares, that in taking possession, by virtue of the judgments of the Aulic council of the empire, given in the years 1583 and 1587, respecting his territorial sovereignty, as far as the gates of the Imperial city of Nuremburg—all private property shall remain inviolate: no perfen be opposed in the exercise of his well-acquired rights and privileges, but that he rather shall be protected therein by his Majesty; and every possession shall quietly remain in the enjoyment of all territorial and feudal imposts and duties.

His Majesty will only exercise the rights of fovereignty to him belonging, and grant farther to the inhabitants of the suburbs of Nuremburg, his fovereign affurance, that they and those who belong to them, thall be exempt from all military duly and levy.

In other respects, every one is hereby cautioned to demean himfelf quietly and calmly, and to thew the more respect to the military, as they will observe the best discipline on their part, and avoid every excess.

By his majesty's most gracious and special command.

HARDENBERG.

Anspack, July 3d, 1796.

Nuremberg, August 16.

Submission of the Imperial City of Nuremberg, to the King of Profie.

OUR magistrates have, under the present circumstances, applied to the Prussian minister of state, Baron Von Hardenberg, testifying to his excellency the general with of the citizens to live in future under the beneficent laws of his Prussian majesty. His excellency did not hefitate to intercede for us with the French commander in chief, general Jourdan, to obtain a fixed contribution in lieu of all. requisitions, which has been granted accordingly until the pleafure of the French Directory shall be known. In other respects, Baron Von Hardenberg made answer to our deputies, that it was beneath the dignity of his fovereign to take advantage of our present situation, that his majesty would defer making known to us his real fentiments till we shall be fully at liberty to announce our withes according to the forms of our present constitution.

Declaration delivered to the Magiftrates of Nuremberg on the 291b of September, 1796, by the Prushan Minister, Baron Von Hardenberg, .. relative to the Proposal of its being united with the King's Dominions.

THE underfigued has the honour in the name of the king, his most gra-Clous mafter, to declare to the most worshipful the magistrates and burghers of the city of Nuremberg, that the proof of confidence and attachment which it gave to his majesty, by the voluntary offer of fubmitting to his sceptre, made in so solemn and decided a manner, has been received by his majelty with true pleasure and grateful approbation, and will be effeemed in its full value; but that his majesty, according to the fituation of matters, cannot as yet resolve himself to accept of that voluntary submission, and to ratify the annexed agreement of fubjection and exemption, but that his majesty will nevertheless find sufficent motives in that unequivocal mark of the confidential attachment of the city, to make it experience, by preference, his favour and benevolence, and is already prepared to do every thing in his power to promote the welfare and safety of the city; while his majesty, after a farther developement of circumstances and events, will also never have any objection to answer as much as possible to the farther wishes of the city.

The faid minister delivered a similar declaration to the cities of Weissenberg and Winsheim.

Rescript, published by Order of the King of Prussia, respecting the Prussian Territories on the left Bank of the Rhine.

Frederick William.

WE having been informed that an opinion has been propagated through a part of our state of Westphalia, situated on the left bank of the Rhine, to wit, the provinces of Cleves, Meurs, and Gueldres, in the actual possession of the French troops, that fufficient remonstrances and protestations had not been made on our part against the various innovations and oppressions which the French committaries and agents exercife over our faithful subjects; we have therefore thought it good to make this public declaration, by means of our regency, jointly with our chamber of war and of territory; and we do publicly declare, that we have never ceased, nor shall we ever cease, to interest ourselves in behalf of our said subjects, by the intervention of our envoy to the French republic; and that it is far from our intention to depart from the basis of the treaty of Basie respecting the civil or sinancial administration of those countries.

In concluding the treaty, by which the war between our state and the French republic was put an end to, it was never our intention to grant them more than a mere military possession of our provinces on the left fide of the Khine, till peace should be concluded with the emperor: and this intention, which has been taken as a basis in the negotiation, is sufficiently manifest by the tenor of the 5th article, which expressly declares, " that the troops of the republic shall occupy these countries belonging to us."

The difference between provinces conquered from an enemy, and those which belong to a power in alliance, and which have been merely conceded for a temporary military occupation, is sufficiently evident, and it is obvious that they ought not to be treated in the same manner.

It is therefore impossible for us to believe that the French government, considering the amicable ties subsisting between us and it, will still oppose such evident reasoning. It cannot fail to conceive, that neither sequestration nor consistation of the goods of the clergy, nor the projected sale of woods, nor the enormous contribution of three millions imposed on the country between the Meuse and the Rhine, which would entirely ruin the country, can take place with any regard to appearance of juttice.

It has already in effect given our envoy at Paris the most positive asinrance, that the mealures taken with respect to the clergy should be put an end to, and that the ecclefiaftics should remain in quiet enjoyment of their goods and revenues: we therefore constantly expect the revocation of the order for the fale of woods, and, in general, a renunciation of all those destructive innovations relative to our dominions.

We shall not by any means recognize as valid the fale of woods, which has already taken place, to our great aftonithment; and we are politively determined to have recourse to the purchasers for restitution in kind, or for the value at which the property fold shall be estimated by our agents, and for the damages which shall result from the wafte committed on these woods.

In those cases where the purchaiers cannot be found, we shall exercise our severity on all those who are employed by these last for cutting and carrying wood. in consequence, exhort our faithful subjects in the faid provinces to remain affured of our lasting and efficacious protection, and to wait with confidence for the return of that ancient order of things so highly to be desired.

At Wesel in our chamber of war and territory, 29th December, 1796, in the name and on the behalf of his majesty.

BARON DE STEIN, First President.

Given at Emmerick, in our regency, the 29th December, 1706, in the name and on the behalf of his majesty.

Elbers.

Treaty of Peace between the Duke of Wurtemberg and the French republic.

THE French republic and bisferene highness the duke of Wurtemberg and Teck, equally animated with defire of terminating the war in which they have been engaged, and for renewing that: intercourfe of commerce and of good :: neighbourhood which must be reciprocally advantageous to them both, have appointed the undernamed plenipotentiaries; the directory, in the name of the French republic, citizen Charles Delacroix, minister of external rela-. tions; and his serene highness the? duke of Wurtemberg and Teck, baron Charles Woopwart, minister: president of the of Itate and chamber of finances, and Abel, counsellor of legislation, who, after having respectively interchanged their full powers, agreed on . the following articles:

ART. 1. There shall be peace, amity, and good understanding, between the French republic and. his ferene highness the reigning. duke of Wurtemberg and Teck: consequently all hostilities shall cease between the contracting. powers from the date of the pre-ient treaty.

2. The duke of Wurtemberg revokes all adherence, consent, and accession, open or secret, given by him to the armed coalition against... the French republic, or any treaty. of alliance, offensive or defensive, which he may have contracted with it. In future he shall withhold from the powers at war with the republic any contingent or aid

under whatever title they may be demanded—even though he should be called upon as member of the Germanic empire.

3. The troops of the French republic shall have free passage into the states of his royal highness, and permission to reside and to occupy all the military posts necesfary for their operations.

4. His serene highness the duke of Wurtemberg and Teck renounces, in favour of the French republic, for himself, his succesfors, and all who have any claim, all his rights to the principality of Montheliard, the lordships of Hericourt, Patlavant, and other dependencies, in the county of Hobourg, also the lordships of Riquewir and Offhein, and generally cedes to it all the property, rights and landed revenue, which he polletics on the left bank of the Rhine, and the arrears due to him. He renounces all right against the republic for all claims he might pretend to have against the French republic, for the privation hitherto of the faid rights and revenues; and any other claim of whatever denomination anterior to the present treaty.

5. His terene highness engages not to permit the emigrants and priests, banished from the French republic, to refide in his states.

o. There shall immediately be concluded between the two powers, a treaty of commerce on grounds reciprocally advantageous. In the mean time all commercial relations shall be renewed on the farm footing as before the present All articles and commodidities belonging to the foil, the manufactures, the colonies, or fi-aid in men, horses, provisions, sheries of France, shall enjoy in money, warlike stores or otherwise, the states of his royal highness, liberty of transit, exempted from all duties except the tolls on carriages and hories. French drivers thall, with respect to the payment of the said tolls, be treated as the most favoured nation.

7. The French republic, and his ferene highness the duke of Wurtemberg, respectively engage to remove the sequestration of all effects, revenues, or goods, feized, confiscated, detained, or fold, belonging to French citizens on the one hand, and to the inhabitants of the dutchies of Wurtemberg and Teck on the other; and to admit them to a legal exercise of their respective engagements and rights.

8 All the prisoners respectively made thall be delivered up within a month, reckoning from the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty, on paying the debts they may have contracted during The fick and their captivity. wounded shall still be taken care of in their respective hospitals, and shall be delivered up immediately on their cure.

9. Conformably to the fixth article of the treaty concluded at the flague, on the 27th floreal of the third year, the present treaty of peace and amity is declared to be common with the Batavian republic.

10. It shall be ratified, and the ratification exchanged within a month, reckoning from the fignature, and sooner, if possible.

Paris, 20th thermidor, fourth year of the French republic, one and indivisible.

(Sigued) CH. DELACROIX, CHARLES, baron de Woepwart, ABBL.

224] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

The directory agrees upon and figns the present treaty of peace with the duke of Wurtemberg, negociated in the name of the French republic by the minister of external relations, named by the executive directory, by an arret of the 11th thermidor, (present month) and charged with instructions for that purpose, at Paris, 21st thermidor, 4th year of the French republic, one and indivisible.

(As an authentic copy)
(Signed) Revelliere Lepeaux, president.

LAGARDE, secretary general.

This treaty was ratified by the legislative body.

Treaty of Peace between the French Republic and the Margrave of Baden.

THE French republic, and his ferene highness the Margrave of Baden, defirous of re-establishing between both countries the relations of friendship and good neighbourhood which existed between them before the present war, have appointed as their plenipotentiaries, namely, the executive directory, in the name of the French republic, citizen Charles Delacroix, minister of foreign affairs, and his ferene highness the margrave of Baden, the baron de Reitzenstein, his chamberlain, and great bailiff of Lorrach, who, after having exchanged their respective powers, have resolved on the following articles:

ART. I. There shall be peace and good understanding between the French republic and his serene highness the margrave of Baden. In consequence, all hostilities shall cease between the contracting parties, to reckon from the ratification of this present treaty.

2. The margrave of Baden revokes all adherence, consent and access, public or secret, by him given to the coalition armed against the French republic, every contingent or succour, in men, horses, previsions, money, ammunition, or so other stores, under any pretence whatever, even if he should be required as member of the Germanic empire.

3. The troops of the republication of the decident of the deci tions.

4. His serene highness the margrave of Baden, for himself and his fuccessors, cedes to the French republic all the rights that may belong to him upon the lordships. of Rodemachern and Hesperinger, in the ci-devant duchy of Luxem burgh; the portion belonging to him in the county of Sponheim; and his rights upon the other pertion; the lordship of Grevenstein, the bailiwicks of Beinheim and Rhod, and generally all the territories, rights, and revenues, which he possessed, or pretends to have a right to possess on the left bank of the Rhine. He renounces all demands upon the republic respect. ting the arrears of the faid rights and revenues, and for every other caule anterior to the preient treaty.

reigning margrave of Baden, as, well in his own name, as in that of his two fons, the princes Frederick and Louis of Baden, for whom he interests himself strongly, cedes and abandons with entire guarantee to the French republic, the two-thirds of the manor of Kutzenhausen, situate in the ci-devent province

STATE PAPERS.

nce of Alface, with all its and dependencies, together the arrears of the faid rights evenues, which might remain renouncing all demands upon epublic thereto relating, and very other cause anterior to resent treaty.

Histserene highness the marof Baden also cedes for himand his successors, all the is of the Rhine which may ig to him, all the rights to h he may pretend upon the islands, as likewise upon the e and the different branches at river; especially the rights olls, high jurisdiction, direct nip, civil or criminal justice, iere shall not be included, uniedenomination of the different of the Rhine, the small whes, and the dead or stagnant is left in consequence of the lations of the ancient course ie river, and known to the men by the names of Altr. Alt Rhine, or Old Rhine.

lice.

Each of the contracting parhall be at liberty to finish the of the dykes, which may be sht necessary for the presern of his territory; but this is done so as not to injure the ry on the opposite bank. All tes which may arise from this t, as also from the establishand preservation of the towpath, shall be decided by jul means, between the respectovernments.

His serene highness engages ve, or cause to be left, on the bank of the Rhine, a space irty-six seet broad, to serve owing road in the navigable or in those which may beso. This road shall be cleared 1. XXXVIII.

of every thing that may injure its usage. It is, however, agreed, that the houses which stand on the ground which it is to take up, or which would be necessary for continuing it, shall not be demolished without paying a just and previous indemnity to the owner.

9. The punishment of offences relative to navigation, which may be committed on the said towing-road, shall belong to the French republic

10. The portions of that road, as likewise the islands on that river, which belonged by special right to his serene highness, or which were possessed by ecclesiastical bodies or commonalties, are ceded, without reserve, to the re-The lay or private communities shall continue to enjoy, under the fovereignty of the republic, the portions which were in their possession. It is however agreed, that the faid fovereignty shall not be exercised over houses depending on the margraviate, which may be deemed necessary for continuing the towing-way, but only on their fites, after they thall have been demolished in execution of Art. 8.

11. The navigation of the river shall be free for the citizens and the subjects of both contracting parties.

part of the river Rhine which flows between the dominions of the contracting parties are abolished for ever. There shall be none established hereafter on the natural bed of the river:

13. The stipulations contained in the preceding treaties between France on the one part, and his sefene highness the margrave of Baden, or the emperor and the empire, war.

empire, on the other, relative to the course of the Rhine, its navigation, the works to be constructed for the preservation of its bed and its banks, shall continue to be executed in as far as they are not contrary to the present treaty.

gages not to permit the emigrants, and the priests transported from the French republic, to reside in his territories.

without delay, between the two powers, a treaty of commerce on grounds of reciprocal advantage. Meanwhile all commercial relations shall be re-established, such as they were before the present

All commodities and merchandize, being the produce of the French foil, manufactories, colonies, and fitheries, shall enjoy in the territories of his serene highness the liberty of transit and staple, exempted from all duties, except those of the tolls upon waggons and horses.

The French waggoners shall be treated, with regard to the payment of those duties of toll, like the most favoured nation.

of Baden, respectively engage to grant replevy on the sequestration of all esfects, revenues, or estates, consistented, detained, or sold from French citizens on one part, and on the other, from the inhabitants of the margraviate of Baden, and to admit them to the legal exercise of the actions and rights which may belong to them.

17. All the prisoners of war respectively taken shall be delivered up within one month, to count from the exchange of the ratification of the present treaty, on paying the debts which they may have contracted during their captivity.

The fick and wounded shall continue to be taken care of in the respective hospitals; they shall be given up immediately after their recovery.

18. Conformable to the tresty concluded at the Hague, the 27th Floreal of the third year, the prefent treaty of peace and friendship is declared common with the Batavian republic.

19. It shall be ratified, and the ratifications exchanged at Park, within one month, to reckon from its fignature, and sooner if practicable.

Paris, 5 Fructidor, of the fourth year of the French republic, one and indivisible.

(Signed)

CHARLES DELACROIX,
SIGISMUND CHARLES JOES
Baron de Reitzenteis.

The Executive Directory resolves and ratify the present treaty of peace with the margrave of Baden, negotiated in the name of the French republic by the minister for foreign affairs, appointed by the Executive Directory by the resolution of the 28th of last Thermides, and charged with their instructions for that purpose.

Paris, 8th Fructidor, fourth year of the French republic, one and indivisible.

(Signed)

By the Executive Directory, (Signed) LA GARDE, sec. gen:

The Council of Antients approved of the above treaty on the 3: it of August.

Tiest

Treaty of Peace between the French Republic and the King of the Two Sicilies.

THE French republic and his majesty the king of the Two Sicilies, equally animated with the defire to make the advantages of peace fucceed to the miseries inseparable from war, have named, viz. the Executive Directory, in the name of the French republic, the citizen Delacroix, minister for foreign affairs; and his majesty the king of the Two Sicilies, the prince Belmonte Pignatelli, gentleman of the chamber, and his envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to his Catholic majesty, to treat, in their name, the clauses and conditions proper to reestablish good understanding and friendship between the two powers, who after having exchanged their respective full powers, have agreed on the following articles:

Art. 1. There shall be peace, friendship, and good understanding, between the French republic and his majesty the king of the Two Sicilies: in consequence, all hostilities thall definitively cease, reckoning from the day of the exchange of the ratisfication of the present treaty. Meanwhile, and till that period, the conditions stipulated by the armistice concluded on the 17th Prairial of the 4th year (5th of June, 1795) shall continue to have full power and essect.

2. Every interior act, engagement, or convention, on the one part or the other of the two contracting parties, which are contrary to the present treaty, are revoked, and shall be regarded as null, and of no effect; in consequence, during the course of the present war, neither of the two powers shall furnish to the enemies of the other, any succours of troops, ships, arms, warlike stores, provisions, or money, under whatever title or denomination that may be.

3. His majesty the king of the Two Sicilies shall observe the most strict neutrality towards all the belligerent powers; in consequence, he pledges himself to prevent indiscriminately access to his ports to all armed ships of war belonging to the said powers, which shall exceed four, according to the regulations acknowledged by the said neutrality. All stores or merchandise, known by the name of contraband, shall be resused them.

4. All security and protection shall be granted against all persons whatever, in the ports and roads of the Two Sicilies, to all French merchantmen, of whatsoever number they may be, and to all the ships of war of the republic, not exceeding the number specified in the above article.

5. The French republic and the king of the Two Sicilies engage to take off the sequestration from all essects, revenues, goods seized, confitcated, and kept from the citizens or subjects of both powers, in consequence of the present war, and to admit them respectively to the legal exercise of all civil rights that may belong to them.

6. All prisoners made on one fide or the other, comprising mariners and sailors, shall be reciprocally restored within a month, reckoning from the exchange of the ratification of the present treaty, paying the debts which they may have contracted during their captivity; the sick and wounded shall continue to be taken care of in their respective hospitals, and shall be restored upon their recovery.

 Q_2

7. To give a proof of his friendship for the French republic, and of his fincere defire to maintain the most perfect harmony between the two powers, his majesty the king of the Two Sicilies consents to be set at liberty every French citizen who may have been arrested and detained in his states, on account of his political opinions respecting the French revolution; all goods and property, moveable or immoveable, which may have been sequestrated on the same account, shall be restored to them.

8. From the same motives which dictated the preceding articles, his majesty the king of the Two Sicilies engages to cause all proper fearch to be made for discovering, by legal means, and for giving up to the rigour of the laws, the perfons who stole, in 1795, the papers belonging to the late minister of the French republic.

9. The ambaffadors or ministers of the two contracting powers shall enjoy in their respective states, the dime prerogative and precedence which they enjoyed before the war, excepting those which were allowed them as family ambassadors.

10. Every French citizen, and all persons belonging to the household of the ambailador or minitier, or to that of the confuls and other authorised and acknowledged agents of the French republic, shall enjoy, in the states of his majesty the king of the Two Sicilies, the iame freedom of religious worship as is enjoyed by the individuals of those nations, not Catholics, which are the most favoured in that reipect.

11. There shall be negotiated and concluded, without delay, a treaty of commerce between the two powers, founded on the basis of mutual utility, and fuch as shall infure to the French relation advantages equal to all those which are enjoyed in the kingdom of the Two Sicilies by the most favoured Until the completion of a this treaty, the commercial and confular relations shall be reciprocally re-established on the same footing as before the war.

12. In conformity with the fixth article of the treaty concluded at the Hague on the 27th Floreal, in the third year of the republic (16th of May, 1795, old flyle), the fame peace, friendthip, and good understanding, that are stipulated in the present treaty between the French republic and his majesty the king of the Two Sicilies, thall fablist between his majesty and the Batavian republic.

13. The present treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications exchanged, within forty days from the date hereof.

Done at Paris 19th Vendemiaire, in the 5th year of the French republic, one and indivisible, corresponding with the 10th October, 1796, (old style).

(Signed) CHARLES DELACROIX. The Prince of Belmonts PIGNATELLI.

Offensive and Defensive Treaty of Alliance between the French Rrpublic and Spain.

THE executive directory of the French republic and his Catholic majesty the King of Spain, animated by the wish to strengthen the bonds of amity and good understanding happily re-established between France and Spain by the treaty of peace concluded at Balle on the 4th Thermidor, and the third year of the republic, (July 22, 1795) have resolved to form an offensive and defensive treaty of alliance for whatever concerns the advantages and common defence of the two nations; and they have charged with this important negotiation, and have given their full powers to the under-mentioned persons; namely the Executive Directory of the French republic to citizen Dominique Catherine Perignon, general of division of the republic and its ambassador to his Catholic majesty the king of Spain; and his Catholic majesty the king of Spain, to his excellency Don Manuel de Godoi, prince of peace, duke of Alcudia, &c. &c. &c. who, after the respective communication and exchange of their full powers, have agreed on the following articles:

betwees

Art. 1. There shall exist for ever an offenfive and defensive alliance between the French republic and his Catholic majesty the king of Spain.

- 2. The two contracting powers shall be mutual guarantees, without any reserve or exception, in the most authentic and absolute way, of all the states, territories, illands, and the places which they possess, and shall respectively possess. And if one of the two powers shall be in the sequel, under whatever pretext it may be, menaced or attacked, the other promises, engages and binds itself to help it with its good offices, and to fuccour it on its requisition, as shall be stipulated in the following articles:
- 3. Within the space of three months, reckoning from the moment of the requisition, the power called on shall hold in readiness, and place in the disposal of the power calling, 15 ships of the line, three of which shall be threedeckers, or of 80 guns, twelve of from 70 to 72, fix frigates of a proportionate force, and four floops or light vessels, all equipped, armed, and victualled for fix and stored for a year. These naval forces shall be asfembled by the power called on in the particular port pointed out by the power calling.

4. In case the requiring power may have judged it proper for the commencement of hostilities to confine it felf to the one-half the fuccour, which was to have been given in execution of the preceding article, it may, at any epoch of the campaign, call for the other half of the aforesaid succour, which shall be furnished in the mode and within the space fixed. The space of time to be reckoned from the new requisition.

5. The power called on shall in the same way place at the disposal of the requiring power, within the space of three months, reckoning from the moment of the requisition, eighteen thousand infantry, and fix thousand cavalry; with a proportionate train of artillery to be readily employed in Europe, and for the defence of the colonies which the contracting powers possess in the Gulf of Mexico.

6. The requiring power shall be allowed to fend one or feveral commissioners for the purpose of affuring itself whether conformably to the preceding articles, the power called on has put itself in a state to commence hostilities on the day fixed with the land and fea forces.

Q 3

7. Thefe fuceours thall be entirely placed at the dispetit of the requaling power, which may leave them in the ports and on the territory of the power calledon, or employ them in any expeditions it may thick fit to undertake, without being obliged to give an account of the motives by which it may have beca di termined.

2. The demand of the fuccours flipulated in the preceding articles, made by one of the powers, thall fusfice to prove the need it has of them, and shall bind the other power to dispose of them, without its being necessary to enter into any difcussion relative to the question whether the war it propofes be offensive or defensive; or without any explanation being required, which may tend to elude the most freedy and exact accomplishment of what is flipulated.

9. The troops and flips demanded shall continue at the dispotal of the requiring power during the whole duration of the war, without its incurring in any cafe any expence. The power called on shall maintain them in all places where its ally shall cause them toact, as if it employed them directly for itself. It is simply agreed on, that during the whole of the time when the aforesaid troops or ships shall be on the territory or in the ports of the requiring power, it shall furnish from its magazines or arfenals whatever may be necessary to them, in the fame way and at the fame price as it supplies its own troops and Phips.

10. The power called on shall immediately replace the ships it furnishes, which may be lost by accidents of war or of the sea. It finall also repair the losses the troops it supplies may suffer.

11. If the aforefaid succoun are found to be, or should become infufficient, the two contracting powers shall put on foot the greates. forces they possibly can, as well by fea as by land, against the enemy of the power attacked, which thall employ the aforefaid forces, either by combining them, or by-causing them to act feparately, and this conformably to a plan concerted between them.

12. The fuccours flipulated by the preceding articles shall be furnithed in all the wars the contracting powers may have to maintain, even in those in which the party called on may not be directly. interested, and may act merely as a fimple auxiliary.

13. In the case in which the motives of hostilities being prejudicist to both parties, they may declare war with one common affent against one or feveral powers, the limitations established in the preceding articles shall cease to take place, and the two contracting powers shall be bound to bring into action. against the common enemy the whole of their land and fea forces. and to concert their plans so as to direct them towards the most convenient points, either separately or by uniting them. They equally bind themselves, in the cases pointed out in the present article, not to treat for peace unless with one common consent, and in such a way as that each shall obtain the satisfaction which is its due.

14. In the case in which one of the powers shall act merely as an auxiliary, the power which alone shall

shall find itself attacked may treat for peace separately, but so as that no prejudice may refult from thence to the auxiliary power, and that it may even turn as much as possible to its direct advantage. purpose advice shall be given to the auxiliary power of the mode and time agreed on for the opening and sequel of the negociations.

15. Without any delay there fhall be concluded a treaty of commerce on the most equitable basis, and reciprocally advantageous to the two nations, which shall secure to each of them, with its ally, a marked preference for the productions of its foil or manufactures, or at least advantages equal to those which the most favoured nations enjoy in their respective states. The two powers engage to make instantly a common cause to repress and annihilate the maxims adopted by any country whatever, which may be subversive of their present principles, and which may bring into danger the fafety of the neutral flag, and the respect which is due to it, as well as to raise and re-establish the colonial system of Spain on the footing on which it has subsisted, or ought to subsist, conformably to treatics.

16. The character and jurifdiction of the confuls shall be at the same time recognized and regulated by a particular convention. anterior to the present treaty shall be provisionally executed.

17. To avoid every dispute between the two powers, they shall be bound to employ themselves immediately, and without delay, in the explanation and developement of the 7th article of the treaty of Baste, concerning the frontiers, confirmable to the instructions, plans, and memoirs, which shall be communicated through the medium of the plenipotentiaries who negotiate the present treaty.

18. England, being the only power against which Spain has direct grievances, the present alliance shall not be executed unless against her during the present war; and Spain shall remain neuter with respect to the other powers armed against the republic.

19. The ratifications of the prefent treaty shall be exchanged within a month from the date of its being figned.

Done at Ildephonso, 2 Fructidor, (Aug. 19) the 4th year of the French republic, one and indivisible.

(Signed) Perignon, and the PRINCE of PEAGE.

The executive directory resolves on and figns the prefent offenfive and defensive treaty of alliance with his Catholic majesty the king of Spain, negotiated in the name of the French republic by citizen Dominique Catherine Perignon, general of division, founded, on powers to that effect by a resolution of the exceutive directory, dated 20 Mcffidor, (Sept. 6) and charged. with its instructions.

Done at the National Palace of the Executive Directory, the fourth year of the French republic, one and indivisible.

Conformable to the original.

(Signed)

REVEILLIERE LEPEAUX, presi. By the Executive-Directory, LAGARDE, secretary general. This treaty was ratified on the 26 Fructidor, (Sept. 12) by the Council of Elders.

Q 4

Treaty between France an! HIS majery the king of and the French republi deemed it proper to nee marner agreeable to cumitances, the ft and tive to the neutrali ern part of Ger by the treaty of t

April, 1795, of the into a conto concert is to Prutigo per ente

Here $y > e_{x}$ Transfer of the state of the st

... their .. . – e unjects, de-

. : "3

.. ...

1. . . 1.5-

and the same

...Ci T7-

.

. .re. clive oil, . es, and other and of the Clates · gis. fhail be ex-Since of the reat realisations bean the exigencies of - render neceilary.chens thail never a d especially upon ent dievery degree of of the purchase of the , Coned or alluded to in catacticle) of which circes may suspend or rettrain

11. All articles being the produce et de republic, its colonies or fithcas, shall be imported, free of anty, into the flates of his royal Vigancis, and exported from France, and set only to fuch refiredens as i val circumitances may render net, c

. ilarve All articles of French tacture that rife be yal to the ria

Apertation.

unlets he for the P

, ISTER, 1766.

minimizes, to impore certain retimelik ne on prolitoptlone; but thefe refinitions in all in no cale operate agalisti fir-nes manufactures excluthrough to which less royal highness even unil stalks to give all the prenomine he can emiliently with the tresperity of the manufactures 6. i - sti Pates.

The arrive articles thall be execute a with the most scrupulous re-Chrocky for the introduction of the manufactures of his royal highneiss intes into France.

13. The mutual duties on exports and imports thall be regulated by a deparate convention: in case that theh convention thould not be ratified by the republic, it is expressly agreed that the faid duties fitall be reciprocally ascertained and collected in the mode obferved with the countries the most favoured by the republic.

14. The produce of the lands of the republic, her colonies and fifteries, thall be conveyed freely through the states of his royal highncis, or lodged in warehouses on their way to the other states of Italy, without the payment of cultoms, and liable only to a certain toll on their pattage, for the support of the highways; which thall be regulate ed with all possible dispatch, and founded on a moderate footing between the contracting parties, at 10 much per quintal per league. The toll mall be payable at the first office for entering the goods.

The above article thall also be in force in all parts of the republic; and all goods and merchandife the produce of the states of his royal highuefs the "-"nt duke of Parms

he same regula-Il be fut

3 as 3 the above mentioned

Treaty of Peace between the French republic and the Infant Duke of Parma, Placentia, and Guastalla.

THE French republic and his royal highness the infant duke of Parma, Placentia, and Guastalla, defiring to re-establish the ties of amity which formerly subfisted between the two states, and to put an end, as much as in their power, to the calamities of war, have accepted, with eagerness, the mediation of his Catholic majesty, and have named for the plenipotentiaries, that is to fay, the executive directory, in the name of the French republic, the citizen Charles Delacroix, minister of foreign affairs, and his royal highness the infant duke of Parma, Messieurs the count Pierre Politi and Don Louis Boll; who, after having exchanged their respective powers, have determined upon and concluded definitively the following articles, under the mediation of his Catholic majesty, exercited by the marquis del Campo, his ambassador to the French republic, who has alto prefented his full powers:

ART. 1. There shall be peace and amity between the French republic and his royal highness the infant duke of Parma; the two powers thall carefully abstain from every thing that may alter the good harmony and union established between them by the present treaty.

2. Every act, engagement, anterior convention, on the part of one or other of the two contracting powers, which might be contrary to the present treaty, shall be confidered as null and void. In confequence, during the course of the present war, neither of the two powers shall furnish to the enemies of the other any fuccours in troops, arms, warlike ammunition, provifions, or money, under whatever title and denomination it may be.

3. The infant duke of Parma engages not to permit the emigrants, or banished persons of the French republic, to stop or sojourn in his state.

4. The French republic and his royal highness the infant duke of Parma engage to remove the fequestration from all the effects, revenues, or goods, which may have been seized, confiscated, detained, or fold, from the citizens or fubjects of the other power, relative to the present war, and to admit them to the legal exercise of the actions or rights belonging to them.

5. The contributions stipulated in the convention of armiftice, figned at Placentia on the 20th of last Floreal, between general Buonaparte in the name of the French republic, and the marquifes Pelleviene and Phillippo delle Rosa in the name of the infant duke of Parshall be fully discharged. There shall neither be levied nor exacted any other; if there have been levied any contributions in money, or required any supplies in provisions, beyond what is settled by the faid convention, the contributions in money thall be reimburfed, and the provisions paid for at the current price at the time of delivery. There shall be named on each part, if necessary, commissaries to execute the present article.

6. From the fignature of the prefent treaty the states of his royal highness the infant duke of Parma shall be treated as those of friendly and neutral powers; if there thall be supplied any necessaries to the troops of the republic, by his royal highneth or his tubjects, they thall be paid for at a price agreed upon.

7. The troops of the republic shall enjoy a free passage through the flates of the infant duke of Parma.

3. One of the contracting powers fhall not grant a free pailage to the troops of the enemy of the other.

g. The French republic and his royal highness the infant duke of Parma deniring to citablith and augment by flipulations, reciprocally advantageous, the commercial relations that exitted between their citizens and respective subjects, decomined as follows:

10. Silks, grain, rice, olive oil, cattle, cheefe, wines, and other articles, the produce of the chates of his royal highness, shall be exported to the territories of the republic without any restrictions beyond those which the exigencies of the country may render necessary. The faid restrictions shall never attach folely and especially upon the French citizen. There shall even be granted every degree of preference for the purchase of the objects (mentioned or alluded to in the present article) of which circumstances may suspend or restrain the exportation.

11. All articles being the produce of the republic, its colonies or fisheries, shall be imported, free of duty, into the fiates of his royal highness, and exported from France, subject only to such restrictions as local circumitances may render ne-ceffary.

12. All articles of French manufacture thall likewife be imported to the states of his royal highness, unlets he may deem it expedient, for the prosperity of his own manufactures, to impose certain restrictions or prohibitions; but these restrictions shall in no case operate against French manufactures exclufively, to which his royal highness. even undertakes to give all the preforence he can confidently with the prosperity of the manufactures of his own states.

The above articles shall be executed with the most scrupulous reciprocity for the introduction of the manufactures of his royal high. neis's itates into France.

13. The mutual duties on exe. ports and imports thall be regulated by a separate convention: in east that fuch convention should not a be ratified by the republic, it. expressly agreed that the faid doties shall be reciprocally ascertain ed and collected in the mode of ferved with the countries the most favoured by the republic.

14. The produce of the lands of the republic, her colonies and fifteries, thall be conveyed freely through the states of his royal high ncis, or lodged in warehouses of their way to the other states of Italy, without the payment of customs, and liable only to a certain toll on their paifage, for the support of the highways; which thall be regulate. ed with all possible dispatch, and founded on a moderate footing between the contracting parties. fo much per quintal per leagus The toll thall be payable at the first office for entering the goods.

The above article shall also be in force in all parts of the republic; and all goods and merchandife the produce of the states of his. royal highness the infant duke of Parms shall be subject to the same regulations as above. And,

As the right of toll above mentioned

tioned has been retained only with a view to contribute to the support of the bridges and highways, it is expressly stipulated that the goods and merchandise conveyed by the rivers and navigable canals shall be reciprocally exempt from duties of every description.

The contracting parties respectively shall adopt the necessary measures for the due execution of the present and preceding articles.

article of the treaty concluded at the Hague, the 22d Floreal, 3d year, the peace concluded by the prefent treaty is declared common with the Batavian republic.

16. The present treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications exchanged in one month at most from the present day, exclusively.

Done at Paris, in the 5th year of the French republic, one and indivisible.

(Signed)

CH. DELACROIX.
COUNT POLITI.
LOUIS BOLLA.

SEPARATE ARTICLE.

His royal highness stipulates to grant a remission of one-fourth of the rights of importation on the goods and merchandise, being the produce of the republic, her colonies, sisheries, and manusactures, destined for the home consumption of the states, and also the right of exportation on the goods and merchandise, the produce of the states, and destined for the foreign posses, and destined for the states, and destined for the states.

I. On the goods and merchandile arising from the states of his royal highness, at their entry on the territory of the republic.

II. On all goods and merchandife, the produce of the republic on being exported for the states of his royal highness.

Done at Paris, the day and year as above.

(Signed)

CH. DELACROIK.
COUNT POLITE.
LOUIS BOLLA.

A Proclamation by F. Santhonax, J. Raymond, M. Giraud, G. Leblanch, and P. Romme, Commissioners delegated by the French Government to the Windward Islands of St. Domingo.

To all the Citizens of the Colony.

To all the Citizens of the Colony, and to all those who compose the Land and Sea Forces dettined for its defence.

Citizens,

AFTER so many storms and critical emergencies, inteparable concomitants of a revolution, France enjoys at last a constitution worthy of a people who know how to value liberty.

Already under a truly republican government, the French people begin to rest from their long and arduous toil, and to enjoy the happy effects of the liberty which they have attained.

firmly resolved to cause the constitution to be executed, the Exccutive Directory is constantly employed in searching out means to have it established in all parts of the Republic.

The fixth article of the constitution states, That the French colonies are inteparable parts of the Republic, and subjected to the same constitutional law.

It is particularly for the execution of that article, that we have received from the government the honourable mission intrusted to us; and, at the same time, to let you know

know all the means you ought to employ to preferve liberty and equality, which are the fundamental laws of the conflitution.

Citizens rally at the voice of the delegates of the republic, fince it is in her name, and for her dearest interests, that they are going to addrefs you.

The ancient government of the colonies had distinguished three different classes—the whites, the coloured people, and the flaves. those different classes, now united and honoured with the name of French citizens, we are going to speak alternately. We shall first address that portion of the people of the colony, which has most suffered under the tyrannic order which has been abolished, and we shall say to them: By the republican constitution, which the French nation has just adopted, you have recovered your primitive rights; but you must know the proper means to preserve them without trouble, and to transmit them without interruption, to your remotest polterity. Those ships, the warriors whom they bring to you; all those formidable preparations are designed against the English, who are the most cruel enemies of your liberty! They dare to indulge the hope of framing new chains for you. See these blood-thirsty tygers bending still your brethren under their homicidal whips. We cannot suffer any longer so dismal an object; join the forces which France fends to you, expel from the territory of the French republic those tyrants of mankind, pursue them even to their haunts, and destroy the last of them! What! is it not incumbent on you to revenge your brethren, whom they keep fettered in the furrounding islands? Yes, citizens, every thing ought to impress you with an implacable hatred for those tyrants, whose most lucrative trade is, reducing you to slavery, mitery, and death. What can withhold your vengeance? Rush on this impious race; make it disappear from that sacred spot, which too long has been the theatre of its crimes and depredations.

Labour and instruction, citizens, are necessary to the preservation of the people, and the constitution imposes them as a duty upon all citizens. The 15th article of the second title contains these words. Young men cannot be inscribed in the civic register, if they do not prove that they can read, write, and follow a mechanical branch of That clause, citizens, business. can and ought to take place only agreeably to the constitution, after the first day of the 12th year of the republic.

The manual operations of agriculture belong to the mechanic arts.

Yes, labour and agriculture particularly, is absolutely necessary to him who wishes to preserve his rights, and enjoy his liberty. Through labour we procure the necessary things to our existence and enjoyment; through labour only we can preserve our liberty.

Had your ancestors, the inhabitants of Africa, devoted themselves to the culture of their fruitful lands, they most assuredly, would not have debased themselves by reciprocal bloody wars, of which greedy Europeans have availed themselves to reduce them to the most intolerable and degrading flavery. What remains for you to do, in order to avoid all the misfortunes which are infeparable concomitants of idleness? Nothing, but to devote yourselves to the culture of the rich productions of the colony you inhabit! Many of you have been to France; they will tell you, that the people are there constantly occupied at useful labours, and agriculture in particular. Imitate that active people, who adopts you as brethren, and you will establish by that means, a trade of exchange with them, which will cement and strengthen your brotherly relations.

ing

Instruction is as useful to you as labour; by it you will transmit your rights to your children; by it you will learn how to fulfil the duty of good citizens: finally, by instruction you will attain that degree of merality, which distinguishes the civilized from the savage man, the honest from the perverse citizen.

The government will omit nothing to attain an object so interesting, and so worthy of its soli-Public schools will be established throughout all the colonies; your children shall there receive instruction; imbibe a taste for labour and morals, which are to accomplish their full generation. The republic will extend farther her cares for your children, for the wishes that a certain number of those who shall have produced a greater disposition and zeal for initruction be sent to France, with the consent of their parents, there to study in a more perfect degree these sciences or arts, to which they may have shewn a more decided inclination.

The same resources are likewise offered to the children of the whites, and of the coloured people; for the primary schools, which will be established, will be open to all individuals, born in the colonies, of whatever colour they may be. All MEN ARE EQUAL IN RIGHTS.

To you, Citizens, whom a barbarous custom had made formerly proprietors of flaves, we shall obferve, that in consequence only of the most strange subversion of what is known under the name of justice and humanity, the most sacred rights of man had been forfaken in the former order of things, which allowed them to be reduced to the most insufferable and abject flavery; we shall tell you that a state so contrary to nature, though apparently favourable to your interests, was of too violent a nature to last long. How could the master shake off the thought of the dangers with which he was inceffantly threatened? Does not the experience of ages and nations, transmitted by history, inform us, that tyranny has always fallen a victim to its own crimes? Undoubtedly, fix hundred thousand flaves, unjustly and cruely tortured, in almost every instant of their lives, could not afford a great degree of security to the small number of their masters. They were most affuredly disturbed by the most cruel enormities.

Instead of the violent state in which lingered the late proprietors of slaves, liberty and equality, which slow from the constitution, offer to them nothing but true enjoyments, and perfect security to their lives and fortunes.

In addressing those formerly distinguished tinguished as whites, and people of colour, without policilions, would fav to them, that in a free state, all hands ought to be employed; that every one ought to make a choice of a kind of labour which, in concurring to the general welfare, would procure to the labourer not only existence, but the conveniencies of life; that the colonial fystem being altered, they must no more establish their hopes of fortune on SIAVERY, for it is FOR EVER ABOLISHED on the Whole territory of France. Let every one, therefore, make the best of his induftry, devote himfelf to agricul-Let not any ill founded shame keep him in inactivity, which is as dangerous to himfelf, as it is ruinous to the common Let him be convinced, that no occupation debates man; let him know, that with the wifest people of antiquity, agriculture was confidered as the first of all occupations. Let them, therefore, renounce that state of vagrancy which the laws of the republic will

In fine, we would repeat to them, that as all the inhabitants of the colony from this inftant will form but one class, every citizen will have the same rights, and enjoy the same advantages; and that the republic establishes no other_distinction among them, than those of virtue and vice, of talents and ignorance.

In the name of the republic, in the name of humanity, in the name of the f cred love of our country, we invite all citizens to concur with us in the reftoration of order and agriculture; we invite them to forget their respective wrongs and quarrels, to make it now their sole business to expel the enemies of the republic from the territory they have invaded, and soon to repair the evils and devastations which have been occasioned by hatjed, passion, and civil war.

Done at the Cape, the 25th Floreal (May 15) the fourth year of the French Republic; one and indivisible.

The president of the commission, SANTHONAL.

The general fecretary,
PASCHAL

Proclamation of the Executive Directory to the Armies of the Sambre and Meuse.

NEW cries of war are heard on the banks of the Rhine. What rage is it thus goads on our cruel enemy, who, amidst his disasters and our triumphs, has the temerity of breaking an armistice which he himself demanded, and you granted him, in hopes of a speedy peace? —Guided by the ferocious English; he receives their gold and contempt as the price of his fubmission, and of the blood of his bravest warriors. Let then the republican bayonet reach the tottering thrones of the monsters coalesced against the human race, and strike terror into their botoms! let your irrefiftible valour within a few days put a period to that struggle of the liberty of the people against tyranny, which has lasted but too long; and let the haughty despots, who still : dure to fight against that liberty, at last bow submissive at the aspect of the republican banners!

May 29.

Proclamation by General Buonaparte and Commissary Salicetti, dated the 30th of Floreal (19th May).

THE

THE French republic, while it has fworn hatred to tyrants, has Iworn fraternity to nations.

This principle, fanctioned by the constitution of the republic, is as much a principle of the army. The despotism which for so long a time has held Lombardy, nder its yoke, has been the cause of great calamities to France; but the French know that the cause of kings is not the cause of the people.

The victorious army of a monarch are infolent, and spread terror among the nations where they carry their victories; but a republican army, though forced to carry on a deadly war against the kings with whom it contends, promises friendship to the people whom its victories deliver from tyranny. Respect for the persons and property, and respect for the religion of the people, are the fentiments which actuate the government of the French republic, and their victorious army in Italy. Of this the good order which they have ob-1erved from the first moment of their entry into Lombardy, is no unequivocal proof.

If the victorious French confider the inhabitants of Lombardy as brethern, the latter ought to entertain a reciprocity of affection. The army must pursue its victories, and drive entirely out of Italy that despotism which has held Lombardy in chains. The independence of this country, and its good fortune, depend upon the fuccess of the French enterprizes. Lombardy then ought to second them by all the means in its power. To aisure the march of the troops provisions are necessary, which they cannot receive from France, from which they are separated; they ought to find then these in Lombardy, where they are making their conquests. The rights of war give them fecurity for obtaining them, and friendthip ought to be eager to offer them.

Twenty millions of French money are imposed as a contribution for this purpose; the division will be made among the different provinces of Austrian Lombardy. The terms of payment, which admit of the least possible delay, will be fixed by particular instructions. It is certainly a moderate contribution for so fertile a country, particularly when we reflect upon the advantages which must result from The division might have been fettled by agents of the French government, and this mode would certainly have been reasonable; but the French republic, not wishing to referve to itself this right, has left it to the local authorities, and to the affembly of the state. It only points out to you, as the basis upon which you ought to levy this contribution, that it ought to be proportionably divided among those provinces which formerly paid imposts to the tyrant of Auftria, and that it ought to fall upon the rich and the ecclefiastical bodies, who too long thought themselves privileged, and withstood all taxation; do not oppress the poorer class. If some requisitions be made in kind, the general in chief, and the commissary of the government, declare, that there thall be no furcharge upon the contribution. They will afterwards fettle the price of the articles required, which they will pay to the venders with the produce of the contribution fixed as above, or with the receipts which they will give, initead of ready money.

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796. 240

Proclamation of Commissary Salicetti.

ART. 1. THE council established on the 9th May last by the archduke, at the moment of his flight, on which he devolved, by an edict, the exercise of the supreme power, is suppressed. The president of the supreme tribunal, the two presidents of appeal and of the first instance, and the president of the magistracy, who were appointed by the archduke to compose this council, are prohibited from continuing their functions.

2. The general council of decurions, concentrated into privileged classes, whose functions were referved for extraordinary occafions, having become ufeless by present circumstances, is also supprefied: and the fame prohibition is extended to the nobles and patricians who compose it.

3. The magistracy, known by the name of magistrat politique de la chambre, whose complicated functions having also become useless, tend only to throw obstacles in the way of the simple course of government, is likewise suppressed; and those who exercised the office are forbidden to assemble, except it be to replace, after receiving other instructions, the members of this body, when their functions inall be rendered subservient to the happiness of the people.

4. The authorities thus suppressed thall be provitionally replaced by a military agency, composed of citizens Maurin, Reboul, and Pa-train.

The affembly of the flate, 5.

composed of thirteen members, to whom the government of all Lombardy is committed, is provisionally retained in the functions allotted to it by its institution. exercife thefe functions in the name of the republic of France, under the inspection and control of the military agents to whom it shall be accountable.

6. The municipal administrations are also retained in all the communes of Lombardy,

7. The municipal affembly existing at Milan, composed of thirteen members and a fyndic, is also previsionally retained under the name of the municipality of the town of .

8. The commandant of the fort of Milan shall be president of the municipal council, and shall exercife in it a military police, and alfo all the functions delegated by the French laws to the commandants of forts in a state of fiege.

9. The members composing the municipality of Milan are Francois Viscanti, Antoine Caccianini, Galcas Serbelloni, Felix Laticada, Charles Bignami, Antoine Cor-Fidele Sopranfi, Gatean Porro, Pierre Verri, Joseph Viollean Baptiste Sommarina, Paul Sangiorgio, Antoine Crespi, Cæfar Pelagata, Charles Ciani, Charles Parea.

10. The acts and deliberations of all the authorities created or preferved by the prefent decree, shall be in the name of the French republic.

Proclamation by Buonaparte, Commander in Chief of the Army of Italy. to his Brothers in Arms, dated Head-Quarters at Milan, Prairiel 1, (May 20.)

SOLDIERS,

)LDIERS, you have precipiyourselves like a torrent from meights of the Appenines; you routed and dispersed all who opposed your progress: Pied-; delivered from Auftrian tyy, displays its natural sentis of peace and friendship for Milan is our's, and the blican flag flies over all Lom-The dukes of Parma and ena owe their political existto your generolity. The that with fo much pride tened you, has no barrier of clion against your courage: o, the Tessin, the Adda, have unable to ftop you a fingle those boasted bulwarks of have been insufficient to deour progress; you have furnted them as rapidly as you d the Appenines. So much As has carried joy to the boof our country; your repretives have ordained a fête, ated to your victories, which se celebrated in all the coms of the republic. Your fa-, your mothers, your wives, fifters, your lovers, will enour fuccess, and boast with that they belong to you. Yes, rs, you have done much; but there remain nothing more to ne? Though we have known to vanquish, we have not n how to profit of our victo-

Posterity will reproach us having terminated our course mbardy; but already I see you arms; a slothful repose faryou. Let us depart! We yet forced marches to make, les to subdue, laurels to gainjuries to revenge. Let tremble who have whetted miards of civil war in France, L. XXXVIII.

who have basely affassinated our ministers, and burnt our ships at Toulon: the hour of vengeance and retribution is near at hand. But let the people remain tranquil; we are friends to all the people, and more particularly the defeendants of Brutus, of Scipio, and the great men we have taken for our models. Re-establish the capitol, and place there, with honour, the statues of the heroes that rendered it celebrated; awaken the Roman people, debased by many centuries of flavery: fuch will be the fruit of your victories; they will form an epoch for posterity; you will have the immortal glory of changing the face of the finest country in Enrope. The free French people, respected by the whole world, will give to Europe a glorious peace, which will indemnify them for the facrifices they have made during fix years; you will then return to your homes, and your fellow-citizens will fay, thewing you, this man was of the army of Italy.

(Signed) BUONAPARTE.

The Deputies of the People of Albe, to Citizen Buonaparte, General in Chief of the French Army, to procure Liberty to Italy.

Citizen General,
LIKE Frenchmen we wish to be free. To live under no king or tyrant of any title. We wish for civil equality, and that the feudal monster should be thrown to the ground.

For this purpose we have taken up arms at the approach of your victorious troops, and we implore your assist the chains which I time retained us in

ANNUAL REGISTER,, 1796. 242

Worn down by the yoke of iron which presses on our heads, we never should have been able to facceed in relieving ourselves. Always courageous, and yet always debased, we have lived in expectation of the happy moment of your arrival.

Oh! most delightful moment! The time is at length arrived. Here are Frenchmen, our brothers and our friends: in our arms, in our houses, they are willing cordially to partake of our joy, to ratify our vows, and to fly with us throne of our tyrant.

The proclamation to the people and clergy of Piedmont and Lombardy, and to the Neapolitan and Piedmontese troops, prove to you our republican spirit, and the right which we have to a well-founded reliance on your generous protection.

Citizen general, behold all Italy extending forth its arms to your embrace, and calling you its deli-In giving it the bleflings verer. of liberty, you grant to this beautiful part of Europe its greatest lustre; your name will be rendered glorious and immortal in its hiftory.

Our fons, and our latest posterity, will have it engraved in their hearts; and they will not have in their mouths a name more dear than that of general Buonaparte.

Respect, health, and fraternity, (Signed) IGNACE BONAFOUX, Albe, JEAN ANTOINE, Ramea of Verseil, Deputed committaries.

Buonaparte to the Republic of Venice. Brescia, 10 Prairial, (May 29.) IT is to deliver the finest country in Europe from the iron yoks of the proud house of Austria, that. the French army has braved obstacles the most difficult to fur-Victory, in union with mount. justice, has crowned its efforts. The wreck of the enemy's army has retired beyond the Mincie. The French army, in order to fold low them, paties over the territory of the republic of Venice; but it will never forget, that antient friendthip unites the two republics. Religion, government, culloms, and property, fliall be respected; to the destruction of the infamous. That the people may be withenky apprehension the most fevere diff cipline shall be maintained. that may be provided for the army: shall be faithfully paid for in money is The general in chief engages the officers of the republic of Venice. the magistrates, and the priess, to make known these sentiments to the people, in order that confidence may cement that friendship which has fo long united the two nations faithful in the path of how nour, as in that of victory. French foldier is terrible only tor the enemies of his liberty and his government.

BUONAPARTE, (Signed) The general of division, chief of the etat-major: of the army of Italy. ALEX. BERTHIER (Signed)

Proclamation by General Bushaparte, Commander in Chief of the Arms; of Italy, to the People of the Mi-

THE nobles, the priests, and. the agents of Austria have-misled the people of these fine countries; the French army, as generous as it is powerful, will treat with fri-· ternity bitants; but they will prove prible as the fire of heaven to bels, and the villages which them.

mander in chief declares as is, all the villages which have onformed to his order of the 6th ial. The generals thall march ift fuch villages the forces nery for subduing them; setting on fire, and shooting all taken with arms in their is. All the priests and nobles remain in the rebel comes, shall be arrested as hof-in and sent into France.

Every village where the tocnall be founded, shall be inly destroyed. The generals esponsible for the execution of order.

Every village on the territory hich any Frenchman shall be inated, shall be fined in a sum inting to a third part of the ibution they pay annually to archduke, unless they make in the assassin, arrest him, end him to the French army.

Every man found with a mustand ammunition of war, be immediately shot by the of the general commandant aty.

Every field wherein shall be concealed arms, shall be med to pay one-third more its actual revenue, by way of ds. Every house in which be found a musket, shall be t, unless the proprietor dest to whom such musket be-

I the nobles, or rich people, shall be convicted of having d up the people to revolt, whether by dismissing their domestics, or by designs against the French, shall be at rested as hostages, sent into France, and the half of their estates consiscated.

(Signed) BUONAPARTE.
10 Prairial, (29th May.)

Proclamation issued by the Municipality sof Milan, for abolishing the No-bility.

ART. 1. THE order of nobility is abolished for ever.

2. No one shall bear any title of nobility, but shall be designed by the appellation of citizen, adding thereto the name of his employment or profession.

3. All the nobles shall, within the space of eight days, bring their patents of nobility to the commune, where they shall be burnt.

4 Every feudal authority, and all game laws are henceforth abo-lished.

5. All armorial bearings, liveries, and every distinction of nobility, shall likewise be suppressed within eight days.

6. Every corporation which exacts a proof of nobility as a qualification is abolished.

7. Those who shall contravene the present proclamation, will be regarded as convicted of aristocrate, and as enemies to the people.

June-12.

Buonaparte, Commander in Chief of the Army of Italy, to the Inhabitants of Tyrol.

Head-Quarters at Tortona, 26 Prairiel, (June 14,) 4th year.

BRAVE Tyrolians, I am about to pais through your territory, to force the court of Vienna to a peace, as necessary to Europe, as it is to the subjects of the emperor. The cause I am about to defend is your own. You have been long vexed and fatigued by the horrors of a war, undertaken not for the interest of the people of Germany, but for that of a fingle family.

R 2

The French army respects and loves all nations, more especially, the fimple and virtuous inhabitants of the mountains. Your religion, your customs will be every where respected. Our troops will maintain a severe discipline; and nothing will be taken in the country without being paid for in money.

You will receive us with hospitality, and we will treat you with fraternity and friendship.

But should there be any so little acquainted with their true interests as to take up arms, and treat us as enemies; we will be as terrible as the fire from heaven: we will burn the houses, and lay waste the territories of the villages which shall take a part in a war which is foreign to them.

Do not suffer yourselves to be led into an error by the agents of Austria. Secure your country, already harasted by five years of war, from new mileries. tle time the court of Vienna, forced to a peace, will restore to the nations their privileges which it has usurped, and to Europe the tranquillity it has disturbed.

The commander in chief, BUONAPARTE. (Signed)

Buonaparte, Commander in chief of the Army of Italy, to the Grand Duke of Tuscany.

> Head-quarters at Piftoja, June 26.

THE flag of the French republic is constantly insulted in the port of Leghorn. The property of the French merchants is violated there; every day is marked by fome attempt against France, as contrary to the interests of the republic as to the law of the nations. cutive directory have repeatedly preferred their complaints to the minister of your royal highness at Paris, who has been obliged to avow that it is impossible for your royal highness to repress the English, and to maintain a neutrality in the port of Leghorn.

This confession immediately convinced the executive directory, that it was their duty to repel force by force, to make their commerce respected, and they ordered me to fend a division of the army under my command to take possession of Leghorn.

I have the bonour to inform your royal highness, that on the 7th inst. (25th June) a division of the army entered Leghorn: their conduct there will be conformable to those principles of neutrality which they have been fent to maintain.

The flag, the garrison, the property, and your royal high ness and your people, shall be scrupulously respected.

I am, moreover, instructed to asfure your royal highness of the defire of the French government, to witness a continuation of the friendship which unites the two states, and of their conviction that your royal highness, conscious of the excesses daily committed by the English ships, which you cannot prevent, will applaud the just, useful, and necessary measures as dopted by the executive directory.

I am,

With esteem and consideration, Your Royal Highness's, &c.

BUONAPARTE. Answer Answer to the above Letter.

HIS royal highness is conscious of having nothing to reproach himfelf with relative to his frank, candid, and friendly conduct towards the French republic and its sub-A fovereign in friendship with the republic cannot but regard, with the most extraordinary surprife, the orders given to your excellency from the directory. royal highness will not resist the execution of them by force, but will preserve the good understanding with the republic, still slattering himself with the hope that your excellency will, on better information, revoke your present refolves.

Should it not be in your excellency's power to delay the entrance of your troops into Leghorn till further orders, the governor of that place has full powers to agree with you upon terms. This I am ordered, by my fovereign's express command, to communicate to you, with that respect in which I have the honour to remain, &c.

(Signed) VITTORIO FOSSOM-BRONI.

Florence, June 26, 1796.

Head-quarters at Leghorn, June 29. General Buonaparte to the Grand Duke of Tuscany.

ROYAL HIGHNESS,

AN hour before we entered Leghorn, an English frigate carried off two French ships, worth 500,000 livres. The governor suffered them to be taken under the fire of his batteries, which was contrary to the intention of your royal highness, and the neutrality of the port of Leghorn.

I prefer a complaint to your royal highness against this governor, who, in his whole conduct, displays a decided hatred against the French.

He yesterday endeavoured, at the moment of our arrival, to make the people rise up against us; there is no kind of ill treatment that he did not make our advanced guard experience. I should, doubtless, have been justified in bringing him to trial before a military commission; but from respect for your royal highness, intimately convinced of the spirit of justice which directs all your actions, I preferred sending him to Florence, where I am persuaded, you will give orders to have him punished severely.

I must, at the same time, return my thanks to his royal highness, for his goodness in appointing general Straraldo to supply the army with every thing that was necessary. He has acquitted himself with equal zeal and success.

Buonaparte,

Answer of the Grand Duke of Tuscany. GENERAL,

GENERAL Spannochi arrested by your order has been brought hither. It is a point of delicacy to keep him in arrest, until the motives of this step, which I presume to be just, are known to me, in order to give you, as well as the French republic and all Europe, the greatest proof of equity, conformably to the laws of my country, to which I have always made it my duty to submit myself.

I fend this letter by the marquis Manfredini, my major domo, whom I request you to inform in what Spannochi has been culpable. You may besides repose full considence in him relative to all the objects interesting

as necessary to Europe, as it is to the subjects of the emperor. cause I am about to desend is your own. You have been long vexed and fatigued by the horrors of a war, undertaken not for the interest of the people of Germany, but for that of a fingle family.

The French army respects and loves all nations, more especially the simple and virtuous inhabitants of the mountains. Your religion, your customs will be every where respected. Our troops will maintain a severe discipline; and nothing will be taken in the country without being paid for in money.

You will receive us with hospitality, and we will treat you with fraternity and friendship.

But should there be any so little acquainted with their true interests as to take up arms, and treat us as enemies, we will be as terrible as the fire from heaven: we will burn the houses, and lay waste the territories of the villages which shall take a part in a war which is foreign to them.

Do not fuffer yourselves to be led into an error by the agents of Secure your Auttria. country, already haraffed by five years of war, from new mileries. tle time the court of Vienna, forced to a peace, will reftore to the nations their privileges which it has usurped, and to Europe the tranquillity it has difturbed.

The commander in chief. (Signed) BUONAPARTE.

Buonaparte, Commander in chief of the Army of Italy, to the Grand Duke of Tuscany.

Head-quarters at Pistoja, June 26.

THE flag of the French republic is confiantly infulted in the port of Leghorn. The property of the French merchants is violated there; every day is marked by fome tempt against France, as contrary to the interests of the republic as to the law of the nations. The che cutive directory have repeated preferred their complaints to minister of your royal highness Paris, who has been obliged to avail that it is impossible for your rough highness to repress the English, and to maintain a neutrality in the post of Leghorn.

This confession immediately convinced the executive directory, that it was their duty to repel force by force, to make their commerce me spected, and they ordered me to fend a division of the army under my command to take possession w

Leghorn.

I have the honour to inform your royal highness, that on the 7th inst. (25th June) a division of army entered Leghorn: their co duct there will be conformable those principles of neutrality which they have been fent to maintain.

The flag, the garrison, the put perty, and your royal highness your people, shall be scrupulous respected.

I am, moreover, instructed to fure your royal highness of the da fire of the French government, witness a continuation of the friendthip which unites the two flates, and of their conviction that your royal highness, conscious of the excettes daily committed by the English ships, which you cannot applaud the juff prevent, will useful, and necessary measures dopted by the executive directory.

i am,

With esteem and consideration, Your Royal Highness's, &c. BUONAPARTA

Anfwer

Answer to the above Letter.

HIS royal highness is conscious of having nothing to reproach himfelf with relative to his frank, candid, and friendly conduct towards the French republic and its sub-A fovereign in friendship with the republic cannot but regard, with the most extraordinary surprife, the orders given to your excellency from the directory. royal highness will not resist the execution of them by force, but will preserve the good understanding with the republic, still stattering himself with the hope that your excellency will, on better information, revoke your present resolves.

Should it not be in your excellency's power to delay the entrance of your troops into Leghorn till further orders, the governor of that place has full powers to agree with you upon terms. This I am ordered, by my fovereign's express command, to communicate to you, with that respect in which I have the honour to remain, &c.

(Signed) VITTORIO FOSSOM-BRONI.

Florence, June 26, 1796.

Head-quarters at Leghorn, June 29.
General Buonaparte to the Grand Duke of Tuscany.

ROYAL HIGHNESS,

AN hour before we entered Leghorn, an Englith frigate carried off two French thips, worth 500,000 livres. The governor suffered them to be taken under the fire of his batteries, which was contrary to the intention of your royal highness, and the neutrality of the port of Leghorn.

1 prefer a complaint to your royal highness against this governor, who, in his whole conduct, displays a decided hatred against the French.

He yesterday endeavoured, at the moment of our arrival, to make the people rise up against us; there is no kind of ill treatment that he did not make our advanced guard experience. I should, doubtless, have been justified in bringing him to trial before a military commission; but from respect for your royal highness, intimately convinced of the spirit of justice which directs all your actions, I preferred sending him to Florence, where I am persuaded, you will give orders to have him punished severely.

I must, at the same time, return my thanks to his royal highness, for his goodness in appointing general Straraldo to supply the army with every thing that was necessary. He has acquitted himself with equal zeal and success.

BUONAPARTE.

Answer of the Grand Duke of Tuscany. GENERAL,

GENERAL Spannochi arrested by your order has been brought hither. It is a point of delicacy to keep him in arrest, until the motives of this step, which I presume to be just, are known to me, in order to give you, as well as the French republic and all Europe, the greatest proof of equity, conformably to the laws of my country, to which I have always made it my duty to submit myself.

I send this letter by the marquis Manfredini, my major domo, whom I request you to inform in what Spannochi has been culpable. You may besides repose full considence in him relative to all the objects

R 3 interesting

246] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

interesting to the repose of my subjects.

I ardently defire to receive a letter written by yourfelf, which in the prefent circumitances may render me completely tranquil, and at the fame time affure the repote of all Tufcany.

(Signed)

FERDINAND.

Paris, 13 Thermider (July 31) 4th Year of the Trench republic.

. The Executive Directory to Citizen

Busnafarte, Communication Chief of the Army of Italy.

THE executive directory, who cannot but praife, citizen general, the indefitigable activity with which you combat the enemics of liberty; the executive directory, who participate with all the good citizens, with all the true friends of their country, with all the fincere republicans in the admiration which the great military talents you display inspire, and which give you a just claim to national gratitude, see with indignation the efforts which libellers, under different matks, are daily making to miflead the public, and to fecond the enemies of our country, by rumours which can have no other end, than to differinate differtion among the friends of order and peace. The directory fee with indignation the perfidy with which those confederate libellers have dured to attack the loyalty. the conflant fidelity of your fervices; and they owe to themselves the formal denial which they give to the ability $oldsymbol{c}$ alumines which the necessity of fortering malignity has made them hazard, by accounts which tended to prote a flimulus to the directory to read their productions.

Some avowed royalists, flatly cira culate a falsehood; others, calling: themfelves prime patriots, but purfuing the fame end, comment upon it, and eke it out in their own way, under the pretence of combating their pretended antagonist. parties are thus at work to flop the progress of order, which is establishing; both second the enemies of the revolution; both with to fow, diffeord, and to difforganize the are mies; both wish thus to sport with the good faith of their readers, of those who afford them subsisting ence, and indecently present to them, as facts, accounts which are nothing but the fruit of a disordered imagination.

No, citizen general, never bave the friends of Austria been able to prepoffers the directory against you, because the friends of Austria have neither access to, nor influence over the directory; because the directory know your principles, and your inviolable attachment to the repub-No, never has your recal been lic. the question; never have any of the members wished to give a succeffor to him who fo gloriously. leads on our republicans to victory. The libeller, who would feign to be your defender, dares affert that he knows the intrigues hatched against you, and of which some money affair was only the pretence: who alluming a virtue not his own, dares add, that delicacy made him pass in silence events which would, only have made our enemies laugh; fuch a man impofes upon, fuch's man deceives the public; and is * evidently unworthy-their confidence. If this well-informed man, who, like his fellow calumniators; withes to give himself an air of importance, pretending to know all all the fecrets of state; if this man knows of an intrigue of fuch a nature as he states; let him discover it; let him make it known to the Directory: it is important enough; it has, no doubt, fufficient interest for the public The march of our armies welfare. —for him who can bring it to light, not to dispense himself from denouncing it to those whom it is destined to lead into error. the filence of that man, his filence, which will be his condemnation, will open the eyes of the public respecting the considence they ought forthwith to give to his infi-You possess, citizen genuations. neral, the confidence of the Directory; the fervices you render every day entitle you to it; the confiderable fums which the republic owes to your victories, proves that you at once occupy yourfelf with the glory and the interest of your country; all the good citizens agree on this point: you will not find it difficult to confign the boafts and calumnies of the rest to the contempt they from themselves merit, and still more from the spirit that dictates them.

(Signed)

REVEILLIERE LEPEAUX, president. LAGARDE, secretary general.

The Ambassador of Sweden to the Citizen Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Paris, August 2, 1796.

CITIZEN MINISTER,

IT is by the express order of my court that I have the honour to renew, before the Directory, the steps I had already taken for the admission of M. de Rehausen, in the quality of charge d'assairs of his majesty with the French republic.

Inviting you, citizen minister, to take again into confideration a step so conformable to the good intelligence which subsists between the two countries, I beg you will permit me to make some observations, which I submit to the Directory.

The confidence which friendly and allied powers reciprocally owe each other, the respect which is its refult, has always been indiferiminately granted to the person chosen by his sovereign to represent him; it is even inseparable from it. Both have, however, been neglected in the person of M. de Re-His private fentiments can the less give umbrage to the government, as he would certainly facrifice them in the exercise of his functions, if they could be contrary to the instructions he has received; and if in his conduct, or in his language, he could be wanting to the treaty which subsists between Sweden and France. And it is in this case only, if a misunderstanding should take place between the two governments, that his recal would become necessary. But fince this is not the cafe, his fentiments cannot be confidered asa valid motive of exclusion, and the refuial becomes confequently less an injury done to M. de Rehausen than a want of respect to his lovereign.

I must likewise remark, that M. de Rehausen being at Paris, has been appointed to attend ad interim to the affairs of Sweden, at a time when a rupture with Russia was every instant expected, and when the Swedish ambassador at that court was on the eve of quitting his post. His appointment could not, therefore, have been influenced by the Empress of Russia, to whom he is otherwise an utter stranger.

B 4 whom

It is for these reasons, citizen minister, that I am unable to attribute to the person of M. de Rehausen the refusal of the Directory to acknowledge him in his public character. This refutal appears evidently to announce the intention of disobliging, in the face of Europe, the most ancient friend of France. I hesitate to pronounce a more decisive supposition; it is too repugnant to the known wishes of the Swedes and the French themselves, as likewise to their refpective interests; and at the same time, it would be difficult for the enemies of both countries, not to find great fatisfaction in the difunion of which the French republic may have given the fignal. is prefcribed to me to declare, that if M. de Rchausen be not acknowledged, his majesty will be obliged, in support of his dignity, to use reciprocity with regard to citizen This necessity will Perrochel. otherwise have no influence on the defire which his majesty will always have to firengthen the bands of friendship and good understanding which ought ever to subfift between the two powers. citizen minister, to accept the asfurance of my most fincere attachment.

(Signed)
E. N. STAEL DE HOLSTEIN.
CH. DELACROIX.

Resolution of the 18th Thermidor, (August 5,) Fourth Year.

THE executive directory having seen the official note presented by Mons. the baron de Stael, ambassador of Sweden, dated August 2, 1796, old style,

Resolves,

Article I. The executive directory persisting in their resulas of admitting M. de Rehausen; they consequently charge the minister, of general police to notify to him the laws of the republic concerning foreigners.

II. The executive directory recal citizen Perrochel, charge d' Affaires, and citizen Marivaux, fecretary of legation, and formerly charge d'Affaires in Sweden.

III. The executive directory protest, nevertheless, that the Swedish nation may always rely on their sentiments of affection.

IV. The ministers of foreign relations and of general police, are charged, each in his capacity, with the execution of the present resolution, which shall be printed with the note.

(Signed)

REVELLIERE LEPEAUX, president.

By order of the executive directory.

(Signed) LAGARDE, secretary.

(A true copy.)

Official Note from the Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Ambassader. (Barthelemy) in Switzerland.

THE French government is informed that the English, after having stopped, during the war, under the most frivolous pretexts, every neutral vessel, have just given the most positive orders to the commanders of their ships of war, to seize, indiscriminately, all the cargoes which they may suppose to be destined for the French.

Whatever injury France may have sustained from this conduct, she has, nevertheless, continued to

to give the only example of the most inviolable respect for the law of nations, which constitutes the pledge and security of their civilization. But after having long tolerated the offence of this Machiavelian system of policy, she at length finds herself compelled, by the most urgent motives, to have recourse to reprish against England.

The executive directory, therefore, orders all the political agents of the French republic to inform the different governments, that the fquadrons and privateers of the republic will act against the ships of every country, in the same manner in which those governments suffer the English to act against them.

This measure ought not to surprise them, since it would be very easy to demonstrate that it is imperiously prescribed by necessity, and is only the effect of a lawful defence. If these powers had known how to make their commerce respected by the English, we should have had no occasion to have recourse to this afflicting extremity.

They will recollect, that the French republic, ever generous, proposed to all the belligerent powers to respect commerce; but that this proposition, honourable to the government which made it, and dictated by a most perfect philanthropy, was rejected with pride, by a government accustomed to treat with contempt the most facred laws of humanity, &c.

20th I hermidor, (August 7,)

Proclamation of the General in Chief of the Army of Italy.

Head-quarters at Castigliona, 19
Thermidor, (August 6,) foorth

Year.

SOLDIERS,

YOU have conquered Italy a fecond time! In five days you have gained two pitched battles, and five inferior actions; you have taken fifteen thousand prisoners, three generals, eighty pièces of cannon, two hundred waggons, and fix stand of colours. tierce Hungarians, triumphant last year on the Rhine, are now in your chains, or fly before you. You have crushed in an instant the principal enemy of the republic. So many high exploits ought not to make you proud, but to inspire you with confidence; they ought to teach you never to count your enemies, however numerous they may be. The conquerors of Lodi, of Lonado, of Castigliona, ought to attack and deftroy them. You renew the boasted examples of Marathon and Platea: like the brave Greek phalanxes, the brigades of the army of Italy thall be immortal.

Receive then, foldiers, the mark of the fatisfaction of your general; it only precedes that of the whole country, and of rifing posterity.

Brave foldiers, be always impetuous in combats, and vigilant on your posts. Death shrinks trembling from the agile and resolutely brave: how often have you marched to meet it, how often have you seen it sly before you and enter the hostile ranks? It often overtakes the dastard, but never strikes the brave till his hour is come.

(Signed) BUONAPARTE.

Address transmitted by the French Ambassador at the Hague to the Dutch Convention, the 20th Thermidore, (7th August).

250] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

Burghers Pepresentatives! THE underfigued minister prenipotentiary of the lines both palalic has the honeur to lathe ite, that occations do not effer to frequently as he could with or giving you publicly a repetition of these affurances of oftenin and regard which he daily receives from the executive directory, as well towards your and only as the people which you regulent. effects is not limited to those publie au dations which Trance has given to all lemope; ner to those Jers generally Amown, to which your commission is the management of foreign affairs can alfo to: ify.

The executive directory is ficadily violents is unceatingly bufy; and the naxim applied to great und addings that all which is does must be estimated trivial, we be any thing remains to be acconsisted, a miss to have been

d by the irrench government e raticemien of her engageis with the Bitavian Republic. "a that moment, when, during the whoser. It maturely and witely regolated the operations of war, and removed hottilities far from your dominions, it neglected in no manner to do away your flighted apprehenfions; and the powerful intervertion of the French government banified a remaining, but infignificant thadow of counter-revolulionary defigns, which being fanned in your vicinity, afforded fome cause of disquietude That.government now directs its most ardent and zealous endeavours to fecure the political existence of Batavia, and to procure it again a place among potentates, with the rank to which it can with justice aspire.

But it views a government wifely. and folidly formed, as one of the most certain means of attaining speedily this defired end; and the executive directory cannot conceal its epinion, that it is time, by a powerful and lasting band, to fatten together again the bundle which runs the risk of being difperfed, and lost for want of these properties. Such would quickly be the inevitable consequence of an order of things, which should permit the burgher to adore excluinvely his city or his province, looking on the country at large as a fiep-mother, for whom he has no love, to whom he owes no allegiance, and whofe lawful rights he mifconceives.

"It is time"—these are the words of the executive directory,— -" it is time, for the interests of the Batavian Republic, and for our. contract with her, that the new order of things, expected by all the friends and lovers of liberty. inould take place; and that all opposite presensions should give way and disappear before a constitution triumphing over federalifm and And it falls within arittoeracy. the pale of our department to labour, in concert with the Batavian people, to establish their independency, by haftening the approaches of their revolution to the object which is its ultimate aim. fentiments of the executive directory might be cafily explained by examples which the national hiftory affords—yes, by what has happened under our own eyes-were it not likely to produce the nioft painful recollections. They afford you,

ratain proof that an unequal nation of particular powers form a bulwark of na-

Arength.

the burghers, then, who are ted by a fincer wish to see ruse of liberty triumph, rethis most positive assu-, that the French governwill applaud and encourage endeavours; and will contiiself indebted to them, as it for a new ally, whenever it cel the auxiliary aid of a state tuted on the immoveable of harmony and indivisibility a state, which she can, with confidence, present to her ls and her enemies; particuto the treacherous English, whom we must quickly conwho, viewing with indifce the miseries of Europe, fhelter of the advantages of commerce, for these last four have, by their dealings with olinded Austria, rather contheir own destruction than ce yourselves, then, in a con, burghers representatives, this time hencesorward, to

: the chance-computations of infamous politics; and introa constitution which will dee your national strength, and ed federal anarchy, which ys power by dividing it: a of government the most dee and calamitous which your est enemy could with to imon you.

E. Noel.

ye from the Executive Directory
the Council of Five Hundred, he 6th Fouctidor, (August 23d.)
and in a Secret Committee.

CITIZENS LEGISLATORS,

THE Directory can no longer leave you ignorant of the afflicting details which they receive from all parts relative to the fituation of the troops stationed in the interior of the republic. For feveral months has their constancy been put to the test by the most painful privations; and bewailing their distress, the directory have admitted more than once that refignation with which French foldiers forget their wants, when those of their country are put before their eyes. As long as the directory could flatter themselves with seeing the end of so critical a fituation in the amelioration of the finances; they propped up the courage of the troops by hopes, and shut up in their own bosom all uneafiness; but the evilstare too great to be any longer concealed; and however painful such a disclofure may be, it is impossible any longer to deny it to the alarming circumstances by which it is exacted. Pay, that facred debt of the republic to those who devote themselves for her, has not been made for feveral months regardless of the urgent requests of government: the treasury could. not fecure that part so interesting. to its service, and the penury of its means ought alone to be reproached. All the bargains are fuspended by the impossibility under which the treasury labours to fulfil the sugagements made with contractors: provisions begin to be exhausted, and there remains no hope of renewing them: every where almost it has been forced to have recourse to requisitions; but this measure, the use of which is fatal, furnished but insufficient resources, and to execute them is dangerous above all in those depart. menie,

252] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

ments, where civil war has only left to agriculture great ravages to repair. In feveral parts of the republic, the subsistence of the compromited; troops was distributions were rarely made in the proportions determined by the law, and often were they fuppreffed for feveral days; the fervice of the magazines, which has only been supported till now by the officers of that branch, is on the point of failing in all the departinents. In fhort, this is the confession most painful to the directory. There are hospitals where it has been found necessary to deny the tick foldiers the nutriment necessary for the recovery of their health. Difcouraged by the diforganization of all branches of the fervice, the officers abandon their posts, to by from the complaints which per-Fente them, and which they are neable to answer. In several places, funds defigned for other purpofes were carried off by force from the public treasury, to supply the wants of the troops, and those illegal measures found an excuse in the imperious law of necessity. Every day courier follows courier, to bring to the directory and to the minitier at war the intelligence of fome misfortune, or the fear of some new danger. The directory conjure you, citizens representatives, to bettow the whole of your attention upon the afflicting picture which they prefent to you, and to occupy yourselves respecting the fources for supplying the public treafury with the means necessary for the subfinence of the troops in the interior; the exacteft economy shall direct the use of those funds, and some reforms which the directory prepare, will foon diminish

The armies, supported by victory, engage no longer the attention of the government but by the accounts of their success: all their solicitude ought therefore to be confined to the troops in the interior, who are not less entitled to the gratitude of the country, and who may expect from it the succours which it owes to its desenders.

(Signed)

REVELLIERE LEPAUX, prefi. LAGARLE, secretary general.

Proclamation of the Executive Directory relative to the Events that occurred during the Night of the 11th and 12th Pructidor, (sug. 28, and 29.)

(12 Fructidor, August 29).

LET true patriots, let the friends of order rejoice! It is in vain that anarchy and royalism unite their is efforts to shake the firebrands of discord, and to dislolve the republican government. Their endeavours shall be fruitless.

Some hundred villains, tranfported with rage at being prevented from exercifing their robbery and their domination, no longer hoping to excite the people to infurrection, but by alarming them for liberty, have last night spread through the streets badges of aristocracy, and stuck up royalist proclamations. Armed with fabres, guns, and pistols, they meanwhile feoured the various parts of this: They attempted great commune. to excite alarms by the found of fire-arms. They every where exclaimed that the royalists had rallied to massacre all the patriots. They invited the people to their. affiftance. They imagined that, in the midst of this disorder, they should save their guilty accomcomplices, who had all departed at this very moment to the place where the legislative body had convoked the high court of justice; they were then to have indulged themselves in all the horrors which they had conceived in devising the conspiracy of Baboeuf.

thould

But the people, acquainted with their true interests, shewed only their attachment to the republic, and the constitution by which it is fecured. They destroyed all the badges of despotism, which the most persidious cunning had disseminated. They bestowed upon the monsters, who again wished to open the career of guilt, all the horror and contempt which they deserved. Confiding in a government with the real and fincere intention of which they are acquainted, all the citizens remained in the most profound tranquillity.

Thanks to the wildom of the people, and to the courage and good conduct of the troops, to the indefatigable zeal of the magistrates appointed to watch over the public security, and to that of the brave republican generals, the tranquillity of Paris was preserved, and the defigns of anarchy suppressed. They all have a right to the public gratitude.

Let the enemies of France at length discover the inutility of their efforts to millead the mass Let its friends of the people. rally round the constitution, which fecures at once our repose and our efforts of a government resolved to maintain it with equal firmness

(Signed)

By order of the Directory,

LAGARDE, secretary.

General Buonaparte to the Executive Directory.

Head Quarters at Modena, 26 Vendemiare, (OA. 17).

YOU-will find fubjoined, citizens directors, the letter I have received from General Gentili. According to it, the Mediterranean is now. Corfica, restored to the republic, will afford resources for our marine, and even the means of recruiting our light infantry. The commissioner Salicetti departs this night for Leghorn, to fail from thence to Corfica. General Gentili is to command provisionally I have provisionally the troops. authorized him to put in requitition leveral columns, in order to enable i the government commissioner to occupy the fortresses till the arrival of French troops.

I shall send thither an officer of artillery, and one of engineers, The exfor organizing affairs. pulsion of the English from the Mediterranean will have great influence on the success of our military operations in Italy.

> (Signed) BUONAPARTE.

Leghorn, 24th Vendemiare, (Oct. 15.) A. Gentili, General of Division, commanding the Expedition, to General Buonaparte.

Long live the republic!—our country is rendered free!

THE Viceroy having announced that he was going to evacuate Corsica, the commune at Bastia formed in consequence a committee, which let at liberty all the reliberty, and let them second the publican prisoners, and has formed. a deputation, which has arrived with that of Corfica, and other against the attempts of all parties. cantons, to renew, in the name of all the citizens, the oath of fidelity REVELLIERE LEPAUX, presi. to the republic. I only wait a favourable wind to put to fea, and - fecure to the republic the most important posts in the island. Bastia, its forts, and St. Florenzo, are already guarded by their inhabitants, conjointly with the English who depart in three days.

254] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

I hope we shall find artillery and magazines.

(Signed)

GENTILI.

Gentili to the French Commissioners. Leghorn, 24 Vendemiaire, (Oci. 15).

THE plan lopg ago fettled by our compatriots to Scliver Corfica from the tyranny of the English, the movements of the interior prepared by the republicans, the dispositions taken here by the patriots for fupporting them, the debarkation already effected on the island of a great many of our fellow citizens, and the numbers preparing here to follow them, have struck terror into the hearts of the English. They were fenfible that they could not long maintain themselves in a country conquered by treason: Elliot is therefore evacuating Corfica, and re-embarking all the English troops.

At this moment, when we are about to put to sea, a numerous deputation of the communes of Bastia, and other places, have arrived, and to give to us this happy news, which we are desirous of communicating to you.

The town of Bastia, saithful to its vows and attachment to France, has formed a provisional committee, which has named a deputation to come and offer the oath of sidelity to the French republic. Bastia, and its forts, as well as St. Fiorenzo, are guarded by the citizens. We are assured that in three days there will be no more English in the country. Hasten to give the orders to go and occupy it, and render it back to the mother country!

(Signed)

GENTILI.

Message of the Executive Directory to the Courcil of Five Hundred, Vendeminiere 25, (OA. 16.) Fifth Year.

Citizen representatives,

THE British cabinet, for the purpose of inducing the parliament to grant the necessary supplies for the ensuing campaign, has adopted two measures:—the one has for its object to open the way for an immediate and direct negociation with the republic; and the other, to restore the course of exchange between Holland and London, and to authorize the exportation of English merchandize to the ports of the United Provinces, and the country which it still affects to deficibe as Austrian Flanders.

The Batavian government, fenfible of its real interests, has already feen the latter measure in its true light. It has rejected the pretended favour, and by an energetic proclamation has taken the necessary precautions to prevent the introduction of English merchandize, and to look upon those who shall purchase or use them as enemies to their country, a circumstance which has spread consternation over the English commerce and manufactories.

The executive directory, on its part, has published in the nine united departments, the 1, 2, 3, 5, and 6th articles of the 18th of the 2d year, and has roused, by particular orders, the attention of the officers of the customs in every part of the republic, who have already made many seizures and con-

fiscations,

fiscations. But it is in vain that every effort is made to hinder the introduction of English merchandize, if no steps are taken to prevent their consumption in the interior of the republic.

The fourth article of the abovementioned law specified, that every person who introduced or sold such merchandize, should be deemed suspected persons, and punished accordingly, pursuant to the decree of the 17th September. This law can no longer be in force; it is for your wildom, citizens representatives, to substitute some others in its stead.

In England, the public execute fevere justice on those who affect to prefer the produce of foreign to their own national manufactories. Can there be found in France, te men, who are so far the enemies of their own country, as to oppose a measure so essentially necessary to the industry and prosperity of the nation, and which tends to lessen those resources we furnish our enemies for prolonging the war they have excited against us? You have still, citizens representatives, legislative acts to form against those, who, in despite of the law, have, by their speculation of mercantile avidity, obtained stores of English merchandize. If you do not think it proper they should incur the penalty of confiscation, and the other punishments prescribed by the law, you may at least appoint a short period for their reexporting the goods, which they ought not to have introduced, and that under such penalties as you may dictate. Yes, citizens reprefentatives, the fafety of the repuband promptitude of the measures you shall take on this occafion. Do you defire to re-animate your commerce, to relieve your manufactories, and to re-establish your trade? Would you deprive our enemies of their great refources for carrying on war against us? Would you force the British government to treat fincerely for peace, and would you have it brought to a conclusion? One of the most powerful means of promoting this great end of public prosperity, would be to take the most efficacious measures for prohibiting, until the return of peace, the fale or confumption of English merchandize in every part of the republic.

The executive directory invites you to take this object into immediate confideration.

(Signed) Revelliere Lereaux, president.

L'AGARDE, sec. general.

On the 26th of October, the Executive Directory of the French Republic presented a second Message upon the Subject to the Council of Five Hundred.

Citizens Representatives, of English merchandize. If you do not think it proper they should incur the penalty of confiscation, and the other punishments prescribed by the law, you may at least appoint a short period for their reexporting the goods, which they ought not to have introduced, and that under such penalties as you may dictate. Yes, citizens representatives, the safety of the republic, perhaps, depends on the rigour revoking the decree which it en-

254] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

fecure to the republic the most important posts in the island. Bastia, its forts, and St. Liorenzo, are already guarded by their inhabitants, conjointly with the lengtish who depart in three days.

I hope we shall find artillery and magazines.

(Signed) GENTILE.

Gentili to the French Commillioners. Legborn, 24 Vendemiaire, (Ozi. 15).

THE plan lopg ago fettled by our compatriots to Keliver Corfica from the tyranny of the English, the movements of the interior prepared by the republicans, the dispositions taken here by the patriots for fupporting them, the debarkation already checked on the island of a great many of our fellow citizens, and the numbers preparing here to follow them, have struck terror into the hearts of the English. They were fenfible that they could not long maintain themselves in a country conquered by treason: Elliot is therefore evacuating Corfica, and re-embarking all English troops.

At this moment, when we are about to put to sea, a numerous deputation of the communes of Bastia, and other places, have arrived, and to give to us this happy news, which we are desirous of communicating to you.

The town of Bastia, saithful to its vows and attachment to France, has formed a provisional committee, which has named a deputation to come and offer the oath of sidelity to the French republic. Bastia, and its forts, as well as St. Fiorenzo, are guarded by the citizens. We are assured that in three days there will be no more English in the country. Hasten to give the orders to go and occupy it, and render it back to the mother country!

(Signed)

GENTILI.

Message of the Executive Directory to the Council of Five Eundred, Vendeminite 25, (Oct. 16.) Fifth Year.

Citizen representatives,

THE British cabinet, for the purpose of inducing the parliament to grant the necessary supplies for the ensuing campaign, has adopted two measures:—the one has for its object to open the way for an immediate and direct negociation with the republic; and the other, to restore the course of exchange between Holland and London, and to authorize the exportation of English merchandize to the ports of the United Provinces, and the country which it still affects to describe as Austrian Flanders.

The Batavian government, fenfible of its real interests, has already feen the latter measure in its true light. It has rejected the pretended facour, and by an energetic proclamation has taken the necessary precautions to prevent the introduction of English merchandize, and to look upon those who shall purchase or use them as enemies to their country, a circumstance which has spread consternation over the English commerce and manusactories.

The executive directory, on its part, has published in the nine united departments, the 1, 2, 3, 5, and 6th articles of the 18th of the 2d year, and has roused, by particular orders, the attention of the officers of the customs in every part of the republic, who have already made many seizures and con-

fiscations,

fiscations. But it is in vain that every effort is made to hinder the introduction of English merchandize, if no steps are taken to prevent their consumption in the interior of the republic.

The fourth article of the abovementioned law specified, that every person who introduced or sold such merchandize, should be deemed suspected persons, and punished accordingly, pursuant to the decree of the 17th September. This law can no longer be in force; it is for your wildom, citizens representatives, to substitute some others in its stead.

In England, the public execute fevere justice on those who affect to prefer the produce of foreign to their own national manufactories. Can there be found in France, when, who are so far the enemies of their own country, as to oppose a measure so essentially necessary to the induttry and prosperity of the nation, and which tends to leisen those resources we furnish our enemies for prolonging the war they have excited against us? You have still, citizens representatives, legislative acts to form against those, who, in despite of the law, have, by their speculation of mercantile avidity, obtained thores of English merchandize. If you do not think it proper they should incur the penalty of confiscation, and the other punishments prescribed by the law, you may at least appoint a short period for their reexporting the goods, which they ought not to have introduced, and that under fuch penalties as you may dictate. Yes, citizens reprefentatives, the fafety of the republic, perhaps, depends on the rigour and promptitude of the meafures you shall take on this occasion. Do you defire ,to re-animate your commerce, to relieve your manufactories, and to re-establish your trade? Would you deprive our enemies of their great resources for carrying on war against us? Would you force the British government to treat fincerely for peace, and would you have it brought to a conclusion? One of the most powerful means of promoting this great end of public prosperity, would be to take the most efficacious measures for prohibiting, until the return of peace, the fale or confumption of English merchandize in every part of the republic.

The executive directory invites you to take this object into immediate confideration.

(Signed) Revelliere Lereaux, president.

L'AGARDE, sec. general.

On the 26th of October, the Executive Directory of the French Republic presented a second Message upon the Subject to the Council of Five Hundred.

Citizens Representatives,

IT is of moment that the executive directory should not conceal from you, that, by the official correspondence of its agents, and by private informations which they receive from all parts, they are certain, that if the legislative body does not take speedy measures to prevent the importation and sale of English goods in France, the Batavian convention will not delay revoking the decree which it enacted, to extend the same prohibition of Holland.

The executive directory ought to enable you to observe at the same time, that the uncertainty respecting the resolution you will deem proper to take on that subject, steps the progress of the happy effects, which had been produced by the sole proposition of seconding the measures taken by the Dutch, by reducing a pound sterling to 21 livres, 10 sous, which had been raised at that epoch to 24 livres, 5 sous, by the exchange.

They ought finally to remark, that if the prohibition they request is not decreed soon, if the delays on that point, or the modifications which destroy the main and of the principal object, should occasion the revocation of the measures taken by the Dutch, England will soon see vanish the embarrassment she feels to procure the supplies she stands in need of, if the wishes to prosecute the war, and that the British commerce would even then feel a mighty interest to see it prolonged.

The determination which you are about to take, citizens reprefentative, will thus have a most thriking influence on the success of the negociations which occupy that government at this moment for the restoration of peace.

(Signed) REVELLILEE LEPEAUX, prefident.

LAGARDE, scc. general.

On the 2d of November, the Council of Five Hundred paffed the following Refolutions.

ART. I. All articles manufactured in England, or in English establishments, shall continue to be of the republic. From the date of the publication of this law, all persons are forbidden to expose such articles to sale, or to give notice that they are to be sold.

II. No article, containing articles of English manufacture, shall, under any pretext, enter the ports of the republic.

III. The necessity of putting into a port shall not furnish a plea for any deviation from the preceding article, where the vessels exceeds ten tons in burden.

IV. With respect to vessels above ten tons, proved to have been forced into port, the captain, on the moment of his arrival, shall produce to the commissioners of the customs an exact statement of the quantity, quality, and value or English merchandize according to the inventory; it shall be deposited in a magazine with three keys; one to be kept by the captain, the other by the commiffioners, and the third by the municipal agent of the commune; and the ship shall not depart till the captain has proved that they have been all re-embarked exactly as they were delivered.

V. Articles of English manufacture in vessels taken from the enemy, or shipwrecked, or those which arise from consistation, shall be deposited in magazines till they are again exported.

VI. Every person who shall have occasion to visit a magazine where English manufactures are deposited, shall, within three days after the publication of the law, give in to the municipal administration of the canton a detailed account of their quantity, quality, and value.

VII. Within the extent of three leagues leagues from the frontiers, by land or fea, the preceding declaration to be made to the nearest office of customs, and the goods deposited in magazines appointed for the purpote.

VIII. After the expiration of the period fixed to make the deciaration, the officers of the customs, accompanied by a municipal administrator, may visit the houses suspected to contain or conceal articles fabricated in lingland. Visits during the day may also be made by the proper officers, to discover whether any articles prohibited by this decree are concealed in magazines; and if any such are found, the whole house of the owner of the magazine may be searched.

IX. All military corps stationed on the frontiers, and all public functionaries, are enjoined to stop any article of English manufacture found on the territory of the republic.

X. Violations of this decree to be punished with arrest (the criminal to be brought before the tribanal of correctional police) and confication of the goods, veilels, carriages, horses, and beatts of burden; and the delinquent, befides, to be condemned to pay not less than double the value of the object feized; and imprisonment for a period not less than five days, nor more than three months. In case of a repetition of the offence the fine to be double, and the imprisonment for the space of fix months.

XI. The value of the goods confilcated thall be given as a reward to the feizers, or to those who have affilted in the arrest.

A fixth of the confilcation is granted as an indemnity to the Vol. XANVIII.

municipal administrators and commissioners of the executive directory, in all cases where their presence is appointed by the law.

XII. Of English manufacture are considered all goods, whether directly brought from England, or coming indirectly from other countries.

- 1. All kinds of cloth and stuffs of wool and cotton, or mixtures of these materials; tamboured nankeens, mullins, striped woollen and cotton cloths, and English tapestry.
- 2. All kinds of cotton or wooden caps, simple or mixed.

3. Buttons of every kind.

4. All kinds of metal: all wrought iron, cutlery, clock-work, fieel, copper, tin, white iron, polithed or rough, pure or mixed.

5. Tanned leather, dreffed hides, or plain for carriages or boots, harnets, and all fadlery wares.

6. Riband, hats, gauzes, known as English wares.

- 7. All kinds of tkins for gloves or breeches, and these articles in a manufactured state.
- 8. All kinds of glass and crystal, except vales of glass used in chymistry, and glasses for spectacles and watches.
 - 9. Refined sugars.

10. All kinds of pottery known by the name of pipe-clay.

XIII. The refined sugars comprehended in the preceding article actually in the interior, are not subject to these declarations, and to be lodged in the magazines according to the preceding articles.

XIV. All the objects of foreign manufacture different from those pointed out in Article XII. of which the import is not prohibited by former laws, thall not be admitted admitted unless accompanied with certificates, that they are the produce of countries, at peace with France.

XV. Certificates shall be delivered by the French confuls, or by the public offices; they shall contain a formal attestation that the articles have been manufactured in the faid country, and shall mention the name of the artist.

XVI. In addition to the penalties above pronounced, the names, firnames, ages, professions, and places of abode of the violators of the law and of their agents, shall by the special interference of the minister of the interior, be stuck up in all public places, and inferted in the periodical papers, under the general title of brokers of England, destroyers of French industry. For this purpose the commissioners of the executive directory, with the tribunals of correctional police, shall be bound to send to the minister of the interior the names, firnames, ages, professions, places of abode, of all those against whom they shall have pronounced fentence in conformity to the prefent law.

XVII. All the regulations of the former laws, contrary to the present, are repealed.

The above resolutions were afterwards fanctioned by the council of ancients.

Message of the Executive Directory to the Council of Five Hundred.

20 Frimaire, Dec. 10. THE multiplied wants of the republic call imperiously upon you to display and employ all her refources. You are not ignorant, that every branch of the public fervice experiences the utmost dif-The pay of the troops remains unsettled; the defenders of. the country fuffer all the horrors of nakedness; their courage is decreased by the painful sense of their wants; the disgust arising from them naturally occasions defertion; the hospitals are in want of fuel, medicines, and all other necessaries; the public alms and workhouses experience the same want, and for this reason they reject the needy and infirm citizens, who usually found an asylum in The creditors of the flate; the contractors, who daily supply the wants of the armies, with great difficulty obtain only a finall part of the fums due to them, and the distress which they experience on this account deters others who might supply these wants with more exactness, and on terms more advantageous for the republic. The public roads are impassable, and the communications interrupted. The falaries of the public tunctionaries remain unpaid. one end of the republic to the other, the judges and administrators are reduced to the dreadful dilemma, either to expose themtelves and their families to the utmost misery, or disgracefully to fell themselves to intriguers. disassected agitate every part of the republic; murder and affaffination are organized in many places, and the administration of police, without activity and without force from want of provisionary means, is unable to check these diforders.

It is in your power to make this afflictive picture disappear; you can diffuse new life through all the parts of the public administration, tion, and re-establish the social harmony, the springs of which are impeded, but not destroyed.

An important work, a simple work, but which tends directly to the end which you will wish to propose to yourselves, has already been presented to you on this subject, and you have adopted it. Wise principles, equitable bases, have been submitted to you for the establishment of contributions, and means sufficient to provide for the ordinary and extraordinary expences, which the consolidation of the republic and the happiness of 'the people require.

But until the laws which you are to lay down on those bases are enacted, until the reimbursements are in activity, until by a certainty of receipts the necessary order can be established for giving an invariable application to every branch of the public revenue; waiting the happy instant which is near, if you choose, you ought by a provisional refource to foster and re-animate all; you must restore motion to the divers departments of administration, which all hold together, and fecond each other, and which it becomes indispensable to extricate from the dangerous state of decline in which they are plunged.

(Here the directory points out the employments of the arrears due upon the last fourth part of the national domains sold by the law of the 28th ventose, as the means of obtaining that desirable end: every purchaser of national domains, by virtue of the said law, who has not paid the whole amount of his purchase, is to pay the same in bills payable to order, and in ready specie, ten days after the promulgation of a law to be passed for the purpose, in his department; those sums are to be paid at the expiration of each term of payment stipulated, unless the purchaser will come forward fooner with his payments, and thus benefit his capital by receiving interest. The bills or fecurities are to be mortgaged upon the property bought by the purchafer, who, in case of default, is to fuffer forfeiture; the estate is, of course, to be put up to sale by If any administration neglects to enforce this payment, by putting up the estate to sale, its members are to be personally refponfible. The bills thus issued by the purchasers of national domains as aforesaid, are not to have any forcible circulation, but they are to pass by considence, at the responsibility of the drawers and endorsers, for metallic specie, their actual and natural value being mortgaged and fecured upon the value of the estates in payment of which they were issued.)

BARRAS, president.

Proclamation published by Citizen Salicetti, the Commissary of Government with the Armies of Italy and the Alps, to the Citizens of the Department of Corsica.

CITIZENS,

AFTER a train of events, as extraordinary as calamitous, you are at length restored to the unity of the republic. I am now, in the name of the government, to bear to you the tidings of peace and confolation; the constitutional act, which the people of France have accepted, will soon be presented to you, and your happiness will depend only on your execution of

5 2

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796. 260]

It is by submission to the law that you are to find your liberty fecured, the destruction of faction accomplished, and the conclusion of your miseries.

Profit at length by the lessons of experience; let the fources of division among you, which have been the spring of all your miseries, be dried up; and the spirit of party, which has been ever the forge in which your fetters have been formed, give place to the bonds of fraternity? and, above all things, let what has passed teach you not to give credit to men, unless when they speak the language of princiciple; and let him, who would hereafter substitute his will for law, be confidered as a traitor, and abandoned to the vengeance of freemen.

It was a boundless confidence repoled in one of your fellow-citizens, who was far from deferring it, that missed you so much as to canfe you to betray your dearest intereits, to detach yourfelf from your mother-country, not only at the moment when the was bestowing on you the citimable boon of liberty, but while she was lavishing her treasures for the increase of your industry, for the formation of your havens, and for the cultivation of your fields. It was a blind obedience to the will of a mean, ambitious man, that led you to the commission of the most atrocious crime that republicans could commit, that of submitting to a king.

Citizens, you have great crimes, for which you should make reparation. The stigma with which you are branded can only be done away by a conduct such as to justify the generofity with which the French republic has treated you, in reftering you to the plenitude of your May you make fuch ute of this indulgence, as is worthy of men who with for freedom, without acquiring it by the horrors of anarchy! who are disposed fubmit, without meanness, to the laws, and to acknowledge no other authority than that which may emanate from the republic.

The fatal error, of which during three years you have been the viotims, should instruct you how far you ought to give credit to the profellion of those who are the cna. mies of the republic. The English could not prevail on you to betray your duty but by a promise to preferve your liberty; and yet, while they loaded you with contempt, they plunged you in flavery. were bound to have prevented crimes by the punishment of those who committed them; yet they encouraged every wickedness, by giving impunity to affassins. They had iworn to defend you against the French, whole just indignation you had provoked; yet, when their interest called them.elfe.where, they abandoned you to the mercy of the republic, which you had mistrusted.

What a contrast does the generous conduct of republicans form to that of their enemies! They return to you with the olive-branch of peace in their hands—they forget the injuries which they have fuffered—and if ever the recollection of them crosses their minds, it is only when they are anxious to caution you against new errors, by which new attempts may be made to seduce you from your duty. Let not those days of horror and of calamity pass from before your fight, in which the general council of the department lighted the torch of civil war, and reared the standard of rebellion in the soi-disant assembly of Corfica. If you had then been commanded by energetic patriots, they would, by enlightening the people, have neutralized the influence of the traitor, who, while, preaching liberty, fought only the means of enflaving you; and, if the administrators had then done their duty, they would have prevented those evils which have been the necessary result of this first act of rebellion, and you would not now have had occasion to blush at those disastrous events which have been the consequence of the errors into which by degrees you were misled.

The constitution insured to you not only the free exercise of your civil and political rights, but also that of religion, which has been fo strangely abused for the purpose of The English had deceiving you. become the friends, the protectors of the pope; thus men without probity, and without virtue, deplored the decay of religion, and the cry of impiety was raised by those whose days were numbered only by the crimes they had committed, and by the immoral actions which dilgraced them.

Ye ministers of religion! the constitution secures to you the freedom of worship; the government respects those who profess the doctrines of the gospel; and the consciences of citizens are a sacred asylum into which the eye of its agents does not penetrate: but those who would preach discord in the name of the God of peace; those who would abuse the sacred ministry which they are called to fill, and who would corrupt public opinion by the poison of fanaticism; such are men to whom the rigour of republican laws extends its severest punishments—a rigour enjoined both by policy and by respect for religion.

Ye numerous patriots, who during three years have groaned under the rod of those proud masters to whom you were fold, while you fighed for the moment in which you might take up arms to vindicate your rights; and above all, ye who, to fecure the happiness of your country, have preferred exile to the fliame of obeying a king; whose generous devotion to the fervice of your country has overcome all obstacles, has endured all wants, and has braved all dangers—it is your's to give the first example of civic virtue.

At the approach of the arms of the republic, those traitors, who had been most guilty, disappeared; no longer would they tread the ground they had fought to dishonour, without finding death hand; and should any be found to remain in the country, the law will speedily overtake them; but others it behoves you to see mistaken brethren, who, returning to their right reason, will merit by republican conduct your virtue and your esteem. Be united; forget your divitions, and unanimously Iwear on the altar of your country, and by the manes of your companions in danger and in glory, who died in battle in defence of the republic, eternal hatred to royalty.

Given at Bastia, the 24th of Nov. 5th year of the republic, one and indivisible.

SALICETTI.

1 realy

Treaty of Peace, concluded between the King of Surdinia and the French republic.

THE French republic and his majesty the king of Sardinia, equally animated by the defire of making a happy peace fucceed to the war which divides them, have appointed, viz. the executive directory, in the name of the French republic, citizen Charles Delacroix, minister of foreign affairs, and his majesty the king of Sardinia, M. M. the Chevaliers de Revel and de Tonfo, to negotiate the clautes and conditions proper for re-establishing and confolidating good harmony between the two states, who, after having exchanged their full and respective powers, have agreed to the following articles:

I. There shall be peace and good neighbourhood between the French republic and the king of Sardinia. All hostilities shall cease between the two powers, reckoning from the time of signing the present treaty.

II. The king of Sardinia revokes all adhesion, consent, or accession, public or secret, given by him to the armed coalition against the French republic; and all the treaties of alliance, offensive and defensive, which he may have concluded against the said republic with any power whatsoever. He shall not furnish any contingent in men or money to any powers armed against France, upon any pretence, or under any authority whatsoever.

III. The king of Sardinia fairly and entirely renounces for ever, for himself or his successors, in favour of the French republic, all the rights which he can pretend to have to Savoy, and the counties of Nice, Tenda, and Breuil.

IV. The limits between the states of the king of Sardinia and the departments of the French republic shall be marked by a line through the most advanced points of the frontier of Piedmont, the summits, plateaux (stat tops of hills) mountains, and other places hereaster described, as well as the intermediate summits and plateaux, viz. from the point where the frontiers of ci-devant Francigny, Duchy of Aoste and Valais, unite to the extremity of the Glaciers, or Monts, Maudits.

Ist. The summits or plateaux of the Alps at the rising of t Colmayor.

2d. Little Saint Bernard, and the hospital situated there.

3d. The summits or plateaux of Mont-Alban, of the Col-de Cre-fance, and of Mont-Iseran.

4th. Turning a little toward the fouth, the summits or place ur of Cerat and of Gros-Caval.

5th. Great Mont-Cenis, and the hospital which stands to the south east of the lake of that mountain.

6th. Little Mont-Cenis.

7th. The summits or plateers which separate the valley of Barden nach from the Val-des-Pres.

8th. Mont-Genevre.

oth. The summits or plateaux which separate the valley of Quires from that of Vaudois.

10th. Mont-de-Vaudois.

11th. Mont-de-Viso.

12th. Mont de-l'Argenterie.

13th. The fource of the Abayette and the Sture.

14th. The mountains between the vallies of Sture and Geflo, on one part; and those of Saint Etienne or Tinea, of Saint Martin or Vezubia, of Tenda, or of Roya, on the other. th. Leroche-Barbon, on the nes of the state of Genoa, fome communes, habitations ortions of territories of the faid nunes, actually in friendship the French republic, fall withhe line of frontiers above deed, they shall continue to make of the republic, notwithstanding inference that may be made a contrary from this article.

The king of Sardinia engages of permit emigrants or persons ported from the French repubsitop or reside in his dominite He may, however, retain in rvice the emigrants of the desents of Mont Blanc, and of saritime Alps, so long as they to cause of complaint by enteror manœuvres tending to opthe internal safety of the re-

The king of Sardinia reces all demand of recovery, fonal claim which he might id to exercise against the h republic for causes anterior present treaty.

I here shall be immediatecluded between the two powtreaty of commerce on equipass, and such as may secure: French nation advantages, It equal to those enjoyed in minions of the king of Sardithe most favoured nations.

he mean time, all communis and commercial relations he re-established.

I. The king of Sardinia oblimfelf to grant a full and eninefty to all his subjects who been prosecuted for political ns. Every process which ave been raised on this subwell as the judgments which intervened, are abolished. All their property, moveable and immoveable, or the value thereof, if it has been fold, shall be restored without delay. It shall be lawful for them to dispose of it, to return and reside in the dominions of the king of Sardinia, or to retire therefrom.

IX. The French republic and his majesty the king of Sardinia engage to supersede the sequestration of all effects, revenues, or property, seized, consistated, detained, or sold, belonging to the citizens or subjects of either power, relative to the actual war, and to admit them respectively to the legal exercise of the actions or rights, which may belong to them.

X. All the prisoners, respectively made, shall be restored in one month, reckoning from the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty, on paying the debts which they may have contracted during their captivity.

The fick and wounded shall continue to be taken care of in the respective hospitals. They shall be restored when cured.

XI. Neither of the contracting powers shall grant a passage through its territory to the troops of any enemy of the other.

XII. Besides the fortresses of Coni, Ceva, and Tortona, as well as the territory which the troops of the republic occupy, or ought to occupy, they shall occupy the fortresses of Exiles, Assette, Suza, Brunette, Chateau Dauphin, and Alexandria; for which last place Valence shall be substituted, if the general in chief of the French republic prefer it.

XIII. The fortresses and territories above described shall be restored to the king of Sardinia upon the conclusion of the treaty of commerce between the republic and his majesty, of general peace, and the establishment of the line of frontiers.

S 4 conclusion

XIV. The country occupied by the troops of the republic, and which should be definitively restored, shall remain under the civil government of his Sardinian majesty, but shall be liable to levies of military contributions, and surnithing provision on forage which have been, or may be enacted for the supply of the French army.

XV. The fortifications of Brunette and Suza, as well as the intrenchments formed above that town, thall be demolished, and destroyed, at the expence of his Sardinian majesty, at the direction of commissioners appointed by the executive directory.

The king of Sardinia shall not be permitted to establish or repair any fortification on this part of the frontier.

XVI. The artillery of occupied places, the demolition of which is not stipulated by the present treaty, shall be employed for the service of the republic, but shall be restored with the other fortresses at the same epoch to his Sardinian majesty. The stores and provisions which may be there shall be consumed, without recovery, for the service of the republican army.

XVII. The French troops shall have free passage through the states of the king of Sardinia, in entering or returning from the interior of Italy.

XVIII. The king of Sardinia accepts the mediation of the French republic for definitively terminating the differences which have long subsisted between his majesty and the republic of Genba, and for deciding on their respective claims.

XIX. Conformable to the fixth article of the treaty concluded at the Hague, on the 27th Floreal, 3d year, the Batavian republic is included in the present treaty. There shall be peace and friendship between that republic and the king of Sardinia. Every thing shall be established between them on the same footing as before the present war.

XX. The king of Sardinia shall disavow, by his minister to the French republic, the proceedings employed towards the last amball sador of France.

XXI. The present treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications exchanged in less than one month, reckoning from the signing of the present treaty.

Done and concluded at Paris, the 25th Floreal, 4th year of the French republic, one and indivisible, answering to the 15th of May, 1796.

LE CHEVALIER DE TONSOL

(Signed) CHARLES DELACROIN.

LE CHEVALIER DE REVEL.

The executive directory decrees and fign the present treaty of peaces with the king of Sardinia, negotiated in the name of the French republic by the minister of foreight affairs, appointed by the executive directory, by a decree of the 224 Floreal, and charged with instructions to that effect.

At Paris, the 28th Florest, 4th year of the French republication one and indivisible.

(Signed) Letourneur, Rewbell,
Carnot,
P. Barras,

L. M. REVEILLBRE LEPAUS.
Melloge

Message of the Executive Directory to the Council of Five Hundred, in Jan. 1796.

Citizens Legislators,

THE executive directory can no longer defer to call the most serious attention of the legislative body to the emigrants in the colonies.

The national convention thought proper to adjourn this discussion of the greatest urgency and importance; on the 25th Messidor, third year, when the committee of public safety proposed, in a report concerning the state of St. Domingo, to enforce the execution of the laws respecting emigrants in the colonies, as well as in the mother country. The moment is arrived when the legislators of the republic, fensible of the mischief of too much indulgence, ought to crush with their anathema the most irreconcileable enemies of liberty and equality. It is necessary that the emigrants, in whatever place they refide, or whatever disguise they affume, should no longer be able to elude the fentence of the law pronounced against them.

Any distinction between the emigrants of France and those of the colonies would be extremely unjust and impolitic. It would occasion the loss of our colonies, whom liberty alone can attach to us, and along with the loss of our colonies, would destroy every hope of re-establishing our commerce, and of procuring to the republic an inexhaustible source of real opulence and prosperity.

The national convention was for a long time led into an error in consequence of the prevalence of a factious and unfounded opinion.

They retained an idea, that it was possible to dispense with nature and justice with respect to the freedom of the blacks, and to save our colonies; by committing a criminal outrage against the rights of man.

Some legislators, deceived by the artifices of the colonial aristocracy, were ignorant of the real causes of those calamities which desolated our colonies; but the report of the commission appointed to investigate the truth, which so much intrigue had been employed to conceal, could not fail to open their eyes.

Will the protectors, the defenders of the emigrant colonists, who have successively been demagogues, royalists, and moderés, according to the different periods of the revolution, still be able to interest your compassion, by representing to you the loss of their fortune, and destitute situation in which they are placed?

But have not the clergy and nobility of France, and all the emigrants in Europe, cause to regret the loss of the privileges on which they founded the slavery of the people? And have they not been the authors of their own wretchedness and disgrace?

They also appeal to the compassion of the French people—they also stile themselves the victims of a revolution, which has compelled them to abandon their homes, and yet the constitution for everinterdicts all of them from returning to the country.

Will these emigrant colonists say; that they only retired to the United States to avoid the horrors of war, and that they have remained in a neutral country?

But .

266] ANNUAL REGISTER,

But did not a great number of those very emigrants from France, who occasioned so many mischiefs to the country, refort to a neutral country? Why did not thefe colonifts, always rebels to the laws, not take up arms to defend them. as well as the magistrates, who were their organs? It can now be no longer doubted, from letters that have been intercepted, and the official reports of the agents of the republic, that Philadelphia was the feat of an English committee, which, without doubt, eluded the vigilance of the American government, and of which the colonitis were the agents in the fame manner. as the Authrian at Bafle were the more oftenfible agents of an Auftrian committee.

Even supposing that the emigrant colonists were only so cowardly as to withdraw themselves from the evils of the war, which they provoked by their refiffance to the laws respecting the emancipation of the blacks, and that they only fought an afylum in the United States, ought they not to have taken the first safe and honourable opportunity which prefented, in order to return to the French territories? Yet in vain did the ministers of the republic, in America, invite them by official intimations, by journals, and by placards, to return to France, offering them a free pattage aboard the thips of the republic. They full refused, thoping that the triumphs of England and of Spain would speedily facilitate their return to their native foil again, poliuted by flavery, and would enable them to carry along with them the pride of dominion, info-

lence, and death themselves refug of perfecution, 1 public stretches o the has the right who rather chufe tance during that calls for the uni are not fuch in r After this stateme without criminal diffinction betwe of France, and tl nies:? Undoubte gillators, you net opinion, and your be difarmed by the ons men, who hypocritically crin umphs of the repu

Their property to the republic, two milliards of a shall have been repervalue by wife nagement. You forcing the just several campaigns dom and moderationay not be able.

which will raise to the highest pitch, the prosperity of th

The executive pressed with the im object which they gested, propose to body to take their n most serious consided declare, that the declare, that the declared in all the coasin France.

(Signed)

REUBBLL, Pref. 3
By the Executive Directory,
LAGARDE, Sec.
M.fage

Message from the Directory, addressed to the Council of Ancients, dated the 5th Pluviose (Jan. 25) and read in a Secret Committee.

CITIZENS LEGISLATORS,

THE enemies of France have spoken of peace, but it was to relax our preparations, while they themselves redoubled their efforts for continuing the war; they with to weaken the courage of our defenders, by lulling them with the hopes of approaching peace, which they themselves do not ceale to elude by the most evalive forms, and the most frivolous pretexts. This pertidy on their part is not new, and the reports they have affected to circulate on this subject, since the commencement of hotlilities, have always been feized and believed by the foreign faction which they But thefe maintain among us. manœuvres have never been countenanced by the executive directory, who in offering peace to the coalefeed powers, on conditions as moderate as are confittent with the national dignity, have neglected nothing for affuring new triumphs to the republican arms.

The French should know that they never can have peace with their enemies till they shall have rendered it impossible for them to pursue their disastrous projects. I bis epoch is not far off; it must crown a vigorous campaign, and we have reason to think that that which is about to be opened will yield in nothing to that of the third year. The government already acquires thrength every day, and the hopes of the enemies of the interior of a disagreement between the legislative body and the directory difappear every day; the circulation of provisions begins to be re-esta-blithed; the young citizens are defirous of rejoining their colours; the general activity contributes to fecond the falutary and decifive meature of the forced loan; the certainty, in short, of seeing all the factious punithed, whether their royalism be open or concealed, or whether they dissemble it under the last forms of anarchy: every thing, in short, announces, that if we are forced by our implacable enemies to cover still their bloody plains with our foldiers, it will be to gain soon new laurels, to enjoy from henceforward the unalterable repose that is assured by the constitution, fworn to by all Frenchmen, and the return of morality and justice, the love of labour and œconomy. Citizens legislators, you are aware of what renders the service so painful in the present moment. notwithstanding the prodigious resources which are still to be found in the Republic, is the absence of representative signs of exchange; fwallowed up by that avarice which renders it impossible to provide the necessary supplies for the armies. We must devise some substitute, and the directory can perceive no other except that of raising articles in kind, at least those which are at prefent most necessary and indispensable, such as horses for carriages, and for the use of cavalry.

The principle cause of the little success of the last campaign was the desiciency of the means of conveyance, and the superiority of our enemies cavalry. The evil increased every day, and we are obliged to tell you, citizens legislators, that if there is not taken, in this respect, a measure prompt and essications, we must expect deseats. The directory requests, that you will authorize it to raise the thirtieth horse in every part of the republic. Experience assures the success of this measure; all others will only have doubtful consequences, slow, and attended with much expence, and the sending out a prodigious quantity of specie.

Will

The directory had determined not to make to the legislative body the proposition of an extraordinary levy of horses till after the subject had been long considered, and it shall be sensible that there exist no other means of assuring the service.

This levy thall be made by the administrative bodies. The legi-slative body may itself state the mode of the execution, or leave it to the directory, who will follow the most economical and the least vexatious to the citizens; whatever decision you may make in this respect, circumstances require that this measure may not be deferred.

Citizens legislators, the directory invites the council to take the object of its demand into the most serious and the most prompt consideration.

REUBELL, President.

Message of the Executive Directory of France to the Council of Five Hundred, respecting the Emission of Mandats Territoriaux.

CITIZENS LEGISLATORS,

YOUR resolution of the 20th of this month relative to the creation of "Territorial Mandats," payable to the bearer, is one of those grand and happy measures, which at the most critical æras of the revolution, have operated to the welfare of the republic. But it would be fatal if you did not hasten to make an addition which is indispensable, by giving to those mandats a compulfive currency. Without such a law, the new paper and the old would both fall into equal depreciation. The stock jebber would seize upon both, they would plunder the nation of its demester, and the government of its me fources.

Certainly when paper money in but a remote, a doubtful, or istaficient security, nothing shortes despotism can force its currency Such would be the cafe, if it was intended to recal the affigurate to their nominal value, before the mais was reduced to the amount of the national property at the diffe sal of government. But it would be a weak abandonment of the rights of the people, to loave to malignity and avarice to fix the visc lue of a mandat, which can be ime mediately converted into real property at the choice of the beard; amongst the best possessions of the republic. The citizens may be deceived as to their real interests by the cruel manœuvres of flocks They have been the jobbing. ceived, and will be for still, unless their representatives foresec and warn them of the danger.

Have you not been compelled to ... pronounce certain penalties against those who refused the republicant money, though it was evidently of more value than that which bere the royal stamp? Why should yes. hefitate to take the fame put against those who may wish to depreciate a paper, which has mere need of confidence, as it is not divivisible into imall portions, and therefore less fitted for ordinary transactions? If you do not take this step, this paper must fall, and with its own, will infallibly cause the ruin of the assignates

It is in your power, on the contrary, to raise the one through the other, and to breathe thus new life through all the ramifications of the body politic, robust in itself, but weakened and dried up through the want of circulation.

There are those, however, who seem to descry in this paper the annihilation of the assignats. This is an error to which stock-jobbers will labour to give credit as wishing to monopolize this representative sign, and to possess themselves of the public fortune. But it is evident, that, on the contrary, stock-jobbing will find its death in the compulsive circulation of this paper, and that in twenty-four hours the government will triple the value of assignats.

The assignat is now at the three hundredth part of its nominal va-When the mandats shall be at par with money, the assignats are to be exchanged at every office in the republic for the hundredth part of their nominal rate. is their value tripled. In a word, the affiguats thus exchanged are to be burned, until there shall be no more than 3 milliards in circulation. The circulation will then be brought back to its usual course, and the paper to its natural proportion to the land which it represents. The mandat being on a par with money, and the relation of the assignats with the former being prescribed by the laws, stockjobbing can no longer maintain its ground. It dies; and France is delivered from a scourge more horrible than all the inflictions of her combined enemies!

This proportion of one to an hundred between the mandat and the assignat appears to be more suitable for the present. It accords with the measures which have been taken for raising the forced loan. It leaves to the nation the resources which may be necessary for its occasions, until the system of contribution shall be settled, and the receipts collected regularly. In proportion as the circulating mass of affiguats thall be diminished by burning those which are exchanged, the relative value of one hundred for one may be gradually ameliorated until the equilibrum shall be reflored without any shock between the remaining assignats and the demeines which form their fecurity.

But it is necessary for this purpote, that severe penalties shall be decreed against those who attempt to make the imallest alteration in the relative value of republican Those who exchange money. mandats against money otherwise than at par, must be rigorously punished. It was by relaxing from this effential point that affiguats have fallen into their present state of depreciation, and that it is impossible to raise them suddenly to their primitive value, without palling beyond the value of the security, and stripping the nation of its last resource.

It is folely from your firmness and fidelity in the adoption and execution of these measures, that France can be saved and revivisied, and that she can arise free, glorious, and happy, after all the storms of the revolution.

We invite you, therefore, citizens legislators, to give this message an immediate consideration.

(Signed) LETOURNEUR, Prefi. LEGARDE, Sec.

Proclama: or Proclamation of the Executive Directory of the French Republic.

FRENCHMEN.

legislators have just YOUR created a new species of money, founded at once upon justice and the necessity of providing for the immense wants of the state; they have conciliated the interest of the republic with the interest of individuals, or rather it is in this private interest even that they have found new and abundant refources for the government; and such will be always the calculations of a true and only policy. In thort, after fo terrible a war, after to many violent thocks, the nation is, all at onec, lifted by the creation territorial mandates to the fame itate of fortune and of means which the possessed in the first period of the To render these means revolution. truitful—to recover the fame degree of opulence and splendour, we must only have the same latitude of confidence in the representatives of the nation - the fame obedience to the laws—the fame fraternal union between citizens.

Your fate, O Frenchmen! is then entirely in your hands; let the law relative to territorial mandats be faithfully observed, and France will come out from the revolution happy and triumphant; if the law be despised, a prosound abys will be immediately dug under all our feet.

The territorial mandats have a precious advantage which the affignats had not—it was the want of it that occasioned their depreciation.—This advantage is the faculty attached to the mandat of being realized in a moment, without hindrance, obstacle, or sale, by the immediate and incontestable transfer of the national domain, upon which the bearer of mandats may have fixed his choics in the whole extent of the republic. It is a territorial bank, with funds well afcertained, whose notes may be exchanged in open market, and whose guarantee is fortified by the authority of the law which gives them the forced currency of It was necessary thus to money. prevent the criminal efforts of Tłock-jobbing and disaffection, which incessantly endeavouring to convert the most wholesome remedies into poison, would not have failed to have depreciated and monopolized the new money before the mass of the citizens could have been informed of its real value.

When, by his fordid avarice, the flock-jobber depreciates by one fol a note of 100 franks, it is not folely the one fol of which he has robbed the public credit, it is a loss to the national treasury of to many fols as there are 100 franks in the treasury; it is an immense sump which he has annihilated in the public banks, and in the hands of all the bearers of bills. He has ruined his fellow-citizens, he had affaffinated his country; and it is not, therefore, by the imalineis of his robbery in itself that we must measure his crime, it is by the enormity of misery which it products Never was it more evidently true; that the fafety of a whole nation may refide, and, in fact, does refide, in the inviolable probity of all the members that compose it.

Yes, morals and obedience to the laws, each day ought, Frenchmen, to convince you, are the fole safeguard of free countries. The slightest attack made upon them shakes the state to its foundation: All our evils arise from our dissensions, from the spirit of rapacity, the neglect of labour, from refusal to pay the contributions, from the depreciation of the national money.

Makes

These evils cannot be cured but by a contrary regime, by the reciprocal esteem of citizens, by their eagerness to acquit themselves to the public treasury, by the restoration of industry, by the rigorous support of the integral value, and without the least alteration, of the money established by the legislature.

The executive directory will know how to display, on this important occasion, the whole extent of the power deposited in their hands; they will make the national will, expressed by the representatives of the people, be respected.

It is to you, good citizens, friends of wisdom and liberty; immense majority of Frenchmen! it is to you that it belongs to fecond the efforts of the government; form a facred league to defend the conftitutional edifice, which rests now upon the success of the mandats; repel those who flatter you to draw you into a frightful abyss. can only fave yourselves by austere What have these operated for your good, who have laboured hitherto to render you immortal; who have only irritated alternately and cherished your passions; who have tharpened hatred among you, and formed parties? What else have they done but favoured your external enemies, who long ago would have demanded peace of you, if they had not been enabled to let you against each other, and with your own hands?

It is against these external enemies that we must wake the vengeance of the state. Cover with indignation and contempt their eternal advocates; those cowardly writers who connect themselves with traitors; who have nothing to present but frightful portraits; who avail themselves of an object only to make the citizens miferable, and divide to defame them. It is time that each of us thould be proud of being Frenchmen! What are the crimes of some miserable men to the national glory, men whom nature has cast upon the territory of freemen? view the revolution with the same eyes that posterity will view it; with the same eyes which the foreigners whom you combat Resume that proud enerview it. gy that produced victory; recollect your triumphs, and let them be the pledge of new triumphs.

Frenchmen, be affired of this great truth; it is, that the safety of all and each of you is in the rigid execution of the law relative to mandats. Already have the happy effects of their creation been felt by the bearers of assignats, which increase in value rapidly, although it has been pretended that it would complete their depreciation.

Let no infringement be made upon this law, and foon a beneficent dew will vivify the happy foil that nature has adjudged to us. France will rife from that deplorable langour, a devouring stock-jobbing will cease her ravages, activity in arts and commerce will succeed, the roads and canals will no longer be in ruins, the public functionaries of the state will be indemnified for their painful labours, the long sufferings of the creditors and pentioners of the state will be at an end, the melancholy lot of our intrepid brethren in arms will be ameliorated, and the national felicity, which a diabolical spirit had thought to be able to separate from public probity and the social virtues, will revive and assume new life in those immortal and fruitful sources of all prosperity.

272] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

(Signed)
LETOURNEUR, President.

The Executive Directory to the Citizens of Paris.

ROYALISM, at length despairing of being able to feduce you in its own colours, now takes to bring you under its odious yoke, a way, perhaps, more winding, but far more perfidious and lefs dangerous. For feveral days incendiary pepers and placards have been profulely distributed. Seditious propositions and menacing discourses are heard, and groups are formed in the public squares. The heads of the party no longer conceal their object; they audaciously declare it. They with to overturn the republican conflitution, to destroy the national representation and the government; to put in force the atrocious and impracticable code of 1793; and to effect the pretended equal division of all property, even in the most inconsiderable nature, such as little shops, &c. They are defirous of plunder.

They are, in a word, defirous to re elect scaffolds, and to bathe as formerly in your blood, gorging themselves with your riches and the smallest produce of your labours. The foreigner who pays them knows very v 1 that the poor fent government being once de throyed, the multitude wearies length with various agitations; which must tend to augment the fufferings, will throw themfoly into the arms of a king. ferable agitators, whom the miles his instruments, must themselve defire this, to place their plunds under the fafeguard of an author which would be their work; to fecure the means of committee fresh ones with impunity [4] fharing in all employments. can indeed doubt but that they are agreement with foreigners to feet alife France, or to reduce it is state of debility and confusion; this inevitable confequence of which would be its dismemberment: "Be our most declared enemies b another language and another cell duct? They fay openly that they will carry revenge and fire ever where, rather than allow peace to be made; and at the same time they circulate a thousand lying ports to discredit the nation money, and thus deprive the vernment of the means of feed? to our armies the faculty of hands ing, by new trials, a glorieus durable peace, which is the edi flant object of the views of the rectory, and the aim of all its To these edious may labours. nœuvres they add atrocious calum? nies, to deprive the government of the force it needs; they even? affert that the executive directory has done nothing towards the con folidation of the Republic. Wellintentioned men! go back to the moment of the initaliation of the directory, and judge whether it !! few months it could have defig more. La Vandée has been dif-· armed d, and its chiefs either killed ten.

was extinguished at the very ent when it broke out; and war against the Chouans is ed on with activity and suc-

The armies which were in aplete state of dissolution are re-organized, and are in a tion to cope with the enemy, o fix victory on the standard of y. Severe measures against estractory priests and the emiss have been called for, and which existed have been exewith vigour. Administration whose patriotism was suspectate been replaced by enermy blicans.

republicans; and, finally, stencies have been procured, their circulation, which was ded on all sides, re-established. e emissaries of foreigners dare d, that the directory does not th the patriots, but abandons to perfecution. Certainly it not cease to cherish them; it ot defisted, and will not defist port and defend the patriots, will never suffer the errors into h they may have been led, by dent zeal for liberty, to be conled with guilt. It has an afnate regard for those pure and re patriots, who unite wisdom : ardour of a burning civism; impatient of every yoke but of the laws, are equally averfe e establishment of their own nation. It will always know to distinguish these from the ifed partizans of royalism, the brigands who usurp the ous title of patriots, merely to nour it. The directory is the est friend to patriots; and is he fate of the patriots and L. XXXVIII.

that of the directory intimately connected? Are not their destinies common? Citizens, and you generous defenders of the country, instructed by a long experience, you have repulsed, with contempt, these dastardly and atrocious mis-You are not ignorant, creants. brave warriors, that if the government is destroyed, the Republic is loft. You will know how to preferve, by the wisdom and energy of your conduct, a liberty secured by your triumphs. You, citizens, who live by the fruit of your labours, will not forget the magnificent promises which the tyrants, covered with a cloak of popularity, have so often made to you, and which have never had any other result than their own fortune, and the public misery. You will constantly perceive that a regular government, folidly established, can alone secure good order and trauquillity, which on their fide can alone procure the resources necesfary for the support of your families. You who are apprehensive for your property, judge what you have to expect from the system now on foot, if instead of rallying round the republican constitution, you favour by your neglect the dissolution of the government. As to us, faithful to our duty, we will maintain the republic and the constitution with an unshaken firmness; we will cause public order to be respected; we will keep a watch on those who attempted to disturb it, and will repress them with all the force of the laws, the execution of which is confided to us. Incapable of being the accomplices or the instruments of any faction, we will return with honour to the private life which awaits us, or will perish with glory, at the post to which we have been called. (Signed)

LETOURNEUR, Prefident.

Lidress of the Executive Directory to the French Armies, April, 1796.

DEFENDERS of the country, the moment approaches when you are again to take up your victorious arms; the moment approaches, when you are to quit a repole to which you consented, in the hope alone that it would lead to an honourable peace; but the less of blood which have flowed have not yet fatiated the rage of your enemies. They unquestionably ima-Igine, that we are about to aban-Mon the fruits of our victories, at the very moment when fucceis is ready to crown them. They imagine that we are about to demand of them as cowards a peace which we have offered them as generous Let them conceive these enemies. unworthy expectations: not be surprized; they have never -combated for liberty-but what they cannot be ignorant of, is, that the brave armies with which they wish again to try their strength, are the same by which they have been to often fubdued. No; they have not forgotten the prodigies of French valour; they still recollect with terror, both the redoubts of and the plains Gemappe, Fleurus, and the frozen rivers of Holland: they recollect that the Alps and Pyrenees have opposed to you but feeble barriers, and that the peninfula of Quiberon became the tomb of all the parricidal flaves, who in the hope of subjecting you to the yoke of a moster, dared to effet their feet on the foil of the republic. If they could have for gotten all this, you will bring itto their recollections by blows still more terrible; you will teach thich finally, that nothing can refid the efforts of a great nation which determines to be free.

Brave watriors, you bave affinded the example of a diffirterisfications which cannot exist unless should republicans. Oftentimes, in the midst of the greatesty searcity; provisions, of an almost absolute want of the most indispensible with jects, you have displayed that he roical patience, which ibines to your inspetuous valour, to eminently! diffinguishes you, and, will -figualize you to all nations, and to the eyes of posterity. ...lkepublican foldiers, you will preserve this great character; and at the ment when your fituation has been ameliorated, when with an undif-"mous voice the representatives of the nation have taken measures to provide efficaciously for your wants, you will redouble also your vigor and conrage, to put an end to a war which can be terminated by new victories alone.

In vain lias the French goverment manifested to all the powers which wage war against France, a fincere with to restore at length the repote of exhausted Europe; it his in vain made to them the most just and moderate propositions; hething has been capable of removtheir deplorable blindness. Yes, brave warriors, we must still have victories; and it is work energy alone that can put a dop to this devastating scourge. Prepare, therefore, for a last effort, and let it be decifive; let every thing yield to, let every thing be diffipated by your phalanxes; let the new flags iumphant hands, form, with ceding ones, the trophy with, in the name of France, great in her misfortunes, just in her prosperity, the ble peace you will give to the will be proclaimed.

l you, generous defenders, iall have cemented that peace our blood, you will foon rethe bosom of your families; your fellow citizens, to enurgiory—terrible still in your, to all the enemies of the ic.

LETOURNEUR, President.

mation issued by Scepeaux, in the Western Department.

MPANIONS in arms — as as we thought it possible to our defired end, the free se of the religion of our faand the establishment of the nate heir of the French moy, we have not ceased to it at your head, and to exsat courage and perfeverance you have displayed to the of all Europe; but at present, nced that fresh efforts will draw new misfortunes on our ly devastated country, ind that the most violent meaof terror would be exercised ft our relations, who would iprisoned, and their property ly ravaged, we have not ht we could continue a war 1 was become the scourge of ountry we had hoped to deand did not think ourfelves itted any longer to risk the of those brave men who had ied to us the charge of conag them to the field of ho-

However painful the facrifice may be to our opinion, we invite you to give up, into the hands proposed for that purpose, the arms that we cannot any longer engage you to preserve, without becoming the executioners of your rela-This clause tions and friends. fulfilled, your persons and property will be under the safeguard of the laws: you will remain quiet at home: nor will you in any respect be troubled for the past. This alfurance concerning your fate has alone induced us to consent to a conduct contrary to the wishes of our heart, but dictated by the neceflity of the circumstance.

Decreed 15th May, 1796.
(Signed) LE VICOMTE DE SCEPEAUX, general in chief.

Count be Chatillon, Lieut. gen. of the army of St. Scepeaux. Le Chevalier de Turpin, Inspector general.

Message to the Council of Five Hundred from the Directory relative to La Vendée.

28 Meffedor, (16 July.) FOR this long time an intestine war, foftered by fanaticism, has desolated one of the finest regions of the republic; we had even to dread, lest it should make progtess, and expose France to the brink of her ruin; gold and provisions have been furnished by the English. But thanks to the brave army of the ocean and its general, all is returned to good order. The inhabitants have delivered up their arms, and were they even difinclined to preserve the tranquillity which has been restored to them, T 2 they would find it impossible forthwith to excite a commotion. At present we may travel in safety through the several departments of the west.

If we have not always spoken of the heroic feats which have fignalized our gallant foldiers, composing the army of the coasts of the ocean, it was done in order not to disclose to our enemies, all the inveteracy of the evil we had to cure; but at present, while there is no danger in promulgating their exploits, we are eager to declare, that no army has more well-deferved of its country than that of the No doubt, citizens legifocean. lators, you will haften to make this declaration in a folemn manner.

Decree published at Modena on the 18th of October, 1796.

1. EVERY species of feudal jurisdiction is from this moment abolished.

2. The feudal officers of every kind and rank shall be confirmed until the new order of the committee of government, who shall preserve them or suppress them after information taken upon them.

3. All feudal rights and revenues received under the ancient government, or to be received, shall remain until the new order in the national treasury.

4. With respect to the edious privileges of hunting and fishing, the committee will immediately publish a proclamation to satisfy the general impatience to see them suppressed.

5. The allodial rights shall remain to the founders in absolute property.

6. Whatever concerns the immediate abolition of fiefs, and of every feudal jurisdiction, shallentend to infeoffments made under a burthensome title.

The Congress of Cispadana to the Puple of Bologna, Ferrara, Modena, and Reggio.

Reggio, 10 Nivole, first years the Republic of Cospanies, one and indivisible, Decryo, 1796, (odf) les)

THE first stone of the foundstion of your infant liberty was: paid in the congress held at Modeun. last October, thanks to the invincible French nation, which not only was so generous as to reflore to you your natural rights but also enabled you to exercise them in order to secure your fature existence; it was with this view: you formed the bonds of a friendly confederation, which nothing could untie, you also wished for the means of drawing those bonds full closer, in order that the structure, once begun, might rife great and majestic. In fine, you called us to the congress of Reggio, and we, strong in your commands, were proud of being able and authorisis to give our concurrence to an emterprize worthy of the honour of Italy, and which will be the admiration of future ages.

Citizens, the congress is eager to inform you, that your wishes are fulfilled, and that you are hence forth but one people, or rather one family. The following is the to-nor of the resolution:

"A motion having been made in the congress to form the four nations into a republic, one and indivisible in every respect, so constructed, that the sour nations may only

enly form one people, one fingle family.

"The congress having put this motion to the vote with each nation, they have all accepted it."

The people of Reggio were witnesses of the publication of this decree, in the same manner as we were witnesses of their joy. Our brave brethren who came from the transpadanian regions to fraternize with us, took part in the universal joy. May they imitate us, since we ardently with it, and may they form so close an alliance with our sepublic, that tyranny may henceforth lose all hopes of again enslaving Italy.

It seems as if something would have been deficient in the general enthusiasm, had not our invincible deliverers been present at so solemn an act.

Citizen Marmont, sent expressly by the commander in chief to watch over the fafety and liberty of our union, assisted at the congress, and saw in us, and the whole people afferfibled, brothers not unworthy of the love of his generous nation. He took it upon him to give an account of this glorious event to the commander in chief. We could have withed you all to have been present in that happy moment, certain that your joy would have joined in unifon with that of your brothers; but if diftance of places deprived us of this double joy, we make you amends for it, by imparting to you that glorious event, before your delegates return again to their country. People of the republic of Cispadana, the great epoch is already marked. Reject far from you all ancient quarrels, and that rivalthip, which was fomented by ambition and despotisin. Liberty, equality, virtue, let these be your The powerful republic mottos. which has invited you to the great work of liberty will protect you, doubt it not, with all her forces; flavery is flying from these coun-The tyrants, to whom you were an object of derision, shudder and turn pale. The eyes of the whole world are fixed upon you, and Italy anxiously expects that you will restore to her that prissine. splendour which made her once respected by all nations.

(Signed) C. Facci, prefident.

PISTORINI, MACCAI;

LAMBERTI, LEONELLI,

Secretaries.

Letter of his Holiness the Pope to all the Catholics faithful in Christ, having Lommunion we have Apostolic See, and living in France, greeting and apostolic benediction.

Dear Children,

The pastoral care which has been committed to our humility by our Lord Jesus Christ, in the abundance of his mercy, commands us to endeavour to administer comfort to all the faithful in Christi, particularly those who are beset by. great temptations, lest they be miserably seduced by carnal wisdom; for he has faid to us, as to the prophet Isaiah, 'Cry, and spare not; exalt thy voice like a trumpet; declare aloud the crimes of my people.' We should therefore be unmindful of our duty, if we did not feize every opportunity to exhort you to peace, and to counfel you to submission to the contituted authorities.

It is a principle indeed of the Catholic religion, that powers are T 3 the work of divine wisdom, that things may not be conducted rashly and at the pleasure of chance, and that nations be not agitated by contrary waves.—Paul fays, accordingly, not with regard to a particular prince, but speaking of the subject in general, that all power is of God, and that he who resists power, resists the will of God; beware, therefore, dear children, of going aftray, and under appearance of piety afford to the authors of innovation, a pretext to defame the Catholic religion, for you would load yourselves with a great crime which would not only be avenged by the fecular powers, but also, which is much more serious, would draw down upon you the severest vengeance of God, for those who resist authority gain to themselves damnation. hort you then, dear children, by our Lord Jesus Christ, to study to obey those who govern with all the affection, all the ardour, and all the efforts of which you are capable, for so you will render to God the obedience which is due; and thate who govern, perceiving more and niore that the orthodox religion is by no means so constituted as to involve the overthrow of civil laws, will be led to encourage it, and to defend it by the accomplishment of the divine precepts, and by the culture of ecclefiaftical difcipline. In fine, we defire to apprize you that you should put no faith in those who shall publish a contrary doctrine as emanating from the Holy See. We heartily bestow upon you the apostolic benediction.

Given at Rome, at St. Mary

the 5th day of July, 1796, an and 22d of our pontificate. R. CARD BRASCEI (Signed) DI ONESTI-

Substance of the Edist published by bis Holiness, on the Reception aubich bit Subjects ought to give to the French.

HIS hollness enumerates to them. a variety of motives which ought to induce them to respect and treat the French with the ntmost kindness, such as "the principles of our holy religion, the laws or man tions, the interests of the people, the will of their fovereign," &c.

He assures them that the cess. tion of hostilities is the immediate gift of God; and reminds them of the necessity of parting with a small portion of their worlds. riches for the security of the next. and, what is of more importance, for the prefervation of the Catholie religion. He admonishes them not, to liften to any perfidious in liaste. tions tending to disturb the public peace; and declares, that wherea thall infult by words or actions, in the flightest manner, the French commissioners, their agents, or 403 melties shall be punished will death, their goods confileated, and their families pronounced infact mous, as in cases of treason against the frate.

Those who shall by their harangues. writings, or countels, provoke infults against the French, shall be liable to the same punishment.

Such as shall be spectators of participators in proceedings of the above description, and thall not. denounce the traitors before the ordinary tribunals, shall be com Major, under the filber's ring, demned to ten years Angery in the galleys. Such informants as can establish the fact of an insult, shall receive a reward of 500 ducats on conviction of the offender. The tribunals shall proceed against perfons under an accusation of this species of treason in the most summary manner allowed by the criminal jurisprudence of the country.

July 15.

Note, by which M. Galeppi, Plenipotentiary Minister of Pius VI. anneunced to the French Commissioners, Garrau and Salicetti, the Determination of his Hosiness not to accept the Conditions of Peace offered, or rather dictated by the French Directory.

THE underfigned plenipotemtiary, minister of his holiness the pope Pius VI, has the honour to inform Mcsfrs. Garrau and Salicetti, commissaries of the executive directory with the French armies of Italy and the Alps, that having laid before his holiness the fixtyfour articles proposed by their excellencies, under the condition that they must all either be rejected or accepted to their full extent, his holines, after having examined them, and taken the advice of the holy college, declares, that neither religion nor good faith do any ways allow him to accept them.

holine's has found, that besides the article already proposed at Paris, tending to oblige him to disapprove, revoke, and annul, all the bulls, rescripts, briefs, and apostolic mandats issued under the authority of the holy see, with respect to the affairs of France, since the year 1789, there were several others, which being equally prejudicial to the catholic religion and the rights of the church, are consequently inadmissible; without entering into any discussion concerning those which are destructive both to his sovereignty and dominions; permitious to the happiness and tranquillity of his subjects, and evidently contrary to the rights of other nations and powers, towards whom the holy ice would not even be able to maintain itself neutral. His holiness hopes, therefore, that the executive directory, from its own sense of rectitude, as well as in confideration of the mediation of his majesty the king of Spain, will do justice to the powerful motives which have determined his holiness to give this refusal, which he is obliged to enforce at the hazard of his life.

Given in Florence, the 15th of September, 1796.

(Signed) GALERPY, Minister plenipotentiary to his holiness the pope Pius VI.

State Paper published at Dresden, July 30.

HIS most serene highness, the Elector of Saxony, has taken no part in the present war, as a principal belligerent power. As a coestate of the empire, and in that character only has he fulfilled those obligations which the Germanic constitution imposed on him as a duty; and his electoral highness, being fully impressed with the wish of feeing the miseries of this desolating war terminated, has often endeavoured to accelerate a pacification by his vote in the Germanic diet, and by other means. These are facts of public notoriety.

The measures which are dicated by the present state of things, and by the precaution of his electoral highness, agree with the principles which he has uniformly manisested. He will in no respect deviate from them; and the resolution of collecting a corps of his troops on the frontiers of his territories, and those of the circle of Upper Saxony, which are now fo contiguous to the theatre of war, will prevent any milunderstanding with respect to his motives.

T \bot

In order, however, that no doubt may remain on this subject, his electoral highness has thought proper hereby expressly to declare, that the affembling of those troops has no other object than to cover his territories, and those of the other states of Upper Saxony, against all foreign violence.

They are, of course, mere meafures of defence, unconnected with a defign of acting offentively with them against any power beyond the skirts of his territories, and of those of the faid circle, whose first prince he is.

Given at Dresden, July 26, 1796. By his most serene highness the elector of Saxony's most gracious and special command.

Declaration of the Elector of Hanover to the Diet of Ratisbon, on the Subject of the Imperial Rescript, of the 17th of October, 1796.

THE minister of Hanover has declared to M. de Hingel, the Imperial commissioner,

That his Imperial majesty had directly required his majesty the king of Great Britain and elector of Hanover to furnith a new proof of his marked attachment to the Germanic constitution, by giving a great example, and acting efficaciously in concert with the diet of Ratifbon, not only that he may be rated for a sufficient quantity of Roman months, but by paying up all that remains due of his quots. It was declared at the same time that it was necessary the number of Roman months thould exceed a hundred.

His Britannic majesty has replied to his Imperial majesty that he would not, nor was he able to anticipate the resolutions of his cochates: and that he was not st present in circumstances which pet; mitted him to answer the demand which was made—that fince the periods when the last Roman months were granted, the fystem of the war had completely changed that different states, holding of the empire, had made a separate peace, to avoid the total ruin with which their countries were threstened—that others had embraced neutrality for the protection of their lubjects; and that the proiperity these states enjoyed proved that they had attained a falutary object—that the affairs of the entpire have affumed quite another aspect, and that the relations of his Britannic majesty, in his quality of elector and prince of the empire, were well known to be inconfiltent with the imperial demands; that he cannot of course consent to the granting of new Roman months (for the continuation of this unhappy war) ftill far less can he contribute directly, fince the negociations commenced at Paris, from which is expected a happy iffue for the tranquillity of Europe.

Proclamation of the Archduchess of Austria, Maria Elizabeth, to the Inhabitants of Tyrol.

Dearly and much beloved Subjects, THE defire you have manifested to take up arms for the good of fore-fovereigns, and the defence of your country, has often compelled me to shed tears of gratitude. I am unable to recompence, as I with, the brave men who devote themselves in a cause so loyal; but as an inhabitant of Tyrol I will, for the benefit of the defenders of the country, dispose of every thing superfluous; gold and filver watches, knives, medals, plate, &c. which I will distribute myself after the war, as acknowledgments to those brave Tyrolians who shall distinguish themselves by their courage and brilliant actions. I entreat all the brave defenders of the country to believe, that they shall ever be the objects of my most anxious solicitude, and that I will not neglect to make known to the emperor, my dear relation, the services they shall have rendered, for the purpose of obtaining from him the rewards they may deferve.

MARIE ELIZABETH. (Signed) Done at our Court, at Inspruck, the 30th of May, 1796.

A Proclamation by His Imperial Wiajcsty.

WE FRANCIS II. &c. &c.

IN the present moment, when -a coincidence of the most unexpected events favours the rapid progress of the enemy, and calls for our redoubled care to afford affiftance to our states menaced in this manner, we find this our refolution strengthened by considering that Providence has put us at the head of a nation, which has given us on every occasion, the most effectual proofs of the greatness of their zeal to support the measures taken for the defence of their country, of their laws, which render them happy, and of a prince who returns to their fidelity a love for every individual.

Though fear, and pethaps, intentional reports, magnify the danger more than it in reality is, and present it as nearer at hand, we must not conceal from our faithful subjects that the situation of affairs is pressing, and does not allow us to remain satisfied with ordinary measures, but imposes on us, and all those who with to see the welfare of the state secure, more than extraordinary exertions.

Much as the long duration of a carried on under many changes of fortune, has affected the powers of the nation, yet the relources of so powerful a state are far from being exhausted. Though government continues to refrain with abhorrence from the violent measures which our enemies employ for the oppression, of our tellow-citizens and the destruction of Europe; countries, fo well populated, so fertile, and enriched by nature and industry, still offer innumerable means of defence, by employing which we would find ourselves enabled to meet every danger. But we trust in the justice of our cause, and in the protection of the Almighty, who regards that justice, that the moment will not arrive in which the nation will be forced to have recourse to the most extraordinary means.

In this perfuation, we shall always confine ourselves only to the measure of calling to arms those who are otherwise, agreeably to the military system, exempted from military service; including also all foreigners, who have not acquired the rights of citizenship in the Austrian dominions by residing in them for ten years.

282] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

At the same time we promise to all those who shall willingly follow this our call, and who shall offer to their municipalities to serve in the army,

- 1. That as foon as ever we shall have secured to the nation, agree-ably to our wish and desire, an honourable and permanent peace, they shall be dismissed at the termination of the war.
- 2. That during the war they shall be treated as volunteers.
- 3. That they shall be at liberty, agreeably to their abilities and capacity, to chuse and name the regiment in which they wish to serve; and that,
- 4. As a just recompense on their return home, every possible assistance shall be given to them in their employments and settling; and that, on all occasions, they shall be preferred.

Though we can promise ourselves the principal operation of this proclamation, from the unequivocal sentiments of our faithful subjects, yet we think it our duty to impress upon their minds, that in following willingly this honourable call of their country, they likewise protect their families and private property; and that, if on the contrary they should neglect to join us for the general security, they would be forced, in case of unfortunate events, to carry parricidal arms against their native land, and, as abused organs of the enemy, to promote the ruin of public order, the destruction of their fellow citizens, and of their tamilies, and to affift in the common destruction.

Behold the still smoaking ruins of Italy, and the excesses and most inhuman cruelties committed there! Behold the devastations which the once flourishing territories of Germany have suffered, inundated by the armies of the enemy! And you cannot remain dubious about the terrible sate which threatens every country; and every nation, on being invaded by such enemies.

Done at Vienna, 11th Angust, 1796.

Proclamation by his Imperial Majesty.

WE Francis II. by the grace of God, &c. &c. When we affumed the government of this monarchy, we felt it extremely gricvous to find ourselves involved in so hard a war as the present: great as our grief was, equally great was our with of procuring a speedy and lasting peace to the country. Every body must be convinced, that sh the powers and means possible to men have hitherto been used for that purpose; and it is bigbly painful for us, that our paternal solicitude, added to fo many patriotic contributions of our faithful subjects, and the valour of our troops, so repeatedly proved, could not, as yet, bring it so far as to effect a peace, honourable and not injurious to the monarchy—nay, that it rather feems to be our peculiar deftiny, to be obliged, to our continual mortification, to behold the enemy confiantly approach nearer to our German hereditary dominions, and especially to the frontiers of our beloved kingdom of Bohemia. In order, therefore, to proted this kingdom, in the fafest and most perfect manner, from all hostile attacks, and it being, in other respects no longer possible to conquer solely with the army now existing, and to keep from off the frontiers of our kingdom

kingdom of Bohemia an enemy like the present, who, from day to day, arms the major part of their nation, and leads them against us;—we caused several plans to be laid before us, having for their tendency the particular security of the said kingdom of Bohemia; and though discover in every part them patriotic benevolence—yet we thought proper to give the preference and our approbation to the chablishment of a national militia, particularly from the consideration of its combining with the defence of the country; effectual and ready for every emergency, all possible indulgence to the inhabitants. do hereby ordain;—

1. That the measure of a national militia, for the particular defence of the kingdom of Bohemia, be immediately put in force, and that for this purpose every 20th head be enrolled out of the population of the whole country.

2. That the men thus enrolled be immediately trained in the use of arms, and in every branch of the fervice for which they are destined, and to which end the staff of the Bohemian general officers shall appoint the commissioned and noncommissioned officers.

- 3. In order that the men, during fuch exercife, may be kept as near as possible to their places of residence, the places of rendezvous shall be marked out in fuch a manner, in the different circles, that each perfon enlifted (hall only have to repair to some place little distant from his own abode.
- 4. The men enlifted shall, during their absence from home on account of their being exercised, receive the fame treatment as the foldiers actually serving in the field.

- 5. Should there be any occasion for calling any of the men thus kept in readiness into active service. they are to repair to the rendezvous pointed out to them, there to wait the farther orders of their commanders.
- 6. Their sole destination is to cover the frontiers of the country, or to be employed within its limits a but they are by no means to ferve against the enemy abroad.

7. We will not only grant to those men, as long as they shall continue under arms, full pay and provisions in the fame manner as the troops serving in the field, but we also order,

8. That to those who shall distinguish themselves by their valour on proper occasions, silver and gold medals thall be granted, in the fame manner as to the real soldiers, and they shall every where wear them. as honourable marks of fervices rendered to their country, and enjoy at the fame time the annual penfion during life.

9. All those who shall serve in this militia, shall be for ever after confidered as peculiarly meritorious. and where equity will permit, all due preference shall be given, and every possible indulgence shewn to them.

We rely, therefore, on the tried fidelity of all our Bohemian subjects, and on that love of their country so particularly their own, that they will voluntarily and readily jubinit to these our orders, and that every individual, whether high or low, will use his utmost exertions, in conjunction with those of his king, to defend the kingdom from every hostile invasion; the more so, as the present moment is most dangerous to the religion and property. property of every citizen in this kingdom; and as the welfare of every one of them requires that he should help, with all his firength, to defend his family and the country, we also place the greatest dependence on the patriotic zeal and readiness of our Bohemian subjects in this measure of detence, since, as it has been stated already, the term of service is but of short duration, and only necessary in the preient emergency, both to defend the country, and to protect their own property, wives, and children, and fince by fo doing, they will not only have the promised reward, but likewise render themselves worthy of the reputation of faithful subjects and real friends to their country, befides gaining, in addition, the effect, the love, and grace of their king for ever.

Done at Vienna, rugust 21, 1796.

Proclamat on of the Emperor.

BY the encreasing and urgent necessity of prosecuting this expenfive war with vigour, his majesty the emperer fees himfelf constrained to demand extraordinary lupport from his subjects, in order not only to keep off an all-defolating enemy from his frontiers, but also to obtain by force a peace fo long defired in vain. But his Imperial majesty constantly directing his thoughts towards treating his beloved subjects with all possible lenity, and choosing always such means as are the least burdensome, expects that every good subject, equally convinced of his duty, and of the pressing exigencies of the state, will strive to alleviate those wants by contributions, voluntary and proportionate to their means, in money, grain, horfes, oxen, common clothes, linen, len, ther, iron, iteel, lead, and arms.

Vienna, 18th September.

Rescript addressed to the Duke of Wirtemberg, on the 10th of July, by the Imperial Court, on the Subject of Peace.

WE received the letter you wrote us upon the 23d of last month. You there present your good advice with a respectful frankness: You observe that it only depends upon us to secure the happiness and the fafety of Germany; that w speedy peace can alone diffipate the violent storm which impends over the country; that this alone can remove the dangers which in so many ways threaten the Germanic constitution; in fine, that this alone can put a period to those unparalleled miseries under which humanity to long has groaned. At the fame time you acquaint us, that if in these difficult circumftances the danger approaches fill nearer your states, you will have no refource but to fubmit to the law of . necessity, and to make a separate peace with France.

The empire, in truth, defired with ardour, and has long enter4 tained this wish, the return. peace, but connected with the just feeling of its honour, its dignity; its independence. In this with 45 only comprehends a peace, equitable ble, just, suitable, and worthy to be accepted, which refts upon the folid basis of the perfect support of its integrity and its constitution. agreeable to ancient treaties. At the same time, by a proper respect for these fundamental laws, it has never ceased to render its wishes and its resolutions upon this subject fubordinate to the rigorous condi-

tiop,

· · · S. T A T E P A P E R S.

'tion, that peace so ardently desired should not be concluded, but agreeably to the constitution, in a most perfect and invariable concert coetween the emperor 700 11 . States.

The resolutions of the diet of the 22d of December, 1794, and of July last year, become laws of the empire in virtue of our Imperial functions, very pointedly attest this referve; and the fame spirit serves as a foundation to the full powers and authorities for peace, which have been submitted for our ac--ceptance, in virtue of the resoluxion of the diet of the 7th of October, 1795, as well as for the annex-• bd !instructions to the deputies of the empire at the congress for peace; instructions which essentially proceed upon the re-establishment of peace, just, honourable, stable, permanent, and common to the whole empire, and which have pointedly and expressly as their object the maintenance of the empire upon the footing on which it flood before the misunderstandings which arose with France, under the special recommendation to observe ancient treaties.

After having thus expressed, in a manner equally constitutional and agreeable to the interests of the Germanic empire, its sentiments with regard to the re-establishment of peace, the general diet, full of respectful confidence in our paternal folicitude for the common advantage of Germany, entreated us to negotiate, as well in our own name as in that of the Germanic body, the preliminaries of peace. We were very well disposed to act agreeably to these desires; but the stequel proved that the foi difant committee of public safety, by which the foreign affairs of France then were governed, had very different views from coming to an amicable understanding with the empire, and the for the purpose of putting an end to a war into which the empire had been forced; and thus to reconcile themselves with suffering humanity by facrificing to peace their pattion of conquett.

All Germany has feen the anfwer of the committee of public lafety, the contents of which were ordered to be published by our decree of the 19th of November last. This piece contains the most manifest proofs of the decided repugnance of France to listen to the paclfic overtures defired by the empire, and of the clear determination of this power not to engage in immediate negotiations, till finding herself in a situation imperiously to dictate the conditions of peace to the empire, flie could, to the eternal shame of the German name, leave her no other part in this meafure but a passive subscription of the treaty. The empire being thus convinced of the refusal of the French government to make a fuitable return to the overtures which had been made, it had no other resource left but that foreseen by the resolution of the 22d of Dec. ailume to an which should oblige the enemy to grant that peace defired by the head and by the members of the Germanic body under the conditions announced in the resolutions of the diet.

The directory, however, which has succeeded the committee of public safety in the management of foreign affairs, has not adopted more moderate sentiments. find, on the contrary, in all their actions,

actions, and all the public papers which they have issued, the marks of the inflexible obttinacy of a conqueror inflamed with pride by the fortune of his arms. Upon this. point we refer to the note addressed by the French amballador to the plenipotentiary of his Britannic majesty, upon the 26th of May, this year. We remark, with regret, in this note, how much the spirit in which it is drawn up, the nature and extent of the demands which it contains, and the manner in which they are announced, are remote from a reciprocal defire of peace. We are not mistaken even in confidering this very note as a new proof of the aversion of the French government to enter into negociations with the empire united under its constitutional head, since, in effect, if we compare that note with the above-mentioned answer of the committee of public safety, we find that both absolutely announce the same political maxims; to which we must likewise add, that the note of the directory demands, as an invariable preliminary of peace, a flatus quo relatively to the countries conquered by the enemy, and united in virtue of its decree, which cannot in any way be reconciled with the basis of peace laid down by the diet.

To divide, to conquer, and to rule, is the spirit of the egotist policy of France. But every division infers a diminution of strength in the measures of resistance of the whole, and which must necessarily lead to the dismemberment, to the devastation, to the dependance, to the subjection, and, in fine, more or lets rapidly, to the decomposition of our respectable constitution. Concord, on the contrary, firmnels, the love of our country, and the faithful observance of the laws, are the first duties of fociety; the dearest and more sacred duties of every vallal of the empire, when our common country is menseod, is the most ensineat and essential object of all political focieties, its fafety and preferration. Such is the object of the fundamental constitution of the German compire. which renders all the individual means of relifiance possessed by the states of the empire subordinate to the direction of one function author rity, and prohibits in the most descible manner the conclusion of a separate peace during a general mer of the empire. But, independently of this confideration, it is not less certain that it is to act against all experience to reckon upon the. very rare instance of the generosity of the enemy, and to expect only, from the magnanimity and love of justice, a peace that can be accepted. instead of constraining them to grant it by force of arms. In fine, we find a manifest contradiction in not ceating to defire an object, and yet failing to proportion the means by which it is to be attained to the magnitude of the dangers interpol-The example of the invincible constancy and vigour with which the enemy exert themselves to execute their plans, ought to afford to the citizens of Germany a fufficient motive of emulation to excite them to the most obstinate resistance, and to the defence of their political and religious conflitution.

After this faithful disclosure of circumstances we put it to your judgment to decide, whether, however much we are disposed to restore peace to the empire; as soon as it can be established on an bo-

nourable

nourable and folid basis; it depends entirely upon us to grant this bleffing to Germany; whether it condidwith our authority as chief of the rempire: to lanction a peade, upon whatever terms leparately concluded with the enemy of the empire? In fine, whether at amoment when we have to choose between the diffmemberment and the union of the empire, between the disfolution and the establishment of the constitution, between honour and chame, whether, in this critical fi-Eustion, we are not rather warrantred to require, in the name of the country and the constitution, in the name of all the states which have been pillaged and laid waste, in virtue of oaths fill sublisting, and promiles frequently and 10lemnly renewed by the electors, princes, and states of the empire; in fine, by our own example and the facrifices which we have made for the public interest, whether, we fay, we are not warranted just-.ly to require the undivided co-operation of all and every of the states of the empire in the defence of a cause so just, and for accelerating that peace which is so earnestly defired by the Germanic states?

nifested in your letter of the end of last month was the cause to us of considerable anxiety, it was not long before our tranquillity was restored, by the news that when the dangers of war approached your tates, you did not allow yourself to be betrayed by fear, nor by the dictates of a deceitful policy, into any unconstitutional measures; but that, on the contrary, animated by sentiments of honour, and by a courage worthy of a German prince, you opposed the danger with which you were threatened with the most ofdectual means of refistance, both by fending against the common encmy a great part of the garrifon of Stutgard and Louisburg; and by giving instant orders to put the militis of Wirtemberg immediately in motion, who made a body of 12,000 men, in general well disciplined. Accept, upon this subject the afformaces of our Imperial fatisfaction and fungere regard. Thefe dispositions, so worthy of you, inipme us with, the confidence that no confideration will shake your fentiments, and that weighing conscientionly the duties which, as a state of the empire, you have to discharge to us and to the law, you will perfift in your patriotic refolution to continue, till the re-establishment of a general peace for the empire, to support the common cause with all your force. By thele means you will not only render eisential service to Germany, but to the immortal honour of your house: you will deferve to have your name enrolled in the annals of Germany among those princes who have most contributed to its lustre.

Resolution presented to the Emperor by the States of Hungary, in Answer to his Majesty's Propositions.

THE propositions addressed on the part of his Apostolic majesty to the states furnishes them a fresh proof of the considence which his majesty always reposed in the unshaken sidelity of his faithful Hungarian nation, in deigning to recollect and consirm the bravery which their ancestors have always displayed in support of the august house of Austria: his majesty has given a farther testimony of his paternal considence, in representing to the grandees and the states in diet affembled, the magnitude of the danger of the present war, in which a defiructive enemy threatens the hereditary kingdoms and provinces y uthe states, therefore, animated with the example of their ancestors, have resolved fully to realize the expectation not only of the hereditary 'dominions, but of all Europe. The states, wishing to follow the footfleps of their anceftors, will neglect no means in their power to avert all future danger; and to compel the enemy to make a peace fuitable to the dignity of his majesty, and to the honour of the nation.

It is very flattering to the states that his majesty deigned not to question their devotion and fidelity, when they have not long ago given affurances at the foot of the throne, which they made oath to facrifice their blood and their lives for his majefty and the country. The same valour which inspired their ancestors in 1741 still lives in them, and with them alone it can ever perish. For the purpose of accomplishing the desires of his majesty, and to guarantee religion, the royal prerogative, as well as the rights of the nobility, and of all other fellow-citizens; rights which the enemy endeavours to destroy; the states have resolved to offer to his majesty, as a voluntary contribution for the profecution of the war, 50,000 recruits, all the necessary grain for the sublistence of a force of 340,000 men during a twelvemonth, which forms a total of 2,400,000 meafures of Presburg, and for 80,000 hories 3,760,000 measures of oats; farther, 20,000 oxen, and 10,000 horses; the whole, however, without infringement of article 36, of the year 1741,

The states hope that that and cious enemy, who has dately been repulled far beyond cour frontiers by the victorious armies under the command of his royal highness the Archduke Charles, will ultimately return to more moderate principles. Should the contrary happen, and the enemy perfift in their exaggerated and obstinate pretensions, and with to continue the war, the states are well resolved to take the field themselves to combatithat enemy: and in this case they offer from this moment to prepare for sifting in a mass for the future the whole kingdom, and all its provinces comprised.

The states conclude by supplicating his majesty to be pleased to accept this effer, which has for its object the desence of his sacred person, of his august house, and of the citizens of the empire in general, with that paternal bounty which characterizes him; and that he be assured that the heart of the Hungarians is the safest bulwark against every enemy of the house of Austria.

Substance of the Correspondence between the Cabinet of Berlin and the Court of Vienna, respecting the Line of Demarcation established between his Prussian Majesty and the French Republic.

AN official note, transmitted by M. the marquis Lucchesini to the minister of his Imperial majesty, acquainted the court of Vienna with "the intention of the court of Berlin to obtain from his Imperial majesty his approbation of measures adopted for the security of that part of Germany, by means to him, at the same time, that ecurity of these countries was notive in which the measures red to had originated.

mce of the Reply made to the above te by the Court of Vienna.

S Imperial majesty, as sue head of the empire, cannot t that the states are obliged to ir in a war, rendered necesrom the pressure of circumes, and sormally declared with eir force, for the common dethe principle of individual general security, which is the sacred and the most essential of every constitution. It is particular manner blended the substance of the Gerconstitution, and is recogby several of its laws in the positive terms.

ch is the refult dictated by arit of our conflitution, which Its all the respective states, ill the nicans of defence, to general controll of the fogn power of the Germanic Such is the refult oath of fealty, which the rs, princes, and states of mpire, in order to itrengthen cial bond, take in their caof vatials, by which they actively to concur in every which can tend to the honour, advantage, and to the profof his Imperial majetty and empire, and which, by conace, imposes upon them an ation to ferond, with all their , the meafures adopted by nief and the thates of the emto avert the danger which ens them with total destruc-

His Imperial majesty sees with pain that the appearances of the war by no means answer the expectation which he had been led to entertain; but in confidering the fundamental laws of every well organized constitution, and the principles recognized in the most positive terms in the laws of the empire, full of anxiety for the good of the country, his majesty cannot refrain from manifesting a defire that the corps, affembled at a crisis the most alarming and the most dangerous, may be employed rather in aiding a most just defence, by opposing the common enemy, than in stopping an invasion still at a distance, and of which we apprehend only the possibility.

These measures of security, confidered in themselves, do not appear to be contrary to the basis and the spirit of the constitution, provided that the arrangements, for the fafety and the particular defence of the north of Germany, are not founded upon illegal impositions, and provided they are not employed to fanction the unconstitutional pretext of freeing them from the obligations binding upon them by the register of the resolutions of the empire, decreed for the purpose of the general security of Germany.

If his Imperial majesty on the present occasion were to grant to this measure of security, as it is termed in the circular letter of the Prussian minister, in the letters of convocation, and in the declarations of the plenipotentiaries of the king, an unlimited approbation; all who should compare it with the tenor of the decree of ratification of the 20th of July, 1705, would accuse him of adopting contradic.

arbitrary use of his power as head of the empire, since the laws renewed in the present war forbid the states to separate, on any occasion, from the general association, and any armament, under the title of an armed neutrality, during the continuance of a war of the empire, and interdict them in the most positive manner from arbitrarily renouncing obligations formerly imposed upon them for the common desence.

His Imperial majesty, in virtue of the facred duties imposed upon him by his high office as supreme head of the empire, on the other hand, being called upon to defend the rights of the Germanic conftitution against every step and every principle incompatible with their fafety, to preserve to the empire, and to every particular state, its immunities entire, and to guard them against the prejudices which may arise from these measures, will be disposed in the mean time to grant them his approbation, if they are confined to the legal defence of the countries, and if they do not depart from the principles, the forms, and the obligations, prefcribed by the laws and the conftitution.

Message of the President of the United States of America to Congress, Jan. 4, 1796.

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives,

A LETTER from the minister plenipotentiary of the French republic, received on the 22d of last month, covered an address, dated the 21st of October, 1795, from the committee of public safety, to the representatives of the United States in congress; and also informed me, that he was instructed by the committee to present to the United States the colours of France; I therefore proposed to receive them last Friday, the first day of the new year, a day of general joy and congratulation. On that day the minister of the French republic delivered the colours, with an address, to which I returned an answer.

By the latter the house will see that I have informed the minister, that the colours will be deposited with the archives of the United States. But it seemed to me proper to exhibit to the two houses of congress, these evidences of the continued friendship of the French republic, together with the sentiments expressed by me on the orcasion, in behalf of the United States. They are herewith communicated.

George Washington. United States, Jan. 4, 1796.

Answer of General Washington to a Resolution passed by the House of Representatives which bad for its Object to procure a Copy of the Instructions granted to Mr. Jay, relative to the I realy with Great Britain.

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives,

WITH the utmost attention I have considered your resolution of the 24th instant, requesting me to lay before your house a copy of the instructions to the minister of the United States, who negotiated the treaty with the King of Great Britain, together with the correspondence and other documents relative to that treaty, excepting fuch of the faid papers as any existing negotiaton may render improper to be disclosed.

In deliberating on this subject, it was impossible for me to lose fight of the principle which some have avowed in its discussion, or to avoid extending my views to the consequences which must flow from the admission of that principle.

I trust that no part of my conduct has ever indicated a disposition to withhold any information which the constitution has enjoined upon the prefident as a duty to give, or which could be required of him by either house of congress as a right; and with truth Laffirm, that it has been, as it will continue to be while I have the honour to prefide in the government, my constant endeavour to harmonize with the other branches thereof, fo far as the trust delegated to me by the people of the United States, and my tense of the obligation it imposes, to 'preserve, protect, and defend the constitution, will permit.

The nature of foreign negotiations requires caution; and their fuccesses must often depend on secrecy, and even when brought to a conclusion, a full disclosure of all the measures, demands, eventual concessions which may have been proposed or contemplated, would be extremely impolitic; for this might have a pernicious influence on future negotiations, or produce immediate inconveniencies; perhaps danger and mischief, in relation to other powers. The necessity of such caution and secrecy was one cogent reason for vesting the power of making treaties in the president, with the advice and consent of the senate; the principle on which that body was formed confining it to a small number of members. To admit, then, a right in the house of representatives to demand, and to have as a matter of course, all the papers respecting a negotiation with a foreign power, would be to establish a dangerous precedent.

It does not occur that the inspection of the papers asked for can be relative to any purpose under cognizance of the house of representatives, except that of an impeachment, which the resolution has not expressed. I repeat that I have no disposition to withhold any information which the duty of my ftation will permit, or the public good shall require to be disclosed; and, in fact, all the papers affecting the negotiation with Great Britain were laid before the fenate, when the treaty itself was communicated for their confideration and advice.

The course which the debate has taken on the resolution of the house, leads to some observations on the mode of making treaties under the constitution of the United States.

Having been a member of the general convention, and knowing the principles on which the conflitution was formed, I have never entertained but one-opinion on this subject; and from the first establishment of the government to this moment, my conduct has exemplified that opinion, that the power of making treaties is exclusively vested in the president, by and with the advice of the fenate, provided two-thirds of the fenators present concur; and that every treaty so made and promulgated, thenceforward becomes the law of the land. It is thus that the treaty-making power has been understood by foreign nations; and in all treaties made with them we have declared, and they have believed, that when ratified by the prefident, with the advice and confent of the fenate, they became obligatory. In this construction of the constitution, every house of representatives has heretofore acquiesced; and until the present time, not a doubt or suspicion has appeared to my knowledge, that this construction was not a true one. Nay, they have more than acquiesced; for until now, without controverting the obligation of fuch treaties, they have made all the requisite provisions for carrying them into effect.

There is also reason to believe that this construction agrees with the opinions entertained by the flate conventions, when they were deliberating on the conftitution, especially by those who objected to it, because there was not required in commercial treaties the confent of two-thirds of the whole fenate, instead of two-thirds of the fenators prefent; and because in treatics respecting territorial and certain other rights and claims, the concurrence of three-fourths of the whole number of the members of both houses respectively was not made necessary.

It is a fact declared by the general convention, and universally understood, that the constitution of the United States was the result of a spirit of amity and mutual concession. And it is well known, that under this influence the smaller states were admitted to an equal representation in the senate with the larger states, and that this branch of the government was invested with great powers, for on the equal participation of those powers the sovereignty and political safety of the smaller states were deemed essentially to depend.

If other proofs than these, and the plain letter of the constitution itself, be necessary to ascertain the point under consideration, they may be found in the journals of the general convention, which I have deposited in the office of the department of state. In those journals it will appear that a proposition was made, "that no treaty should be binding on the United States which was not ratified by a law," and that the proposition was explicitly rejected.

As, therefore, it is perfectly clear to my understanding, that the affent of the house of representatives is not necessary to the validity of a treaty, as a treaty with Great Britain exhibits in itself all objects requiring legislative provision, and on which these parpers called for can throw no light; and as it is effential to the due administration of the government, that the boundaries fixed by the conflitution between the different. departments should be preserved a just regard to the constitution. and to the duty of my office, under all the circumstances of this case forbid a compliance with your requelt.

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

United States, March 30, 1796.

Address

ing from the Office of President ve United States of America.

IE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES.

riends and Fellow Citizens, E period for a new election tizen to administer the execugovernment of the United being not far distant, and me actually arrived when houghts must be employed gnating the perion who is to ithed with that important it appears to me proper, efy as it may conduce to a listin& expression of the pubice, that I should now apou of the refolution I have I to decline being confidered the number of those out of a choice is to be made.

g you, at the same time, to the justice to be assured, his resolution has not been without a strict regard to all insiderations appertaining to ation which binds a dutiful to his country, and that, hdrawing the tender of ferwhich filence in my fituation imply, I am influenced by inution of zeal for your funterest; no desicioncy of il respect for your past kindout am supported by a full tion that the step is compatith both.

therto in the office to which uffrages have twice called we been an uniform pacrifice ination to the opinion of and to a deference for what ed to be your defire. I conhoped that it would have nuch earlier in my power, confistently with motives which I was not at liberty to difregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this, previous to my last election, had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations, and the unanimous advice of perfons entitled to my confidence, impelled me to abandon the idea.

I rejoice that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer renders the pusuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety; and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country, you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust I will only say, that I have, with good intentions, contributed towards the organization and administration of the government, the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and every day the increasing weight of years admonifies me more and more that the fliade of retirement is as necesfary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumflances have given peculiar value to my fervices, they were temporary; I have the confolation to believe, that while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

U 3 have

In looking forward to the moment, which is intended to terminate the career of my public life, my feelings do not permit me to furpend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country, for the many honours it has conferred upon me: still more for the stedfast considence with which it has fupported me; and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment, by fervices faithful and perfevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have refulted to our country from these fervices, let it always be remembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annals, that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to millead, amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging, in situations in which not unfrequently want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism, the constancy of your support was the effential prop of the efforts, and a guarantee of the plans by which they were effected. foundly penetrated with this idea, I thall carry it with me to my grave, as a strong incitement to unceasing vows, that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence, that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual; that the free conflitutien, which is the work of your hands, may be facredly maintained; that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue; that, in sing, the happiness of the people of these states, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete, by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing, as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection, and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop, But solicitude for your welfare, which cannot end but with my. life, and the apprehension of danger, natural to that folicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the prefent, to offer to your folemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments, which are the refult of much reflection, of no inconfider. able observation, and which appearto me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only fee in them the difinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it, your indulgent reception of my fentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your heart, no recommendation of mins is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government, which constitutes you one people, is also now dear to you. It is justly so; for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence, the support of your tranquillity at home,

. TANE your peace abroad; of your safety; of your prosperity; of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee, that from different causes, and from different quarters, much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth; as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though covertly and infidioufly) directed, it is of infinite moment that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immoveable attachment to it, accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political fafety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suipicion that it can in any event be abandoned: and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of any attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the facred ties which now link together its various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth or choice, of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you, in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have in a common cause sought and triumphed together; the independence and liberty you possess-are the work of joint councils and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings, and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest. Here every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The north, in an unrestrained intercourse with the south, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter, great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise, and precious materials of manufacturing industry. The south, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the agency of the north, fees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand; turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the north, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes in different ways, to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength, to itself is unequally adapted. east, in a like intercourse with the west, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communication by land and water, will more and more find a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad, or manufactures at home. The wost derives from the east supplies requifite to its growth and comfort; and what is perhaps of fill greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the union, directed by an indisfoluble community of interest as one nation. Any other tenure by which the west can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength, or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrintically precarious.

fically precarious. While every part of our country feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined cannot fail to find, in the united mais of means and efforts, greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater fecurity from external danger, a lets frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations, and what is of inettimable value! they muit derive from union an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves, which . fo frequently afflict neighbouring countries, not tied together by the fame government; which own rivalships alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments and intrigues, would itimulate and imbitter. Hence, likewife, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown establishments, which, under any form of government, are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty; in this fense it is that your union ought to be confidered as a main proporty our liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a perfuafive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibits the continuance of the union as a primary object of patriotic defire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? Let experience solve it To listen to mere speculations in fuch a case were criminal. We are authorised to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. 'Tis well worth a fair and full experiment. fuch powerful and obvious motives to union, affecting all parts of our. country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those, who in any quarter may endeavour to weaken its bands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our union, it occurs as matter of ferious concern, that any ground should have been furnished for characterising partice by geographical discriminations, northern and fouthern, Atlantic and western; whence designing men may endeavour to excite 🍋 belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. of the expedients of party to acquire influence, within particular districts, is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other diffricts. You cannot shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heart-burnings which spring from there misrepresentations: they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had an useful lesson on this head; they have feen, in the negotiation by the executive, and in the unanimous ratification by the fenate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at the event throughout the United States, a decifive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the general government, and in the Atlantic states, unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Misfiffippi: they have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties, that with Great Britain, and that with Spain, which fecure to them every thing they could defire, in respect to our foreign relations, towards confirming their prospe-Will it not be their wifdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? Will they not henceforth be deaf to those advifers, if such there are, would fever them from their brethren, and connect with aliens?

have

To the efficacy and permanency of your union, a government for the whole is indifpenfible. alliances, however strict, between the parties, can be an adequate substitute; they must inevitably experience- the infractions and interruptions which all alliances in all times have experienced. Senfible of this momentous truth you have improved upon your first essay, by the adoption of a conftitution of government better calculated than your former for an intimate union, and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation, and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers. uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has just . claim to your confidence and your Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiefcence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government; but the constitution, which at any time exists, until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the' whole people, is facredly obligatory upon. all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government, presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and affociations, under whatever plaufible character, with the real defign to direct, controul, counteract. or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency. They ferve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force—to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of a party, often a. fmall but artful and enterprising minority of the community; and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public adminitiration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction, rather than the organ of confistent and wholesome plane, digested by common councils, and modified by mutual interests.

However

However combinations or affociations of the above description may, now and then, answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to beconce potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government; destroying afterwards the very enemies which have lifted them to unjust dominion. Towards the prefervation of your government, and the permanency of vour present happy state, it is requifite, not only that you iteadily discountenance irregular oppositions to its acknowledged authority, but also, that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretexts. One method of assault may be to esfect, in the forms of the conflitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what cannot be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited, remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments as of other human inftitutions—that experience is the furest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country —that facility in changes, upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion, exposes to perpetual change, from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion; and remember, especially, that for the efficient management of your common interests, in a country so extensive as our's, a government of as much vigour as is confishent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name, where the government is too seeble to withstand the enterprizes of faction, to consine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of persons and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with the particular reference to the founding of them on geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most folemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its roots in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controuled, or oppressed; but in those of the pepular form it is seen in its greatest rankness, and it is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate dominion of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party diffention, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itfelf a most horrid despotism. this leads at length to a more formal and permament despotism. The disorders and miseries which refult, gradually incline the minds of men to feek fecurity and repose in the absolute power of an individual; and, fooner or later, the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation,

vation, on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of fight) the common and continued mischiess of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animofity of one part against another, foments occasionally riot and infurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption which find a facilitated acceis to the government itlelf through the channels of party paffions. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true; and in governments of a monarchical cast, patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favour, upon the spirit of party. those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency, it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose. And there being constant danger of excess, the effect ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and affuage it. A fire not to be quenched: it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest, instead of warming, it should consume.

It is important likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those entrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to confolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power, and proneness to abuse it, which predominates in the human heart, is fufficient to fatisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depofitories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions by the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern; some of them in our country, and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be, in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments The precedent destroyed. must always greatly over-balance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can ! at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political profperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotifm who should labour to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these sirmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherith them. A volume could not trace all their connection with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, where is the fecurity for property, for reputation, for life, if the fente of religious obligation defeat the oaths, which are the infiruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge. the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. What every may be conceded to influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true, that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule indeed extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indisference upon attempts to shake the soundation of the fabric?

Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, infitutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened.

As a very important foarce of firength and fecurity, cherish public credit. One method of prefer-ving it is to, use as sparingly as posfible; avoiding occasions of expence by cultivating peace, but remembering also that timely difbursements to prepare for danger, frequently prevent much greater diffuriements to repel it; avoiding likewife the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expence, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may. have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon policity the burthen which we ourselves ought to The execution of their maxims belong to your representatives, but it is necessary that public opinion should co-operate: To facilitate to them the performance of their duty, it is effential that you should practically bear in mind, ... that towards the payment of debts: there must be a revenue: that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient. and urpleafant; that the intrinfic: embarratiment inteparable from the * ... felection of the proper objects! (which is always a choice of difficulties) ought to be a decifive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the government in making it and for a fpirit of acquiefcence in the meafures for obtaining revenue, which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice towards all nations, cultivate peace and harmony with all; religion and morality enjoin this conduct: and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and at no great distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by and benevolence hat in the courfugs the fruits of uld richly repaired that providence that Providence that Providence in the permanent with its virtues at leaft, is recomfentiment which nature. Alas rendered impossible by its vices the execution of fuch a plan ing is more effectial than that permanent, inveterate antipa s again# particular nations, an onate attachments for others dd be excluded; and that i e of them, just and amicabl ngs towards all should be cul The nation which in es towards another an habi hatred, or an habitual fond , is in fome degree a flave a flure to its animofity or t ffection, ci her of which is ful nt to lead it aftray from it r and its interest. Antipath ne nation againft another dir s each more readily to offer in and injury, to lay hold c it causes of umbrage, and t ianghty and intractable, whe dental or trading occasions of ute occur. Hence frequen .fions, obfinate, envenomed bloody contests. The nation npted by ill-will and refent t, fometimes impels to war th arnment, contrary to the be ulations of policy. The gc ment foinctimes participates i national propentity, and a s, through pathon, what rea would reject, at other time akes the animofity of the na opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practife the arts of feduction, to miflead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils? Such an attachment of a small or weak, towards a great or powerful nation, dooms the former to be fatellite of the latter.

TATE

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens) the jealousy of a free people ought to be contantly awake; fince history and experience prove, that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of a republican govern-But that jealousy to be ment. ufeful must be impartial; else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of defence against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation, and excessive dislike of another, cause those whom they actuate to iee danger only on one fide, and ferve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may refift the intrigues of the favourites, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to furrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith.—Here let us itop.

Europe has a fet of primary interests, which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence the must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate our selves by artificial ties in the erdinary vicislitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and. collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situstion invites and enables us to pursue a different course. remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annorance; when we may take fuch an. attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time réfolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counfel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a fituation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, ha-mour, or caprice? Tis our true policy to fleer clear of permanent alliances, with any portion of the foreign world; 60 far, I mean, as we are now at lie. berty to do it; for let me be not understood as capable of patronifing infidelity to existing engage. I hold the maxim no less ments. applicable to public, than to private affairs, that honefty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed, in their genuine fense.

Bet :

in my opinion, it is unnecessary would be unwise to extend n. Taking care always to keep relives, by suitable establishits, on a respectable defensive ure, we may safely trust to temury alliances for extraordinary regencies.

larmony, liberal intercourse a all nations, are recommended policy, humanity, and interest.

even our commercial policy ald hold an equal and impartial d; neither seeking nor grantexclusive favours or preferences, fulting the natural course of igs: diffusing and diversifying gentle means the streams of imerce, but forcing nothing; blishing, with powers so dised, in order to give trade a de course, to define the rights our merchants, and to enable government to support them; ventional rules of intercourse, best that present circumstances . mutual opinion will permit, temporary, and liable to be n time to time abandoned or ied, as experience and circumices shall dictate; constantly ping in view that it is folly in : nation to look for difinterested ours from another: that it must with a proportion of its inendence for whatever it may ept under that character; that, fuch acceptance, it may place

If in the condition of having en equivalents for nominal fairs, and yet of being reproached h ingratitude for not giving re. There can be no greater or than to expect or calculate on real favours from nation to ion. It is an illusion which perience must cure; which a t pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish; that they will controul the usual current of the passions, or prevent our nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations. But if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, fome occasional good; that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischies of foroign intrigue, to guard against the impostors of pretended patriotism; this hopewill be a full recompence for the folicitade of your welfare, by which they have been dictated.

How far in the discharge of my official duties I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated, the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself the assurance of my own conscience is, that I have at least believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subfisting war in Europe, my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approved voice, and by that of your representatives in both houses of congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound in duty and interest to take a neutral position.

ANNUAL REGISTER, 304

Having taken it, I deposition. termined, as far as thould depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance and firmnefs

The confiderations which respect the right to hold this conduct it is not necessary on this occasion to I will only observe, that according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without any thing more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity towards other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me a predominant motive has been to endeavour to gain time to our country to lettle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress without interruption, to that degree of firength and confiftency, which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of administration I am unconfeious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently befeech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the cvils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence; and that after fortyfive years of my life dedicated to its service, with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be configned to oblivion, as myfelf must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love towards it, which is fo natural to a man who views in it the native foil of himfelf and his progenitors for feveral generations, I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat, in which I promite myself to realize, without alloy, the Iweet enjoyment of partaking, in the midr of my fellow citizens, the benign influence of good laws, under a free govern ment, the ever favourite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust of our mutual cares; labours, and dangers.

G. WASHINGTON. United States, Sept. 17, 1796.

Note from the French Envoy, Citizen. Adet, to the Executive Government of America.

TilE undersigned minister plenipotentiary of the French republic, in conformity to the order of his: government, has the honour of transmitting to the secretary of thate of the United States, a resolution taken by the executive government of the French republic, on the 14th Messidor, 4th year, relative to the conduct which the thips of war of the republic are to hold towards neutral veffels. flag of the republic will treat the flag of neutrals in the same manner as they shall fuffer it to be treated by the English.

The fentiments which the American government have manifested to the underfigued minister plenipotentiary,

itiary, do not permit him to t; that they will fee in its light this measure, as far as it concern the United States; hat they will also feel, that it Cated by imperious circumes, and approved by justice. cat Britain during the war she arried on against the republic, ot ceased using every means rpower to add to that scourge ges still more terrible. She ised the well-known liberality e French nation to the detri-: of that nation. Knowing howful France has always been in observance of her treaties; ving that it was a principle of epublic to respect the flags of ations, the British government, the beginning of the war, caused neutral vessels, and in cular American vessels, to be ned, taken them into their , and dragged from them chmen and French property. ce bound by a treaty with the ed States, could find only a disadvantage in the articles of treaty, which caused to be cted as American property ish property found on board They had a rican vessels. , under this confideration, to Et that America would take in favour of her violated neu-One of the predecessors of inderfigned, in July 1793, apon this subject to the gonent of the United States; Nevere was not fuccessful. is the national convention, by their decree of the 9th of , 1793, had ordered the seizure emy's property on board neuressels, declaring, at the same , that the measure should cease the English should respect al flags, had excepted, on the or, XXXVIII.

ricans from the operation of this general order. But the convention was obliged foon to repeal the law which contained this exception for favourable to Americans; the manner in which the English conducted themseles, the manifest intention they had to stop the exportation of provision from America to France, rendered it unavoidable.

The national convention by this had restored the equilibrium of neutrality which England had destroyed; had discharged their duly in a manner justified by a thousand past examples, as well as by the necessity of the then existing moment. They might, therefore, to recall the orders they had given. to feize the enemy's property on board American vessels, have waited till the British government had first definitively revoked the same order, a suspension only of which was produced by the embargo laid by Congress the 26th of March, 1794. But as foon as they were informed that, under orders of the government of the United States, Mr. Jay was directed to remonferate. against the vexatious measures of: the English, they gave orders, by the law of the 13th Nivose, 3d year, to the ships of war of the republic to respect American vesfels; and the committee of public. fafety, in their explanatory resolve of the 14th of the same month, hastened to sanction the same principles. The national convention: and the committee of public lafety. had every reason to believe, that this open and liberal conduct would determine the United States to use every effort to put a stop to the vexations imposed upon their commerce, to the injury of the French republic; republic; they were deceived in this hope; and though the treaty of friendship, navigation, and commerce, between Great Britain and the United States had been signed six weeks before France adopted the measure I have just spoken of, the English did not abandon the plan they had formed, and continued to stop and carry into their ports all American vessels bound to French ports, or returning from them.

This conduct was the subject of a note which the undersigned addressed on the 7th Vendemaire, 4th year (20th September 1795, O. S.) to the secretary of state. The remonstrances which it contained were sounded on the duties of neutrality, upon the principles which Mr. Jesserson had laid down in his letter to Mr. Pinckney, dated the 13th September, 1794.

Yet this note has remained without an answer, though recalled to the remembrance of the fecretary of fiate by a dispatch of the 9th Germinal, 4th year (29th March 1796, O. S.); and American veffels bound to French ports, or returning from them, have still been seized by the English. indeed more; they have added a new vexation to those they had already imposed upon the Americans; they have impressed seamen from on board American vetlels, and have thus found the means of firengthening their crews at the expence of the Americans, without the government of the United States having made known to the underfigned the steps they had taken to obtain satisfaction for this violation of neutrality, fo hurtful to the interests of France, as the undersigned bath set forth in his dispatches to the secretary of size of the 9th Germinal, 4th year (29th March 1796, O. S.), 19th Germinal (8th April 1796), and 1st Floreal (20th April, 1796), which have remained without an answer.

The French government then finds itself, with respect to America at the present time, in circumstances similar to those of the year 1795; and if it sees itself, obliged to abandon, with respect to them, and the neutral powers in general, the favourable line of conduct they pursued, and to adopt different measures, the blame should sale upon the British government: it is their conduct which the French government has been obliged to sollow.

The underfigued minister plenipotentiary conceives it his duty to remark to the fecretary of state, that the neutral governments, ex the allies of the republic, have nothing to fear as to the treatment of their flag by the French, fince if keeping within the bounds of their neutrality, they cause the rights of ! that neutrality to be respected by English, the republicrespect them. But if through westness, partiality, or other motives, they should suffer the English to sport with that neutrality, and turn it to their advantage, could they then complain, when France; 👀 restore the balance of neutrality to its equilibrium, shall act in the lame manner as the English? No, certainly; for the neutrality of a nation confifts in granting to belligerent powers the same advanand that neutrality no tages; longer exists, when, in the course of the war, that neutral nation grants to one of the belligerent powers advantages not stipulated by treaties anterior to the war, or suffers that power to seize upon them. The neutral government cannot then complain if the other belligerent power will enjoy advantages which its enemy enjoys, or if it seizes upon them; otherwise that neutral government would deviate, with respect to it, from the line of neutrality, and would become its enemy.

The undersigned minister plenipotentiary thinks it useless further to develope these principles. He does not doubt that the secretary of state feels all their force: and that the government of the United States will maintain from all violation a neutrality which France has always respected, and will always respect, when her enemies do not make it turn to her detriment.

The underlighted minister plenipotentiary embraces this opportunity of reiterating to the secretary of state the assurance of his esteem, and informs him, at the same time, that he will cause this note to be printed, in order to make publicly known the motives which, at the present juncture, influence the French republic.

Done at Philadelphia, 6th Brumaire, 5th year of the French Republic, one and indivisible. (27th Oct. 1796, O. S.) (Signed) P. A. ADET.

Reply of the Executive Government of America to Citizen Adet's Note, inclosing the Decree of the Directory respecting Neutral Vessels.

Sir.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your note, of the 27th ult. covering a decree of the executive directory of the French republic, concerning the commerce of neutral nations.

This decree makes no distinction between neutral powers, who can claim only the rights fecured to them by the law of nations, and others between whom French republic treaties have imposed special obligations. Where no treaties exist, the republic, by feizing and confiscating the property of their enemies found on board neutral veilels, would only exercife an acknowledged right under the law of nations. If, towards fuch neutral nations, the French republic has forborne to execute this right, the forbearance has been perfectly gratuitous. The United States by virtue of their treaty of commerce with France, stand on different ground: ৣ

In the year 1778, France voluntarily entered into a commercial treaty with us, on.principles of perfect reciprocity, and expressly stipulating that free ships should make free goods. That is, if France should be at war with any nation whom the United States inould be at peace, the goods (except contraband) and the perfons of her enemies (foldiers in actual service excepted) found on board the vessels of the United States, were to be free from cap-That on the other hand, if the United States should engage in war with any nation, while France remained at peace, then the goods (except contraband) and the persons of our enemies (soldiers in actual service excepted) found on board French vessels, were also to be free from capture. This is plainly expressed in the 23d article of that treaty, and demonstrates that the reciprocity thereby Ripu-lated was to operate at different risds; that is, at one time in favour of one of the contracting parties, and of the other at another time. At the present time, the United States being at peace, they policis by the treaty the right of carrying the goods of the enemies of France, without subjecting them to expture. But what do the spirit of the decree of the executive directory and the current of your observations require —That the United States should now gratuitoutly renounce this right. And what reason is assigned for denying to us the enjoyment of this right? Your own words furnish the answer: " France, bound by treaty to the United States, could find only a real disabountage in the articles of that treaty, which caused to be respected, as American property, English property found on board American veffels." This requisition, and the reason assigned to support it, alike excite surprize, The American government, et, conscious of the purily of its intentions, of its impartial observance of the laws of neutrality, and of its inviolable regard to treaties, cannot for a moment admit, that it has torfeited the right to claim a reciprocal observance of stipulations on the part of the French republic, whole friendship moreover it has every reason to cultivate with the most perfect fincerity. This right, formerly infringed by a decree of the national convention, was recognized anew by the repeal of that decree. Why it should be again questioned we are at a loss. to determine. We are ignorant of any new restraints on our commerce by the British government; offeis recent official information, that as new orders bave been iffued.

The captures made by the British of American veffels, having French property on board, are warranted by the law of nations. The fores and operation of this law was contemplated by France and the United States, when they formed; their treaty of commerce, and their freeight flipulation on this point was meant as an exception to an universal rule; neither our westeness nor our strength have say choice, when the question concerns the observance of a known rule of the law of nations.

You are pleased to remark, this the conduct of Great Britain, 4. capturing veilels bound to from French ports, had been the subject of a note, which on the 29th of September, 1795, war dreffed to the fecretary of flate, but which remained without at Viry fufficient reasons aniwer. They be assigned for the omission. The fubject, in all its afpects, had been officially and publicly difcuffed, and the principles and the timate measures of the United States, founded on their indifputable rights, were as publicly fixed. But if the subject had not, by the previous discussions, been already exhautled, can it be a matter of forprise that there should be a 🖚 pugnance to answer a letter containing fuch infinuatie

" It must then be a man, who will disear love, hatred, and, in the passions which les ment astray, that the public have a right to the American governs the English to interrumercial relations whi a persidious condescension it perd the English to violate a which it ought, for its own and interest, to defend; if, the cloak of neutrality, it nted to England a poniard to e throat of its faithful ally: if, se, partaking in the tyrannical comicidal rage of Great Britain, curred to plunge the people of e into the horrors of famine!"

sesake of preserving harmony, e was preferred to a comupon these infinuations.

u are also pleased to refer to etters of March and April last, ve to impresses of American n by British ships, and lain that the government of Inited States had not made n to you the steps they had to obtain fatisfaction. This, as a matter which concerned hat government. As an indent nation, we are not to render an account to any of the measures we deemed r for the protection of our itizens; so long as there was e flightest ground to suspect he government ever acquiin any aggression.

permit me to recur to the t of the decree of the execurectory.

before observed, we are offiinformed that the British goent have issued no new for capturing the vessels of nited States. We are also lly informed, that on the apice of the notification of that the minister of the United at Paris applied for informa"Whether orders were issued the seizure of neutral vessels, was informed, that no such order was issued, and further, that no fuch order would be iffued, in case the British did not seize, feize our vessels." This communication from the minister, of the United States, at Paris, to their minister at London, was dated the 28th of August; but the decree of the directory bears date the 14th Messidor, answering to the 2d of July. These circumstances, together with some observations in your note, leave the American government in a state of uncertainty of the real intentions of the government in France. Allow me then to alk, whether, in the actual state of things, our commerce is confidered as liable to fuffer any new restrictions on the part of the French republic? Whether the restraints now exercised by the British government are confidered as of a nature to justify a denial of those rights, which are pledged to us by our treaty with your nation? Whether orders have been actually given to the thips of war of the French republic to capture the vessels of the United States? And what, if they exist, are the precise terms of those orders?

The questions, fir, you will see, are highly interesting to the United. States. It is with extreme concern that the government finds itself reduced to the necessity of asking an explanation of this nature; and if it shall be informed that a new line of conduct is to be adopted towards this country, on the ground of the decree referred to, its surprise will equal its regret, that principles should now be questioned, which, after repeated discussions, both here and in France, have been demonstrated to be founded. as we conceive, in the obligations of impartial neutrality, of thipulations by treaty, and of the law of nations. I hope, fir, you will find it convenient by an early answer, to retemove the suspense in which the government of the United States is now held on the question above stated.

courcenter

I shall close this letter by one remark on the singularity of your causing the publication of your note. As it concerned the United States, it was properly addressed to its government, to which alone pertained the right of communicating it in such time and manner as it should think sit to the citizens of the United States.

I am, fir, with great respect, your most obedient servant,
TIMOTHY PICKERING.
United States, Philadelphia; Nov. 3.
To M. Adet, Minister Plenipotentiary of the French Republic.

Substance of the memorial presented by Citizen Adet to the American Secretary for Foreign Affairs, previous to bis announcing that he was no longer to be considered as the Minister of the French republic.

THE minister of the French republic, through the whole of his note, speaks as acting under the express orders from the executive After expressing the atdirectory. tachment of his government for the American people, he complains, in the name of the directory, of a violation on the part of our executive of the 17th article of the treaty of 1778. The first part of that article stipulates, that the French shall be at liberty to bring their prizes into our ports without its being lawful for any of our officers to take cognizance of their validity.

In contempt of this stipulation, be states that several French prizes brought into our ports have been leized, tried, and restored to their original owners, with various degrees of delay, vexation, injuffice and injury. He complains, that the English were suffered to arm in our ports in various instauces, and that the complaints of the se gents of the French republic ever proved ineffectual in stopping them, Persons suspected of having assisted. in arming French privateers were immediately thrown into prifes, while those concerned in arming British vessels were never molested: the executive in these instances exhibiting an evident partiality for the English and no regard for the maintenance of their neutrality, The second stipulation in article 17th, prohibits all English shipe that shall have made French prizes from entering our ports. Our executive have, in their conftruction of this stipulation, confined its pio hibitory effect to British vessels and tempting to come in with their The minister protests, in the name of the directory, againg the propriety of this construction. He confiders it as an attempt to add to, not to explain, the article, Even on the supposition that the article is doubtful, he infifts on the impropriety of an ex parte confirme-He cites fundry examples of English ships of war having entered our ports, contrary to this fitpulation, having made them convenient stations the better to annot the French, and having, even contrary to the forced interpretation given to the 17th article by our executive, brought their prizes into our ports, and there refitted them to cruize against the French.

The minister next adverts to Jay's mission. He states, that France was deceived by the declarations of our executive when that business was set on foot; and that the directory confiders the British treaty as depriving France of all the advantageous stipulations intended to be secured to her by the , treaty of 1778, as tending to render the neutrality of America advantageous to England to the detriment of France. This treaty abandons the modern law of nations, which even England had sanctioned in cleven treaties, and we in every prior commercial treaty with European nations. It gives the Eng-With the facility of obtaining the transportation of naval stores and warlike, implements whitherfoever they please under the shelter of the American flag, while this facility is denied to France; and thus it changes, during the war, the respective footing of the belligerent powers with respect to us. treaty he further states, cuts off the fupplies of provisions, which France looked for from this country, by flipulating that the British may in every fituation feize our provision ressels bound to the ports of their chemies. In short, he considers it as a breach of our neutrality, unless the French be allowed to partake in the advantages it holds out to He also claims this Great Britain. participation in pursuance of the second article of the treaty of 1778, which grants the French all the advantages of commerce and navigation enjoyed by the most favoured nations. And in this point of view the orders to the French vessels of war to treat the American flag in every respect as we shall suffer it to be treated by the English have been Mued.

The minister proceeds to protest, in the name and by the orders of the executive directory, against the violation of the 17th article. claims replevy of all feizures, and the annulling of all judicial acts with respect to the French prizes, and protests against all opposition to the sale of prizes. He protests against the violation of the same articles by our admitting into our ports British armed vessels, and against the interpretation put by our executive upon that article. He declares, that the directory confiders our treaty with Britain as a violation of their treaty with us, and as equivalent to a treaty of alliance with that nation; and, in consequence, orders him to suspend his ministerial functions here. The directory declare, that they do not wish this measure to be considered in the light of a rupture, but as a mark of their fense of injury, which is to last until they can obtain satisfaction. They reiterate their expressions of friendship for the people, notwithstanding the wrongs of the executive.

The minister concludes by stating, that the French republic always had it at heart to cultivate: harmony by a mutual interchange of good offices; but that our administration have as constantly endeavoured to break afunder the ties which connect the two nations. Early under the republic, French colonies were opened to us; \(\cdot\) the ports of France also on the fame footing as to their own veffels. When England violated the neutral flag, France, obliged to make use of reprisals, exempted from the measure the Americans; and though forced, for a while, much against their inclination, to withdraw the exemption, they early renewed it.

X 4 exemption,

While France was thus, even during the tempest of a revolution, treating the Americans with marked attention; what, atks the note, where the executive of the United States employed in? They were questioning whether they would acknowledge the republic and receive their ambassador; whether they should consider the treaty, the price of American liberty, as binding; whether the envoys from exiled and rebellious princes should be received; an ambiguous proclamation of neutrality was framed; French privateers were harrafied; England was suffered to sport with our neutrality, and to cut up our commerce to the detriment of France; English ships of war were admitted in our ports; the advances of France for a renewal of the treaty of commerce were eluded under the most frivolous pretexts, while our executive courted the British, and folicited a treaty, by which, prostituting our neutrality, we sacrificed France to her enemies; and this whilst a review of late events, whilst every object around still reminds us of the tyranny of Britain, and the generous affistance of France.

The note concludes by calling on Americans to remember, that, if generous minds are alive to injuries, they can forgive; and that the French, when they are treated as friends, will still be found faithful friends and generous allies.

The Minister Plenipotentiary of the French Republic with the United States of America, to the French Citizens who reside or travel in the United States.

CITIZENS.

FROM the dawn of our revolution, the tri-coloured cockade has been the rallying point of those onergetic men, whose generous efforts gave the first blow to arbitrary power. At their call, the French nation, bent for centuries under the yoke, shook off that long drowsiness; twenty-four millions of men adopted that august symbol; they exclaimed, "We shall be free," and all opposition was defeated, and the throne tumbled down in the dust, and all Europe armed against them, has been vanquished.

The republic decorates all best citizens with those national colours, the facred symbol of liberty which they have won.

Frenchmen who are ablest from their native land ought not, amidst nations allied with their, lay aside the distinctive mark which, by making them known, secures to them the protection and reciprocal respect guaranteed by our treaties with those nations.

Those who, from a guilty indifference, thould slight the right, exempt themselves from that duty—those could lay no claim to that protection, they would renounce the support of the agents of the republic.

But, citizens, I am persuaded that at the call of the minister of the French republic, you will hasten to put on the symbol of a liberaty, which is the fruit of eight years toils and privations and of five years victories.

Thus you will draw a line of demarcation between you and those contemptible beings, whose unfeeling hearts are callous to the sacred, name of native land, to the noble pride with which the freeman is a.; nimated

nimated by the sense of his independence.

Thus, you will fignalize those Rill more degraded beings, who, being fold to the enemies of the republic, drag from clime to clime a life overwhelmed with misery and contempt—wretches, whom history will not call to remembrance, except to perpetuate their difgrace.

The use of the French chanceries, the national protection will not be granted to any Frenchman but those who perfectly sensible of the dignity attached to the title of citizen, shall take a pride in wearing constantly the tri-coloured cockade. The executive directory of the French republic have pronounced thus. Being the organ of their defitions, I communicate them with pleasure to my fellowcitizens. As for those who, although Frenchmen born, have ceafed to be Frenchmen, I do not speak to them; the public voice will inform them of their exclusion.

Done at Philadelphia, the 12th Brumaire, the fifth Year of the French republic, one and indivisible.

(Signed) L. A. ADET Philadelphia, Nov. 7.

Attested copy of a translation from a Note published by the French minister at Philadelphia on the 15th of Nowember.

TRANSLATION.

Citizen P. A. Adet informs his fellow-citizens, that, by order of the executive directory, he has today notified to the fecretary of state, the suspension of the functions of the minister plenipotentiary of the republic, to the United States of America, and that, in consequence of such suspension, they must, from this day, address their demands or claims to the conful general of the republic

Philadelphia, the 25th At Brumaire, the 5th year of the French republic, one and indivisible—the 15th of November, 1796.

Address of the President of the United States to Congréss.

> December 7, 1796s Fellow Citizens of the Senate, and of the House of Reprefentatives,

IN recurring to the internal fituation of our country, fince I had the pleasure to address you, I find ample reason for a renewed expression of that gratitude to the Ruler of the Universe, which a continued feries of prosperity has so often and to justly called forth.

The acts of the last session, which required special arrangements, have been, as far as circumstances would admit, carried into operation.

The meeting of the deputies from the Creek nation at Oolerain, in the state of Georgia, which had for a principal object the purchase of a parcel of their land by that state, broke up without its being accomplished: the nation having, previous to their departure, instructed them against making any sale; the. occasion, however, has been improved, to confirm, by a new treaty with the Creeks, their preexisting engagements with United States, and to obtain their content to the establishment of trading houses and military posts within their boundary, by means of which their friendship, and the general peace, may be more effectually secured.

As soon as the governor-general of Canada could be addressed with propriety on this subject, arrangements were condually and promptly concluded for their evacuation, and the United States took possession of the principal of them, comprehending Oswego, Niagara, Detroit, Michaliminac, and Fort Miami, where such repairs and additions have been ordered to be made as appeared indispensable.

The commissioners appointed on the part of the United States, agreeably to the feventh article of the treaty with Great Britain, relative to captures and condemnation of veilels and other property, met the commissioners of his Britannic Majesty in London, in August last, when John Trumball, Efq. was chosen by lot for the fifth commissioner. In October following the board were to pro-As yet there has ceed to bufinefs. been no communication of commissioners on the part of Great Britain, to unite with those who have been appointed on the part of the United States, for carrying into effect the fixth article of the treaty.

The treaty with Spain required that the commissioners for running the boundary, line, between the territory of the United States and his Catholic Majesty's provinces of East and West Florida, should meet at the Natches, before the expiration of fix months after the exchange of the ratifications, which was effected at Aranjuez, on the 25th of April, and the troops of his Catholic majesty, occupying any posts within the limits of the United States, were within the fame period to be withdrawn. The commissioner of the United States, from the Natches in September, and troops were ordered to occupy the posts from which the Spanish garrisons should be withdrawn, Information has been recently received of the appointment of a commissioner on the part of his Catholic majesty for running the boundary line, but none of any appointment for the adjustment of the claims of our citizens, whose vessels of Spain.

In pursuance of the act of congress, passed in the last session, for the protection and relief of American feamen, agents were appointed, one to reside in Great Britain. and the other in the West Indies. The effects of the agency in the West Indies are not yet fully ascertained; but those which have been communicated afford grounds to believe the measure will be beneficial. The agent destined to refide in Great Britain declining to accept the appointment, the bufiness has consequently devolved on the minister of the United States in London; and will command his attention, until a new agent shall be appointed.

After many delays and disappointments, arising out of the Enropean war, the final arrangements for fulfilling the engagements made to the Dey and regency of Algiers will, in all present appearance, be crowned with success; but under great, though inevitable disadvantage, in the pecuniary transactions, occasioned by that war; which will render a surther provision necessary. The actual liberation of all our citizens who were prisoners in Algiers, while it gratifies every feeling heart, is itself an earnest`

vateers.

carnest of a satisfactory termination of the whole negotiation.

Measures are in operation for effecting treaties with the regencies of Tunis and Tripoli.

To an active external commerce the protection of a naval force is indispensable. This is manifest with regard to wars in which a flate is itself a party; but besides this, it is our own experience, that the most fincere neurality is not a fufficient guard against the depredations of nations at war. To fecure respect to a neutral flag requires a naval force, organized, and ready to vindicate it from in-This may fult or aggression. even prevent the necessity of going to war, by discouraging belligerent powers from committing fuch violations of the rights of the neutral party as may, first or last, receive no other option. From the best information I have been able to obtain, it would feem as if our trade to the Mediterranean, without a protecting force, will always be infecure; and our citizens exposed to the calamities from which numbers of them have but just been relieved. These considerations invite the United States to look to the means, and to fet about the gradual creation of a navy. The increasing progress of their navigation promises them, at no distant period, the requisite supply. of feamen; and their means, in other respects, favour the undertaking. It is an encouragement, likewise, that their particular situation will give weight and influence to a moderate naval force in their Will it not then be adhands. visable to begin, without delay, to provide, and lay up the materials for the building and equipping of ships of war; and to proceed in the work by degrees, in proportion as our resources shall render it practicable, without inconvenience; so that a future war of Europe may not find our commerce in the same. unprotected state in which it was found by the present?

found by the present? Congress have repeatedly, and not without fuccess, directed their attention to the encouragement of manufactures. The object is of too much consequence not to enfure a continuation of their efforts, in every way which will appear As a general rule, maeligible. nufacturers on a public account are inexpedient; but where the state of things in a country leave little hope that certain branches of manufacture will, for a great length, of time, obtain; when these are of a nature effential to the furnishing and equipping of the public force in the time of war, are not establishments for procuring them on public account, to the extent of the ordinary demand for the public service. recommended by firong confiderations of national policy, as an exception to the general rule? Ought our country to remain in such cases dependant on foreign supply, precarious, because liable to be interrupted? If the necessary articles should in this mode cost more in time of peace, will not the security and independence thence ariting ample compensation? form an Establishments of this fort, commenfurate only with the calls of the public service in the time of peace, will, in time of war, eafily be extended in proportion to the exigencies of government, and even perhaps to be made to yield a furplus, for the supply of our citizens at large; so as to mitigate the privateers from the interruption of their trade. If adopted the plan ought to exclude all those branches, which are already, or likely soon to be established in the country, in order that there may be no danger of interference with pursuits of individual industry.

It will not be doubted that, with reference either to individual or national welfare, agriculture is of primary importance. In proportion as nations advance in population, and other circumstances of maturity, this truth becomes more apparent, and renders the cultivation of the foil more and more an object of public patronage. stitutions for promoting it grow up, supported by the public purse; and to what object can it be dedicated with greater propriety? The means which have been employed to this end, none have been attended with greater fuccess than the establishment of boards, composed of proper characters, charged with collecting and diffusing information, and enabled by premiums, finall pecuniary aids, to encourage and affift a spirit of discovery and improvement.

I have heretofore proposed to the consideration of Congress the expediency of establishing a national university, and also a military academy. The desirableness of both these institutions has so constantly increased with every new view I have taken of the subject, that I cannot omit the opportunity of once for all recalling your attention to them.

The affembly to which I address myself is too enlightened not to be fully sensible how much a flourishing state of the arts and sciences contributes to national prosperity and reputation. True it is that our country, much to its honour, contains seminaries of learning, highly respectable and useful; but, the funds upon which they reste are too narrow to command the ablest professors in the different departments of liberal knowledge, for the institution contemplated, though they would be excellent auxiliaries.

Amongst the motives to such an, institution, the assimilation of the principles, opinions, and manners of our countrymen, by the common, education of a portion of our youth. from every quarter, well deserves attention. The more homogeneous our citizens can be made, in, these particulars, the greater willbe our prospect of permanent, union; and a primary object of, fuch a national institution should; be the education of our youth in the science of government. republic, what species of knowledge can be equally important; and what duty more pressing on its legislature than to patronize a plan for communicating it to those who are to be the future guardians of the liberties of the country?

While in our external relations, fome ferious inconveniences and embarrassments have been overcome, and others leffened, it is with much pain and deep regret I mention, that circumstances of a very unwelcome nature have lately. occurred. Our trade has suffered. and is fuffering, extensive injuries in the West Indies, from the cruizers and agents of the French republic; and communications have been received from its minister here which indicate the danger of a further disturbance in our commerce. by its authority, and which are,

in

er respects, far from agree-

as been my constant, sincere, arnest wish, in conformity hat of our nation, to maintain I harmony and a perfectly ly understanding with that lic. This wish remains un-1; and I shall persevere in ndeavour to fulfil it, to the t extent of what ihall be tent with a just and indispenregard to the rights and hoof our country; nor will 1 ocale to cherish the expec-, that a spirit of justice, our, and friendship, on the of the republic, will eventunfure fucceis.

pursuing this course, how-I cannot forget what is due e character of our governand nation; or to a full and considence in the good sense, stism, self-respect, and fortiof my countrymen.

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

ner to the above address presented by the Vice president.

E thank you, fir, for your ful and detailed exposure of existing situation of our counand we succeedly join in sents of gratitude to an over-rul-providence for the distinguishmare of public prosperity and ate happiness, which the peof the United States so peculienjoy.

delivery of the military posts y occupied by the British forwithin the territory of the ted States, was made with corty and promptitude, as soon as umstances would admit; and that the other provisions of our objects of eventual arrangement are now about being carried into effect with entire harmony and good faith.

We perfectly, coincide with you in opinion, that the importance of our commerce demands a naval force for its protection against foreign insult and depredation, and our solicitude to attain that object will be always proportionate to its magnitude.

The necessity of accelerating the establishment of certain useful manufactures by the intervention of legislative aid and protection, and the encouragement due to agriculture by the creation of boards (composed of intelligent individuals) to patronize this primary pursuit of society, are subjects which will readily engage our most ferious attention.

A national university may be converted to the most useful purposes. The science of legislation being so estentially dependent on the endowments of the mind, the public interest must receive effectual aid from the general diffusion of knowledge, and the United States will assume a more dignified station among the nations of the earth, by the successful cultivation of the highest branches of literature.

We fincerely lament, that while the conduct of the United States has been uniformly impressed with the character of equity, moderation, and love of peace, in the maintenance of all their foreign relationships, our trade should be so harassed by the cruiters and agents of the republic of France, throughout the extensive departments of the West Indies.

We cordially acquiesce in the reflection that the United States, under the operation of the sederal government, have experienced a most rapid aggrandizement and prosperity, as well political as commercial.

While contemplating the causes that produce this auspicious result, we must acknowledge the excellence of the constitutional system, and the wisdom of the legislative provisions, but we should be deficient in gratitude and justice, did we not attribute a great portion of these advantages to the virtue, firmness, and talents of your administration, which have been conspicuously displayed in the most trying times, and on the most critical occasions. It is, therefore, with the fincerest regret, that we now receive an official notification of your intentions to retire from the public employments of your country.

When we review the various scenes of your public life, so long, and to fucceisfully devoted to the most arduous services, civil and military, as well during the struggles of the American revolution, as the convulfive periods of a recent date, we cannot look forward to your retirement without our warmest affections and most anxious regards accompanying you, and without mingling with our fellow-citizens at large the fincerest wishes for your personal happiness that fensibility and attachment can express.

The most effectual consolation that can offer for the loss we are about to sustain, arises from the animating reflection, that the influence of your example will extend to your successors, and the United States thus continue to enjoy an able, upright, and energetic administration.

JOHN ADAMS, Vice Prefident of the United States, and Prefident of the Senate.

The following is the reply of the Prefident.

GENTLEMEN,

IT affords me great satisfaction to find in your address a concurrence in sentiment with me on the various topics which I presented for your information and deliberation; and that the latter will receive from you an attention proportioned to their respective importance.

For the notice you take of my public services, civil and military, and your kind wishes for my personal happiness, I beg you to accept my cordial thanks. These services, and greater, had I possessed ability to render them, were due to the unanimous calls of my country; and its approbation is my bundant reward.

When contemplating the period of my retirement I saw virtuous and enlightened men, among whom I rested on the discernment and patriotism of my fellow-citizens to make the proper choice of a inecessor; men who would require 40 influential example to enfure to the United States " an able, upright, and energetic administration." To fuch men I shall cheerfully yield the palm of genius and talents, to ferve our common country; but at the fame time I hope I may be indulged in expressing the consoling reflection (which consciousnessing. gests), and to bear it with me to the grave, that none can ferve it with purer intentions than I liave done, or with a more difinterested zeal.

GEORGE WASHINGTON. CHARACTERS.

CHARACTERS.

Particulars of the earlier years of Mr. Gibbon's Life, and of the course of studies which laid the foundation of bis subsequent celebrity. From memoirs of himself in Lord Shoffield's edition of his posthumous works.

I was born at Putney, in the county of Surry, on the 27th of April, O. S. in the year one thoufand feven hundred and thirtyfeven; the first child of the marriage of Edward Gibbon, esq. and of Judith Porten. My lot might have been that of a flave, a favage, or a peasant; nor can I reflect without pleasure on the bounty of nature, which call my birth in a free and civilized country, in an age of science and philotophy, in a family of honourable rank, and decently endowed with the gifts of fortune. From my birth I have enjoyed the right of primogeniture; but I was fucceeded by five brothers and one fifter, all of whom were inatched away in their infancy. My five brothers, whose names may be found in the parith register of Putney, I shall not pretend to lament: but from my childhood to the present hour I have deeply and fincerely regretted my fifter, whose life was fomewhat prolonged, whom I remember to have feen an amiable infant. The relation of a brother and a fister, especially if they do not marry, appears to me of a very fingular nature. It is a familiar and tender friendship with a female, much about our own age; an affection perhaps softened by the secret influence of fex, but pure from any mixture of fenfual defire, the fole species of platonic love that can be indulged with truth, and without danger.

The death of a new born child before that of its parents may feem an unnatural, but it is strictly a probable, event: fince of any given number the greater part are extinguithed before their ninth year, before they possess the faculties of the mind or body. Without accusing the profuse waste or imperfect workmanship of nature, I shall only observe, that this unfavourable chance was multiplied against my infant existence. feeble was my constitution, so precarious my life, that, in the baptifm of each of my brothers, my father's prudence successively repeated my christian name of Edward. that, in case of the departure of the eldest ion, this patronymic appellation might be still perpetuated in the family.

- Uno avuljo non deficit aiter. To preserve and to rear so frail a being, the most tender assiduity was scarcely sufficient; and my mother's attention was somewhat diverted by her frequent pregnancies, by an exclusive passion for her husband, and by the diffigation of the world, in which his tafte and authority obliged ber to mingle. But the maternal office was supplied by my aunt, Mrs. Catharine Porten; at whose name I feel a tear of gratitude trickling down my cheek. A life of celibacy transferred her vacant affection to her fifter's first child: my weakness excited her pity; her attachment was fortified by labour and fuccess: and if there be any, as I trust there are some, who rejoice that I live, to that dear and excellent woman they must hold themselves indebted. anxious and folitary days did the confume in the patient trial of every mode of relief and amusement. Many wakeful nights did the fit by my bed-fide in trembling expectation that each hour would be my last. Of the various and frequent diforders of my childhood my own recollection is dark; nor do I with to expatiate on fo difgusting a topic. Suffice it to say, that while every practitioner, from Sloane and Ward to the chevali er Taylor, was successively summoned to torture or relieve me, the care of my mind was too frequently neglected for that of my health; compassion always suggested an excuse for the indulgence of the master, or the idleness of the pupil; and the chain of my education was broken, as often as I was recalled from the school of learning to the bed of fickness.

As foon as the use of speech had prepared my infant reason for the admission of knowledge, I was taught the arts of reading, writing, and arithmetic. So remote is the date, so vague is the memory of their origin in myself, that, were not the error corrected by analogy. I should be tempted to conceive them as innate. In my childhood I was praised for the readiness, with which I could multiply and divide, by memory alone, two sums of several figures: such praise encouraged my growing talents and had I persevered in this line of application, I might have acquired some same in mathematical studies.

After this previous inflitution? at home, or at a day-school at Put ney, I was delivered at the age of feven into the hands of Mr. John !! Kirkby, who exercised about eighteen months the office of my do His own words mestic tutor. which I shall here transcribe; in spire in his favour a sentiment pity and effeem.—" During my " bode in my native county Cumberland, in quality of an in digent curate, I used now-under then in a summer, when the pitch' fautness of the season invited, w? take a folitary walk to the forth thore, which lies about two miles? from the town where I lived? Here I would amuse myself, out while in viewing at large the greeable profpect which furrounded me, and another while (confining my fight to neater objects) ' in " admiring the vaft variety of besut inells, thrown upon beach; some of the choicest of which I always picked up, to distant vert my little ones upon my re One time among the real taking such a journey in my beatly? I fat down upon the declivity the beach with my face to the fea, which was now come within a few yards of my feety when immediately the fad thoughts of the wretched condition of family, family, and the unfuccessfulness of all endeavours to amend it, came crowding into my mind, which drove me into a deep melancholy, and ever and anon forced tears from my eyes." tress at last forced him to leave the country. His learning and virtue introduced him to my father; and at Putney he might have found at least a temporary shelter, had not an act of indifferetion again driven him into the world. One day reading prayers in the parish church, he most unluckily forgot the name of king George: his patron, a loyal Jubject, dismissed him with some reluctance, and a decent reward; and how the poor man ended his days I have never been able to learn.

In my ninth year (January 1746), in a lucid interval of comparative health, my father adopted the convenient and cultomary mode rof English education; and I was fent to Kingtton upon Thames, to a school of about seventy boys, which was kept by Dr. Wooddeson and his assistants. Every time I have fince passed over Putney common, I have always noticed the spot where my mother, as we drove along in the coach, admonished me that I was now going into the world, and must learn to think and act for myself. The expression may appear ludicrous; yet there is not, in the course of life, a more remarkable change than the removal of a child from the luxury and freedom of a wealthy house, to the frugal diet and strict subordination of a school; from the tenderness of parents, and the obsequiousness of servants, to the rude familiarity of his equals, the infolent tyranny of his seniors, and the rod, perhaps, Vol. XXXVIII.

of a cruel and capricious peda-Such hardships may seel gogue. the mind and body against the injuries of fortune: but my timid referve was aftonished by the crowd and tumult of the school; the want of strength and activity disqualified me for the sports of the play-field; nor have I forgotten how often in the year forty-fix I was reviled and buffetted for the fins of my tory anceftors. By the common methods of discipline, at the expence of many tears and fome blood, I purchased the knowledge of the Latin fyntax: and not long fince I was possessed of the dirty volumes of Phædrus and Cornelius Nepos, which I painfully construed and darkly understood.

My studies were too frequently interrupted by fickness; and after a real or nominal refidence at Kingston-school of near two years, I was finally recalled (December 1747) by my mother's death, which was occasioned in her thirty-eighth year, by the consequences of her last labour. I was too young to feel the importance of my los; and the image of her person and convertation is faintly imprinted in my memory. The affectionate heart of my aunt, Catherine Porten, bewailed a fifter and a friend; but my poor father was inconfolable and the transport of grief seemed to threaten his life or his reason. I can never forget the scene of our first interview, some weeks after the fatal event; the awful filence, the room hung with black, the mid-day tapers, his fighs and tears; his praises of my mother, a faint in heaven; his folemn adjuration that I would cherish her memory and imitate her virtues; and the fervor with which he kiffed and bleffed me as the fole furviving pledge of their The storm of passion infenfibly subsided into calmer melancholy. At a convivial meeting of his triends, Mr. Gibbon might affect or enjoy a gleam of cheerfulness; but his plan of happiness was for ever destroyed; and after the loss of his companion he was left alone in a world, of which the business and pleasures were to him irksome or insipid. After some unfuccessful trials he renounced the tumult of London and the hospitality of Putney, and buried himself in the rural or rather rustic solitude of Buriton; from which, during several years, he seldom emerged.

As far back as I can remember, the house, near Putney-bridge and church yard, of my maternal grandfather appears in the light of my proper and native home. was there that I was allowed to spend the greatest part of my time, in fickness or in health, during my school vacations and my parents' residence in London, and finally after my mother's death. months after that event, in the spring of 1748, the commercial ruin of her father, Mr. James Porten, was accomplished and declared. He suddenly absconded: but as his efficas were not fold, nor the house evacuated, till the Christmas following, I enjoyed during the whole year the fociety of my aunt, without much consciousness of her impending fate. I feel a melancholy pleasure in repeating my obligations to that excellent woman, Mrs. Catherine Porten, the true mother of my mind and health. Her natural good sense was improved by the perusal of the best books in the English language; and if her reafon was fometimes clouded by prejudice, her sentiments were never disguised by hypocrisy or affective tion. Her indulgent tenderness, the franknefs of her temper, and my innate rifing curiolity, foon removed all distance between us: like friends of an equal age, we freely conversed on every topic, familist or abstruse; and it was her delight and reward to observe the sitt shoots of my young ideas. and langour were often foothed by the voice of instruction and amuse ment; and to her kind leffons I afcribe my early and invincible love of reading, which I would not exchange for the treasures of India I should perhaps be assonished, were it possible to ascertain the date, it which a favourite tale was engraved, by frequent repetition, in my memory: the Cavern of the Winds; the Palace of Felicity; and the fital moment, at the end of three. months or centuries, when prince Adolphus is overtaken by Time, who had worn out to many pair of Before I let wings in the pursuit. Kingston school I was well bequainted with Pope's Homer and the Arabian Nights Entertainments, two books which will always please by the moving picture of human manners and specious miracles: not was I then capable of discerning that Pope's translation is a portrait endowed with every merit, excepting that of likeness to the original The veries of Pope accustomed my ear to the found of poetic harmony: in the death of Hector, and the shipwreck of Ulysses, I tasted the new emotions of terror and pity; and feriously disputed with my sutt on the vices and virtues of the heroes of the Trojan war. From Pope's Homer to Dryden's Virgil in easy transition; but I know 10w, from some fault in the r, the translator, or 'the reader, ous Æneas did not so forcibly on my imagination; and I d more pleasure from Ovid's norpholes, especially in the Phaëton, and the speeches of and Ulysses. My grandfaflight unlocked the door of a ble library; and I turned over English pages of poetry and ice, of history and travels. e a title attracted my eye, ut fear or awe I fnatched the e from the shelf; and Mrs. 1, who indulged herself in and religious speculations, iore prone to encourage than eck a curiofity above the th of a boy. This year , the twelfth of my age, I note as the most propitious to wth of my intellectual stature. e relics of my grandfather's ne afforded a bare annuity for wn maintenance; and his iter, my worthy aunt, who ready passed her fortieth year, ft destitute. Her noble spirit :d a life of obligation and dence; and after revolving feschemes, she preferred the le industry of keeping a boardouse for Westminster-school, : she laboriously earned a stence for her old age. ar opportunity of blending lvantages of private and publucation decided my father. the Chistmas holidays in Ja-1749, I accompanied Mrs. 1 to her new house in Coltreet; and was immediately d in the school, of which Dr. Nicoll was at that time headr. At first I was alone: but int's resolution was praised; her character was esteemed; her friends were numerous and active: in the course of some years she became the mother of forty or fifty boys, for the most part of family and fortune; and as her primitive habitation was too narrow, the built and occupied a spacious manfion in Dean's yard. I shall always be ready to join in the comthat our public opinion, schools, which have produced so many eminent characters, are the best adapted to the genius and constitution of the English people. A boy of spirit may acquire a previous and practical experience of the world; and his playfellows may be the future friends of his heart or his interest. In a free intercourse with his equals, the habits of truth, fortitude, and prudence will insenfibly be matured. Birth and riches are measured by the standard of personal merit; and the mimic scene of a rebellion has displayed, in their true colours, the ministers and patriots of the rifing generation. Our feminaries of learning do not exactly correspond with the precept of a Spartan king, 'that the child include the instructed in the arts, which will be useful to the man; fince a finished scholar may emerge from the head of Westminster or Eton, in total ignorance of the bufiness and conversation of English gentlemen in the latter end of the eighteenth century. But these schools may assume the merit of teaching all that they pretend to teach, the Latin and Greek languages: they deposit in the hands of a disciple the keys of two valuable chests; nor can he complain, if they are afterwards lost or neglected by his own fault. The necessity of leading in equal ranks so many unequal powers of capacity and application, will prolong to eight or ten years the juvenile studies, which might be dispatched in half that time by the skilful master of a fingle pupil. Yet even the repetition of exercise and discipline contributes to fix in a vacant mind the verbal science of grammar and profody: and the private or voluntary student, who possesses the sense and spirit of the classics, may offend, by a falle quantity, the fcrupulous ear of a well-flogged critic. For myfelf, I must be content with a very small share of the civil and literary fruits of a public school. In the space of two years (1749, 1750), interrupted by danger and debility, I painfully climbed into the third form; and my riper age was left to acquire the beauties of the Latin, and the rudiments of the Instead of auda-Greek tongue. ciously mingling in the sports, the quarrels, and the connections of our little world, I was still cherished at home under the maternal wing of my aunt; and my removal from Westminster long preceded the approach of manhood.

324] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

The violence and variety of my complaints, which had excused my frequent abience from Westmintler-school, at length engaged Mrs. Porten, with the advice of physicians, to conduct me to Bath: at the end of the Michaelmas vacation (1750) the quitted me with reluctance, and I remained feveral months under the care of a trufty maid-servant. A strange nervous affection, which alternately contracted my legs, and produced, without any visible symptoms, the most excruciating pain, was inefsectually opposed by the various methods of bathing and pumping.

From Bath I was 'transported to Winchester, to the house of a phyfician; and after the failure of his medical ikill, we had again recousts to the virtues of the Bath waters. During the intervals of these fits, I moved with my father to Buritia and Putney; and a fhort unfus cessful trial was attempted to renew my attendance Westmin at But my infirmities could not be reconciled with the hour and discipline of a public seminary. and inftead of a domestic tutur who might have watched the the vourable moments, and gently me vanced the progress of my least ing, my father was too eafily content with fuch occasional teacher, as the different places of my resi dence could supply. I was now forced, and feldom was I perfut ed, to admit these lessons: yet I read with a clergymen at Bath form odes of Horace, and several episodes of Virgil, which gave me an imperfect and transient enjoyment of the It might now be Latin poets. prehended that I should continue for life an illiterate cripple; but, approached my fixteenth year, Nature displayed in my favour het mysterious energies: my constitution was fortified and fixed; and my diforders, instead of growing with my growth and strengthening with my strength, most wonderfully vanished. I have never pofletted or abused the insolence of health: but fince that time few persons have been more exemptfrom real or imaginary ills; and, till I am admonished by the gout, the reader will no more be troubled with the history of my bodily complaints. My unexpected recovery. again encouraged the hope of my education; and I was placed at Ether.

, in Surry, in the house of the end Mr. Philip Francis, in a int spot, which promised to the various benefits of air, ile, and study (January 1752). translator of Horace might taught me to relith the Latin had not my friends difcoin a few weeks, that he pre-I the pleasures of London, to istruction of his pupils. r's perplexity at this time, rathan his prudence, was urged ibrace a fingular and desperate Without preparation or he carried me to Oxford:

was matriculated in the uniy as a gentlemen commoner of lalen college, before I had aclished the fifteenth year of my April 3, 1752)

e curiofity, which had been nted in my infant mind, was live and active; but my reavas not sufficiently informed identiand the value, or to lather loss of three precious the loss, of three precious from my entrance at Wester to my admission at Oxford. ad of repining at my long and ent confinement to the chamr the couch, I fecretly rejoiced ofe infirmities, which delivere from the exercises of the ol, and the fociety of my As often as I was toleraxempt from danger and pain, ng, free defultory reading, was mployment and comfort of my ry hours. At Westminster, unt fought only to amuse and ge me; in my stations at Bath Winchester, at Buriton and sy, a fulfe compassion respected ufferings; and I was allowed out controul or advice, to grathe wanderings of an unripe

My indifcriminate appetite

fubfided by degrees in the bifforic line: and fince philosophy has exploded all innate ideas and natural propensities, I must ascribe this choice to the assiduous perusal of the Universal History, as the octavo volumes fuccessively appeared. This unequal work, and a treatife of Hearne, the Dudor historicus, referred and introduced me to the Greek and Roman historians, to as many at least as were accessible to an Englith reader. All that I could find were greedily devouted, from Littlebury's lame Herodotus, and Spelman's valuable Xenophon, to the pompous folios of Gordon's Tacitus, and a ragged Procopius of the beginning of the last century. The cheap acquisition of so much knowledge confirmed my dislike to the study of languages; and I argued with Mrs. Porten, that, were I mailer of Greek and Latin, I must interpret to myself in English the thoughts of the original, and that fuch extemporary versions must be inferior to the elaborate translations of professed scholars; a filly fophism, which could not easily be confuted by a person ignorant of any other language than her own. From the ancient I leaped to the modern world: many crude lumps of Speed, Rapin, Mezeray, Davila, Machiavel, Father Paul, Bower, &c. I devoured like so many novels; and I swallowed with the same voracious appetite the descriptions of India and China, of Mexico and Peru.

My first introduction to the historic scenes, which have since engaged so many years of my life must be ascribed to an accident. In the summer of 1751, I accompanied my father on a visit to Mr. Hoare's in Wiltshire; but I was less delighted with the beauties of Stourhead, than with discovering in the library a common book, the Continution of Echard's Roman History, which is indeed executed with more skill and taste than the previous work. To me the reigns of the successors of Constantine were absolutely new; and I was immersed in the passage of the Goths over the Danube, when the fummons of the dinner-bell reluctantly dragged me from my intellectual feath. This transient glance ferved rather to irritate than to appeale my curiofity; and as foon as I returned to Bath I procured the second and third volumes of Howel's History of the World, which exhibit the Byzantine period on a larger scale. Mahomet and his Saracens soons fixed my attention; and some instinct of criticism directed me to the genuine fources. Simon Ockley, an original in every iense, first opened my eyes; and I was led from one book to another, till I had ranged round the circle of oriental history. Before I was fixteen, I had exhausted all that could be learned in English of the Arabs and Persians, the Tartars and Turks; and the fame ardour urged me to guess at the French of D'Herbelot, and to construe the barbarous Latin of Pocock's Abulfaragious. Such vague and multifarious reading could not teach me to think, to write, or to act; and the only principle, that darted a ray of light into the indigested chaos, was an early and rational application to the order of time and place. The maps of Cellarius and Wells imprinted in my mind the picture of ancient geography: from Stranchius I imbibed the elements of chronology: the Tables of Helvicus and Anderfon, the Annals of Usher and Prideaux, distinguished the connection of events, and engraved the multitude of names and dates in a clear and indelible feries. But in the discussion of the first ages I overleaped the bounds of modefty and In my childish balance I prefumed to weigh the systems of Scaliger and Petavius, of Martham and Newton, which I could felden fludy in the originals; and my fleep has been disturbed by the difficulty of reconciling the Septuagint with the Hebrew computation. rived at Oxford with a flock of erudition, that might have puzzled a doctor, and a degree of ignorance, of which a school-boy would have been ashamed.

To the university of Oxford I. acknowledge no obligation; and the will as cheerfully renounce me for a fon, as I am willing to disclaim her for a mother. I spent fourted months at Magdalen College; they proved the fourteen months the most idle and unprofitable of my. whole life: the reader will pronounce between the school-and the scholar; but I cannot affect to believe that Nature had disqualified me for all literary pursuits. The specious and ready excuse of my tender age, imperfect preparation, and hafty departure, may doubtles be alleged; nor do I wish to defraud fuch excuses of their proper weight. Yet in my fixteenth year I was not devoid of capacity or application; even my childish reading had displayed an early though blind prepentity for books; and the shallow flood might have been taught to flow in a deep channel and a clear fiream. In the discipline of a wellconstituted academy, under the guidance of skilful and vigilant profeffors, translations to originals, from atin to the Greek classics, from languages to living science; ours would have been occuby useful and agreeable stuhe wanderings of fancy would been restrained, and I should escaped the temptations of s, which finally precipitated parture from Oxford.

The

e first tutor into whose hands refigued appears to have one of the best of the tribe: Waldegrave was a learned ious man, of a mild dispostrict morals, and abstemife, who seldom mingled in olitics or the jollity of the But his knowledge of the was confined to the univerhis learning was of the last, than of the present age; his r was indolent; his faculties, were not of the first rate, een relaxed by the climate, was fatisfied, like his fellows, he flight and superficial dis-: of an important truft. s my tutor had founded the ciency of his disciple in ·learning, he proposed that uld read every morning from eleven the comedies of Te-

The sum of my improvein the university of Oxford ined to three or four Latin and even the study of an t classic, which might have lustrated by a comparison
ient and modern theatres, luced to a dry and literal ination of the author's text.
the first weeks I constantly d these lessons in my tuom; but as they appeared devoid of profit and pleawas once tempted to try the experiment of a formal apology. The apology was accepted with a smile. I repeated the offence with less ceremony; the excuse was admitted with the same indulgence: the flightest motive of laziness or indisposition, the most trisling avocation at home or abroad, was allowed as a worthy impediment; nor did my tutor appear conscious of my absence or neglect. Had the hour of lecture been constantly filled, a fingle hour was a small portion of my academic leisure. No plan of study was recommended for my use; no exercises were prescribed for his inspection; and, at the most precious season of youth, whole days and weeks were fuffered to elapse without labour or amulement, without advice or account. I should have listened to the voice of reason and of my tutor; his mild behaviour had gained my confidence. I preferred his fociety to that of the younger students; and in our evening walks to the top of Heddington-hill, we freely conversed on a variety of subjects. Since the days of Pocock and Hyde, oriental learning has always been the pride of Oxford, and I once expressed an inclination to study Arabic. His prudence discouraged this childish fancy; but he neglected the fair occasion of directing the ardour of a curious mind. During my absence in the summer vacation, Dr. Waldegrave accepted a college living at Washington in Suffex, and on my return home I no longer found him at Oxford. From that time I have lost fight of my first tutor; but at the end of thirty years (1781) he was stillalive; and the practice of exercise and temperance had entitled him to a healthy old age.

¥ 4

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796. 328]

The long recess between the Trinity and Michaelmas terms empties the colleges of Oxford. as well as the courts of Westminster. I spent at my father's house at Buriton in Hampthire, the two months of August and September. It is whimfical enough, that as foon as I left Magdalen College, my tafte for books began to revive; but it was the same blind and boyish taste for the pursuit of exotic history. Unprovided with original learning, unformed in the habits of thinking, unikilled in the arts of composition, I refolved—to write a book. title of this first essay, The Age of Sefostris, was perhaps suggested by Voltaire's Age of Lewis XIV. which was new and popular; but my fole object was to investigate the probable date of the life and reign of the conqueror of Asia. was then enamoured of fir John Marsham's Canon Chronicus; an elaborate work, of whose merits and defects I was not yet qualified to judge. According to his specious, though narrow plan, I fettled my hero about the time of Solomon, in the tenth century before the Christian æra. It was therefore incumbent on me, unless I would adopt fir Isaac Newton's thorter chronology, to remove a formidable objection; and my folution, for a youth of fifteen, is not devoid of ingenuity. In his version of the sacred books, Manetho the high priest has identified Sethofis, or Sefostris, with the elder brother of Danaus, who landed in Greece, according to the Parian Marble, fisteen hundred and ten years before Christ. But in my supposition the high priest is guilty behaviour of his disciple, I was of a voluntary error; flattery is the never summoned to attend even prolific parent of falsehood. Ma- the ceremony of a lecture; and, netho's History of Egypt is dealcated to Ptolemy Philadelphus, who derived a fabulous or illegitimate pedigree from the Macedonist, kings of the race of Hercules. Denaus is the ancestor of Hercules; and after the failure of the elder branch, his descendants, the Ptolemies, are the fole representatives of the royal family, and may claim by inheritance the kingdom which they hold by conquest. Such were my juvenile discoveries; at a riper age, I no longer prefume to connect the Greek, the Jewish, and the Egyptian autiquities, which are lost in a distant cloud. Nor is this the only instance, in which the belief and knowledge of the child are for perseded by the more rational ignorance of the man. During my stay at Buriton, my infant-labour was diligently profecuted, without much interruption from company or country diversions; and I already. heard the music of public applaus. The discovery of my own weakness was the first symptom of taste. On my return, to Oxford, the age of Selostris was wisely relinquished; but the imperfect sheets remained twenty years at the bottom of & drawer, till, in a general clearance of papers, (November 1772) they were committed to the flames.

After the departure of Dr. Waldegrave, I was transferred with his other pupils, to his academical heir, whose literary character did not command the respect of. the college, Dr.  well remembered that he had a falary to receive, and only forgot that he had a duty to perform. Instead of guiding the studies, and watching over the.

excepting.

excepting one voluntary visit to his rooms, during the eight months of his titular office, the tutor and pupil lived in the same college as The want drangers to each other. of experience, of advice, and of occupation, foon betrayed me into some impropriety of conduct, illchosen company, late hours, and inconfiderate expence. My growing debts might be fecret; but my frequent absence was visible and scandalous; and a tour to Bath, a visit into Buckinghamshire, and four excursions to London in the fame winter, were costly and dangerous frolics. They were, indeed, without a meaning, as without an excuse. The irksomeness of a cloistered life repeatedly tempted me to wander: but my chief pleasure was that of travelling; and I was too young and bathful to enjoy, like a manly Oxonian in town, the pleasures of In all these excursions I eloped from Oxford; I returned to college; in a few days I eloped again, as if I had been an independent stranger in a hired lodging, without once hearing the voice of admonition, without once feeling the hand of control. Yet my time was loft, my expences were multiplied, my behaviour abroad was unknown; folly as well as vice should have awakened the attention of my super ors, and my tender years would have justified a more than ordinary degree of refiraint and discipline.

It might at least be expected, that an ecclesiastical school should inculcate the orthodox principles of religion. But our venerable mother had contrived to unite the opposite extremes of bigotry and indifference; an heretic, or unbeliever, was a monster in her eyes; but she was always, or often, or fometimes, remiss in the spiritual education of her own children. According to the statutes of the university, every student, before he is matriculated, must subscribe his aftent to the thirty-nine articles of the church of England, which are figured by more than read, and read by more than My insufficient age believe them. excused me, however, from the immediate performance of this legal ceremony; and the vice chancellor directed me to return, as soon as I inould have accomplished my fifteenth year; recommending me, in the mean while, to the instruction of my college. My college forgot to instruct; I forgot to return, and was myself forgotten by the first magistrate of the university. Without a fingle lecture, either public or private, either christian or protestant, without any academical fubscription, without any episcopal confirmation, I was left by the dim light of my catechifm to grope my way to the chapel and communion-table, where I was admitted, without a question, how far, or by what means, I might be qualified to receive the facrament. Such almost incredible neglect was productive of the worst mischiefs. From my childhood I had been fond of religious disputation; my poor aunt has been often puzzled by the mysteries which she strove to believe; nor had the elastic fpring been totally broken by the weight of the atmosphere of Oxford. The blind activity of idleness urged me to advance without armour into the dangerous mazes of controverly; and at the age of fixteen, I bewildered mytelf in the errors of the church of Rome.

The progress of my conversion may tend to illustrate, at least, the history of my own mind. It was not long fince Dr. Middleton's free inquiry had founded an alarm in the theological world: much ink and much gali had been spilt in the defence of the primitive miracles; and the two dullest of their champions were crowned with academic honours by the university of Ox-The name of Middleton was unpopular; and his profcription very naturally led me to peruse his writings, and those of his antagonists. His bold criticism, which approaches the precipice of infidelity, produced on my mind a fingular effect; and had I persevered in the communion of Rome, I should now apply to my own fortune the prediction of the Sybil, — Via prima salutis, Quod minime reris, Graice padetur ab urbe.

The elegance of flyle and freedom of argument were repelled by a shield of prejudice. I still revered the character, or rather the names, of the faints and fathers whom Dr. Middleton exposes; nor could he destroy my implicit belief, that the gift of miraculous powers was continued in the church, during the first four or five centuries of christianity. But I was unable to refift the weight of historical evidence that within the same period most of the leading doctrines of popery were already introduced in theory and practice: nor was my conclufion abfurd, that miracles are the test of truth, and that the church must be orthodox and pure, which was so often approved by the visible interpolition of the Deity. The marvellous tales which are so boldly attested by the Bafils and Chryfollows, the Austins and Jeroms, compelled me to embrace the fuperior merits of celibacy, the institution of the monastic life, the used the fign of the cross, of boly ell, and even of images, the invocation of faints, the worship of relics, the rudiments of purgatory in prayers for the dead, and the tremendous mystery of the sacrifice of the body and blood of Christ, which infenfibly swelled into the prodigy of transubstantiation. In these dispofitions, and already more than half a convert, I formed an unlucky intimacy with a young gentleman of ' our college, whose name I shall . spare. With a character less resolute, Mr. * had imbibed thefame religious opinions: and fome Popish books, I know not through what channel, were conveyed into his possession. I read, I applauded, I believed: the English translations of two famous works of Boffuct bithop of Meaux, the Exposition of the Catholic Doctrine, and the History of the Protestant Variations, atchieved my conversion, and I furely fell by a noble hand.

No fooner had I settled my new religion than I resolved to profest mytelf a catholic. Youth is sincere and impetuous; and a momentary glow of enthusiasm had raised me above all temporal considerations.

In my last excursion to London, I addressed myself to Mr. Lewis, a Roman catholic bookseller in Russel-street, Covent Garden, who recommended me to a priest, of whose name and order I am at present ignorant. In our first interview he soon discovered that persuasion was needless. After sounding the motives and merits of my conversion;

fion, he consented to admit to the pale of the church; : his feet, on the 8th of June, I folemnly, though privately, d the errors of herefy. ion of an English youth of and fortune was an act of as danger as glory; but he y overlooked the danger, of I was not then fufficiently ind. "Where a person is reed to the see of Rome, or res others to be reconciled, ffence (fays Blackstone) ats to high treason." And if umanity of the age would nt the execution of this fanry statute, there were other of a less odious cast, which mned the priest to perpetual forment, and transferred the yte's estate to his nearest rela-

An elaborate controversal e, approved by my director, ddressed to my father, anced and justified the step which taken. My father was neither at nor a philosopher; but his afon deplored the loss of an only and his good sense was assod at my strange departure from eligion of my country. In the ally of his passion he divulged cret which prudence might suppressed, and the gates of dalen College were for ever against my return.

iter carrying me to Putney, to soule of his friend Mr. Maly whose philosophy I was rascandalized than reclaimed, it necessary for my father to form
w plan of education, and to desome method which, if possimight effect the cure of my spil malady. After much debate is determined, from the adand personal experience of Mr.

Eliot (now lord Eliot) to fix me, during some years, at Lausanne in Switzerland. Mr. Frey, a Swiss gentleman of Basil undertook the conduct of the journey: we left London the 19th of June, crossed the sea from Dover to Calais, travelled post through several provinces of France, by the direct road of St Quentin, Rheims, Langres, and Besancon, and arrived the 30th of June at Lausanne, where I was immediately settled under the roof and tuition of Mr., Pavilliard, a Calvinist minister.

The first marks of my father's displeasure rather assonished than afflicted me: when he threatened to banish, and disown, and disinherit a rebellious son, I cherished a fecret hope that he would not be able or willing to effect his menaces; and the pride of conscience encouraged me to sustain the honourable and important part which I was now acting. My spirits were raised and kept alive by the rapid motion of my journey, the new and various icenes of the continent, and the civility of Mr. Frey, a man of sense, who was not ignorant of books or the world. But after he had refigned me into Pavilliard's hands, and I was fixed in my new habitation, I had leifure to contemplate the strange and melancholy prospect before me. My first complaint arose from my ignorance of the language. In my childhood I had once studied the French grammar, and I could imperfectly understand the easy prose of a familiar subject. But when I was thus suddenly cast on a foreign land, I found myself deprived of the use of speech and of hearing; and, during some weeks incapable not only of enjoying the pleasures of conversation, but even of alking or anfwering a question in the common intercourse of life. To a homebred Englishman every object, every custom was offensive; but the native of any country might have been disgusted with the general aspect of his lodging and entertain-I had now exchanged my elegant apartment in Magdalen College, for a narrow, gloomy fireet, the most unfrequented of an unhandsome town, for an old inconvenient house, and for a small chamber ill-contrived and ill-furnished, which, on the approach of winter, instead of a companionable fire, must be warmed by the dull invisible heat of a stove. From a man I was again degraded to the dependance of a school-boy. Pavilliard managed my expences, which had been reduced to a diminutive state: I received a small monthly allowance for my pocketmoney; and helpleis, and ankward as I have ever been, I no longer enjoyed the indiffentable comfort of a fervant. My condition feemed -as destitute of hope, as it was devoid of pleasure; I was separated for an indefinite, which appeared an infinite term from my native country; and I had loft all connection with my catholic friends. I have fince reflected with surprise, that as the Romith clergy of every part of Europe maintain a close correspondence with each other, they never attempted, by letters or messages, to rescue me from the hands of the heretics, or at least to confirm my zeal and constancy in the profession of the faith. was my first introduction to Laufanne; a place where I spent nearly five years with pleasure and profit, which I afterwards revisited without compultion, and which I have finally selected as the most grateful retreat for the decline of my life.

332] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

But it is the peculiar felicity of youth that the most unpleasing objects and events feldom make a deep or lasting impression; it forgets the past, enjoys the present, and anticipates the future. At the flexible age of fixteen I foon learned to endure, and gradually to adopt, the new forms of arbitrary manners: the real hardships of my situation i were alienated by time. Had I been fent abroad in a more splendid ityle, such as the fortune and bounty of my father might have ... fupplied, I might have returned home with the fame stock of language and science, which our countrymen usually import from the continent. An exile and a prisoner as I was, their example betrayed me into fome irregularities of wine, of play, and of idle excursions; but I foon feltathe impossibility of afforciating with them on equal terms; and after the departure of my first acquaintance, I held a cold and civil correspondence with their suc-This fectuation from English fociety was attended with the most solid benefits. In the Pays de Vaud, the French language is used with less impersection than in. most of the distant provinces of France: in Pavilliard's family, necessity compelled me to lister and to speak; and if I was at first disheartened by the apparent flowness, in a few months I was after nished by the rapidity of my My pronunciation was progress. formed by the conflant repetition of the same sounds; the variety of words and idioms, the rules of and distinctions ... of grammar, genders, were impressed in my memory: case and freedom were obtained.

obtained by practice; correctness and elegance by labour; and before I was recalled home, French, in which I fpontaneously thought, was more familiar than English to my ear, my tongue, and my pen. The first effect of this opening knowledge was the revival of my love of reading, which had been chilled at Oxford; and I foon turned over, without much choice, almost all the French books in my tutor's library. Even these amusements were productive of real advantage: my talte and judgment were now somewhat riper. I was introduced to a new mode of style and literature: by the compariton of manners and opinions, my views were enlarged, my prejudices were corrected, and a copious voluntary abitract of the Histoire de l'Eglise et de l'Empire by le Sueur, may be placed in a middle line between my childish and my manly studies. As soon as I was able to converse with the natives, I began to feel some satisfaction in their company; my awkward timidity was polithed and emboldened; and I frequented, for the first time, affemblies of men and wo-The acquaintance of the Pavilliards prepared me by degrees for more elegant fociety. I was received with kindness and indulgence in the best families of Laufanne; and it was in one of these that I formed an intimate and lasting connection with Mr. Deyverdun, a young man of an amiable temper and excellent understand. ing. In the arts of fencing and dancing, small indeed was my proficiency; and some months were idly wasted in the riding-school. My unfitness to bodily exercise re- man, which contributed the most conciled me to a fedentary life, and effectually to my education, has trymen, never contributed to the pleasures of my youth.

My obligations to the lessons of Mr. Pavilliard, gratitude will not fuffer me to forget: he was endowed with a clear head and a warm beart; his innate benevolence had affuaged the spirit of the church; he was rational, because he was moderate: in the course of his studies he had acquired a just though funerficial knowledge of most branches of literature; by long practice, he was skilled in the arts of teaching; and he laboured with alliduous patience to know the character, gain the affection, and open the mind of his English pupil. As foon as we began to understand each tother, he gently led me, from a blind and undiftinguishing love of reading, into the path of instruction. I consented with pleafure that a portion of the morninghours should be consecrated to a plan of modern history and geography, and to the critical perusal of the French and Latin classics; and at each step I felt myself invigorated by the habits of application and method. His prudence repressed and dissembled some youthful sallies; and as soon as I was confirmed in the habits of industry and temperance he gave the reins into my own hands. His favourable report of my behaviour and progress gradually obtained some latitude of action and expence; and he withed to alleviate the hardships of my lodging and entertainment. The principles of philosophy were affociated with the examples of talte; and by a fingular chance, the book, as well as the the horse, the favourite of my coun- a stronger claim on my gratitude than on my admiration. Mr. De Crousaz, the adversary of Bayle and Pope is not dislinguished by lively fancy or profound reflection; and even in his own country, at the end of a few years, his name and writings are almost obliterated. But his philosophy had been formed in the school of Locke, his divinity in that of Limborch and Le-Clerc; in a long and laborious life, several generations of pupils were taught to think, and even to write; his lessons rescued the academy of Lausanne from Calvinistic prejudice; and he had the rare merit of diffusing a more liberal spirit among the clergy and people of the Pays de Vaud. His fystem of logic, which in the last editions has swelled to fix tedious and prolix volumes, may be praised as a clear and methodical abridgement of the art of reasoning, from our simple ideas to the most complex operations of the human understanding. This system I studied, and meditated, and abstracted, till I have obtained the free command of an universal instrument, which I soon prefumed to exercise on my catholic opinions. Pavilliard was not unmindful that his first task, his most important duty, was to reclaim me from the errors of popery. The intermixture of fects has rendered the Swifs clergy acute and learned on the topics of controverfy; and I have some of his letters in which he celebrates the dexterity of his attack, and my gradual concessions, after a firm and wellmanaged defence. I was willing, and I am now willing, to allow him a handsome share of the honour of my conversion: yet I must observe, that it was principally effected by my private reflections; and I still remember my solitary transport at the discovery of a philosophical argument against the doctrine of transubstantiation; that the text of scripture, which seems to inculcate the real presence is attested only by a fingle fenfe—our fight; while the real presence itself is disproved by three of our fenses—the fight, the touch, and the taste. The various articles of the Romish creed disppeared like a dream; and after $ full conviction, on Christmas-day 1754, I received the factament in the church of Lausanne. here that I suspended my religious inquiries, acquiescing with implicit belief in the tenets and mysteries, which are adopted by the ganeral consent of catholics and protestants.

Such, from my arrival at Lansanne, during the first eighteen of twenty months (July 1753-March 1755), were my useful studies, the foundation of all my future improvements. But every man who rifes above the common level has received two educations; the first from his teachers; the fecond, more personal and important, from himfelf. He will not, like the fanse tics of the last age, define the moment of grace; but he cannot forget the æra of his life, in which his. mind has expanded to its proper form and dimensions. My worthy tutor had the good sense and modesty to discern how far he could be useful. As soon as he felt that I advanced beyond his speed and measure, he wisely lest me to my genius; and the hours of leffon. were foon lost in the voluntary labour of the whole morning, and fometimes of the whole day. defire of prolonging my time, gradually confirmed the falutary habit. ly rifing; to which I have radhered, with some regard sons and situations; but it is for my eyes and my health, iv temperate ardour has never feduced to trespass on the of the night. During the iree years of my residence at nne, I may assume the merit ious and folid application; am tempted to distinguish the ght months of the year 1755, period of the most extraorr diligence and rapid progress. y French and Latin transla-I adopted an excellent mewhich, from my own fuc-I would recommend to the I chose cion of students. classic writer, such as Cicero eriot, and most approved for r and elegance of flyle. ated, for instance, an epistle cero into French; and after ring it aside, till the words ohrases were obliterated from nemory, I re-translated my ch into such Latin as I could and then compared each fenof my imperfect version, with ale, the grace, the propriety of A fimilar excoman orator. ient was made on several pages e Revolutions of Vertot; I d them into Latin, returned after a sufficient interval into wn French, and again scrutithe resemblance and dislimiof the copy and the original. egrees I was less ashamed, by es I was more fatisfied with If; and I persevered in the ice of these double transla-, which filled several books, had acquired the knowledge th idioms, and the command aft of a correct style. I exercise of writing was accompanied and succeeded by the more pleasing occupation of reading the best authors. The perusal of the Roman classics was at once my exercise and reward. Dr. Middleton's History, which I then appreciated above its true value, naturally directed me to the writings of Cicero. The most perfect editions, that of Olivet, which may adorn the shelves of the rich, that of Ernetti, which should lie on the table of the learned, were not in For the familiar emy power. pistles I used the text and English commentary of bishop Ross: but my general edition was that of Verbergius, published at Amsterdam in two large volumes in folio, with an indifferent choice of various notes. I read with application and pleasure, all the epistles, all the orations, and the most important treatises of rhetoric and philosophy; and as I read, I applauded the observation of Quintillian, that every student may judge of his own proficiency, by the fatisfaction which he receives from the Roman orator. I tasted the beauties of language, I breathed the spirit of freedom, and I imbibed from his precepts and exam. ples the public and private sense of a man. Cicero in Latin, and Xenophon in Greek, are indeed the two ancients whom I would first propose to a liberal scholar; not only for the merit of their style and fentiments, but for the admirable leffons which may be applied almost to every situation of public and private life. Cicero's Epistles may in particular afford the models of every form of correspondence, from the careless essusions of tenderness and friendship, to the wellguarded declaration of discreet and dignified resentment. After finishing this great author, a library of eloquence and reason, I formed a more extensive plan of reviewing the Latin classics, under the four divisions of, 1. historians, 2. poets, 3. orators, and 4 philosophers, in a chronological feries, from the days of Plautos and Sallust, to the decline of the language and empire of Rome; and this plan, in the last twenty-seven mouths of my residence at Lausanne (January, 1756) -April, 1758), I nearly accom-Nor was this review, plished. however rapid, either hafly or fuperficial. I indulged myself in a second and even a third perusal of Terence, Virgil, Horace, Tacitus, &c. and studied to imbibe the sense and spirit most congenial to my own. I never suffered a difficult or corrupt passage to escape, till I had viewed it in every light of which it was susceptible: though often disappointed, I always confulted the most learned or ingenious commentators, Torrentius and Dacier on Horace, Catrou and Servius on Virgil, Lipsius on Tacitus, Mezeriac on Ovid, &c. and in the ardour of my enquiries, I embraced a large circle of historical and cri-My abstracts of tical erudition. each book were made in the French language: my observations often branched into particular essays; and I can still read, without contempt, a dissertation of eight folio pages on eight lines (287—294) of the fourth Georgic of Virgil. Deyverdun, my friend, whose name will be frequently repeated, had joined with equal zeal, though not with equal perseverance, in the tame undertaking. To him every thought, every composition, was instantly communicated; with him I enjoyed the benefits of a free conversation on the topics of our common studies.

But it is scarcely possible for a mind endowed with any active curiosity to be long conversant with the Latin classics, without aspiring to know the Greek originals, whom they celebrate as their masters, and of whom they so warmly recommend the study and imitation:

--- Vos exemplaria Graca

Nocturnâ versate manu, versate diurul, It was now that I regretted the early years which had been wasted in sickness or idleness, or mere idle reading; that I condemned the perverie method of our schoolmasters, who, by first teach ing the mother language, might defeend with fo much eafe and parspiculty to the origin and etymology of a derivative idiom. In the nineteenth year of my age I determined to supply this defect; and the lessons of Pavilliard again contributed to smooth the entrance of the way, the Greek alphabet, the grammar, and the pronunciation according to the French accept At my earnest request we presumes to open the Iliad; and I had the pleafure of beholding, darkly and through a glass, the true image of Homer, whom I had long fince admired in an Englith dreis. After my tutor had left me to myself, I worked my way through about half the Iliad, and afterwards interpreted alone a large portion of Xenophon and Hero-But my ardour, destitute of aid and emulation, was gradually cooled, and, from the barren tack of searching words in a lexicon, I withdrew to the free and familist conversation of Virgil and Tacitus Yet in my residence at Lausanne I had laid a solid foundation, which enabled!

ed me, in a more propitious i, to profecute the study of an literature.

m a blind idea of the uses, of fuch abstract science, my had been defirous, and even ig, that I should devote some o the mathematics; nor could le to comply with fo reasonwish. During two winters ided the private lectures of eur de Traytorrens, who exd the elements of algebra and try, as far as the conic fecof the marquis de l'Hôpital, peared fatisfied with my die and improvement. ildish propensity for numbers alculations was totally ex-I was content to receive the impression of my prosessor's s, without any active exermy own powers. As foon inderstood the principles, I aished for ever the pursuit of thematics; nor can I lament lefisted, before my mind was ed by the habit of rigid deation, so destructive of theeelings of moral evidence, must, however, determine tions and opinions of our I listened with more pleathe propolal of studying the nature and nations, which ight in the academy of Lauy Mr. Vicat, a professor of arning and reputation. But, of attending his public or course, I preferred in my the lessons of his masters, rown reason. Without besusted by Grotius or Puffen-Audied in their writings the of a man, the rights of a cithe theory of justice (it is, theory), and the laws of r war, which have had fome XXXVIII. · influence on the practice of modern Europe. My fatigues were alleviated by the good sense of their commentator Barbeyrac. Locke's Treatife of Government instructed. me in the knowledge of whig principles, which are rather founded in reason than experience; but my delight was in the frequent perusal of Montesquieu, whose energy of style, and boldness of hypothesis, were powerful to awaken and stimulate the genius of the age. The logic of de Crousaz had prepared me to engage with his master Locke, and his antagonist Bayle; of whom the former may be used as a bridle, and the latter applied as a spur, to the curiofity of a young philoso-According to the nature of their respective works, the schools of argument and objection, I carefully went through the Eslay on Human Understanding, and occafionally confulted the most interesting articles of the Philosophic Dictionary. In the infancy of my reason I turned over, as an idle amusement, the most serious and important treatife: in its maturity, the most trifling performance could not exercise my taste or judgment; and more than once I have been led by. a novel into a deep and instructive train of thinking. But I cannot forbear to mention three particular books, fince they may have remotely contributed to form the historian of the Roman empire. From the Provincial Letters of Pascal, which almost every year I have perused with new pleasure, I learned to manage the weapon of grave and temperate irony, even on subjects of ecclesiastical solemnity. 2. The Life of Julian, by the Abbe de la Bleterie, sirst introduced me to the man and the times; and I should should be glad to recover my first essay on the truth of the miracle which stopped the re-building of the Temple of Jerusalem. 3. In Giannone's Civil History of Naples, I observed with a critical eye the progress and abuse of sacerdotal power, and the revolutions of Italy in the darker ages. This various reading, which I now conducted with discretion, was digested, according to the precept and model of Mr. Locke, into a large common-place book; a practice, however, which I do not strenuoufly recommend. The action of the pen will doubtless imprint an idea on the mind as well as on the paper: but I much question whether the benefits of this laborious method are adequate to the waste of time; and I must agree with Dr. Johnson, (Idler, No. 74,) 'that what is twice read, is commonly better remembered, than what is transcribed."

Account of Solomon Geffner, Author of the Death of Abel, &c.

THIS very pleasing writer was born at Zurich, on the 1st of April, In his youth, little expectations could be formed of him, as he then displayed none of the talents for which he was afterwards distinguished. His parents saw nothing to afford them much hope, though Simlar, a man of some learning, assured his father, that the boy had talents which, though now hid, would sooner or later shew themfelves, and elevate him far above his school-fellows. As he had made so little progress at Zurich, he was fent to Berg, and put under the care of a clergyman, where retirement and the picturesque scenery around him laid the foundation for the change of his character. After a two year's refidence at Berg, he returned home to his fact ther, who was a bookfeller at Zur rich, and whose shop was reserved. to by such men of genius as ware then in that city; here his poetical talents in some slight degree diff. played themselves, though not is fuch a manner as to prevent father from fending him to Berling in the year 1749, to qualify him for his own business. Here he was employed in the business of shop; but he soon became distant fied with his mode of life; 💥 eloped from his master and hirela chamber for himself. To redu him to order, his parents, accept ing to the usual mode in such ca withheld every supply of most He resolved, however, to be ind pendent; shut himself up in chamber; and, after some wee went to his friend Hempel, a ca brated artist, whom he reques to return with him to his lodgit There he shewed his apartme covered with fresh landscapes, whi our poet had painted with fu oil, and by which he hopeds make his fortune: The shrugg up of the shoulders of his spin concluded with an affurance, though his works were not lil to be held in high estimation their present state, some expe tions might be raised from the if he continued the same applied tion for ten years.

Luckily for our young artift in parents relented, and he was put mitted to spend his time at it liked at Berlin. Here he form acquaintance with artists and and of letters; Krause, Hempel, Rain ler, Sulzer, were his companion Ramler was his friend, from the

the greatest advantages. uch diffidence he presented der some of his composiout every verie and every ere criticised, and very few as through the fiery trial. is dialect, he found at last, obstacle in his way, and extions requifite to fatisfy cacy of a German ear would Ramler advised him lilye. e his thoughts in harmorose; this counsel he foland the anecdote may be in Britain, where many a e poet is probably hammera verse, which, from the tances of his birth on, he can never make le to the ear of taste:

of whose ear and taste he

Berlin, Gessner went to rgh, with letters of recomou to Hagedorn; but he make himself acquainted m at a cossee-house before ers were delivered. A close y followed, and he had the ges of a literary society damburgh at that time af-

Thence he returned home, taste much refined; and, tely for him he came back is countrymen were in some capable of enjoying his suborks. Had he produced wenty years before, his would have been histed at oral; his Abel would have eached against as propha-period may be called the in age of Germany; Kloplamler, Kleist, Gleim, Utz, Wieland, Rabener, were their country from the farfthe great Frederic. Klopaid about this time a visit to Zurich, and fired every breast with poetical ardour. He had fcarce left the place when Wieland came, and by both our poet was well received. After a few anonymous compositions, he tried his genius on a subject which was started by the accidental perusal. of the translations of Longus; and his Daphais was improved by the remarks of his friend Hirzel, the author of the Rustic Socrates. Daphnis appeared first without a name in the year 1754; it was followed in 1756, by Inkle and Yarico; and Geiner's reputation was spread in the same year, over Germany and Switzerland, by his Pastorals, a translation of which into English, in 1762, was published by Dr. Kenrick. His brother poets acknowledged the merit of these light compositions, as they were pleased to call them; but conceived their author to be incapable of forming a grander plan, or aiming at the dignity of heroic poetry. To these critics he soon after opposed his death of Abel.

In 1762, he collected his poems in four volumes; in which were some new pieces that had never before made their appearance in public. In 1772, he produced his second volume of pastorals with some letters on landscape painting. These met with the most favourable reception in France, where they were translated and imitated; as they were also, though with less success, in Italy and England.

We shall now consider Gessner as an artist: till his thirtieth year, painting was only an accidental amusement; but at that time he became acquainted with Heidegger, a man of taste, whose collection of paintings and engrage.

 Z_{1}

MG8

ANNUAL REGISTER, 34C]

ings was thus thrown open to him. The daughter made an impression on him, but the circumstances of the lovers were not favourable to an union, till through the activity and friendship of the burgomasters Heidegger and Hirzel, he was enabled to accomplish his withes. The question then became, how the married couple were to live? The pen is but a flender «lependence any where, and still less in Switzerland. The poet had much spirit to be dependent on others; and he determined to purjue the arts no longer as an amusement, but as a means of procuring a livelihood.

Painting and engraving alternately filled that time which was not occupied with poetry; and in there arts, if he did not arrive at the greatest eminence, he was distinguished by that simplicity, that elegance, that fingularity, which are the characteristics of his poetry. His wife was not idle; besides the care of his house and the education of his children, for which no one was better qualified, the whole burthen of the shop (for our poet was bookseller as well as poet, engraver, and painter) was laid upon her shoulders.

In his manners, Gessner was chearful, lively, and at times playtul; fond of his wife; fond of his He had small pretenchildren. tions to learning, yet he could read the latin poets in the original; and of the Greek, he preferred the latin translations to the French. In his early years, he led either a folitary life, or confined himself to men of taste and literature: as he grew older, he accustomed himself to general conversation; and in his later years, his house was the centre point of the men of the first rank for talents or fortune m Zurich. Here they met twice & week, and formed a copverfexion of a kind feldom, if ever, to be met with in great cities, and very, rarely in any place; the politics of England destroy such meetings is Gessner with his friends enjoyed that fimplicity of manners which makes fociety agreeable; and in his rural refidence, in the fummer, a little way out of town, they brought back the memory atmost of the Golden Age.

He died of an apoplexy on the 2d of March, 1788; leaving a widow, three children, and a fifter His youngest son was married to a daughter of his father's friend Wieland. His fellow citezens have erected a statue in memory of him on the banks of the Limmot, where it meets Sihl.

Some particulars of the Death of Condorcet, from Bottiger on the state of Letters, &c. in France.

AMONG the Girondists professed by Robespierre on the 31ft of of May, Condorcet was the very. first on the list, and was obliged to skulk in the most hidden corners to elude the perfecutions of the furious Jacobins. A lady, to whom he was known only by name, became, at the instance of a common friend, his generous protectres; concesting him in her house at Paris, at the most imminent hazard, till the latter end of April 1794; when the apprehension of general domiciliary visits so much increased, and the risk of exposing both himself and his patroness became so pressing on the mind of Condorcet, that he resolved to quit Paris

Without

Without either passport or civic card, he contrived, under the difguise of a provencal countrywoman, with a white cap on his head, to steal through the barriers of Paris, and reached the plains of Mont Rouge in the district Bourg-la-Reine; where he hoped to have found an afylum in the country-bouse of a gentleman with whom he had once been intimate. This friend having, unfortunately, at that very time, gone to Paris, Condorcet was under the dreadful necessity of wandering about in the fields and woods for three fuccessive days and nights, not venturing to enter any inn, unprovided with a civic card. Exhausted by hunger, fatigue, and anguish, with a wound in his foot, he was scarcely able to drag himself into a described quarry, where he purposed to await the return of his friend. At length, having advanced towards the road fide, Condorcet faw him approach. was recognized, and received with open arms:—but, as they both feared lest Condorcet's frequent inquiries at his friend's house should have raised suspicions; and as, at any rate, it was not advisable for them to make their entrance together in the day time, they agreed that Condorcet should stay in the fields till dutk, and then be let in by a back door. It was then, however, that imprudence threw him. off his guard. The forlorn exile, after having patiently borne hunger and thirst for three days together, without so much as approaching an inn, now finds himself incapa- carried about him the most deadly ble of waiting a few hours longer, poison; and, not long before his at the end of which all his fuffer- fatal exit, he owned to a friend ings were to subside in the that he had more than twenty times bosom of friendship. Transported been tempted to make use of it, with this happy prospect, and but was checked by motives of af-foregoing all caution, which feemed to have become habitual to him, he entered an inn at Clamars and called for an ommelette. tire, his dirty cap and long beard, his pale meagre countenance, and the ravenous appetite with which he devoured the victuals, could not fail to excite the curiofity and suspicion of the company. A member of the revolutionary committee, who happened to be present, taking it for granted that his woebegone figure could be no other than some runaway from the Bicètre, addressed and questioned him whence he came, whether he could produce a passport, &c. which inquiries, Condorcet having lost all felt-command, were so unsatisfactorily answered, that he was taken to the house of the committee as a suspected person. Thence, having undergone a fecond interrogatory, during which he acquitted himself equally ill, he was conducted to Bourg-la-Reine; and, as he gave very inconfistent answers to the questions put to him by the municipality, it was inferred that this unknown person must have fome very important reasons for withing to continue undifcovered. Being fent to a temporary confinement till the matter fhould be cleared up, on the next morning he was found tenfelefs on the ground, without any marks violence on his body; whence it was conjectured that he must have poisoned himself. Indeed, Condorcet had, for some time past, Z_3 fection for his wife and daughter. It was during his concealment of ten months at Paris that he wrote his excellent history of the progress of human understanding.—Thus perithed one of the most illustrious of the French literati that the prefent age had produced.

Biographical Anecdotes of the Count de Euffon, extracted from a Manuscrift Junraey to Montbart in 1785, by Herault de Scchelles.

I behold a fine figure, noble and placid. Notwithstanding he is 78 years old, one would not attribute to him above 60 years; and although he had spent sixteen fleepless nights, in consequence of being afflicted with the stone, he looked as fresh as a child, and as calm as if in health. His buft, by Houdon, appears to me very like; although the effect of the black eyes and brows is loft.

His white hair was accurately drest: this was one of his whims, and he owns it. He has it papered at night, and curled with irons fometimes twice a day, in morning and before supper. had five small curls on each side. His bed-gown was a yellow and white stripe, flowered with blue.

His voice is strong for his age, and very pleasant: in general, when he speaks, his looks are fixed on nothing, but roll unguardedly about. His favourite words are tout ça and pardieu, which recur perpetually. His vanity is undifguifed and prominent; here are a few instances.

I told him I read much in his "What are you reading?" faid he. I answered, the Vues sur "There are passages la Nature. of the highest eloquence in them:" replied he instantly.

His fon has erected a monument to the father in the gardens of Montbart. It is a fimple column near a lofty tower, and it is inscribed > Excelsæ turri humilis columna Parenti suo filius Burrow, 1785.

The father burst into tears of feeing this monument, and faid to the young man, "Son this will to you honcur."

The fon shewed me about the We came to the closet grounds. in which this great man laboured; it is in a pavillion called the tower of Saint Louis, and it is up stairs. The entrance is by a green folding The fimplicity of the labor ratory aftonishes. The ceiling is vaulted, the walls are green, the floor is in squares: it contains an ordinary wooden desk, and an arm chair; but not a book nor a papta. This nakedness has its effect. imagination clothes it with the splendid pages of Buffon. There is another fanctuary in which he was wont to compose;—" The cradle of natural history," as prince. Henry called it, when he west thither. It was there that Rouffest prostrated himself and kissed the threshold. I mentioned this circumstance to Buffon. Yes, said he, Rousseau bowed down to me. This cabinet is wainfcoted, furnithed with screens, a sofa, and with drawings of birds and beafts. chairs are covered with black leather, and the desk is near the chimney, and of walnut-tree. tife on the loadstone, on which he was then employed, lay on it.

His example and his discourse convin ceme that he, who passionately defires glory, is fare in the end to obtain it. The wish must not be a momentary but an every day emotion. Buffon said to me on this subject a very striking thing—one of those speeches which may be the cause of a great man hereafter; "Genius is only a greater aptitude to patience." Observe, (said he to me) every thing which every thing: patience in finding out one's line, patience in resisting the motives that divert, and patience in bearing what would discourage a common man.

I will mention fome facts of Buffon. He would fometimes return from the suppers of Paris at two in the morning, when he was young. A boy was ordered to call him at five, however late he returned; and, in case of his lingering in bed, to drag him out on the floor. He used to work till fix at night. "I had at that time (said he) a mistress of whom I was very fond: but I would never allow myfelf to go to her till fix, even at the risk of finding her gone out."

He thus distributes his day. five o'clock he rifes, dresses, powders, dictates letters, and regulates his household matters. At fix he goes to the foresaid study, which is a furlong distant from the house, at the extremity of the garden. There are gates to open and terraces to climb by the way. ' When not engaged in writing, he paces up and down the furrounding avenues. No one may intrude on his retreat. He often reads over what he has written, and then lays it by for a time. "It is important," faid he to me, "never to be in a hurry: review your compositions often, and every time with a fresh eye, and you will always find that they can be mended." When he has made many corrections in a manufcript, he employs an amanuentis to transcribe it, and then he corrects again. He told M. de S— that the Epoques de la Nature were written over eighteen times. is very orderly and exact. "I burn that patience must be applied to I do not intend to use: not a paper will be found at my death."

I resume the account of his day. At nine, breakfast is brought to him in the study. It confists of two glasses of wine and a bit of bread. He writes for about two. hours after breakfast and then returns to the house. He does not love to hurry over his dinner; during which he gives vent to all the gaieties and trifles which fuggest themselves while at table. He loves to talk smuttily; and the effect of his jokes and laughter are heightened by the natural seriousness of his age and calmness of his character! but he is often so coarse as to compel the ladies to withdraw. He talks of himself with pleasure, and like a critic. faid to me, "I learn every day to write; in my latter works there is infinitely more perfection than in I often have my former. works read to me, and this mostly puts me upon some improvement. There are, however, passages which I cannot improve." In this openness there is a something interesting, original, antique, attractive.

Speaking of Rousseau, he said, " I loved him much until I read his confessions, and then I ceased to esteem him. I cannot fancy the fpirit of the man; an unusual process happened to me with respect to him: after his death I lost my reverence for him."

This great man is very much of a gossip, and, for at least an hour in the day, will make his hairdresser and valets tell all the scandal of the village. He knows every minute event that furrounds him.

3147 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796,

His confidence is almost wholly engroised by a Mademoiselle Bleffeau: a woman now forty years old, well-made, who has been pretty, and has lived with him about twenty years. She is very attentive to him, manages in the house, and is hated by the servants. Miadame de Buffon, who has long been dead, could not endure this woman. She adored her hulband, and is faid to have been very jealous of him

Mademoifelle de Bleffeau is not the only one who manages Buffon. Father Ignatius Prouzut, a capuchin friar, born at Dijon divides her empire. He is, it feems, a convenient confesior. Thirty years ago the author of the Fpiques de la Nation lent for him at Easter, and confeiled to him in the very laboratory in which he had put together his materialism, in which Rouffead profirated himself at the threshold, Ignatius told me that M. de Buffon, when about to submir to this ceremony, helitated awhile—" the effect of human weaknes"—added he—and insisted on his valet de chambre's confessing himself first. This will furprize at Paris. Yes: Buffon, when at Montbart, receives the annual communion in his seignoral chapel, goes every Sunday to high mass, and distributes a louis weekly among different descriptions of pions begggrs. M. de Buffon tells me that he makes a point of respecting religion; that there must Be a religion for the multitude; that in little places every one is obferved; and that we should avoid giving offence. "I am perfuaded, (faid he to me,) that in your speeches you take care to let nothing escape you that should be remarked, or excite alarm on this head. I have e er had that attention in my writings, and have published them separately, that ordinary. ry men may not catch at the connection of ideas. I have always. named the Creator; but it is only putting, mentally, in its place, the energy of nature, which mefults from the two great laws of attraction and impulse. When the Sorbonne plagued me, I gave all the satisfactions which they solicite ed: 'twas a form which I despised, but men are filly enough to be for. fatisfied. For the same reason, when I fall dangeroufly ill, I the not hefitate to fend for the factar ments. This is due to the public. religion. Those who act others. wife are madmen. The arietation of Voltaire, of Diderot, of Helveting often wounded themselves. latter was my friend; he fpent more than four years at Montbart? I recom: on different occasions. mended more referve to Had he attended to me, he would have been better off."

In fact, this spirit of accommon. dation answered to M. de Buffor. His works demonstrate materialism yet they were printed at the royal, press.

My early volumes appeared, (faid he,) at the same time with the spirit of laws. We were team. ed by the Sorbonne, both Mone, tesquieu and I, and assailed by the The president was quite. furious; "What shall you anfwer?" faid he to me. "Nothing" at all, president," replied I. He could not understand such coldbloodedness.

I was reading to Buffon one evening some verses of Thomas on the immortality of the foul. " Pardieu, (said he,) religion would be a noble present, if all that were true." He criticised these lines severely: he is inexorable as to style, and " Never does not love poetry. write verses, (said he,) I could have made them as well as others: but 'I foon abandoned a course in which reason marches in setters: the has chains enough already, without looking about for new ones."

Buffon willingly quits his grounds, and walks about, the village with his fon among the peafantry. At these simes he always appears in a laced coat. He is a stickler about dress, and fcolds his fon for wearing a frock-I was aware of this, and had taken care to arrive in an embroidered waistcoat and laced cloaths. My precaution succeeded wonderfully; he shewed me repeatedly to his fon. "There's a gentleman for you!" He loves to be called monfieur le Comte.

After having risen from dinner, he pays little attention either to his family or his guests. He sleeps for an hour in his room; then takes a walk alone; after which he will perhaps come in and converse, or fit at his delk and look over papers that are brought for his opinion. He has lived thus these fifty years. To some one who expressed astonishment at his great reputation, he replied, "Have not I passed fifty years at my deik?" At nine he goes to bed.

He is at present afflicted with the stone, which suspends his employ-While I was at his house ments. he had acute pains, thut himself up in his chamber, would fearcely fee his fon, and not his fifter. was always dreft; and he retained his fine calm look. He complained mildly of his ill health, and bore his pangs with a smile. He opened his whole foul to me: made me read to him the treatife on the loadstone, and, as he listened, would reform the phrases. Sometimes he would fend for a volume of his works, and request me to read aloud the finer efforts of style; such as the foliloquy of the first man, the description of an Arabian desert in . the article camel, and a still finer piece of painting (in his opinion) in the article Kamichi., Sometimes he would explain to me his system of the formation of the universe, the genefis of beings, the internal moulds, &c. Sometimes he would recite whole pages of his compositions; for he knows them almost all by heart. He listens gladly to objections, discusses them, and surrenders to them when his judgment is convinced.

Of natural history and of style he loves to talk, especially of the No one better understands the theory of style, unless it be Beccaria, who did not possess the practice. "The style is the man, (said he;) our poets have no style; they are coerced by the rules of metre which makes flaves of " How do you like Thomas?" I asked. " Pretty well, " (said he,) but he is stiff and bloated." And Rousseau? "His style is better: but he has all the faults. of bad education, interjection, exclamation, interrogation for ever." Favour me with your leading ideas on style. "They are recorded in my discourse at the academy:--however, two things form style, invention and expression. Invention depends on patience: contemplaté admitted me repeatedly. His hair your subject long: it will gradually unrol and unfold—till a fort of electric spark convulses for a moment the brain, and spreads down to the very heart a glow of irritation: Then are come the luxuries of genius, the true hours for production and composition—hours so delightful, that I have spent twelve and fourteen fuccessively at my writing-desk, and still been in a Mate of pleasure It is for this gratification, yet more than for glory, that I have toiled. Glory comes if it can, and mostly does come. This pleafure is greater if you confult no books: I have never confulted authors, till I had nothing left to fay of my own."

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796. 346]

I asked him what is the best method of forming one's felf. He answered, "Read only the capital works, read them repeatedly, and read those in every department of taste and science; for the framers of fuch works are, as Cicero lays, kindred-fouls, and the views of one may always be applied with advantage in some very different branch by another. Be not afraid of the talk. Capital works are I know but five great geniuses-Newton, Bacon, Leib-Montesquieu, and myself. Newton, (continued he,) may have ·discovered an important principle, but he spent his life in frivolous calculations, and was no master of style." He thought higher of Leibnitz than of Bacon. He spoke of Montesquieu's genius, but thought his style too studied, and wanting evolution. "This, however, (faid he,) was a natural consequence of his frame of body. I knew him well; he was almost blind, and very impatient. If he had not clipt his ideas into fnort sentences, he would have loft his period before the amanuentis had taken it down."

He spoke to me of the passion for study, and of the happiness which it bestows. He told me that he had voluntarily secluded himfelf from fociety; that at one time he courted the company of learned men, expecting to acquire much from their conversation, but he had discovered that little of value could be so gleaned, and that, in order' to pick up a phrase, an evening was ill fquandered: that labour become a want to him, and he hoped to confecrate to it much of the three or four years of life which probably remained to him; that he feared not death—that the hope of an immortal renown was the most powerful of death-bed coniolations.

He thewed me a letter freet prince Henry of Prussia, and and other from the empress of Ruffig. with his answers. Over this losty correspondence between power and genius, where the latter retained its innate ascendancy, I felt. foul swell. Glory seemed to affume as it were a substantial form, to bend down-at its feet what the world has most exalted.

In a few days, I left this good and great man; repeating, 4 1 withdrew, two lines of the Ocdipus of Voltaire:

L'amitié d'un grand bonne est un bienfait des dieux, Je l'sais mon devoir & mon sort dans, ses yeux.

Account of Apostolo Zeno, from Burney Memoirs of Metastasio.

THE learned poet, critic and mtiquary, Apostolo Zeno, was born in 1660, and descended from an illustrious Venetian family, which has been long fettled in the island of Candia.

he early applied himself to literature, and the study of Italian history and antiquities. In 1696, he instituted at Venice the academy Degli Animofi, and was the editor of the Giornale de' Letterati d'Italia, of seems never to have been partial. which he published thirty volumes, bëtween the year 1710 and 1719. His first musical drama, L'Inganni Felici, was fet by Carlo Fran. Pofarolo, and performed at Venice, And between that time and his quitting Vienna, where he was invited by the emperor Charles VI. in 1718, he produced fortyhix operas, and feventeen oratorios, befides eighteen dramas, which he wrote jointly with Pariati. tramatic works were collected and published at Venice, in 1744, in volumes octavo, by count Gozzi. And in 1752, his letters were printed in three volumes, by Forcellini, in which much found learning and criticism are mani-_fested on various subjects. one of the most useful of his critical labours feems to have been, his commentary on the Bibl. dell' Eloquenza Italiana di Fontanini, which was published in 1753; with a preface by his friend Forcellini, chiefly dictated, however, by Zeno himfelf, just before his death, 1750, in the 82d year of his age.

After he was engaged as Imperial laureate, he set out from Venice for Vienna, in July 1718; but having been overturned in a chaise, the fourth day of his journey, he had the misfortune to break his leg, and was confined at an inn in the little town of Ponticaba, near Trevisa, till September. He arrived at Vienna, the 14th of that month, salvo, he fays, if not Jano e guerito, after twelve days of - excessive suffering on the road.

Most of the dramas, sacred and fecular, which he wrote for the Imperial Court, were fet by Caldara, a grave composer and sound harmonist, to whose style Zeno But this excellent antiquary and critic feems never to have been fatisfied with his own poetical abilities. So early as the year 1722, in writing to his brother from Vienna, he fays: "I find more and more every day, that I grow old, not only in body, but in: mind: and that the business of writing verses is no longer a fit employment for me." afterwards, modefuly fensible of the sterility of his possessions in Parnassfus, which, though they furnished useful productions, were not of . a foil fufficiently rich to generate fuch gay, delicate, and beautiful flowers, as are requisite to embellish the lyric scene, he expressed a with that he might be allowed a partner in his labours; and was fo. just and liberal as to mention the young Metastasio, as a poet worthy to be honoured with the notice of his Imperial patron.

Account of the Peasantry of Norway, from Mary Wolistonecrast's letters, during a short residence in Sweden, Nerway, and Denmark!

THOUGH the king of Denmark be an absolute monarch, yet the Norwegians appear to enjoy all the bleffings of freedom. Norway may be termed a fifter kingdom; but the people have no viceroy to lord it over them, and fatten his dependants with the fruit of their labour.

There are only two quints in the whole country, who have citates, and exact fome feudal observances from their tenantry. All the reft of the country is divided into small farms, which belong to the cultivator. It is true, dome few, appertaining to the church, are let; but always on a leafe for life generally renewed in favour of the eldeft fon. who has this advantage, as well as a right to a double portion of the property. But the value of the farm is estimated; and after his portion is affigued to him, he must be answerable for the residue to the remaining part of the tamily.

Every farmer, for ten years, is obliged to attend annually about twelve days, to learn the military exercise; but it is always at a small distance from his dwelling, and does not lead him into any new habits of life,

There are about fix thousand regulars also, garrisoned at Christiana and Fredericshall, which are equally reserved, with the militia, for the desence of their own country. So that when the prince royal passed into Sweden, in 1788, he was obliged to request, not command, them to accompany him on this expedition.

These corps are mostly composed of the sons of the cottagers, who being labourers on the farms are allowed a few acres to cultivate for themselves. These men voluntarily enlist; but it is only for a limited period (fix years), at the expiration of which they have the liberty of retiring. The pay is only two pence a day, and bread; still, considering the cheapness of the country, it is more than sixpence in England.

The distribution of landed property into finall farms, produces a degree of equality v feldom feen elfewhe rich being all mercha obliged to divide ,t fortune amongst the the boys always recei much as the girls, pro a chance of accumula grown wealth destroys of liberty.

You will be furprif talk of liberty: yet gians appear to me most free community observed.

The mayor of eadiftrict, and the jude country, exercise an a most patriarchal. I much good but little haindividual can appeal judgment; and as the be forced to give a reconduct, it is general by prudence. They have learn to be tyrants, themen to me, with a custed the subject.

The farmers not for turned out of their farmers are a man in having no vote to be at an election for a moel tive, are a manly race; ing obliged to submit basing tenure, in order advance themselves in they act with an spirit. I never yet hany thing like dominer pression, excepting so arisen from natural cases freedom the people perhaps, render them a little litigious, and subject them to the impositions of cunning practitioners of the law; but the authority of office is bounded, and the emoluments of it do not destroy its utility.

Last year a man, who had abused his power, was cashiered, on the representation of the people to the

.bailiff of the district.

There are four in Norway, who might with propriety be termed theriffs; and, from their sentence, an appeal, by either party, may be made to Copenhagen.

-Near most of the towns are commons, on which the cows of all the inhabitants, indifcriminatelý are allowed to graze. poor, to whom a cow is necessary, are almost supported by it. fides, to render living more easy they all go out to fish in their own boats; and fish is their principal food.

The lower class of people in the towns are in general failors; and the industrious have usually little ventures of their own that ferve to render the winter confortable.

Account of the Hoozuanas, a wandering tribe of Savages. From le Vaillant's second Journey into the Interior of Africa.

THE Hoozuana is of a very fmall stature, and he is a tall man among them who reaches five feet (five feet four inches English); but these small bodies, perfectly proportioned, unite with wonderful strength and agility a certain air of affurance, boldness, and pride, which awes the spectator, and pleased me infinitely. Of all the tribes of favages which I have known, none has appeared to me endowed with so active 'a soul and so indefatigable a constitution. in order that, if any horde of their

the chin. They are also much less black; and have that leaden hue of the Malays which, at the Cape, is distinguished by the name boo-gained. Their hair, more frizzled, is fo short, that at first I thought them shaved. Their nose is still flatter than that of the Hottentot; or rather they have no nose, and the organ in them confifts of two flattened nostrils, 'projecting, at most, five or fix lines. From this nullity of nose it results that the Hoozuana, viewed in profile, is ugly, and very like a monkey. Viewed in front there appears at the first glance something very extraordinary, the forehead feeming to occupy more than half of the face. Yet he has so much expression, and such large and lively eyes, that notwithstanding this singular appearance, he is agreeable enough to the view.

The heat of the climate freeing him from all necessity of cloathing. he is quite naked during the whole year, except a very small jackalikin tied over his loins by two itraps, the ends of which fall on his hams. Hardened by this constant habit of nudity, he becomes so insensible to the variations of the atmosphere, that, when he transports himself from the burning fands of the plain to the snows and frosts of the mountains, he seems not to feel the cold. His hut does not resemble that of the Hottentot. It is cut vertically in the middle, fo that one of the Hottentot huts would make two of these. their emigrations they suffer the kraal (or encampment) to remain; Their head, though it has the nation should pals that we, they principal characters of that of the might make use of it. On the Hottentot, is yet more rounded at march, the emigrants have no other shelter for repose than a mat suspended and inclined on two flicks; and they frequently sleep on the bare ground, when the projection of a rock serves them for shelter. If, however, they stop any where to fojourn for some time, and find materials for the confiruction of their huts, they then build a kraal: but at their departure, they leave it like all the reft. This custom of working for their comrades announces a sociable character, and benevolent dispositions. In fact, they are not only good huibands and fathers, but excellent allo-In the same kraal, no one appropriates any thing to himself, When they but all belongs to all. meet with other bands of the same nation, they give them a kind reception and protection; in short, they treat them as brothers, though perhaps they have never before icen them.

Naturally active and nimble, the Hoozuana makes it his sport to climb the highest mountains and peaks; and this disposition was of great service to mo. The stream on which I was encamped had a coppery taste, and a nauseous odour, which rendered the water unfit to My cattle, accustonied to the bad waters of the country, were contented with it; but I was afraid that my people would be injured by it, and would not fuffer them to make use of it. My Hoozuanas had no milk for me, fince they only possessed some poor stolen cows. I asked them if they knew of any good spring in the neighbourhood of their kraal to which I could send my people for water; instandy, without making any answer, they ran to their mountains, and in less than two hours brought all my skins and vessels full of excellent water. During all the time of my stay on the stream, they rendered me the same service. One of these journies would have contact a Hottentot a whole day.

When they are on an expedition, the want of water does not diffuse them, even in the midst of the deferts. By a particular art, then know how to discover that which is conceased in the bowels of the the earth; and their skill in this point is even superior to that of the other Africans. Animals in a like case, perceive the water, but it is only by the scene and the emany.

tions must be brought by a current of air; confequently the water. must be to windward. During in: abode in the defert in my first jourse ney, my favages had more than once shewed the same faculty; and instructed by them, I had also are quired it. The Hoozuana, mogs ikilful, has need only of a fight. He lies on his belly, looks to distance, and, if the intermediate space contains any subterraneous, fource, he arises and points out the _place with his finger. That ether rial and fubtle exhalation, which alcends from every current of water. when not buried too deeply in the earth, luffices him for the disco-As to lakes and other exterior deposits formed by the rains, they have a sensible evaporation, which points them out to him even when matked by a mound or hillock. If there be running waters, fuch as brooks and rivers, their abundant vapours enable him

The Hoozuana has no other to trace all the finuofities of the stream,

arms than a bow and arrow; the latter are very short, and are carried on the shoulder in a quiver about 18 inches long and four in diamater, made of the bark of aloe's wood, and covered with the skin of a great. lizard found in all the rivers, especially on the banks of the Orange and the Fish river. Obliged to maintain a numerous company, and de-, firous of making the horde partake of my plenty of game, I went daily to hunt, and was always attended by a large number of Hoozuanas. If I hunted in the mountains, I climbed the rocks with them; in the plain, I used one of my horses;—but whether it was their office to follow me, or to drive towards me the zebras and gazelles, they were always indefatigable; and at whatever pace I put my horse I saw them still at my side. During all the long journey which they performed with me, never did they belie their character. many respects they seemed to refemble the Arabs, who, equally wanderers, equally brave and predatory, are unchangeably faithful in their engagements, and would defend to the last drop of blood the traveller who purchases their fervices, and puts himself under their protection.

Were my project of crossing Africa entirely from north to south practicable, it could only be with these Hoozuanas. I am convinced that sifty men of this sober, brave, and indefatigable nation would have sufficed me to effectuate it; and I shall ever regret having known them too late, and under circumstances in which innumerable missortunes had compelled me to renounce my design,—at least for the present.

ť

Account of the Celebration of a Good Friday in Brussells. From Owen's Travels.

A card-party was formed on Friday evening, being the Vendredi Saint, the singular object of which induces me to mention it. It was held at the apartments of the comtesse de Choiseul, and attended by most of the fashionable people. Agreeably to the law of the assembly, the gains of the evening were to be disposed of, at the discretion of the lady of the house, in purposes of charity. This is a custom of ancient establishment.

An affembly of this nature, where pleasure and religion are combined, must give birth to many singular impressions. No day in the caleudar can wear a more gloomy face, or excite more devotional fentiments in the break of a catholic, than the day of the crucifixion. Every means are employed to excite supersitious horror, and recal to the mind the memory of that darkness which enveloped the face of the earth. All that breathes the air of dissipation must be entirely banished, and amusement so qualified by motive, and so chastiled by austerity, as to receive the ferious cast of religious exercise. To-morrow is, I understand, the concluding day of this fevere penance: consolation will then be administered to the consciences of the devotees, who will emerge, fully acquitted of all past guilt, and at liberty to commence a fresh account. The fireets, parade and promenades will refume their brilliancy: at present, they exhibit a striking picture of spiritual indolence. Superstition has long since confecrated this week to purpofes which are deemed incompatible with fecular occupation. The days being too facred for labour, and too long for devotion, a great part of the time is yawned away in liftless ennui.

The confecration of days is a custom of barbarous origin; and the pious enthusiasm of the first Christians gave it the sanction of their own observance. The church of England, which has had the merit of restoring to society the day and weeks hallowed by bigotry, still retains some few, which the refuses to secularize, and which ferve, like the ancient hangings in a modernized mansion, to mark the date of the edifice, and perpetuate the taste of those who undertook its reform. It is plain, the contract between priest and people in those regions of superstition, is very much in favour of the former, though equally to the fatisfaction The latter furrender of each. without reluctance the fruits of their labour to the use of the former, who only engage for an undefined retribution—a bright reverfion in the tky-at some future and diffant period.

Account of the alteration produced by the French Revolution at Strafburgh. From the same.

The general complaint at Strafburgh was want of money. thing is to be found in circulation but paper and copper. " Tout iroit bien," faid an old man, " fi on avoit de l'argent." At all the Props, the greatest apprehensions are entertained of being paid for their merchandize in paper. This;

amongst each other, they are bliged to admit; but in their intercourse with strangers, they struggle very hard for specie.

I turned into the shop of a marchande de modes to purchase some The bargain was struck, the feveral particulars wrapped up; and I was fearching in my pocket for the money; when observing me draw out fome paper by accident, she laid immediate hold upon the packet I had purchased, and "Allczdemanded with hafte, vous me payer en papier, monsieur?" "Si fait," said I. bien donc," replied she, "je garderai ma marchandise." I foort relieved her of the anxiety the felt, and brought a glow upon her cheek, by counting out upon the table the fum agreed. This is indeed the greatest—I had almost faid the only—grievance that I' have discovered among them; and they scruple not to predict, that' the very favourable fale of the ristional domains will raise the credit of their paper and give them as much money as they have liberty.

I must assure you, that I found the state of the people in this part of France very different from what it had been represented. Manheim and Worms, reports prevailed of the most serious tumults now reigning in France; and we were more than once cautioned against trusting ourselves amongst a canaille, who would hang us up at the lamp-post for a word or a This statement has so little connection with truth, that every. thing passes with the utmost orders and, so far as I can judge from obfervation and report, freedom of remark encounters less danger here than at the court of Manheim.

Nothing

Nothing could surpass the strict- fered to religious worship." This ness which prevailed in every quarter where the fugitive nobility are received; and if I might draw conclusions respecting the country at large from what I fee around me, restraint of opinion is exiled. with those who owed to its existence their guilty pre-eminence..

The day after our arrival was rendered festive by a new enrolment of national guards. This was formed out of the citizens above the age of eighteen years, and effected without the least fymptom of disorder. Beside the guard thus regularly embodied, the citizens are feen every evening in different parts of the town, learning, against an emergency, the use of arms. It certainly is animating to read, in a thousand conspicuous places, proclamations fetting forth the right of private judgment; allowing to every man the free exercise of his opinion in matters of religion; and establishing to each individual the liberty of adopting that mode of worship he best approves.

This would, however, be nugatory and ridiculous, were the flightest encouragement given to contumacy and disorder. This has been faid out of the country; but the contrary has appeared wherever I have enquired. I read upon the door of the cathedral at Strasburg advertisement, which stated, "That a young man having behaved improperly in the cathedral during the performance of divine fervice; and, after admonition from the centinel, persisted in a conduct unbecoming the folemnity of the place and occasion, was, by the officers of the police, sentenced to imprisonment for this insult of-Wol. XXXVIII.

accords but ill with a toleration of disorder.

Account of the Public Eating-bouses at Vienna. From the same.

In all these houses the custom is, to give every man his portion feparate; infomuch that though numbers dine at the same table, they feldom dine in common. almost all the dining-houses here, a bill of fare, containing a vast collection of dishes, is written out, and the prices affixed to each article. As the people of Vienna eat of variety, the calculation at the conclusion of the repast would appear somewhat embarrassing; this, however, is done by mechanical. habit with great speed. The custom is for the party who has dined, to name the dithes, his quantity The keller, of bread and wine. who attends on this occasion, follows every article you name, with the fum which this adds to the calculation; and the whole is performed, to whatever amount, without ink or paper. It is curious to hear this ceremony, which is muttered with great gravity, yet performed with accuracy and dispatch. It is inconceivable how numerous these houses are in Vienna, to which we have in England nothing that corresponds exactly. There is fomething remarkably pleasant in . this mode of living. An evening seldom passes in these houses without music, and the German dances have an air of vivacity and cheerfulness superior to all others.

I have been often regaled by a strolling band at one of these houses; where, deeming myself totally unknown, I was accustomed .

the area training hour. I usually entered them, wrapped in any cloak, 222 the my leat in a corner of the zoom, where I might register what pairs without attracting notice. A post of my amusement are from the warm debutes of here worthy citizens, who, having dupatched the bufinels of the day, were relaxing their minds with a little politics. I was diverted to bear these great personages regulating the affairs of empires-leading the combined armies into the heart of France, by a thorter cut than the Dake of Bruniwick had taken - making the rebels own their lawful king, and receive their expatriated princes. I had remarked every night that I frequented one house, a little man of uncouth figure, and un propitious physicznomy: and had observed him confiantly twirling a large key over his tinger, whenever he entered into convertation, and firlking this forcibly against the table, when he withed to establish his argument or filence his adverdary. I was afterished to find to much wit and plenfantry in his discourse. He railied with much vivacity all nations, and all governments-but Lis own. He thought that France and Switzerland, which boated of the purest conflicutions, had less liberiv than the Auftrians, whole confliction of government he enied was the worft. " in Switredand." faid le, " a mon cannot ibenk his fer ilments without hazard of impriforment. France without the unnger of decapitation: while in Vienna a man may indrige himfeld in all theedom of remark, or draws no take tal be lends his aid to prets, cubuls, and compiracies.

There are, hower r, discusses at Vienna; and, were these that freedom of speech on which the orator infified, the coffee-house would resound with the complain and remonstrances of the people. On the various topics he ran over he expressed himself with vehemence, took much findf, and imote frequently with his keg. Some intelligence which I picked up from the house has acquainted me, that he has lately married. very pretty woman; and that cont evening when he leaves her, h locks the door, and pockets the key. I will make no apology in thele colorings after nature how. ever remote from the splendil feenes of life: my fortune.has at prefect thrown me into those walls of fociety, where higher incidents cannot occur.

The Life and Writings of the All.

Demociery: by toe Dake de light neems.

John James Barthelemy born January 20, 1716, at Caffe, finall fea-port in Provence, fitnet between Toulon and Marfeilless his almily had long been effablished ed at Aubagne, a pleasant town in that neighbourhood, where they were much respected; his mother. Magdalen Raffit, was the daughter of a merchant at Caffe; he los her at four years of age. At 14, his father fent him to school at Marieilles, where he made fome progress in his studies under the iere nenaud, at the college of the Oratcite: but, being deflined for. the church, and M. de Belzusce, the himop of Marieilles, objecting to admit the findents of that feminary into orders, he was removed with regret to the college of the Jesuits: there he sell into bad hands, and was therefore happily induced to form a plan of study for himself, independent of the profestors of the college, and devoted himself to the study of the antient languages, the Greek, Hebrew, Syriac, and Chaldean, with so great ardour, that it nearly cost him his life; nor did he recover his health till the period of his entering the feminary in which he received the There he became intimately acquainted with a young Maronite, who had been educated at Rome, and now resided with his uncle, a Turkish merchant, at Marseilles, from whom he acquired a fundamental knowledge of the Arabic language, and learned to speak it with facility. By the recommendation of this young man, he got by heart feveral Arabic fermons, which he preached to a congregation of Arabian and Armenian Catholics, who did not understand the French language. After he had finished his academic fludies, Barthelemy retired to Aubagne, where he refided fome time, often paying visits at Marseilles to those learned academicians with whom a fimilarity of literary purfuits had naturally connected him; among the rest, with M. Cary a great collector of medals, and with Pere Sigaloux, of the convent of Minims, with whom he studied astronomy.

In 1744, he went to Paris with a letter of recommendation to M. de Boze, keeper of the cabinet of medals, and fecretary of the academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres; by whom he was very kindly received, and introduced to the most distinguished members of the academy. The age and infirmities of M. de Boze calling for some assistance in his laborious occupation, he pitched upon Barthelemy for an affociate in the care and arrangement of the cabinet; and his appointment was confirmed by M. de Maurepas, minister of that department. Barthelemy lost no time in arranging in perfect order the large and valuable collection of M. D'Etreés and the Abbé de Rothelin, which lay in confused heaps' These he separated, in boxes. compared, and described in a supplementary catalogue. While he' was thus occupied in a manner so congenial to his taste and his talents, he was apprehenfive he should be drawn off from these pursuits to enter on a very different career. His friend and countryman, M. de Bausset, had engaged to promote him in the church; and, being now bishop of Béziers, invited him to accept the office of his vicar-general. Barthelemy, having promised to follow the fortunes of his friend, had no intention of retracting his engagement; but, wishing to be released from it, and to be left at liberty to follow his favourite studies, he submitted himself entirely to the decision of the worthy prelate, who had too much good sense, and too warm an affection for his friend, not to comply with his wifnes.

In 1747, on the death of M. Burette, he was elected allooiate of the academy of inscriptions, M. le Beau having very handsomely declined in his favour: and when M. de Bougainville resigned the office of secretary, and recommended Barthelemy to M. D'Argenson as his successor, Barthelemy, with equal generosity, yielded to M. le Beau, to whom he asterwards succeeded; and his annual labours in that office were in no degree check-ed by the daily and laborious occupations, in which he was engaged in the cabinet of Medals, and in which he displayed such critical acumen and prosound erudition.

3,6] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

In 1753, on the death of M. de Boze, with whom he had been affociated for seven years, he was made keeper of the cabinet of medals, to which office he was promoted, notwithstanding some opposition, by the zeal of his illustrious friends, M. de Malesherbes, M. de Stainville, afterwards minister and Duc de Choiseul, and M. de Gontacq, brother to the last Maréchal de Biron.

In 1754, M. de Stainville, being appointed ambailador at Rome, invited Barthelemy to accompany him to Italy; an offer which his duty and avocations would not permit him to accept. year 1755, however, he was enabled to take this journey with his friend M. de Cotte; and his residence in Italy was made particularly agreeable by the continuance of M. de Stainville, who introduced him to the amiable and celebrated Pope Benedict XIV. At Naples he became acquainted with Mazocchi, who was then occupied in the talk of unfolding the numerous antient MSS, that had been found in Herculaneum. Mazocchi had decyphered two or three, which containing matter of little importance, the work was on the point of being abandoned at that time but for the zealous encouragement of Barthelemy, who, if the Marquis Carraciola, then minister at Naples, and who had the matter much at heart, had lived, would certainly have been the means of the work's going on with ardour and effect. As a proof of Barthelemy's retentive powers; having applied in vain for the liberty to copy one of thele manuscripts, is order to fend a fac fimile of the agtient writing to the learned in France, and, being only suffered to examine it, he read it over attentively five or fix times, and, fuddenly leaving the apartment, copied the fragment from memory, and correcting, when he came. back, fome flight errors, he fept it the fame day to the academy of Belles Lettres; enjoining fecrecy, however, that no blame might # !tach to Mazocchi. At Rome be had the pleasure and honour to give a new and fatisfactory explan nation of the beautiful Mofaic of Palestina, which is printed in the thirteenth volume of the academy of inscriptions.

M. de Stainville, on his return to Paris in 1757, being named to the embassy of Vienna, Bartheleny, joined him there with Madame de Stainville, who had remained behind at Rome: and a very flatter, ing offer was then made him to undertake a voyage to Greece, and up the Levant, at the king's exampence; but he declined it, as incompatible with the duties of him office.

In 1758, M. de Stainville, then.
Duc de Choiseul, having succeeded ed to the ministry in the room of Cardinal de Bernis, he determined to provide for Barthelemy; which he accordingly did, by granting him successively pensions on the archbishoprick of Abby, and upon the treasury of St. Martin of Tourn, and finally, the place of secretary general of the Swiss; besides which, he enjoyed a pension of 5000 livres on the Mercure.

In 1771. M. de Choiseul was displaced in the ministry by M. D'Aiguillon, D'Aiguillon, and banished to Chanteloup, where Barthelemy did not hesitate to follow him; and, when that minister was compelled to refign his office of general of the Swifs, he would have given up the place of fecretary immediately, had not M. de Choiseul prevailed upon him to retain it until he could obtain an indemnity for He went therefore to Paris, and offered the furrender of his brevet to the Comte d'Affry, who. refused to accept it; and, with many other confiderable persons about the court, thewed a great inclination to protect Barthelemy if he would consent to give up his This he positively resused to do; upon which M. D'Affry, much to his honour, terminated the business by accepting his resign nation, and granting him 10,000 livres out of the annual profits of the place; and Bartheleniy fet off the next day for Chanteloup. Hewas now in possession of 35,000 livres per annum, 10,000 of which be distributed annually to men of letters in distress, and enjoyed the remainder in a manner becoming a philosopher. He educated and established in the world three nephews; he assisted what remained of his family in Provence; and he collected a numerous and wellchosen library, which some years before his death. the suppression of his places and appointments, he was, at the close of his life, reduced to great difficulties; but was never known to complain; and might be seen daily traverfing Paris on foot, bent double with age and infirmity, and paying his accustomed visits to his respectable friend Madame de Choiseul. In the 5th volume, p. 136, and in the 7th velume, p. 74, of the octavo edition of Anacharsis, he has drawn, the characters of the Duke and Duchess de Choiseul under the names of Phédime and Arsame.

In 1789, he was urged to accept the vacant feat in the French academy; and, though he had feveral times before declined it from prudence and modesty, he at length yielded to the pressing solicitation of his friends, and took his place where his reputation had gone before him, his voyage of Anacharfis having been published in the preceding year. Of this incomparable work, replete with taste and erudition, it is unnecessary to fay more than that it is in the hands of all the world, and that it will be read again and again with unceasing delight and instruction.

In 1790, on the refignation of M. le Noir, librarian to the king, that honourable post was offered to Barthelemy by M. de St. Priest. He declined it however, being unwilling to engage in the detail of an employment that would obstruct his other literary pursuits, especially as he was now occupied in preparing for the press a work he had long meditated, namely, an exact description, and catalogue raisonnée of the rich cabinet which had been so long under his care and inspection. In this favourite ' project, however, he was defeated by the peculiar circumstances of the times.

From the year 1792 there was a visible change in his constitution, and he became subject to fainting sits, which deprived him of his senses for many hours together. He was then 78 years of age, 60 of which he had spent in laborious occupations.

On the 30th of August, 1793, A a 3

he with his nephew, and fix other persons belonging to the public library, were denounced, under pretence of ariffocracy, by persons he had never seen or known. Being then at Madame de Choiseul's, he was removed from her house, and conducted to the prison called Les Magdelonettes. Though, from his great age and bodily infirmities, he was fenfible he could not long furvive the feverity of confinement, Itill he submitted to his fate with that calmness and serenity of mind w ch conscious innocence can alone inspire. So great was the general estimation of his worth and character, that he was met at the prison gates by all the prisoners, who vied with each other in tettimonies of affection and respect; and, in justice to the jailor, Vaubertrand, it must be admitted, that he shewed him every humane attention and regard. A leparate chamber was allotted to him and his nephew; where they received, on the evening of their imprisonment, an early visit from Madame de Choiseul. Such was her senfibility and friendship for Barthelemy upon this occasion, that she, with others of his zealous friends, loft no time in going to the committees of government to convince them of the innocence and purity of the Abbé's conduct. They hastened to rectify the mistake, and declared they had no intention of including this worthy man in the general order of arrest of all persons employed in the public library; and they immediately gave directions for his release; in consequence of which he was before midnight carried back from prison to the house of Madame de Choiseul, whence he had been taken the same morning. In farther tel timony of his virtues and talenty and to compensate in some degree for the infult offered to both, by the momentary fuspicion and imprisonment which he had sustained, in the October following, the office of principal librarian being. vacant by the death of Carra, and the refignation of Chamfort, R was offered to him in the most flattering manner; but he chose to decline it on account of his age and infirmities. These last increased visibly; and, about the beginning of 1795, being then in his 80th year, his end rapidly approached, and was probably hastened by the extreme leverity of the season. He died on the 30th of April with little corporal fuffering, preferring his senses to entirely to the last, that he was reading Horace two hours before his death, and was probably unconscious of its approach.

His figure was tall, and of good proportion; and the structure of his frame seemed well adapted to support the vigorous exertions of his mind. Houdon has sinished an excellent bust of this ornament of his age and country. His relations cherish his memory with filial piety; his friends feel his irreparable; loss with constant regret; to the learned he has left a model of imitation, and to all mankind a useful example.

The following is a lift of his works:

I. Travels of Anacharsis in Greece, in the middle of the 4th century before the Christian æra, 4 vols. 4to. 7 vols. 8vo. Paris, 1788; with a volume of maps, memoirs and descriptions, inserted in the collection of the Academy of Incriptions.

2. On the Pactolus, vol. xxi. p. 19.

3. Remarks on the Medal of Xerxes, ibid, 404.

4. On the Inscription of Amydæ, vol. xxiii. p. 394.

5. Essay towards a Numismatic Paleography, vol. xxiv. p. 30.

6. Differtation on the two Samaritan Medals of Antigonus, King of Judea, ibid. p. 49.

7. Remarks on Medals published by several authors, vol. xxvi. p. 532.

8. Differtation on the Arabian Medals, ibid. p. 557.

9. Reflections on the Alphabet and Language of Palmyra, ibid. P. 577.

10. Memoirs on the Monuments of Rome, vol. xxiii. p. 579.

11. Reflexions on some Phænician Monuments, vol. 30, p. 405.

12 Explanation of the Palestine

Mosaic, ib. p. 503.

Affinity of the Egyptian, Phænician and Grecian Languages, vol. xxxii. p. 212.

14. Remarks on Medals published by different Authors, ib.

p. 671.

Bas-relief, and of the Phænician Infeription which accompanies it, ib. p. 725.

16. Remarks on the Number of Pieces which were represented in the same Day on the Theatre of Athens. vol. xxxix. p. 172.

17. Remarks on the Medals of the Emperor Antonius, vol. xli.

p. 501.

18. Letters to the Authors of the Journal des Scavans: on Phœnician Medals and Inscriptions, in vol. August, 1760, 4to. p. 495; Dec. 1761, p. 871; Sept. and Nov. 1763 on S amaritan Medals, April, 1790. He wrote also many articles in the Collection of Antiquities, by the Count de Caylus. In the Journal des Scavans for April, 1754, and June, 1760. He made the extracts of the Ruins of Balbec and Palmyra. He wrote for M. Bertin a Memoir on the Mexican Paintings; which was loft. He intended to have published a collection of all his Differtations, with alterations and additions; which his nephew hopes one day or other to accomplish.

Character of Erasmus, from Mr. Gibbon's Posthumous Works, published by Lord Shessield.

IF we consider the character of Erasmus, we shall be immediately struck with his extensive erudition; and that, heightened by two circumstances.

First, that he was scarcely ever fixed fix months in a place (excepting at Basil;) that to this wandering life, which deprived him both of books and leifure, must be added, a continued bad state of health, and the constant avocation of a vast correspondence. Secondly, that his learning was all real; and founded on the accurate peruial of the ancient authors. numerous editions he published fufficiently evince it; and befides, those convenient compilations of all forts, where a modern author can learn to be a profound scholar, at a very fmall expence, did not then exist; every thing was to be fought for in the originals them-But besides this learning, which was common to many, Eraf. mus possessed a genius, without which no writer will ever descend to posterity; a genius which could fee through the vain subtleties of the ichoo A 2 4 ichools, revive the laws of criticisin, treat every subject with eloquence and delicacy; fometimes emulate the ancients, often imitate them, and never copy, them. As to his morals, they had the poor merit of being regular. In the nobler part his character I find very deficient. 'A parafite of all the great men of his time, he was neither ashamed to magnify their characters by the lowest adulation, nor to debase his own by the most impudent folicitations, to obtain presents which very often he did not want. The adventure of Eppendorf is another proof how much dearer his money was to him than Notwithstanding his character. these faults, never man enjoyed a greater personal confideration. All the scholars, and all the princes of Europe looked upon him as an oracle. Even Charles the Fifth and Francis the First agreed in this. If we enquire why this happened to him rather than to fome other great men of a merit equal, and perhaps superior to Erasmus, we must say that it was owing to the time when he lived; when the world, awaking from a fleep of a thousand years, all orders of men applied themselves to letters with an enthusiasm which produced in them the highest esteem and veneration for one of their principal Besides, as the general reitorers. attention, from piety, from curiofity, from vanity, and from interest, was directed towards the religious disputes, a great divine was the fathionable character, and all parties endeavoured to attract or to preserve him. But to which of those parties did Erasmus adhere? His writings, and even his conduct, were often equivocal.

The catholics claim him, though they acknowledge that he was often indifcreet. Le Clerc challenges him for the Protestants, though he blames him for not professing what he knew to have been the truth; and attributes his reserve folely to timidity and felf-interest. mus has certainly exposed all the groffer superstitions of the Romith worship to the ridicule of the public; and had his free opinion been taken, I believe he was a protestant upon most of the contested points. But many other motives might restrain him from a declaration. was always persuaded, that any speculative truths were dearly purchased at the expence of practical virtue and public peace. Besides, many confiderations might make him balance as to those truths: prejudices of education, the authority of the fathers, and a natural inclination to fcepticism. Add to this, that really disapproving many things in the Protestant communion, though more in the Romish, by remaining in the loose fituation of a man who was unwilling to quit the religion of his ancestors, he could blame many things in it with freedom; whereas, had he deserted it, he must either have fet up a standard himfelf; or else have enlisted blindly under that of Luther or Æcolam-It is surprizing that Erasmus, who could fee through much more plausible fables, believed firmly in witchcraft.

Anecdotes of the late Dr. James Fordyce. From the European Magazine.

THIS gentleman was one of the twenty children, by one wife, of Provoît Fordyce, of Aberdeen. He received his education at the Marifchal rischai College of that place, and early devoted himself to the minifiry. His first preferment, at least that we know of, was to be minister at Brechin, where he officiated as early as the year 1752. He foon after became minister of Alloa, where he remained until about the year 1760. At that period he came to London, and proposed himself as a candidate for a vacancy at the meeting at Carter's-lane, in which he was unfuccefsful. On this occasion it was objected to him, as strangely inconfistent, for any person who had subscribed the articles of the Scotch confession of faith to offer himself in the character of a minister to a differiting congregation which had so very different a creed. This objection, however, was not fusficiently powerful to prevent his being chosen as coadjutor of Dr. Lawrence, to the Pastorship at Monkwell-street, where he continued to preach to crowded audiences, for a great number of years. In that year he was honoured by the University of Glasgow with the degree of Doctor of In May, 1771, he mar-Divinity. ried Miss Henrietta Cummyng, and in 1775 was involved in a difpute with his coadjutor, the Rev. Thomas Toller, son-in-law of Dr. Lawrence, at first, as it appears in the letters published on the occasion, on account of the omission of fome ceremonials of politeness, which, by want of mutual concessions increased, until the breach became too wide to be healed. On this occasion Dr. Fordyce took a step which was not universally approved of by his brethren the differences: he engaged to do the duty both of Mr. Toller and himself, and caused the former to be ejected, without any charge against him (for he was a man of irreproachable character), from his office in the meeting. From this period, if we are not misinformed, the meeting itself was less attended than before, and on Dr. Fordyce's feeling the infirmities of age growing on him, the congregation by degrees dwindled away, and the house itself has been fince that up. Finding himself incapable of continuing his exertions as a preacher. in the manner he had been used, he retired, first into Hampshire, and then to Bath, where he died the 1st of October, 1796, at the age of 75.

The following is a lift-of Dr. Fordyce's works:

1. The Eloquence of the pulpit. An Ordination Sermon. To which is added, A Charge. 12mo., 1752.

2. An Essay on the Action proper, for the Pulpit. 12mo.

Both these are printed at the end of Theodorus. A Dialogue concerning the Art of Preaching. By Mr. David Fordyce. Third Edition. 12mo. 1755.

3. The Methods of promoting Edification by Public Institutions, An Ordination Sermon. To which is added, A Charge. 12mo. 1754.

These were delivered at the Ordination of Mr. John Gibson, Minister of St. Ninian's, May 9, 1754.

4 The Temple of Virtue. A Dream. 12mo. 1757. The 2d Edition, much altered. 12mo. 1775.

5 The Folly, Infamy, and Mifery of unlawful Pleasure. A Sermon, preached before the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, May 25, 1760. 8vo. 1760.

b. A Sermon, occasioned by the Death of the Rep Dr. Samuel

Lawrence,

La prence, who departed this life Oh. 1, 1760. With an Address at the Interment, 870, 1760

7. Sermons to Young Women.

2 tols 12mg. 1-15.

of the Charaker and Conduct of the Female Sex, and the Advantages to be derived by young Mentrom the foolety of virtuous Women. A Discourse in three parts. Delivered in Monkwell-fireet Chapei, Jan. 1, 1776. Syo. 1776.

9 Addresses to young Men. 2 vols. 12mo. 1777.

ing Spirit of Ropery. A Sermon presched in Monkwell-freet, on 10th of Feb being a day appointed for a General Fath. 8vo. 1779.

well-fireet Meeting, at the Ordination of the Rev. James Lindley. Svo. 1783.—Printed with the Sermon preached by Dr. Hunter on that occasion.

12. Addresses to the Deity. 12mo. 1785.

13. Poems. 12mo. 1786.

Account of the Royal Society of England, from Hutton's Mathematical and Philosophical Dictionary.

The Royal Society of England is an academy or body of persons, supposed to be eminent for their learning, instituted by King Charles the IId, for promoting natural knowledge.

This once illustrious body originated from an assembly of ingenious men, residing in London, who, being inquisitive into natural knowledge, and the new and experimental philosophy, agreed, about the year 1645, to meet weekly on a certain day, to discourse upon such subjects. These meetings, it is hid, were laggefied by Mr. Thescire Hist. a native of the Palatimate in Germany; and they were. held fometimes at Dr. Goddasi's locgings in Wood-firect, forcetimes at a convenient place in Cheapfilie, and fometimes in or near Greiham College. This affembly feems to be that mentioned nater the title of the Invisible, or Principles of Calege, by Mr. Boyle, in some letters written in 1646 and 1547. About the years 1648 and 1545, the company which formed there meetings began to be divided. i'me of the gentlemen removing to. Oxfire, as Dr. Wallis and De. Goddard, where, in conjunction with other gentlemen, they held meetings also, and brought the thudy of natural and experimental philotophy into fashion theses meeting first in Dr. Petty's lodgings atterwards at Dr. Wilkins's aparts ments in Wadham College, and, upon his removal, in the lodgings of Mr. Robert Boyle; while thefe gentlemen who remained in Los-, den continued their meetings as The greater part of the. before. Oxford Society coming to Landst # about the year 1659, they met, once or twice a week in Term-time at Gretham College, till they were dispersed by the public diffractions of that year, and the place of their meeting was made a quarter fes Upon the Restorations in 1660, their meetings were revived, and attended by many gemtlemen, eminent for their character and learning.

They were at length noticed by the government, and the king granted them a charter, first the 15th of July 1662, then a more ample one the 22d of April 1669, and thirdly the 8th of April 1669.

by which they were erected into a corporation, consisting of a president, council and fellows, for promoting natural knowledge, and endued with various privileges and authorities.

Their manner of electing members is by balloting; and two-thirds of the members present are necesfary to carry the election in favour of the candidate. The council confifts of 21 members, including the president, vice-president, treafurer, and two fecretaries; ten of which go out annually, and ten new members are elected instead of them, all chosen on St. Andrew's day. They had formerly also two curators, whose business it was to perform experiments before the fociety.

Each member, at his admission, subscribes an engagement, that he will endeaveur to promote the good of the fociety; from which he may be freed at any time, by fignifying to the prefident that he defires to withdraw.

The charges are five guineas paid to the treasurer at admission; and one shilling per week, or 52s. per year, as long as the person continues a member; or, in lieu of the annual subscripiton, a composition of 25 guineas in one payment.

The ordinary meetings of the fociety are once a week, from November till the end of Trinity term the next summer. At first, the meeting was from three o'clock till Afterwards their fix after noon. meeting was from fix to seven in the evening, to allow more time long series of years, till the hour of meeting was removed, by the present president, to between eight and nine at night, that gentlemen of fashion, as was alleged, might have the opportunity of coming to attend the meetings after dinner.

Their defign is to " make faithful records of all the works of nature or art, which come within their reach; so that the present, as well as after ages may be enabled to put a mark on errors which have been strengthened by long prefcription; to restore truths that have been long neglected; to puth those already known to more various uses; to make the way more pasfable to what remains unrevealed, &c."

To this purpose they have made a great number of experiments and observations on most of the works of nature; 23 ecliples, comets, planets, meteors, mines, plants, earthquakes, inundations, fprings, damps, fires, tides, cur-. rents, the magnet, &c.: motto being Nullius in Verba. They have registered experiments, histories, relations, observations, &c. and reduced them into one common stock. They have, from time to time, published some of the most useful of these, under the title of Philosophical Transactions, &c. usually one volume each year, which were, till lately very respectable, both for the extent or magnitude of them, and for the excellent quality of their contents. The rest, that are not printed, they lay up in their registers.

They have a good library of books, which has been formed, and continually augmenting, by numerous donations. They had also for dinner, which continued for a a museum of curiofities in nature, kept in one of the rooms of their own house in Crane Court, Fleetstreet, where they held their meetings, with the greatest reputation, for many years, keeping registers of the weather, and making other experiments; for all which purpofes those apartments were well adapted. But, disposing of these apartments, in order to remove into those allotted them in Somerset Place, where, having neither room nor convenience for such purposes, the museum was obliged to be dif-. poled of, and their uteful meteorological registers discontinued for many years.

Sir Godfrey Copley, Bart. left five guineas to be given annually to the person who should write the bett paper in the year, under the head of Experimental Philotophy; this reward, which is now changed to a gold medal, is the highest honour the fociety can bestow; and it is conferred on St. Andrew's day; but the communications of late years have been thought of fo little importance, that the prize medal remains foretimes for years undisposed of.

'Indeed this very respectable Society, now confifting of a great propertion of honorary members, who do not usually communicate papers; and many scientific members being difcouraged from making their usual communications, by what is deemed the present arbitrary government of the fociety; the annual volumes have in confequence become of much less importance, both in respect of their bulk and the quality of their contents.

Anecdotes of the late Sir William Chambers. From the European Magazine.

THIS gentleman, whose fame will last as long as the noble building of Somerfet House shall rear its majestic head, was by birth a Swede. It has been faid, that he was descended of the ancient family of Chalmers in Scotland, Barons of Tartas in France, and ' that his father was a merchant, who fuffered much by fupplying Charles XII. with money and goods during his wars, for which he received only the base copper coin of that monarch, struck for the purpose in his emergencies, and, like the French aflignats, afterwards depreciated; by which means the holder was involved in ruin.

At the age of two years. Six William was brought over to England, and at a proper time placed at Rippon school in Yorkshire, where, it is believed, he-continued until he was appointed chief supercargo of the Swedish ships to In this fituation he did China. not remain long, probably not more than one voyage. On quitting this employment he determined to follow the bent of his genius, which led him to defign and architecture.

His first residence in London was in Poland-street; but not, as hat been afferted, in the business of a carpenter. He at an early period displayed the talents he possessed, and foon was confidered as one of the best architects and draftsmen. in Europe. Ilis abilities introduced him to the knowledge of Lord Bute, by whose interest he was appointed drawing-master to his Majesty, then Prince of Wales.

His first work of consequence was Lord Beiborough's villa at Roehampton, which, from his conduct in that business, procured him many other buildings. gave in his plan to Lord Besborough with an estimate as an architect,

architect; but on that nobleman's applying to him to know whether he would build it himself for the money mentioned in the estimate, he consented to undertake it.

It was accordingly finished, and both parties, the employer and the builder, were fatisfied with their bargains, and each with the other.

The intercourse which Sir William had obtained with his majesty foon after his fovereign's accession to the crown, procured for him the laying out and improving the gardens at Kew, which from the nature of the ground, he was obliged to ornament in the Chinese taste. In 1763 he published "Plans, Elevations, Sections, and Perspective Views, of the Gardens and Buildings at Kew, in Surry, the Seat of her Royal Highness the Princes Dowager of Wales;" a magnificent work, in which the architectural defigns were drawn by our author, the views by Meffrs: Kirby, Thomas Sandby, and Marlow, and the engravings by Paul Sandby, Woollett, Major, Grignion, and Rooker. In this work, fir William assigns the reason for his adopting the Chinese style in " The gardens of this instance. Kew," says he, " are not very large, nor is their fituation by any means advantageous; as it is low and commands no prospects. Originally the ground was one continued dead flat: the foil was in general barren, and without either wood or water. With to many difadvantages, it was not easy to produce any thing even tolerable in gardening: but princely munificence and an able director have overcome all difficultics, and converted what was difficulty of ornamenting such a fituation few persons will deny; but as sew will be inclined to desire the introduction of such exotics in places where nature has been more bountiful.

In the year 1771 our architect was announced in the catalogue of the Royal Academy as Knight of the Polar Star, and the next year he published the work which has afforded much entertainment from itself, but more from the admirable piece supposed to be the production of Mr. Mason, entitled "An Heroic Epistle." Sir William Chambers's work was entitled "A Differtation on Oriental Gardening," 4to. which, in the preface, he fays was collected from his own observations in China, from conversations with their Artists, and remarks transmitted to him at different times by travellers. A sketch of it had been published some years before; but the performance itself appearing immediately after Mr. Mason's English Garden, it was invidiously suggested, that the intention of our author was to depreciate Englith gardeners, in order to divert his royal master from his plan of improving the gardens at Richmond as they are to be seen at this time. The horrible and strange devices described to exist in the Chinese gardens have been much ridiculed, but are no more than had been before published by father Attiret, in his account of the Emperor of China's gardens near Pekin, translated by Mr. Spence, under the name of Sir Harry Beaumont, in 1753, and fince republished in Dodsley's Fugitive Pieces.

director have overcome all diffi- Sir William Chambers' next cultics, and converted what was work was on Civil Architecture; once a defert into an Eden." The and in the year 1775, on the building of Somerfet House, he was appointed to conduct that great national work. He was also comptroller general to the works of the king, architect to the queen and the princels dowager, treasurer to the royal academy, member of the royal academy of arra at Florence, and of the royal academy of architecture at Paris.

After a long illness he died, at a very advanced age, the 8th of March 1796; leaving a fon, married to Miss Rodney, and three daughters, the wives of Mr. Cotton. Mr. Innes, and Mr. Harward, with a confiderable fortune, acquired honourably, and enjoyed with hospitality bordering on inagnificence; and what is fill better, quitting life with the regret and concern of all those with whom he had been connected; effectued, loved, and lamented, by all with whom he had any intercourse either as an artiff or as a man.

On the 18th of March his remains were interred in the Poets' Corner, Westminster Abbey, being attended by his fon, his fonsin-law, his executors, the dean of Lincoln, minister of the parish. Mr. Penneck of the museum, and a few other friends, the president, officers, and council of the Royal Academy, and the clerks of the Board of Works. In the Abbey they were joined by the mafterworkmen belonging to the Board of Works, who attended unfelicited, to tellify their regret for the lois, and their effects for the memory of a man, by whom their claims had ever been examined with attention, and decided with justice, and by whom themselves were always we are uncertain. treated with mildness, courtery, and affability.

in Account of the late James Marphers jen, Fja. From the fame.

THIS gentleman was descended from one of the mott antient famillies in the north of Scotland, being confin-german to the chief of the clan of the Macpherious, who deduce their origin from the antient Catti of Germany. He was both at Euthven in the county of Inverness, in the latter end of the year 1739, and received the first rulements of his education at bounds from whence he was fent to the grammar ichool of Inverneis, where his genius became to confpicuous. that his relations, contrary to-their. original intention, determined to breed him to a learned profession. With this view, he was fent faccellively to the universities of Aberdeen and Edinburgh, in the last of which he finithed his studies.

While at the university, he exercifed his poetical talents, which, however, were not (if a few pelfages of Offician are excepted) of the first order. In the year 1758, her printed at Edinburgh a poem iti. fix cantes, intitled, "The High lander," in 12mo. This perform mance is a tissue of fustian and abfurdity, feeble, and in fome parts ridiculous, and shews little or no talent in that art of verification-In a thort time the author was fend. fible himfelf of its faults, and, it je faid, endeavoured to suppress it We shall, therefore, not revive-, this abortive effort by any exe tract.

It was intended that he should enter into the service of the church; but whether he ever took orders Mr. Gray speaks of him as a young clergyman,* but David Hume probably more truly describes him as "a modest sensible young man, not fettled in any living, but employed as a private tutor in Mr. Grahamof Balgowan's family, a way of life which he is not fond of." was in the year 1760, when he furprized the world by the publication of "Fragments of Antient Poetry, collected in the Highlands of Scoland, and translated from the Galic or Erse language." These Fragments, which were declared to be genuine remains of antient Scottish poetry, at their first appearance delighted every reader; and fome very good judges, and amongst the rest Mr. Gray, were extremely warm in their praises. As other specimens were said to be recoverable, a subscription fet on foot to enable our author to quit the family he was then in, and undertake a mission into the Highlands, to fecure them. engaged in the undertaking, and foon after produced the works whose authenticity has fince occafioned fo much controversy, but which now feem generally admitted to be the works of Mr. Macpherson himself.

In 1762 he published "Fingal, an ancient epic poem, in books," together with feveral other poems, composed by Ossian, the fon of Fingal, translated from the Galic language, 4to. The subject of this epic poem is an invation of Ireland, by Swaran, king of Lochlin. Cuchullin, general of the Irith tribes during the minority of Cormac, king of Ireland, upon intelligence of the invasion, assembled his forces near Tura, a cattle on the coast of Ulster: poem opens with the landing of Swaram; councils are held, battles fought, and Cuchullin is at last totally defeated. In the mean time Fingal, king of the Highlands of Scotland, whose aid had been solicited before the enemy landed, arrived, and expelled them from the This war which continued but fix days, and as many nights, is, including the episodes, the story of the poem. The scene the heath of Lena, near a mountain called Cromleach in Ulster. This, poem also was received with equal applause as the preceding fragments.

The next year he produced. " Temora," an ancient epic poem, in eight books: together with feveral other poems composed by Offian, fon of Fingal, 4to. which, though well received, found the public fomewhat less disposed to bestow the same measure of applause. Though these poems had been examined by Dr. Blair and others, and their authenticity afferted, there were not wanting fome of equal reputation for critical abilities who either doubted or declared their disbelief of the genuineness of them. By this time the author feems to have divested himself of that modesty which Mr. Hume formerly commended, treated his antagonists in an arrogant manner, not calculated to remove any impressions they had received.

" Since the publication," fays he, " of the last collection of Offian's poems, many infinuations have been made, and doubts arisen, concerning their authenticity. (ha H shall probably hear more of the fame kind after the prefent poems make their appearance. Whether thefe suspicions are suggested by prejudice, or are only the effects of ignorance of facts, I thall not pretend to determine. To me they give no concern, as I have it always in my power to remove them. An incredulity of this kind is natural to persons who confine all merit to their own age and country. These are generally the weakest as well as the most ignorant of the Indolently confined to a people. place, their ideas are very narrow and circumferibed. It is ridiculous enough, to fee fuch people as these are branding their ancestors with the despicable appellation of Barbarians. Sober reason can eatily differn where the title ought to be fixed with more propriety.

" As prejudice is always the effect of ignorance, the knowing, the men of true tafte, despise and difmits it. If the poetry is good, and the characters natural and firiking, to them it is a matter of indifference, whether the heroes were born in the little village of Angles in Juteland, or natives of the barren heaths of Caledonia. That honour which nations derive from ancestors worthy or renowned is merely ideal. It may buoy up the minds of individuals, but it contributes very little to their importance in the eyes of others. But of all those prejudices which are incident to narrow minds, that which measures the merit of performances by the vulgar opinion concerning the country which produced them, is certainly the most ridiculous. Ridiculous, however, as it is, few have the courage to reject it; and I am thoroughly convinced, that a few quaint lines of a Roman or Greek epigrammatic, if dug out of the ruins of Herco laneum, would meet with more cordial and universal applause that all the most beautiful and natural rhapsodies of all the Celtic bard and Scandinavian scalders that ever existed."

After the publication of Temor Mr. Macpherson was called to employment which withdrew his for fome time both from the mult and his country. In 1764 govern or Johnstone was appointed child of Peníacola, and Mr. Macpher accompanied him as his fecretar If we are not mistaken, some die ference arose between the prince pal and his dependent, and the parted before their return to English land. Having contributed his aid. to the fettlement of the civil go vernment of that colony, he vifite several of the West-India island and fome of the provinces of North America, and returned to England in the year 1766.

He foon returned to his studies and in 1771 produced "An Intraduction to the History of Grein Britain and Ireland," 4to. a work which, he fays, "without any care the ordinary incitements to literary labour, he was induced to process in by the sole motive of private 🗱 The subject of this musement." performance, it might reasonably be supposed, would not excite any violent controversal acrimony; yet. neither it nor its author con escape from several most gross and bitter invectives.

His next performance producted and him neither reputation or profit. In 1773 he published "The Iliad of Homer" translated, in two volumes, 4to. a work fraught with vanity

y and felf-confequence, and a met with the most mortifyeception from the public. condemned by the critics, ried by the wits, and neglected world. Some of his friends, particularly Sir John Elliott, evoured to refeue it from cont, and force it into notice. ' fuccels was not equal to efforts. After a very acute, ed, and witty critique, which niverfally atcribed to a gentlestill living, and inserted in ritical Review, the new tranu was confessed to possess no and ever fince has been gned to oblivion.

out this time feems to be the d of Mr. Macpherson's literary fications. In 1773, Dr. Johnand Mr. Boswell made the of the Hebrides; and in the e of it, the former took some to examine into the proofs of uthenticity of Oslian. The of his enquiries he gave to ublic in 1775, in his narraf the Tour, and his opinion unfavourable. " I believe (i. e. the poems, fays he) existed in any other form that which we have feen. The or author never could shew iginal; nor can it be shewn y other. To revenge reasonincredulity by refusing evi-: is a degree of infolence with the world is not yet acted; and stubborn audacity is If refuge of guilt. It would fy to shew it if he had it; thence could it be had? It is ong to be remembered, and nguage had formerly nothing en. He has doubtlefs infertmes that circulate in popular s, and may have translated wandering ballads, if any L. XXXVIII.

can be found; and the names and fome of the images being recollected, make an inaccurate auditor imagine, by the help of Caledonian bigotry, that he has formerly heard the whole." Again, have yet, supposed no imposture but in the publisher, yet I am far from certain, that some translations have not been lately made, that may now be obtruded as parts of the original work. Credulity on one part is a strong temptation. to deceit on the other, especially to deceit of which no personal injury is the confequence, and which flatters the author with his own ingenuity. The Scots have fomething to plead for their easy reception of an improbable fiction: they are feduced by their fondness for their supposed ancestors. A Scotchman must be a sturdy moralist who does... not love Scotland better than truth: he will always love it better than enquiry, and, if falshood flatters his vanity, will not be very diligent to detectit. Neither ought the English to be much influenced by Scotch authority; for of the past and present itate of the whole Erfe nation, the Lowlanders are at least as ignorant To be ignorant is as ourielves. painful; but it is dangerous to quiet our uneafiness by the delufive opiate of hasty persuafion."

The opinions above declared by Dr. Johnson incensed our author so much, that he was prompted by his evil genius to send a menacing letter to his antagonist, which produced the severe, spirited, and sarcastic reply which has been already printed in the European magazine. Whether his warmth abated, or whether he had been made sensible of his solly by the interposition of friends, we know not; but certain it is, we hear no more afterwards of this author is supposed to have assisted Mr. Nicol in an answer to Dr. Johnson's Tour, printed in 1779.

b ridiculous

In 1775 Mr. Macpherson published "The History of Great-Britain, from the restoration to the accession of the house of Hanover," in two vols. 4to. a work which has been decried with much clamour, but without much argument or proof. The author appears to have been influenced by some prejudices in favour of the Tory party; but his performance as far as we have had an opportunity of comparing his narrative with his authorities. is not liable to the censure thrown out upon it. In this publication he certainly acted with great fairness, as along with it he published the proofs upon which his facts were founded, in two quarto volumes, entitled, "Original Papers, containing the fecret History of Great Britain, from the reltoration to the accession of the house of Hanover. To which are prefixed, extracts from the Life of James II. as written by himself." These papers were chiefly collected by Mr. Carte, but are not of equal au-They however clear up thority. many obscurities, and set the characters of many persons in past times in a different light from that in which they have been usually viewed.

Soon after this period, the tide of fortune flowed very rapidly in Mr. Macpherson's favour, and his talents and industry were amply sufficient to avail himself of every favourable circumstance which arose. The resistance of the colonies called for the aid of a ready writer to combat the arguments of the Americans, and to give force to the reasons which influenced the conduct of government, and he was selected for the purpose, Among other things-(of which wa should be glad to give a more particular account) he wrote 4. pamphlet, which was circulated with much industry, entitled "The Rights of Great-Britain afferted against the claims of the Colonical being an answer to the declaration of the General Congress," 870. 1770, and of which many editions. were published. He also was the author of "A short History of the, Opposition during the last Session, of Parliament," 8vo. 1779, a pamphlet which, on account of the merit, was by many ascribed to Mr. Gibbon.

But a more lucrative employ: ment was conferred on him about this time. He was appoint. ed agent to the nabob of Arcot. and in that capacity exerted by talents in several appeals to the public in behalf of his client. Among others, he published." Let. ters from Mahommed Ali Khang Nabob of Arcot, to the Court of Directors. To which is annexed a State of Facts relative to Tanjore. with an Appendix of Original: Papers," 4to. 1777; and he was supposed to be the author of "The History and Management of the East-India Company, from its Origin in 1600 to the present Times. vol. I. containing the Affairs of the Carnatic; in which the Rights. of the Nabob are explained, and the Injustice of the Company proved." 4to. 1779.

In his capacity of Agent to the Nabob, it was probably thought requisite that he should have a sent in the British parliament. He was accordingly in 1780 chosen member for Camelford, but we do not me collect

It that he ever attempted to in the house. He was also sen in 1784 and 1790.

r a few years last past his n began to fail, and he red to his native country in extion of receiving benefit from nange of air. He continued ver to decline, and after ling some time, died at his seat llevue, in Inverness, on the of February 1796.

appears to have died in very at circumstances, and by his lated June 1793, gave various ties and legacies to feveral is to a great amount. bequeathed 1000l, to John ensic, of Figtree court, in the le, to defray the expence of ng and publishing Oslian in iginal. He directed 3col. to 1 out in erecting a monument memory, in some conspicuua ion at Bellevue aforesaid, dered that his body should be I from Scotland, and interthe Abbey-church of Wetter, the city wherein he had the greatest and best part of was accordingly brought he place where he died, and in the poets-corner of the 1.

ing history of Don Pedro and 1 Igne≈ de Castro. From Mur-Travels in Portugal.

ERE are but few personages ed in history, who have been celebrated by dramatic than this princess. There een no less than five trage-rmed from her pitiful narviz, two in English, one nch, one in Spanish, and Portuguese. The latter,

s, approaches the nearest to the truth of history, and is not inferior in point of poetical merit. The author, Senhor Nicole Luis, had no occasion to resort to siction to heighten the passions of an audience, as the simple facts are sufficient to fill up all the scenes of pity and terror, and to shew to what lengths love and revenge are capable of transporting the human-mind.

The subject of this tragical piece is as follows: Don Pedro, son of Alonso the fourth, king of Portugal and heir apparent to the crown, having fallen in love with a lady of the court, named Dona Ignez de Castro, thought he could not share the crown which awaited him with a more amiable person. She united to all the charms of beauty, the most graceful and accomplished manners. The Prince, waving all considerations of birth and fortune, was privately married to her by the bishop of Guarda.

Notwithstanding the nuptials were performed with all the secrefy imaginable, yet they reached the king's ear, who had premeditated a consort for Don Pedro in the king of Castile's daughter. He questioned him as to the truth of the report; but, knowing his father's arbitrary disposition, he thought it prudent then to conceal the sact.

The nobility also had intimation of the marriage, and the preference given to Ignez had awakened their jealousy. Hence they took every opportunity of representing her as a woman of the greatest ambition, and pretended that very fatal confequences were to be apprehended from such an alliance; they also condemned the prince as a rash and disobedient son.

The king, who was a man of Bb2 weak weak understanding, gave car to their calumny, and they worked upon his passions to that degree, that he resolved to murder the unfortunate princess. Accordingly he set out to perpetrate the horrid deed, accompanied by three of his courtiers, and a number of armed men.

Dona Ignez at this time resided in Coimbra, in the palace of Sonta Clara, where she passed her time in the most private manner, educating her children, and attending to the duties of her domestic asfairs.

The prince, unfortunately, was abroad on a hunting party when the king arrived. The beautiful victim came out to meet him, with her two infant children, who clung about his knees, for aming aloud for mercy. She profirates herfelf at his feet, bathes them with tears, and supplicates pity for her children, beseeching him to banish her to some remote desert, where she would gladly wander an exile with her babes.

The feelings of nature arrested his arm, just raised to plunge a dagger into her breast. But his counsellors urging the necessity of her death, and reproaching him for his disregard to the welfare of the nation, he relapsed into his former resolution, and commanded them to dispatch her! at which they rushed forward, regardless of the cries of innocence and beauty, and instantly struck off her head.

Soon after the above transaction the prince arrived; but, alas! found those eyes that were wont to watch his return with impatience, closed in death. The sight of his beloved Ignez weltering in gore filled his mind with distraction, and kindled every spark of revenge within his foul. In all the agony of rage, he called aloud on the avenging hand of Heaven to punish those monsters who deprived him of all he held dear upon earth.

As foon as her remains were interred, he put himself at the head of an army, who sympathized with his diffress; they carried fire and fword through the adjacent provinces, and laid waste the estates The royal murderers. of the troops could not oppose them; they fled at the appearance of the gallant avengers of innocence. But the King, wretched man! could not fly from himself; the cries of his grand-children still echoed in his ears, and the bleeding image of their unfortunate mother was constantly before his eyes. length commiserated his situation. and he expired full of repentance, for his accumulated crimes. was an undutiful fon, an unnatural brother, and a cruel father.

The prince now alcended the throne, in the thirty-seventh year of his age. He no fooner obtained the power, than he medicated to revenge the death of his beloved The three murderers: Ignez. namely, Pedro Coello, Diogo Lopez Pacheo, and Alvaro Gonfalvez, had fled into Castile, previous to the death of the late king. The prince ordered them to be tried on a charge of high treason; and being found guilty, their estates were confiscated. Next he contrived to feize their persons, by agreeing with the king of Castile, that both should reciprocally deliver up the Portuguese and Castilian fugitives who fought protection in their respective dominions. Gonsalvez and Coello were accordingly arrested, and sent in chains to Portugal; Pacheo escaped into France.

and

The king was at Santerem when the delinquents were brought to him; he instantly ordered them to be laid on a pyre that was previously formed, contiguous to which he had a banquet prepared. Before the torch was kindled, and whilst they agonized at every pore under the most lingering tortures, their hearts were cut out, one at his breast, the other at his back. Lastly, the pyre was set on a blaze, in presence of which he dined, whilst they evaporated in slames.

Having thus far appealed his infatiable thirst of revenge, he ordered his marriage with Dona Ignez to be published throughout the kingdom; then her body was taken out of the sepulchre, covered with regal robes, and placed on a magnificent throne, around which his ministers assembled, and did homage to their lawful queen.

After this ceremony, her corpse was translated from Coimbra to Alcobaca, with a pomp hitherto unknown in the kingdom; though the distance between these two places is fifty-two miles, yet the road was lined on both sides all the way, with people holding lighted tapers. The funeral was attended by all the noblemen and gentlemen in Portugal, dressed in long mourning cloaks; their ladies also attended, dressed in white mourning veils.

The cloud which the above difafter cast over the mind of Don Pedro was never totally dispersed; and as he lived in a state of celibacy the remainder of his life, agreeably to his vow, there was nothing to divert his attention from ruminating on the fate of his beloved spouse. The impression her death made on him was strongly characterised, not only in the tortures he inslicted on her murderers, but also in all the acts of his administration, which, from their severity, induced some to give him the appellation of Pedro the Cruel; by others he was called Pedro the just; and, upon the whole, it appears that the last title most properly appertained to him.

Extrass from the correspondence of Mr. Gibbon, with various men of eminence in the literary World. From the Miscellaneous Works of Edward Gibbon, esq.

Extract of a Letter from Dr. Robertson to Mr. Straban, dated Edinburyh College, March 15, 1776.

* Since my last 1 have read Mr. Gibbon's history with much attention, and great pleafure. is a work of very high merit in-He possesses that industry of refearch, without which no man deserves the name of an historian. His narrative is perspicuous and interesting; his style is elegant and forcible, though in some pailages I think rather too laboured, and in others too quaint. But thefe defects are amply compensated by the beauty of the general flow of language, and a very peculiar happinels in many of his expressions. I have traced him in many of his quotations, (for experience has taught me to suspect the accuracy. of my brother pen-men,) and I find he refers to no passage but what he has feen with his own I hope the book will be as fuccessful as it deserves to be.

have

Bb3

374] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

have not yet read the two last chapters, but am forry, from what I have heard of them, that he has taken such a tone in them as will give great offence, and hurt the sale of the book.

Mr. Ferguson to Mr. Gibbon.
Edinburgh, March 19th, 1776.
DEAR SIR.

I received, about eight days ago, after I had been reading your hiftory, the copy which you have been to good as to fend me, and for which I now trouble you with my thanks. But even if I had not been thus called upon to offer you my respects, I could not have refrained from congratulating you on the merit, and undoubted fuccess, of this valuable performance. persons of this place whose judgment you will value most, agree in opinion, that you have made a great addition to the classical literature of England, and given us what Thucydides proposed leaving with his own countrymen, a potlession in perpetuity. Men of a certain modely and merit always exceed the expectations of their friends; and it is with very great pleafure I tell you, that although you must have observed in me every mark of confideration and regard, that this is, neverthelets, the case, I receive your instruction, and fludy your model, with great deference, and join with every one elfe, in applauding the extent of your plan, in hands to well able to execute it. Some of your readers, I find, were impatient to get at the fifteenth chapter, and began at that place. I have not heard much of their criticism, but am told that many doubt of your or-Thodoxy. I with to be always of the charitable side, while I own you have proved that the clearest stream may become foul when it comes to run over the muddy bottom of human nature. I have not stayed to make any particular remarks. If any should occur on the second reading, I shall not fail to lay in my claim to a more needed, and more useful admonition from you, in case I ever produce any thing that merits your attention. And am, with the greatest respect, Dear Sir, Your most obliged, and most humble Servant.

ADAM FERGUSON.

Extrast of a Letter from Mr. David Hume to Mr. Strahan, dated Edinburgh, April 8th, 1776.

* I am very much taken with Mr. Gibbon's Roman history, which came from your press, and am glad to hear of its fuccess. will no books of reputation now be printed in London but through, your hands and Mr. Cadell's. - The author tells me, that he is already preparing a fecond edition. folved to have given him my advice with regard to the manner of printing it; but as I am now writing to you, it is the same thing; He ought certainly to print the number of the chapter at the head, of the margin; and it would be better if something of the contents, could also be added. One is also plagued with his notes, according to the present method of printing the book: when a note is announced ed, you turn to the end of the volume; and there you often find nothing but a reference to an authority. All these authorities ought only to be printed at the margin, or the bottom of the page. fire fire a copy of my new edition should be sent to Mr. Gibbon; as wishing that gentleman, whom I so highly value, should peruse me in a form the least impersect to which I can bring my work.

is another excellent work that has come from your press this winter; but I have ventured to tell him, that it requires too much thought to be as popular as Mr. Gibbon's.

Mr. Ferguson to Mr. Gibbon.

Edinburgh, April 18th, 1776. Dear Sir,

I SHOULD make fome apology for not writing you fooner an an-Iwer to your obliging letter; but if you should honour me frequently with such requests, you will find, that, with very good intentions, I am a very dilatory and irregular correspondent. I am sorry to tell you, that our respectable friend [Mr. Hume] is still declining in his health; he is greatly emaciated, and loses strength. He talks familiarly of his near prospect of dying. His mother, it seems, died under the fame symptoms; and it appears to little necessary, or proper, to flatter him, that no one attempts it. I never observed his understanding more clear, or his humour more pleasant and lively. He has a great aversion to leave the tranquillity of his own house, to go in fearch of health among inns' and hostlers. And his friends here gave way to him for fome time; but now think it necessary that he should make an effort to try what change of place and air, or any thing else Sir John Pringle may advise, can do for him. I left him this morning in the mind to comply in this article, and I hope that he will be prevailed on to set out in a few days. He is just now fixty-five.

I am very glad that the pleasure you give us, recoils a little on yourself, through our feeble testimony. I have, as you suppose, been employed, at any intervals of leifure or rest I have had for some years, in taking notes, or collecting materials, for a history of the distractions that broke down the Roman Republic, and ended in the establishment of Augustus and his immediate successors. The compliment you are pleased to pay, I cannot accept of, even to my sub-Your subject now appears with advantages it was not supposed to have had; and I suspect that the magnificence of the mouldering ruin will appear more striking, than the fame building when the view is perplexed with scaffolding, workmen, and disorderly lodgers, and the ear is stunned with the noise of destructions and repairs, and the alarms of fire. night which you begin to describe is folemn, and there are gleams of light superior to what is to be found in any other time. I comfort myfelf, that as my trade is the study of human nature, I could not fix on more interesting corner of it, than the end of the Roman Re-Whether my compilations should ever deserve the attention of any one besides myse's, must remain to be determined after they are farther advanced. I take the liberty to trouble you with the inclosed for Mr. Smith, whose uncertain stay in London makes me at a loss how to direct for him. You have both such reason to be pleased with the world just now,

Bb4 iha

NATURAL HISTORY.

Some Particulars in the Anatomy of a Whale. By Mr. John Abernethy. From the Philopophical I rans-actions, Part 1.

THERE are some particulars in the anatomy of the whale, which, I believe, have either entirely efcaped, or have not been as yet communicated to the public. parts which in the whale correspond in fituation and office with the mesenterie glands of other animals, differ confiderably from those glands in structure. These peculiarities are not only curious in themselves, but are illustrative of circumstances hitherto esteemed obfcure, in the anatomy and economy of the lymphatic glands in general... I therefore take the li-· berty of submitting the following account of them to the infpection of this learned lociety.

The animal,: from which the parts that I am going to describe were taken, was a male, of the genus named by Linnaus balana.

Being definous of making an anatomical preparation, to shew the distribution of the mesenteric vessels and lackeds of the whale, I procured for this purpose a broad portion of the mesentery with the annexed intestine; and proceeded I in the first place to inject the blood vetlel. The mesentery had been cut from the animal as close to the spine as possible: had a less portion been taken away, the parts which I am about to describe would have been lest with the body, for they are situated upon the origin of the blood vessels belonging to the intestines; and this, perhaps, is the reason why they have not been observed before.

When I threw a red-coloured waxen injection into the mesenteric artery, I saw it meandering in the ramifications of that vessel; but at the same time I observed it collecting in several separate heaps, about the roots of the mesenterys which soon encreased to the size of eggs. At the time, I imagined that the vessels had been ruptured, and that the injection in consequence had become extravasated; but I was conscious that no improper degree of force had been used in propelling the injection.

I next threw some yellow injection into the vein, when similar phænomena occured; the branches of the vein were filled, but at the same time the masses of wax near the root of the mesentery were increased by a surther essuino of the injection. These lumps had now acquired a spherical form, and

CHARACTERS.

I know not how far his veracity, in point of circumstances, may safely be trusted. It was his original defign to penetrate through the North East Passage; and he actually followed the coast of Asia as high as the latitude of 67° 35', till his progress was stopped by the ice, in a tireight between the two continents, which was only seven leagues broad. Thence he descended along the coast of America, as low as Cape Mendocin; but was repulsed by contrary winds, in his attempts to reach the port of Acapulco. The journal of his Voyage, with his original charts, is now at Versailles, in the Deput des ffaires Etrangeres; and if you conceived that it would be of any use to you for a second edition, I would try what might be obtained: though I am not ignorant of that mean jealousy which you yourself have experienced, and fo deservedly stigmatised. I am, &c.

Dr. Robertsun to Mr. Gibbon.

SIR,

I HAD the honour of your obliging letter, and I should be a very proud man indeed, if I were not vain of the approbation which you are pleased to bestow upon me. As you will now have had an opportunity to peruse the book, which you had only seen when you wrote to me, I indulge myself in the hopes, that the tavourable opinion you had formed of it, is not dimiof the age and country in which "wards obtaining a copy of both;

we live, that men of letters can enter the same walk of Science, and go on fuccessfully; without feeling one fentiment of envy or rivalship. In the intercourse between Mr. Hume and me, we always found fomething to blame, as well as some bing to commend. 'I have received frequently very valuable criticilms on my performances. from him; and I have fometimes ventured to offer him my firictures on his works: Permit me to hope for the same indulgence from you. If, in reading the History of America, any thing, either in the matter or style, has occurred to you as reprehensible, I will deem it a most obliging favour if you will communicate it freely to me. I am certain of profiting by fuch a communication.

'I return you thanks for your frank offer of executing any literary commission for me. I accept it without ceremony, and am flattered with the idea of receiving fuch aid from your hands. I knew nothing of Beniofiki's 'Adventures, but what was published in fome newspapers. If one can rely on his veracity, what he relates must be very interesting to me. If you had been writing the History of America, the question concerning the mode of peopling it, might not perhaps have occupied your attention very much. But it was proper for me to confider it more fully. Beniofiki (if he may be credited) has feen what it may be nished. I am much pleased with uleful for me' to know. I can see your mentioning my friendship with no reason why the Court of France Mr. Hume; I have always con- should be shy about communicatsidered that as one of the most ing his journal, and the charts fortunate and honourable circum- which illustrate it; possibly my stances of my life. It is a felicity name max operate somewhat to-

NATURAL HISTORY.

Some Particulars in the Anatomy of a By Mr. John Aberneiby. From the Philosophical I rankactions, Part 1.

THERE are some particulars in the anatomy of the whale, which, I believe, have either entirely efcaped, or have not been as yet communicated to the public. The parts which in the whale correspond in fituation and office with the mesenteric glands of other animals, differ confiderably from those glands in structure. These peculiarities are not only curious in themselves, but are illustrative of circumstances hitherto esteemed obscure, in the anatomy and economy of the lymphatic glands in general. I therefore take the li-· berty of fubmitting the following account of them to the infpection of this learned lociety.

The animal,: from which the parts that I am going to describe were taken, was a male, of the genus named by Linnaus balaina. ... Being defirous of anaking an anatomical preparation, to shew the distribution of the mesenteric vessels and lacteals of the whale, "I procured for this purpose a broad portion of the mesentery with the annexed intestine; and proceeded in the first place to inject the blood veilel. The mesentery had been cut from the animal as close to the fpine as possible: had a less portion been taken away, the parts which I am about to describe would have been left with the body, for they are fituated upon the origin of the blood vessels belonging to the intestines; and this, perhaps, is the reason why they have not been obferved before.

J. 4.

When I threw a red-coloured waxen injection into the melenteric artery, I saw it meandering in the ramifications of that veffel; but at the same time I observed it collecting in feveral separate heaps, about the roots of the mesentery's which soon encreased to the size of eggs. the time, I imagined that the velfels had been ruptured, and that the injection in consequence had become extravalated; but I was conscious that no improper degree of force had been used in propelling the injection.

I next threw some yellow injection into the vein, when similar phænomena occured; the branches of the vein were filled, but at the fame time the masses of wax near the root of the mesentery were increased by a further effusion of These lumps had the injection. now acquired a spherical form, and some of them were of the size of an orange.

and

After the injection had become cold, I cut into the mesentery, in order to remove these balls of wax; when I found that they were contained in bags, in which I also obferved a flimy and bloody-coloured fluid. On the inner surface of these bags a greater number of small arteries and veins terminated; from the mouths of which the injection had poured into their cavities. There were seven of these bags in that piece of mesentery which I had to examine; but I am not able to determine what number belonged to the animal; for I do not know whether the portion of mesentery that I possessed was complete. Having removed the injection from these bags, I observed on the infide of them a foft whitish subapparently containing a plex us of lacteal vessels. This substance entered the bags at that part of them which was nearest to the intestines, and went out at the part next to the fpine. I now poured fome quickfilver into those lacteals which appeared to lead to this foft substance; the quickfilver foon entered the vessels which were contained in it, and thus its nature was ascertained. A number of lacteals having entered one of these bags were observed to communicate with each other, then again to separate, and form other vessels, which went out of the bag. It was fome time before the quickfilver passed through the plexus of vessels contained in the first bag, but after having pervaded it. it passed on to a second bag, in which was concealed a fimilar plexus of lacteals. The quickfilver permeated these last vessels with much greater facility than it did the former, and quickly ran out of the large lacteals which were divided at the origin of the melentery. Besides those absorbents which passed through the bags in the the manner described, there were great numbers of others, which terminated by open orifices in When quickevery part of them. filver was poured into any of the lacteals, which were found near the fides of the bags, it immediately ran in a stream into their cavities. I introduced about a dozen briftles through as many lacteals, into different parts of two of these bags. These were doubtless few, in comparison to the whole number which terminated in them, but as the meientery was fat, and the vessels were fmall, more could not eafily be passed.

I afterwards stuffed two of the bags with horse-hair, dried them, and preserved them as an anatomical In this state great preparation. numbers of arteries and veins, but chiefly of the former vessels, are feen terminating on their inside, in the fame indistinct manner as the foramina I bebesii appear when the cavities of the heart are laid open: the briftles also render vi-, fible the termination of a certain number of lacteals. I examined the fides of these bags, which were moderately thick and firm; but I did not fee any thing which, from its appearance, I could call a muscular itructure.

From the circumstances that have been related, it appears, that in the whale there are two ways by which the chyle can pass from the intestines into the thoracic dact;

[376] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

that I hope you are pleased with each other.

I am, with the greatest respect,

Dear Sir,

Your most obedient,

And most humble Servant,

ADAM FERGUSON.

Mr. Gibbon to Dr. Robertson.
Paris, 1777.

SIR,

WHEN I ventured to affume the character of historian, the first, the most natural, but at the same time most ambitious, with which I entertained, was to obtain the approbation of Dr. Robertson and of Mr. Hume; two names which friendship united, and which pofterity will never separate. I shall not therefore attempt to diffemble, though I cannot eafily express, the pleafure which I received from your obliging letter, as well as from the intelligence of your most valuable present. The satisfaction which I thould otherwife have enjoyed, in common with the public, will now be heightened by a fentiment of a more personal and flattering natime; and I thall frequently whifper to myself, that I have in some measure deserved the esteem of the writer whom I adinire.

A short excursion which I made to this place, during the summer months, has occasioned some delay in my receiving your letter, and will prevent my possessing, till my return, the copy of your history, which you so politely desired Mr. Strahan to send me. But I have already gratified the eagerness of my impatience; and although I was obliged to return the book much sooner than I could have wished, I have seen enough to convince me, that the present publication will support, and, if posfible, will extend the fame of the author; that the materials are collected with diligence, and arranged with fkill; that the first book contains a learned fatisfactory account of the progress of discovery; that the achievements, the dangers, and the crimes, of the Spanish adventurers are related with a temperate spirit; and that the most original, perhaps the most curious, portion, of the history of human manners is at length refcued from the hands of fophists and declaimers. Lord Stormont, and the few in this capital, who have had an opportunity of perusing the history of America, unanimously concur in the same fentiments. Your work is already become a favourite topic of public convertation; and Mr. Suard is repeatedly pressed, in my hearing, to fix the time when his translation will appear.

I flatter myself you will not abandon your defign of viliting London next winter; as I already anticipate, in my own mind, the adva tages which I 'shall derive' from to pleasing and fo honourable a connection: In the mean while, A I thould effect myfelf happy, if you could think of any literary commission, in the execution of which I might be useful to you'st Paris, where I propole to flav till very near the meeting of Parlia-Let me, for inflance, fugment gest an enquiry, which cannot be indifferent to you, and which might, perhaps, be within my reach. A few days ago I dined with Beniofiki, the famous adventurer, who escaped from his exile at Kamschatska, and returned into Europe by Japan and China, His narrative was amufing, though

I know

I know not how far his veracity, in point of circumstances, may safely be trusted. It was his original defign to penetrate through the North East Passage; and he actually followed the coast of Asia as high as the latitude of 67° 35', till his progress was stopped by the ice, in a itreight between the two continents, which was only feven leagues broad. Thence he descended along the coast of America, as low as Cape Mendocin; but was repulsed by contrary winds, in his attempts to reach the port of Acapulco. The journal of his Voyage, with his original charts, is now at Versailles, in the Depot des faires Etrangeres; and if you conceived that it would be of any use to you for a second edition, I would try what might be obtained: though I am not ignorant of that mean jealousy which you yourself have experienced, and fo deservedly stigmatised. I am, &c.

Dr. Robertson to Mr. Gibbon.

I HAD the honour of your obliging letter, and I should be a very proud man indeed, if I were not vain of the approbation which you are pleased to bestow upon me. As you will now have had an opportunity to peruse the book, which you had only feen when you wrote to me, I indulge myself in the hopes, that the tavourable opinion you had formed of it, is not diminished. I am much pleased with your mentioning my friendship with Mr. Hume; I have always confidered that as one of the most fortunate and honourable circumstances of my life. It is a selicity name may operate somewhat toof the age and country in which wards obtaining a copy of both;

we live, that men of letters can enter the same walk of science, and go on successfully, without feeling one fentiment of envy or rivalship. In the intercourse between Mr. Hume and me, we always found fomething to blame, as well as some bing to commend. I have received frequently very valuable criticifus on my performances from him; and I have fometimes ventured to offer him my firicures on his works: Permit me to hope for the same indulgence from you. If, in reading the Hittory of America, any thing, either in the matter or style, has occurred to you as reprehensible, I will deem it a most obliging favour if you will communicate it freely to me. I am certain of profiting by fuch a communication.

I return you thanks for your frank offer of executing any literary commission for me. I accept it without ceremony, and am flattered with the idea of receiving fuch aid from your hands. I knew nothing of Beniofiki's Adventures, but what was published in fome newspapers. If one can rely on his veracity, what he relates must be very interesting to me. If you had been writing the History of America, the question concerning the mode of peopling it, might not perhaps have occupied your attention very much. But it was proper for me to confider it more fully. Benio!lki (if he may be credited) has seen what it may be uleful for me to know. I can fee no reason why the Court of France should be shy about communicating his journal, and the charts which illustrate it; possibly n.y

3787 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

your interpolition, I am confident will do a great deal. It will be very illiberal indeed, if such a communication were refuled. Lord Stormont (by whose attention I have been much honoured) would not decline to give his aid, were that necessary. But if your court resembles that of Spain, I am afraid every proposal from an ambassador is received with some degree of jealousy. Your own private application will, I apprehend, be more effectual. As it is probable a lecond edition may go to press early in the winter, it will add to the favour, if you can foon inform me concerning the success of your negociation. As this is fomething in the style of the Corps Liplomatique, allow me to recommend one of its members to you. Mr. Ful-Jarton, the new secretary to the embasily, is a particular friend of He is a young man of such qualities both of head and heart, that I am fure you will esteem and love him. Please remember me to him. I have the honour to be, with great respect,

Your obliged humble Servant, WILLIAM ROBERTSON.

Sir William Jones to Mr. Gibbon.

Lamb Buildings, June 30th, 1781. DEAR SIR,

I HAVE more than once fought, without having been so fortunate as to obtain, a proper opportunity of thanking you very fincerely for the elegant compliment which you pay me, in a work abounding in elegance of all kinds.

My Seven Arabian Poets will fee the light before next winter, and be proud to wait on you in their English dress. Their wild pro- pends on obtaining this appointductions will, I flatter myself, be thought interesting, and not venerable merely on account of their; antiqu'ty.

In the mean while, let me request you to honour me with accepting a copy of a Law Track, which is not yet published: the subject is so generally important, that I make no apology for fending.

you a professional work.

You must pardon my inveterate hatred of C. Octavianus, basely furnamed Augustus. I feel myfelf unable to forgive the death of Cicero, which, if he did not promote, he might have prevented... Besides, even Macænas knew the cruelty of his disposition, and very tured to reproach him with it. In thort, I have not Christian charity for him.

With regard to Afiatic letters, a necessary attention to my profession: will compel me wholly and eter-: nally to abandon them, unless Lord North (to whom I am already: under no fmall obligation) thould think me worthy to concur in the improved administration of justice in Bengal, and should appoint me to supply the vacancy on the India: Were that appointment, to take place this year, I should probably travel for speed, through part of Egypt and Arabia, and thould be able, in my way, to procure many eaftern tracts of literature and jurisprudence. I might become a good Mahomedan lawyer. before I reached Calcutta, and, in my vacations, should find leifure to explain, in my native language, whatever the Arabs, Persians, and Turks, have written on science, history, and the fine arts.

My happiness by no means de-

, as I am in easy circumstanithout my profession, and have ring prospects in it; but if present summer and the enautumn elapse without my ring any answer, favourable ifavourable, I shall be forced ifider that filence as a polite at, and having given fincere is for past favours, shall endrop all thoughts of Asia, "deep as ever plummet foundaall drown my Perfian books." r politics have given offence, uld be manly in ministers to ne so. I shall never be perly hostile to them, nor enlist r party banners of any colour; will never refign my opinions iterest, though I would cheerabandon them on conviction. eason, such as it is, can only ontrouled by better reason, to h I am ever open. As to my om of thought, speech, and 1, I shall ever say what les XII. wrote under the of Riga, " Dieu me l'a donnée; ble ne me l'otera pas." But the nswer to this objection is, that lystem is purely speculative, ias no relation to my feat on ench in India, where I should y think of instructing the oos in the maxims of the I believe I should not troubled you with this letter, lid not fear that your attendin Parliament might deprive f the pleasure of meeting you e club next Tuesday; and I go to Oxford a few days after. 1 times, and in all places, I ever be, with undiffembled d, dear Sir, your much obliged aithful servant,

W. Jones.

Edward Gibbon, Esq. to the Right Honourable Lord Sheffield.

Lausanne, Nov. 14, 1783.

LAST Tuesday, November 11, after plaguing and vexing yourfelf all the morning, about some business of your fertile tion, you went to the House of Commons, and passed the afternoon, the evening, and perhaps the night, without fleep or food, stifled in a close room by the heated respiration of six hundred politicians, inflamed by party and paffion, and tired of the repetition of dull nonsense, which, in that illustrious affembly, so far outweighs the proportion of reason and eloquence. On the same day, after a studious morning, a friendly dinner, and a cheerful assembly of both sexes, I retired to rest at eleven o'clock. fatisfied with the past day, and certain that the next would afford me the return of the same quiet and me tional enjoyments. Which has the better bargain.

Dr. Adam Smith to Mr. Gibbon:
Edinburgh, Dec. 10, 1788,
MY DEAR FRIEND,

I HAVE ten thousand apologies to make, for not having long ago returned you my best thanks for the very agreeable present you made me of the three last volumes of your history. I cannot express to you the pleasure it gives me to find, that by the universal assent of every man of taste and learning, whom I either know or correspond with, it sets you at the very head of the whole literary tribe at present existing in Europe. I ever am, my dear friend, most assectionately yours,

ADAM SMITH

NATURAL HISTORY.

Some Particulars in the Anatomy of a Whale. By Mr. John Aberneshy. From the Philopophical Transactions, Part 1.

THERE are some particulars in the anatomy of the whale, which, I believe, have either entirely efcaped, or have not been as yet communicated to the public. parts which in the whale correfpond in fituation and office with the metenteric glands of other animals, differ confiderably from those glands in ftructure. These peculiarities are not only curious in themselves, but are illustrative of circumstances hitherto efteemed obscure, in the anatomy and œcononly of the lymphatic glands in general. I therefore take the liberty of submitting the following account of them to the inspection of this learned lociety.

The animal, from which the parts that I am going to describe were taken, was a male, of the genus named by Linnæus balæna.

Being desirons of making an anatomical preparation, to shew the distribution of the mesenteric ressels and lacteals of the whale, I procured for this purpose a broad portion of the mesentery with the annexed intestine; and proceeded veilel. The mesentery had been cut from the animal as close to the spine as possible: had a less portion been taken away, the parts which I am about to describe would have been lest with the body, for they are situated upon the origin of the blood vessels belonging to the intestines; and this, perhaps, is the reason why they have not been observed before.

When I threw a red-coloured waxen injection into the mesenteric artery, I saw it meandering in the ramifications of that vessel; but at the same time I observed it collecting in several separate heaps, about the roots of the mesenterys which soon encreased to the size of eggs. At the time, I imagined that the vessels had been ruptured, and that the injection in consequence had become extravalated; but I was conscious that no improper degree of force had been used in propelling the injection.

I next threw some yellow injection into the vein, when similar phænomena occured; the brancher of the vein were filled, but at the same time the masses of wax near the root of the mesentery were increased by a further essuion of the injection. These lumps had now acquired a spherical form, and some of them were of the fize of an orange.

200

After the injection had become cold, I cut into the melentery, in order to remove these balls of wax; when I found that they were contained in bags, in which I also obferved a flimy and bloody-coloured fluid. On the inner surface of these bags a greater number of small arteries and veins terminated; from the mouths of which the injection had poured into their cavities. There were seven of these bags in that piece of mesentery which I had to examine; but I am not able to determine what number belonged to the animal; for I do not know whether the portion of mesentery that I possessed was complete. Having removed the injection from these bags, I observed on the infide of them a fost whitish subapparently containing a plexus of lacteal vellels. This lubstance entered the bags at that part of them which was nearest to the intestines, and went out at the part next to the fpine. I now poured force quickfilver into those lacteals which appeared to lead to this foft substance; the quickfilter foon entered the veffels which were contained in it, and thus its nature was afcertained. A number of lacteals having entered one of these bags were observed to communicate with each other, then again to separate, and form other veifels, which went out of the bag. It was fome time before the quickfilver paifed through the plexus of veffels contained in the first bag, but after having pervaded it. it patfed on to a fecond bag in which was concealed a fimilar plexus of lacteals. The quickfilver permeated these last vessels with much greater facility than it did the former, and quickly ran out of the large lacteals which were divided at the origin of the mesentery. Besides those absorbents which passed through the bags in the the manner described, there were great numbers of others, which terminated by open orifices in When quickevery part of them. filver was poured into any of the lacteals, which were found near the fides of the bags, it immediately ran in a stream into their cavities. I introduced about a dozen briftles through as many lacteals, into different parts of two of these bags. These were doubtless few, in comparison to the whole number which terminated in them, but as the meientery was fat, and the vessels were fmall, more could not eafily be paffed.

I afterwards stuffed two of the bags with horfe-hair, dried them, and preferved them as an anatomical In this state great preparation. numbers of arteries and veins, but chiefly of the former veffels, are feen terminating on their infide, in the same indistinct manner as the forumina 4 hebesii appear when the cavities of the heart are laid open: the briftles also render vifible the termination of a certain number of lacteals. I examined the fides of thefe bags, which were moderately thick and firm; but I did not see any thing which, from its appearance, I could call a muscular firucture.

From the circumstances that have been related, it appears, that in the whale there are two ways by which the chyle can pass from the intestines into the thoracic duct;

one of these is through those lacteals, which pours the absorbed chyle into bags, in which it receives an addition of animal fluids. The other pasfage of the chyle is through those lacteals which form a plexus on the infide of the bags; through these vessels it passes with some dissiculty, on account of their communications with each other; and it is conveyed by them to the thoracic duct, in the same state that it was when first imbibed from the intestines. The lacteals, which pour the chyle into the bags are similar to those which terminate in the cells of the mesenteric glands of other animals: there is also an analogy between the distribution of the lacteals on the infide of these bags, and that which we sometimes obferve on the outside of the lymphatic glands in general. In either case, a certain number of the wasa inferentia, as they are termed, communicate with one another, and with other vessels, named vasa efferentia.

By this communication, the progress of the fluids contained in these vessels is in some degree checked; which impediment increases the effusion into the cavities of the gland made by the other lacteals: but should these cavities be obstructed, from disease, or other causes, an increased determination of fluids into the communicating absorbents must happen, which would overcome the relistance produced by their mutual inofcultations, and the contents of the vessels would be driven forwards towards the trunk of the system. In the whale, as in other animals, we find that the impediment, occafioned by this communication of lacteals, is greatest in the first glands at which they arrive after having... left the intestines.

The ready termination of so many arteries in the mesenteric glands of the whale, makes it appear probable, that there is a copious secretion of the fluids mixed with the absorbed chyle; and, as I have before observed, a slimy blood-coloured fluid was found in them. As the orisices of veint were open, it appears probable that the contents of the bags might pass in some degree into those veisels.

The eminent anatomists, And binus, Meckel, Hewson, and Wrisberg, were of opinion, that the lymphatic glands, were not cellular, but were composed of convoluted absorbing vessels. This notion seems, however, to have been gradually declining.

of late Mr. Cruikshank has publicly maintained a contract opinion; and has shewn, that the cells of these glands have transverse: communications with each other and which it is not likely they would-: have, if they were only the fections of convoluted vessels. Some addlational observations have occurred to me, confirming this opinion, and which, as I believe they have not been publicly noticed by others, I beg leave to relate to this fociety. I have injected the lymphatic glands of the groin and axilla of horses, with wax, and afterwards destroyed the animal substance, by immersing them in muriation In some of these glands the acid. wax appeared in very small portions, and irregularly conjoined; which is a convincing proof, that it had acquired this irregular form from having been impelled intot numerous minute cells. But in feveral

veral instances, I found one folid lump of wax, after the destruction of the animal substance: and it appears to me fufficiently clear, that the glands which were filled in this manner, were formed internally of one cavity, and were not, as is commonly the case, composed of many minute cells. I have also filled the glands of this structure, in the mesentery of an horse, with quickfilver: I have then dried them, cut open the bags, and introduced a briftle into them through the was inferens. And in the human mesentery, after having injected the artery, I have filled a bag resembling a gland, with quickfilver; which being opened, a mixture of injection and quickfilver was found in its cavity.

That the lymphatic glands in most animals are cellular may not, perhaps, be hereafter doubted: that they are sometimes mere bags, analogy and actual observation induce me to believe. It might be said, that in those instances which I have related, the cells were burst, or that the glands were diseased: to which I can only reply, that there was no appearance to lead me to such a conclusion.

If, then, the lymphatic glands are either cellular, or receptacles refembling bags for the absorbed fluids, we are naturally led to enquire, what advantages arises from this temporary effusion of the contents of the absorbents. there is a confiderable quantity of fluids poured forth from the arteries of the whale, to mix with the absorbed chyle, is very evident; nor can it be doubted that the same thing happens in other animals; for the cells of the lymphatic glands are easily inflated, and injected from the arteries.

The ready communication of these bags with the veins of the whale, induced me to examine whether I should ascertain any thing similar in other animals. Air impelled into the lymphatic glands, however, seldom gets into veins: sometimes indeed veins are injected from these glands; but when this has occured to me, I have observed an absorbent arising from the gland, and terminating in the adjacent vein.

These remarks, perhaps, may not be very important; such, however is the nature of the subject, that all the knowledge we have hitherto obtained of the absorbing vessels has been acquired by fragments, and all our future acquisitions must be made in the same manner: I have wished, therefore, by offering these observations, to contribute my mite to the general stock of our knowledge of this subject.

An Account of the late Discovery of Native Gold in Ireland. In a Letter from John Lloyd, Esq. to Sir Joseph Banks, Bart. From the same.

Cronbane Lodge, near Rathdrum, the 4th November, 1795.

DEAR SIR,

ralogical discovery in Ireland, and a desire I had long entertained of visiting the celebrated copper mine at this place, together with the opportunity that presented itself, of making my tour in company with our friend Mr. Mills, who is one of the proprietors, as well as sole director of the mine, determined me to seize this moment for my excursion; and yesterdry Mr. Mills and I visited the spot, where so much pure gold has been of late taken up, being distant about five miles from this place.

About feven miles westward of Arklow, in the county of Wicklow, there is a very high hill perhaps 6 or 700 yards above the fea, called Croughan Kinthelly, one of whose NE abutments, or buttroffes, is called Balinnagore, to which the afcent may be made in half or three quarters of an hour. Should you have Jacob Nevil's map of the county of Wicklow, published in 1760, at hand, by caffing your eye on the river Ovo, which runs by Arklow, at about four miles above the latter place, you will perceive the conflux of of two confiderable fireams, and of a third about half a mile higher up, close to a bridge. By tracing this laft to its fource, you will come to a place, fet down in the map Ballinvalley; this is a ravine between two others, that run down the fide of the hill into a femicircular, or more properly, femi-elliptical valley, which extends in breadth from one fummit to the other of the boundary of the valley, and across the valley three-quarters of a mile, or fomewhat lefs. The hollow fide of the hill forms the termination of the valley, and down which run the three ravines abovementioned. At their junction, the brook affumes the name of Ballinafloge; at this place the descent is not very rapid, and so continues a hanging level for about a quarter of a mile, or tomewhat more when the valley grows narrower, and the fides of the brook become steeper; and it should seem that, iome rocky bars across the course of the brook have formed the gravelly beds, above, over, and through which the fiream flows, and in which the gold is found. The bed of the brook, and the adjacent banks of gravel on each fide, for near a quarter of a mile in length, and for 20 or 30 yards in breadth, have been entirely firred and washed by the peasants of the country, who amounted to many hundreds, at work at a time, whill they were permitted to fearth for the metal.

A gentleman, who saw them at work, told me, he counted above 200 women at one time, besides great numbers of men and children.

The stream runs down to the NE from the hill, which seems to consist of a mass of schistus and quartz; for on examination of the principal ravine, which is now washed clean by the late heavy rains, the bottom consisted of schistus, intersected at different distances, and in various places, by veins of quartz, and of which substances the gravely beds at the bottom, where the gold is found, seem to consist.

Large tumblers of quartz are thickly scattered over the surface of the top of the hill, under a turbary of considerable thickness; upon the removal of which these tumblers appear.

I shall not take up your time in attempting to give a minute geological description of this part of the country, as I have prevailed with Mr. Mills (who from his minute examinations, and practical knowledge, is so conversant with the mineralogy of this county), to undertake that task, which I am persuaded he will perform to your satisfaction.

The gold has been found in master masses of all sizes, from those of small grains to that of a piece of the weight of sive ounces, which beautiful specimen is intended for the cabinet of a nobleman, adored in this country, and not less respected by his friends in England, and which, I dare to say, you will shortly have an opportunity of seeing in London. One piece of 22 ounces has been taken up, and which, I am told is to be presented to his majesty.

In our visit to this extraordinary place, we were most hospitably entertained by Mr. Graham, of Ballycoage, whose house is not more than a mile from the gold mine: from him and his brothers I learnt, that about 25 years ago, or more, one Dunaghoo, a schoolmaster, refident near the place, used frequently to entertain them with accounts of the richness of the valley in gold; and that this man had used to go in the night, and break of day, to fearch for the treasure; and these gentlemen, with their schoolfellows, used to watch the old man in his excursions to the hill, to frighten him, deeming him to be deranged in his intellects: however, the idea of his treasure did at last actually derange him.

John Byrne told me, that about 11 or 12 years ago, when he was a boy, he was fishing in this brook, and found a piece of gold, of a quarter of an ounce, which was fold in Dublin; but that upon one of his brothers telling him it must have been dropped into the brook by accident, he gave over all thoughts of searching for more. Charles Toole, a miner at Cronbane, tells me, he heard of this discovery at the time but gave no credit to it, as he never found any gold, and lives very near the place. I am credibly informed too, that a goldsmith in Dublin has, every year, for 11 or 12 years, bought four or five ounces of gold, brought constantly by the same person, but not John Byrne.

Vol. XXXVIII.

Thus, fir, you have all I could learn respecting this important event; which is at your service to lay before the Royal Society, should you not have been furnished with an account from an abler pen.

I am, &c.
JOHN LLOYD.

P.S. I am told the name of the brook, where the gold is found, is, in Irish, Aughatinavought.

A mineralogical account of the Native Gold lately discovered in Ireland.

In a Letter from Abraham Mills, esq. to Sir Joseph Banks, Bart.

K. B. P. R. S.

Cronebane Copper Mines, near Rathdrum, Nov. 21, 1795.

THE extraordinary circumstance of native gold being found in this vicinity, early excited my attention, and led me to seize the first opportunity that presented itself, after my late arrival here, to inspect the place where the discovery was made.

I went thither on Tuesday, the 3d of this month, with Mr. Lloyd, of Havodynos, and Mr. Weaver. The former having given you some account of the circumstances which attended the original discovery, and, since he left me, a favourable day having enabled me to take a second

cond view of the adjacent country,
I shall now attempt to describe the general appearance, and add such further information as has come to my knowledge.

The workings which the pcafantry recently undertook, are on the north-call fide of the mountain Croughan Kinshelly, within the barony of Arklow, and county of Wicklow, on the lands of the earl of Carysfort, wherein the earl of Ormand claims a right to the minerals, in confequence (as I have been informed), of a grant in the reign of king Henry the fecond, by prince John, during his command of his father's forces in Ireland; which grant was renewed and confirmed by queen Elizabeth, and again by king Charles the fecond.

The funrait of the mountain is the boundary be ween the counties of Wicklow and Wexford; seven English miles west from Arklow, ten to the fouth-westward of Rathdrum, and fix fouth-wefferly from Cronebane mines; by estimation about fix hundred yards above the level of the sea. It extends W by N and E by S, and firetches away to the north-eastward, to Fallycoage, where thatts have formerly been funk, and fome copper and magnetic iron ore has been found; and thence to the NE there extends a tract of mineral country, eight miles in length, running through the lands of Ballymurtagh, Ballygahan, Tigrony, Cronebane, Connery, and Kilmacoe, in all which veins of copper ore are found; and terminating at the flate quarry at Balnabarny.

On the highest part of the mountain are bare rocks, being & variety of argillite, whose joints range NNE and SSW, hade to the SSW, and in one part include. rib of quartz, three inches wide, which follows the direction of the Around the rocks, for fome distance, is sound ground, covered with heath; descending to the eastward, there is springly ground, abounding with coars grafs; and below that, a very care tentive bog, in which the tuff is, from four to nine feet thick, and beneath it, in the substratum ple clay, are many angular fragments. of quartz, containing chlorite, and! ferruginous earth. Below the turn bary the ground falls, with a quick defeent, and three ravines are of The central one, which is the most confiderable, has been worn by torrents, which derip their fource from the bog; others are formed lower down the mountain by springs, which units ing with the former, below the junction the gold has been found. The smaller have not water small cient to wash away the incumber clay, fo as to lay bare the substant) tum; and their beds only contain gravel, confisting of quartz with chlorite, and other substances we which the mountain confits. great ravine prefents a more in terefling afpect; the water in its descent has, in a very thort diftance from the bog, entirely carded off the clay, and confiderably worn down the substrata of rock. which it has laid open to insper tion.

Descending along the bed of the great ravine, whose general course is to the eastward, a yellow argilla-thistus is first seen; the lamire much shattered, are very have a slight hade to the SSW, ange ESE and WNW. Ind within the shift, is a vein mpact barren quartz, about feet wide, ranging NE and below this is another vein, nine inches wide, having the range as the former, and hado the northward, consisting lartz, including ferruginous

Lower down, is a vein of ipact aggregate substance, aptly compounded of quartz, ceous earth, chert, minute les of mica, and fome little ite, of unknown breadth, ng E and W, hading fast to fouthward, and including s of quartz, from one or two s thick, the quartz containing ginous earth. The yellow areous shistus is again seen with rmer hade and range; and adjacent to a quartz vein, ninated blue argillaceous shifranging NE and SW, and g SE; which is afterwards varying its range and hade, ng ENE and WSW, and g NNW; lower down, the hist is observed more compact, ffill laminated. d, less steep, becomes sprins inclosed, and the ravine, wer, has deposited a consile quantity of clay, fand, and Following the course of ivine, or, as it may now more rly be called, the brook, arat the road which leads to w; here is a ford, and the

has the Irish name of atinavought (the river that ned the old man); hence it nds to the Aughrim river, bove its confluences with that from Rathdrum, which, after their junction, take the general name of the Ovo, that discharging itself into the sea near the town of Arklow, forms an harbour for vessels of small burthen.

The lands of Ballinvally are to the fouthward, and the lands of Ballinagore to the northward, of the ford, where the blue shiftus rock whose joints are nearly vertical, is seen ranging ENE and WSW, including small strings of quartz, which contain ferruginous earth. The same kind of earth is also seen in the quartz, contained in a vein from ten to twelve inches wide, ranging ENE and WSW, and hading to the southward which has been laid open in forming the Arklow road.

Here the valley is from twenty to thirty yards in width, and is covered with substances wathed down from the mountain, which on the fides have accumulated to the depth of about twelve feet. A thin stratum of vegetable-soil lies uppermost; then clay, mingled with fine fand, composed of small particles of quartz, mica, and shift; beneath which the fame substances are larger, and constitute a bed of gravel, that also contains nodules of fine grained iron stone, which produces 50 per cent. of crude iron: incumbent on the rock are large tumblers of quartz, a variety of argillite and shiftus; many pieces of the quartz are perfeetly pure, others attached to the thistus, others contain chlorite, pyrites, mica, and ferruginous earth; and the arcenical cubical pyrites frequently occurs, imbedded in the blue thistus. In this mass of matter, before the workings began, the brook had formed its channel down to the furface of the rock, and between fix and feven feet wide, but in times of floods extended itself entirely over the valley.

C C 2

Researches have been made for the gold, amidst the sand and gravel along the run of the brook, for near half a mile in length; but it is only about one hundred, and tifty yards above, and about two hundred yards below the ford, that the trials have been attended with much fuccess: within that space, the valley is tolerably level, and the banks of the brook have not more than five feet of fand and gravel above the rock; added to this, it takes a fmall turn to the fouthward, and, confequently, the rude furfaces of the thitlus rock in fome degree cross its course, and form natural impediments to the particles of gold being carried further down the stream, which still lower has a more rapid descent; befides, the rude manner in which the country people worked, feldom enabled them to penetrate to the rock, in those places where the sand and gravel were of any material depth. Their method was, to turn the course of the water wherever they deemed necessary, and then, with any instruments they could procure, to dig holes down to the rock, and by washing, in bowls and fieves, the fand and gravel they threw out, to separate the particles of gold which it contained; and from the flovenly and hafty way in which their operations were performed, much gold most probably escaped their search; and that indeed actually appears to have been the cate, for fince the late rains washed the clay and gravel which had been thrown up, gold has been found lying on the furface. The fituation of the place, and the constant command of water, do, however, very clearly point out the great facility with-which. the gold might be separated from the train, by adopting the mode of working practifed at the best menaged tin thream works in the county of Cornwall; that is, entirely to remove (by machinery) the whole cover off the rock, and then wash it in proper buddles and And by thus continuing, the operations, constantly advance ing in the ravine towards the. mountain, as long as gold should be found, the vein that forms matrix might probably be laid. bare.

The discovery was made public and the workings began, early the month of September last, and continued till the 15th of October, when a party of the Kildare mills. tia arrived, and took possession by order 'of government; and the great concourse of people, who were bufily engaged in endeavour. ing to procure a share of the treefure, immediately defitted from their labour, and peaceably retired.

Calculations have been made that during the foregoing period, gold to the amount of three thoufand pounds Irish sterling was sold to various persons; the average price was three pounds fifteen shillings per ounce; hence eight hundred ounces appear to have been collected within the short space of fix weeks.

The gold is of a bright yellow colour, perfectly malleable; the specific gravity of an apparently clean piece 19,000. A specimen, allayed here by Mr. Weaver, in the moist way, produced from 24 grains,

grains, 22,58 grains of pure gold, and 1,43 of filver. Some of the gold is intimately blended with, and adherent to quartz; some (it is said) was found united to the sine grained iron stone, but the major part was entirely free from the matrix; every piece more or less rounded on the edges, of various weights, forms, and sizes, from the most minute particles up to 2 oz. 17 dwt.; only two pieces are known to have been found of superior weight, and one of those is 5, and the other 22 ounces.

I much regret not having been present when the work was going on, that I might have seen the gold as found, before prepared for sale by breaking off any extraneous matter that adhered; for in that state, a proper attention to the substances with which it was united, and a subsequent diligent inspection of the several veins that range through the mountain, might assist towards the discovery of that from whence it was detached.

I shall shortly return to England; and on my arrival, will send specimens of the gold, and of the different substances of the mountain, to be deposited (if you think proper) in the collection of the royal society.

And am, with great respect, &c.
ABRAHAM MILLS.

The bearings are all taken by the compass, without allowing for the yariation.

Besides these accounts of the gold found in Ireland, the following information has been received on that subject.

William Molesworth, Esq. of Dublin, in a letter to Richard Molesworth, Esq. F. R. S. writes, that he weighed the largest piece of gold in his balance, both in air and water; that its weight was 20 oz. 2 dwt. 21 gr. and its specific gravity, to that of sterling gold, as 12 to 18. Also that Richard Kirwan, Esq. F. R. S. found the specific gravity of another speimen to be as 13 to 18. Hence, as the gold was worth £ 4 an ounce, Mr. William Mole(worth concludes that the specimens are full of pores and cavities, which increase their bulk, and that there are some extraneous, substances, such as dirt or clay, contained in those cavities.

This opinion was discovered to be well founded, by cutting through some of the small lumps.

STANESBY ALCHORNE, Esq. his majesty's assay-master at the Tower of London, assayed two specimens of this native gold. The first appeared to contain, in 24 carats, 215 of fine gold;

17 of fine filver;

of alloy, which seemed to be copper tinged with a little iron.

The second specimen differed only in holding 21 instead of 21 for of fine gold.

Major John Brown, of the royal engineers, transmitted to the right hon. Thomas Pelham, a sketch of the spot where the gold was found, which Mr. Pelham has obligingly permitted to be engraved, for the use of the royal society. C.B.

On the Cold felt on high Mountains, and at great depths, from Dr. Hunter's translation of Euler's Letters-to a German Princes.

IT appears ver y surprising, that C c 3 we we should feel the same degree of cold in all regions, after we have rifen to a certain height, fay 24,000 feet; confidering that the variations with respect to heat, on the earth, not only in the different climates, but in the fame country, at different feasons of the year, are so perceptible. This variety, which takes place at the furface of the globe, is undoubtedly occasioned by the It appears, at first fight, that his influence must be the same above and below, especially when we reflect, that a height of 24,000 feet, or a mile, though very great with respect to us, and even far beyond the height of the loftiest mountains, is a mere nothing, com. pared to the distance of the sun. which is about thirty millions of miles*. This is therefore, a very important difficulty, which we must endeavour to solve. For this purpose I begin with remarking, that the rays of the fun do not communicate heat to any bodies, but fuch as do not grant them a You know that free passage. bodies, through which we can difcern objects, are denominated transparent, pellucid, and diaphonous. These bodies are glass, crystal, diamond, water, and feveral other liquids, though fome are more or less transparent than others. One of these transparent bodies being exposed to the fun, is not heated to fuch a degree as a body not transparent, as wood, iron, &c. not transparent are denominated opaque. A burning-glass, for exaniple, by transmitting the rays of the fun, fets on fire opaque bodies, while the glass itself is not sensibly heated. Water exposed to the fun becomes fomewhat warm, only because it is not perfectly transparent; when we see it considerably heated by the sun at the brink of rivers, it is because the bottom, being an opaque body, is heated by the rays which the water transmits. Now, every heated body communicates that heat to all adjoining bodies; the water accordingly derives heat from the bottom. If the water be very deep, so that the rays cannot penetrate to the bottom, it has no preceptible heat, though the sun bears upon it.

As air is a very transparent body, to a much higher degree than glass or water, it follows, that it cannot, be heated by the fun, because the rays are freely transmitted through The heat which we frequently. feel in the air, is communicated to it by opaque bodies, which the rays of the fun have heated; and were it possible to annihilate all these bodies, the air would scarcely un. dergo any change in its temperature, by the rays of the fun: exposed to it or not, it would be equally cold. But the atmosphere is not perfectly transparent: it is even, sometimes 🛂 10 loaded with vapours, that it loses almost entirely its transparency. and prefents only a thick fog. When the air is in this state, the rays of the fun have a more powerful influence upon it, and heat it immediately.

But these vapours rise to no great height; at the height of 24,000 feet, and beyond, the air is so subtile and so pure, that it is perfectly transparent; and for this reason the rays of the sun cannot immediately produce any effect upon it. This air is likewise too remote te from terrestrial bodies, to ve a communication of heat them; they act only upon as are adjacent. Hence you eafily perceive, that the rays e fun cannot produce any efin regions of the air very much ted above the furface of the i; and that the same degree of must always, and universally, ail in fuch regions, as the fun io influence there, and as the of terrestrial bodies cannot be nunicated fo far. This is by the case on the summit of high mountains, where it is ys much colder than on plains n vallies *.

^{*} Mr. Euler always means German miles, of 4000 fathoms each, or somewhat tinder 42 miles English.—E. E.

ne city of Quito, in Peru, is if under the equator, and were o form our judgment from its tion on the globe, we would ofe it oppressed with intoleraneat; the air, however, is alantly temperate, and differs little from that of Paris. to is fituated at a great height e the real furface of the earth. sing to it from the fea shore, have to ascend for several days; accordingly built in an elevaequal to that of our highest ntains, though surrounded by rs still much higher, called the leliers. This last circumstance d afford a reason for thinking, that the air there must be as hot as at the surface of the earth, as it is contiguous, on all sides, to opaque bodies, on which the rays of the sun fall. The objection is solid; and no solution can be given but this. That the air at Quito, being very elevated, must be much more subtile, and of less gravity than with us; and the barometer, which always stands considerably lower, incontestably proves it.

Air of fuch a quality is not for fusceptible of heat as common air, as it must contain less vapour and other particles which usually float in the atmosphere; and we know by experience, that air, very much loaded, is proportionably fusceptible of heat. I must here subjoin another phenomenon, no less furprizing: In very deep pits, and lower still, if it were still possible to descend, the same degree of heat always, and univerfally, prevails, and nearly for the fame reafon. As the rays of the fun exert their influence only on the furface of the earth, and as the heat which they there excite communicates itfelf up and down, this effect, at very great depths, is almost imperceptible. The same thing holds respecting considerable heights. This elucidation will, I flatter myfelf, prove fatisfactory+.

Account /

There are clouds, however, above these mountains, and in almost as great a tity as above the plains, which is demonstrated by the shows which cover the strummits. There are sew naturalists who have not been surprized by is in their excursions upon the mountains. The heat that is selt when such a sare formed, must be attributed almost entirely to the transmission of the water a found itself dissolved in the air, under the form of elastic fluid, to a liquid

The heat of the solar rays, intercepted by the cloud, can produce no ze in the inferior temperature, as it would have been transmitted from the id.—F. E.

The reason which professor Euler assigns for the cold that prevails in the regions of the atmosphere seems plausible, but will not stand an accurate ation. Light is much impaired in its passage through the atmosphere.

392] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

Account of the Great Speckled Diver or Loon. From White's Naturalists Calendar.

AS one of my neighbours was traverling Wolmer forest from. Bramshot across the moors, he found

and the heat communicated is in every case proportional to the quantity of absorption. It appears, from some ingenious experiments of M. Bouguer, that we res ceive only four-fifths of the rays of a vertical fun; and when that luminary and proaches the horizon, the portion of this light, which reaches the furface of the earth, is much smaller. Thus, at an elevation of 20 degrees, it is one-half; at that of 10 degrees, one-third; and at that of five degrees, one-eighth. Hence the sun-beams are most powerful on the summits of losty mountains, for they suffer the greatest diminution in passing through the dense air of the lower regions If the air derived its heat from the furface of the earth, those countries would be warmest which enjoyed the greatest quantity of sun-shine. The British islands to shrouded in clouds nine months of the year; yet our climate is milder than that of the same parallel on the continent, where the sky is generally serene. vated town of Quito, exposed to a brilliant sun, enjoys a temperate air; while, the Pertivian plains, shaded with fleecy clouds, are parched with heat. reasoning in the text to be admitted, we should conclude, that the tops of mount, tains are warmer than their basis. To say that air, much raresied, is not suften tible of heat, is a very extraordinary affertion, fince we are acquainted with substance whatever that may not be heated Besides, a more intense cold may the artificially produced than what prevails in the lofty regions of the atmosphere. We must recur to other principles for the true solution of the fact. It is indiffered rent what portion of the air first receives the heat; the effect depends entirely cars the nature of its distribution. If the atmosphere were of an uniform density; throughout, the heat would, at all heights, be likewise the same. But as the denfity varies according to the altitude, the distribution of heat is affected by that circi mstance, and follows a certain corresponding law. I would gladly develope the principles from which this theory is deduced, but the popular nature of the present treatise forbids all abstract discussion. I shall therefore, content myself with gi ving a table of the diminution of heat at different altitudes.

Altitude in fe	eet.			Dimi	nion of heat, Fahrenheit,	in degrees
3,000	-	-	anie.	-	120
6,000		-			24 }
9,000			teration.	-	38	•
12,000			-	-	53
15,000		-	-		68 1
18,000	-	-	-		86 4 ′,
21,000	tering.		-		944

The diminution of heat, on the ascent, is not quite so great in extensive continents; for the intercourse between the rare and the dense portions of the atmosphere is, in this case, necessarily slow, and the heat, which is principally formed at the surface, will only be partially dispersed.

It is a common mistake to suppose, that the same heat obtains, at a certain depth, in every part of the globe. The fact is, that heat, originally derived from the sun, is communicated very slowly to the matter below the surface, which, therefore, does not feel the vicissitude of seasons, but retains the average temperature of the climate for many ages. Hence the utility of examining the heat of springs which is the same with that of the substances through which they slow-cound a large uncommon bird flutering in the heath, but not wounded, which he brought home alive. On examination it proved to be Colymbus glacialis, Linn: the great speckled diver or loon, which most excellently described in Willoughby's ornithology.

Every part and proportion of this pird is so incomparably adapted to ts mode of life, that in no inlance do we see the wisdom of God in the creation to more adantage. The head is sharp, and maller than the part of the neck djoining, in order that it may pierce the water; the wings are placed forward and out of the cener of gravity, for a purpose which hall be noticed here after; the thighs juite at the podex in order to failitate diving; and the legs are lat, and as sharp backwards alnost as the edge of a knife, that n striking they may easily cut the vater; while the feet are palmatd, and broad for swimming, yet o folded up when advanced forvard to take a fresh stroke, as to e full as narrow as the shank. The two exterior toes of the feet re longest; the nails flat and road refembling the human, which give strength and increase the power of swimming. The foot, when expanded, is not at right angles to the leg or body of the bird: but the exterior part inclining towards the head forms an acute angle with the body; the intention being not to give motion in the line of the legs themselves, but by the combined impulse of both in an intermediate line, the line of the body.

Most people know, that have observed at all, that the swimming of birds is nothing more than a walking in the water, where one foot fucceeds the other as on the land; yet no one, as far as I am aware, has remarked that diving fowls, while under water, impel and row themselves forward by a motion of their wings, as well as by the impulse of their feet: but fuch is really the case, as any perion may easily be convinced who will observe ducks when hunted by dogs in a clear pond. Nor do I know that any one has given a reason why the wings of diving fowls are placed fo forward: doubtless, not for the purpose of promoting their speed in flying, since that position certainly impedes it;

The following table exhibits the average heat of places on the level of the sea, omputed by the celebrated astronomer, professor Meyer, for every sive degrees of atitude.

Latit	ude.	Average Temperature.	Latitude.	Average Temperature.
0		 840	50 —	- 53½°
5		— 83 I	55 -	49
10	-	82 1	60 —	- 45
15		— 80½	65 —	- 41å
20		 78	70 -	— 36
25		— 74½	75 —	 35½ '
30		 71	80 -	- 332
35		→ — 67	85 —	322
40	-	— 62 3	90,—	— 32
45		58 ⁻

By comparing this table with the preceding, it is easy to discover, for any latude, the altitude of the curve of congelation, or where the average temperature 320.—E. E.

but probably for the increase of their motion under water, by the use of four ears instead of two; yet were the wings and sect nearer together, as in land birds, they would, when in action, rather hinder than assist one another.

This Colymbus was of confidemble bulk, weighing only three arachnis fliort of three pounds avoirdopois. It measured in length from the bill to the tail (which was very thort) two feet; and to the extremities of the toes four inches more; and the breadth of the wings expanded was 42 inches. A person attempted to eat the body, but found it very firong and rancid, as is the flesh of all birds living on fish. Divers or Loons, though bred in the most northerly parts of Europe, yet are feen with us in very fevere winters; and on the Thames are called iprat loons, bechuse they prey much on that fort of fish.

The legs of the Colymbi and Mergi are placed so very back-ward, and so out of all center of gravity, that these birds cannot walk at all. They are called by Linnæus compedes, because they move on the ground as if shackled, or settered.

Contrasts and Consonancies between Animals and the Earth. From Dr. Hunter's Translation of St. Pierre's Studies of Nature.

THERE is feen, on the shores of India, a large and beautiful bird, white and sire-coloured, called the Flamingo, not that it is of Flemish extraction, but the name is derived from the old French word flambant, (flaming) because it appears, at a distance, like a flause of fire. He generally inhabits in swainpy grounds, and fait marshes, in the waters of which he contiructs his neft, by raifing out of the moisture, of a foot deep; a little hillock of mud, a foot and a half high. He makes a hole in the fumnit of this little billock in this the hen deposits two eggs and hatches them, with her the funk in the water, by means of the extreme length of her legs. When several of these birds are sitting the same time on their eggs, if the midft of a fwamp, you would take them, at a distance, for the flames of a conflagration, buffling! from the bosom of the waters.

Other fowls present contrasts a different kind on the same shore The pelican, or wide throat, is a bird white and brown, provide with a large bag under its beak which is of excessive length. Of he goes every morning to store in bag with fith: and, the supply the day having been accomplished he perches on some pointed rec on a level with the water, who he stands immoveable till the ever ing, says father Du Tertre 🔭 🤲 🚜 in a state of profound forrow, with the head drooping, from the weight. of his long bill, and eyes fixed on the agitated ocean, as motionless as a statue of marble." On the dutky firand of those seas may frequently be distinguished herons white as snow, and in the azure plains of the iky, the paillencu of a very white, ikimming through it almost out of fight: he is sometimes glazed over with a bright red, having likewise the two long

s of his tail the colour of fire, of the South-Seas.

nany cases, the deeper that ound is, the more brilliant ; colours in which the anilestined to live upon it, is 1. We have not, perhaps, ope, any infect with richer yer cloathing than the sterous scarab, and the fly, which he same epithet. This last ater than burnished gold and the other, of a hemispherim, is of a fine blue, inclinpurple: and in order to rene contrast complete he exi ftrong and agreeable odour k.

ure has bestowed at once, in lours of innoxious animals. fts with the ground on which live; and confonances with hich is adjacent, and has fuled the inflinct of employing liternately, according as good d fortune prompts. rful accommodations may be ked in most of our small whose flight is feeble, and The gray lark rt duration. her subsistence among the of the plains? Does any thing her? She glides away, and her station between two little of earth, where the becomes ole. On this post she rein fuch perfect tranquillity, dly to quit it, when the foot fowler is ready to crush her. fame thing is true of the par-

. I have no doubt that these celes birds have a sense of contrasts and correspondent colour, for I have remark-even in insects. In the month of March last, I observed, by the brink of the rivulet which washes the Gobelins*, a buttersy of the colour of brick, reposing with expanded wings on a tuft of grais. On mý approaching him, he flew off. He alighted, at some paces distance, on the ground, which, at that place, was of the same colour with himself. I approached him a second time; he took a second flight, and perched again on a similar stripe of earth. In a word, I found it was not in my power to oblige him to alight on the grafs, though I made frequent attempts to that effect, and though the spaces of earth which separated the turfy foil were narrow, and few in number.

This wonderful instinct, is, likewife, conspicuously evident in the cameleon. This species of lizard, whose motion is extremely slow, is indemnified for this, by the incomprehensible faculty of affuming, at pleafure, the colour of the ground over which he moves. With this advantage, he is enabled to elude the eye of his putfuer, whose speed would foon have ... overtaken him. This faculty is in his will, for his skin is by no means mirror. It reflects only the colour of objects, and not their What is farther fingularly remarkable in this, and perfectly ascertained by naturalists though they assign no reason for it, he can assume all colours, as brown, gray, yellow, and especially green, which is his favourite colour, but never rcd. The cameleon has been placed, for weeks together, amida scarlet stusis, without acquiring the.

fmall village in the suburbs of Paris, noted for its manufactures in fine y, and suberb mirras.

flightest shade of that colour. Nature seems to have with-held from the creature this shining hue, because it could serve only to render him perceptible at a greater distance; and, farther, because this colour is that of the ground of no species of earth, or of vegetable, on which he is designed to pass his life.

But, in the age of weakness and inexperience, nature confounds the colour of the harmless animals, with that of the ground on which they inhabit, without committing to them the power of choice. The young of pigeons, and of most granivorous fowls, are clothed with a greenish shaggy coat, resembling the mosses of the nests. Caterpillars are blind, and have the complexion of the foliage, and of the barks, which they devour. Nay, the young fruits, before they come to be armed with prickles, or inclosed in cases, in bitter pulps, in hard shells, to protect their feeds, are, during the feafon of their expantion, green as the leaves which furround them. Some embryons, it is true, fuch as those of certain pears, are ruddy or brown; but they are then of the colour of the bark of the tree to which they belong. When those fruits have inclosed their seeds in kernels, or nuts, so as to be in no farther danger, they then change colour. They become yeilow, blue, gold-coloured, red, black, and give to their respective trees their natural contrasts. is thrikingly remarkable, that every fruit which has changed colour has feed in a state of maturity.

It is in the countries of the North, and on the summit of cold mountains, that the pine grows, and the sir, and the cedar, and most part of refinous trees; which shelter man from the fnows by the closeness of their foliage, and which furnish him, during the winter. feason, with torches, and fuel for his fire-fide. It is very remarkable, that the leaves of those evergreen trees are filiform, and are extremely adapted, by this confguration, which possesses the farther advantage of reverberating the heat, like the hair of animals, for relistance to the impetuosity of the winds, that beat with peculiar violence on elevated fituations. Swedish naturalists have observed. that the fattest pines are to be found on the dryest and most sandy regions of Norway. The large, which takes equal pleasure in the cold mountains, has a very resnous trunk.

Mathiola, in his useful commentary on Dioscorides, informs that there is no fubitance more proper than the charcoal of these trees for promptly melting the iron mir nerals, in the vicinity of which they peculiarly thrive. They are besides, loaded with mosses, some species of which catch fire from He relates, the flightest spark. that being obliged, on a certain occasion, to pass the night in the lofty mountains of the Strait of Trento, where he was botanizing, he found there a great quantity of larches (larix) bearded all over, to use his own expression, and completely whitened with moss. shepherds of the place, willing to amuse him, set fire to the mosses of some of these trees, which was immediately communicated with the rapidity of gun-powder touched with a match. Amidst the chfcurity of the night, the flame and the sparks seemed to ascend up to the very heavens. They diffused, as they burnt, a very agreeable persume He farther remarks, that the best agaricum grows upon the larch, and that the arquebusires of his time made use of it for keeping up fire, and for making matches. Thus, nature, in crowning the summit of cold and ferruginous mountains with those vast vegetable torches, has placed the match in their branches, the tinder at their foot, and the steel at their roots.

the

To the fouth, on the contrary, trees present, in their foliage, fans, umbrellas, parasols. The latanier carries each of its leaves plaited as a fan, attached to a long tail, and fimilar, when completely displayed, to a radiating fun of verdure. of those trees are to be seen in the royal-garden. The leaf of the banana resembles a long and broad girdle, which, undoubtedly, procured for it the name of Adam's fig-tree. The magnitude of the leaves of feveral species of trees increases in proport on as we approach the Line. That of the cocoa-tree, with double fruit, of the Sechelles Islands, is from twelve to fifteen feet long, and from feven to eight broad. A fingle one is fufficient to cover a numerous family. One of these leaves is, likewise, to be feen in the Royal Cabinet of Natural History. That of the talipot of the Island of Ceylon is of nearly the same size.

The interesting and unfortunate Robert knox, who has given the best account of Ceylon which I am acquainted with, tell us, that one of the leaves of the talipot is capable of covering from sisteen to twenty persons. When it is dry, continues he, it is at once strong and pliant, so that you may fold and unfold it at pleasure, being naturally plaited like a fan. In this state it is not bigger than a man's arm, and extremely light. The it into triangles, natives cut though it is naturally round, and each of them carries one of those fections over his head, holding the angular part before, in his hand, to open for himself a passage through the bushes. The foldiers employ this leaf as a covering to their tents. He confiders it, and with good reason, as one of the greatest blessings of Providence, in a country burnt up by the sun, and inundated by the rains, for fix months of the year.

Nature has provided, in those climates, parasols for whole villages; for the fig-tree, denominated, in India, the fig-tree of the Banians, a drawing of which may be seen in Tavernier, and in several other travellers, grows on the very burning sand of the sea-shore, throwing, from the extremity of its branches, a multitude of shoots, which drop to the ground, there take root, and form, around the principal trunk, a great number of covered arcades, whose shade is impervious to the rays of the sun.

In our temperate climates, we experience a similar benevolence on the part of nature. In the warm and thirsty seasons, she bestows upon us a variety of fruits, replenished with the most refreshing juices, such as cherries, peaches, melons; and as winter approaches, those which warm and comfort by their oils, such as the almond and the walnut. Certain naturalists have considered even the ligneous shells of these fruits, as a preservative against the cold of the gloomy season; but these are, as we have seen, the means of floating and of navigating. Nature employs others, with which we are not acquainted, for preserving the substances of fruits, from the impressions of the air. For example, the preserves, through the whole winter, many species of apples and pears, which have no other covering than a pellicle so very thin, that it is impossible to determine how fine it is.

Nature has placed other vegetables in humid and dry fituations, the qualities of which are inexplicable on the principles of our phyfics, but which admirably harmonize with the necessities of the men who inhabit those places. Along the water-side grow the plants and the trees which are the dryest, the lightest, and, consequently, the best adapted for the purpose of Such are crofling the stream. reeds, which are hollow, ruthes which are filled with an inflammable marrow. It requires but a very moderate bundle of rushes to bear the weight of a very heavy man upon the water. the banks of the lakes of the north are produced those enormous birchtrees, the bark of a fingle one of which is sufficient to form a large canoe. This bark is fimilar to leather in pliancy, and so incorruptible by humidity, that, in Russia, I have feen fome of it extracted from under the earth which covered powder magazines, perfectly found, though it had lain there from the time of Peter the Great.

Account of the Kainsi, a Species of Gazelle or Antelope. From le Vaillant's Second Journey into the Interior of Africa.

THE Kainfi has received from the Dutch its name of rock-jumper (klip-springer), merely on account of the nimbleness with which it bounds from rock to rock; and in fact, of all the gazelle tribe it is the most active. It is the size of a roebuck of a year old, and has a coat of a yellowith grey; but it hair is fingular in this respect, that, inflead of being round, fupple, and folid, like that of most quadrupeds, it is flat, harsh, and so little and herent to the ikin, that the less? triction causes it to fall off. Hence nothing is more easy than to strip the animal of hair, dead or alive; friction, or even touching the fkits is sufficient for the purpose. Of ten have I endeavoured to preferre the fur of those which I had killed, without being able to effect its notwithstanding all my precautions in tkinning them, the greatest parks of the hair fell off. Another particularity is the brittleness of the: hair; which is fuch that, if a pow tion be taken between the fingers; and twifted with the other hand; the hairs break. This property, however, is common to feveral quadrupedswhich live among rocks;

This gazelle also differs from the other species in the form of its hoof, which is not pointed like theirs, but rounded at the extremity; and as it is its custom, in leaping or walking, to pinch with the point of the hoof without bearing on the heel, it leaves a pript diffinguishable from those of all the African antelopes. Its flesh is exquisite, and much in request, especially among the hunters. panthers and leopards are equally fond of it. I have heard the Hottentots relate that these animals unite to hunt the kains; and that when the latter has taken refuge on the point of some steep rock, one of them will go below to wait for the prey, while the rest advance and try to force it to precipitate itself.

· when

I do not, however, give credit to these pretended affociations of animals of the tyger kind.

The chace of the kainfi is very smufing. It can icarcely, indeed, be forced by dogs, from whom it foon escapes by its inconceivable agility, and gets out of their reach on the point of some insulated rock; on which it remains for hours together, safe from all purfuit, and suspended, as it were, over the abyss:—but in this pofition it seems to offer the best mark to the ball or the arrow; and if the hunter cannot always eafily get at it after he has killed it, he may almost constantly shoot it. Many times have I been witness of the extreme nimbleness of the animal: but one day I saw an instance of it which aftonished me. I was hunting one, and from the nature of the place it was suddenly so pressed by my dogs, that it seemed to have no possibility of escape. -Before it, was an immense perpendicular crag, which stopped it thort: but on this wall, which I thought vertical, was a little ledge projecting two inches at most, which the kainsi had per-He leaped on it, and to my great surprise held fast. thought at least he would soon be precipitated; and my dogs themselves so much expected it, that they ran below to feize him when he should fall. I threw stones at him to endeavour to make him lose his balance. All at once, as if he had divined my intention, he collected all his force, sprang to my side, slew over my head, and then, alighting some paces from me, escaped like lightning. I might still easily have shot him, but his leap had so surprized and pleased me that I gave him his life. My dogs only were taken in, who, confused at his escape, did not return to me without a kind of shame.

Reflections of certain effects of Heat and Cold on the living System. By I homas Beddoes, M., D. From Medical Facts and Observations.

I know not whether it has been observed that the inflammations particularly those of the eyes, which are so frequent in hot climates where it is the custom to fleep during the fummer in the open air, are to be referred fuccession of heat to to cold. Travellers, especially those into Egypt, have variously attempted to account for this phænome, non. Hasselquist imputes it to certain miasmata arising from the almost empty reservoirs in which the water of the Nile is preserved from inundation to inundation. This is, however, a mere hypothesis, unconfirmed by any strict analogy nor is the supposed cause in any way brought home to the effect. As little, in my opinion, can the inflammation of the eyes be afcribed to the influence of the nocturnal light of the heavens upon the eye, the eyelids, being more or less chosed during sleep. The cause seems in dequate. It is common in this courstry to sleep in chambers not less strongly illuminated (if not more . so) than in Egypt, during the night, without any inconvenience to our tight.

400] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

Besides, I think, if we sight. could suppose the eye to be so dazzled by the light of the night as to be injured, the injury ought to fall upon the nerve, and not upon the cyclids and external parts. The nitrous particles with which Alpinus imagines the atmosphere of Egypt to the impregnated, will not, I suppose, be considered as a cause more probable than any of the preceding: but the following passage may serve to give an idea of the nature of the complaint in question, and its frequency, at Cairo. "Plurimafque (oculorum lippitudines) Cayri easdemque per omnia anni tempora homines invadere ob nitrofum pulverem, qui continuè oculos habitantium mordicat, & calefacit, observatur, longè maximéque in æstatis prima parte, quo tempore calor ambientis fummè calidi oculos inflammat, taliumque numerum auget. morborum Sparsim vero per urbem toto anno hæ oculorum inflammationes vagantur; atque epidemicæ plurimæ in prima æstatis parte calidissima inæqualissimâque ob vehementissimum * meridionalium ventorum inflammatarum atque arenarum copiam, quæ ab iisdem ventis asportantur. Eo enim anni tempore è centum hominibus quinquaginta saltem lippientes observantur." (De Medicin. Ægypt. p. 24.) The flying fand must be troublesome, and probably, in many cases, supports and increases the inflammation, and in some may give rife to it; but the following tact, which feems to me to render the induction complete, shows that. the true and general cause is the great inequality between the temperature of the night and day; to which cause figual effect is given by the practice of fleeping fub de. Mr. Clarkson (in his effay on the impolicy of the African flavetrade) informs us (p. 71) that " when the flaves are brought on board, the seamen, to make room for them, are turned out of their apartments between decks, and fleep, for the most part, either on deck or in the tops of the veller during the whole of the middle passage; or from the time of their leaving the coast of Africa (where the days are excessively hot, and the dews are excessively cold and heavy, ibid. p. 68), to that of their. arrival at the West-India islands. " From this bad lodging," he proceeds, " and this continual expofure to colds and damps, and fuddenly afterwards to a burning fun, fevers originate which carry many Nor is this the only of them off. effect which this continual vicio fitude from heat to extreme dampness and cold has upon the surviving crew: inflammatory fever necessarily attack them. This feet ver attacks the whole frame; the eve feels the inflammation most This inflammation terminates either, in dispersion or suppuration: in the first instance the eyes are saved; in the latter they are loft.

The inflammation of the eye is not the only disease produced in Egypt by the succession of hot days to cool nights any more than on board our slave-ships; in both situations causes and effects run parallel, as the reader will find upon recurring to Alpinus and the later travellers. The well-known danger of exposure to dews in hot climates, tes, and indeed in all clii, in certain cases, seems to id upon the fame principle. also probable that the heat e preceding day enables the of the night to prepare the a for the filmulating effects of eat of the succeeding day; so of two perions who should ex-:hemselves without precaution cold of night and the heat of ollowing day, he who should been most exhausted the day by the heat, would, if other mstances could be rendered equal, be most injured by the alternation.

* See Niebuhr's Thermometrical tables in the first volume of his Travels.

reral circumstances, such as edness and swelling of the exposed to cold together with frequent occurrence of innatory diforders not long after ure to cold, were calculated flead observers into a belief these disorders were the di-Yet the great ffect of cold. ence in the state of a part g inflammation, and under offuence of cold, might have ed them to suspect that so an analogy might be illusive: ifter taking into the account well-ascertained facts they to have concluded that the r was false. Linnæus, in a in the Amœnitates Acadeexpresses his astonishment at apunity with which the heataplander rubs himself with or even rolls in the snow, lrinks the cold fnow-water. very day see horses in a state most profuse perspiration washed with cold water, and s without injury. I have fetimes within thefe two years I horses accustomed to be staobe turned outfor a fingle night L. XXXVIII.

in winter: and no cough, catarrh, or other disorder, has ever been the consequence. It appears, therefore, to me, that, within certain limits, and those not very narrow, the transition from a higher to a lower temperature is attended with no danger to animals in a state of tolerable health; and a person, I conceive, might suddenly pass from a higher to a lower temperature without inconvenience, even where the difference is so great as to be capable of producing confiderable inflammation, if the change should be made with equal celerity in a contrary direction. On this, though an interesting subject for observations on man, and experiments on animals, we want precise facts; and I state the principle in order to induce observers to compare it with the facts that fall in their way.

Besides the succession of heat and vice verfa, there is a third cafe well worthy of confideration; and this wherepart of the body is exposed to one of these powers, and the remaining part to the other; as, for instance, where a stream of comparatively cold air flows upon part of the body of a person sitting in a warm room, and perhaps also drinking stimulating liquors. making chemical experiments it often happens that a cold (catarrh) is taken, if the hands be much immersed in cold water, when the laboratory is much heated; by adding warm water, to raise the temperature of that in the trough, this danger is easily avoided. In these cases the effect seems to be the fame as that of the fuccession of heat to cold. In persons whose bowels are extremely liable to be affected, it sometimes happens, as I have myself known it to happen, that the removal of a foot into a cold part of the bed, after the body has become warm in bed, shall bring on acute pain in the bowels; and yet no pain is produced in getting into bed, though the temperature be the fame, and perhaps lower, than that of the part into which the foot is removed; and, probably, total immertion into cold water would not produce any pain in the bowels. The laws of fuch phænomena, however descriving of investigation, have, as yet, scarcely been an object of attention with pathologitis. It is probable that the phænomena, in any given case, are regulated by two circumstances: first, by the excess of heat (or the Arength of the stimulus, whatever it be,) to which the greater part of the body is exposed, above that to which the smaller is exposed. The fecond circumstance is the difference between the extent of the heated and cooled furfaces. When the latter is not extremely minute, and yet confined within moderate limits, the inflammatory effects feem to be confiderable. Should the circumstances be reversed, and a stream of air, so warm as to convey heat to the body, instead of carrying it away, play upon a fmall part of its furface, the rest being exposed to a moderate or a low temperature, it is probable the refult would be the fame as when moderate cold fucceeds to warmth, i. e. no bad effect would follow.

Account of the Manner of treating Bees in l'ortugal. From Murphy's Travels in that Country.

TO form a colony of bees, a spot of ground is chosen for the hives, expoted towards the fouth or fouth eaft, well sheltered from the nor thern, blasts, and furrounded with thrubs and flowers; of the latter, the best is rosemary. The richer the neighbouring grounds are the beta ter, for bees are said to range for food to the distance of a league; from their homes. The situation being chosen, lanes must be cut through the shrubby thickets of five or fix: The fences shetween feet wide. the lanes should be about the same, dimensions, and formed at intervals into fmall recesses, like bowers or niches, to receive the hives.

The figures of the hives used here in general are cylindrical; in height about twenty-feven inches by fourteen diameter. They are formed of the rind of the corke tree, and covered with a pan of earthen-ware inverted, the edge of which projects over the hive like, a cornice. The whole is fafience with pegs made of fome hard and durable wood, and the joints steps ped with peat. In the front the cylinder, at the height of about, eight inches, there is a finall appear ture where the bees enter. infide is divided into three equals divisions, which are separated W cross sticks: here the bees form their combs or cells.

When the bees swarm, which is usually in the month of May or sune, the hives are placed to teceive them where they light. If they descend on a tree, they are shaken off: the person who person this operation must not be afraid of them, as they do not commonly sting unless they are irritated; it will be safer, however, to cover the head with a wire-mask, and the hands with gloves.

Some bees are so wild, that they yay in attempting to collect, but they may be caught in this manner: a sheet is a loy night on the ground guous to the swarm, and when alight, the hive is placed over, with the entrance stopped; the whole is covered with a in which they are carried. But they should not be d near the hive whence they riginally departed.

ut the honey combs, which nerally in the month of June, the flowers begin to decay, ald be done in the heat of the as the greater part of the bees ien abroad, but not during h wind, or at the commence-of a new or full moon. The must have his face and hands ded as above-mentioned, and apanied by a person holding affing dish, with a coal fire, ed with moist peat, to make greater smoke: this smoke insused among the bees from op of the cylinder, they sly or remain intoxicated at the m, then the hive is taken ces by drawing out the pins. combs are cut out without deng the bees, except two cells, are left around the hive;

lest the bees should feed on remains, the incision is co-with pulverized clay: after the hive is put together as e combs should not be taken ut when they are full of hoit is rarely good the sirst year ees assemble. In the months arch and August the wax is taken out, which is lodged in the first division of the hive, after which the bees form other combs, and generate a young colony.

The hiver should often visit the ground, and repair any accidents that have happened. If snakes frequent the place, they should not be killed, since they do not molest the bees, but destroy the toads and lizards, which are obnoxious to them.

When the hives are decayed, they are taken afunder and fumigated; then the bees forfake their habitations and take shelter in an adjoining hive, previously prepared for that purpose. This should be performed in the spring, when the slowers begin to open and afford them succour. The same method may be used in taking out the honey; but if repeatedly practised, it will extinguish the colony.

As the bees, in returning from their excursions, are loaded and fatigued, there should be nothing near the hives to obstruct their descent, which is not in a perpendicular course, but in an oblique one.

On Plica Polonica by Mr. Frederick Hoffman. From the Memoirs of the Manchester Society.

Synonyms. Lues Pocusiensis: *7 rica: Trichoma. Pol. Koldun or Gozdz.

GERMAN. Juden-zops: wichtelzops: wixel-zors: weichel-zors.

DISEASES, the tendency of which is fatal, and the occurrence Dd 2 frequent, ^{*} Pokusia is a territory of Poland.

frequent, peculiarly claim the attention of the practical physician; while morbid affections which appear more rarely, and present unfual phænomena, more especially attract the enquiries of those whose object is the extension of general science. The disease termed Plica Polonica is of the latter class. It is endemic in Poland; and feldom, if ever, observed in any other part of Europe. During a long stay at Breslau in Silesia, I had frequent opportunies of observing this difc:-e: and, as it is at present little known in Britain, I trust a brief narration of the principal circumstances connected with it will not prove uninteresting.

Both fexes are equally liable to the attacks of Plica. It usually appears during infancy; and but feldom after the age of twenty. When once produced, it continues during the remainder of life. cession of the complaint is in general preceded by irregular spasmodic affections, pains in different parts of the body, a flow fever, and various diseases of the eyes; all which cease immediately on the appearance of the Plica.

The disorder consists in a præternaturally rapid growth of the hair, with a copious fecretion of a viscid matter from its bulbs. For the most part, the hairs of the head are alone affected; and that only in peculiar parts. In thete, the hairs grow confiderably longer than in the rest; and are knotted and entangled with each other; being alto covered with the viscid matter which iffues from their roots, and which assists in gluing them tozether.

In proportion as the quantity of this gluten, and the implication of the hair increases, it is still more and more difficult to clean and comb it; hence a degree of Phthiriafis is produced, and the head contracts an extremely feetid imell: to which however the Polish perare so much accustomed; that they endure it without complaint, or any manifest inconvenience.

It is also an opinion universally prevalent with them, that the difease is a salutary effort of nature to expel a morbid matter from the body; and that to interrupt the course of it would be productive at eminent danger; hence they make: no attempt to cure, or even pallists the complaint. And if we make repole confidence in authors of established reputation, morbid asfections of a fimilar nature to those which precede its occurrence, paralysis, and even death, itself, have succeeded imprudent attempts to check the progress of the disease. In this respect, Plica bears fome analogy to the exanthemata, and various chronic cutaneous eruptions.

I am as yet unable to decide whether this complaint is heredi-From fome observatary or not. tions indeed it appears, that a predisposition to it may be transmitted? from parents to their offsprings but my information on this head is too limited to ascertain the point, In one case which fell under my own observation, two brothers had Plice. both on the left fide of the head, and in about one third of their hairs: I learned from them, that their father and grandfather had also been affected with the disease in a form exactly fimilar.

Befide

NATURAL HISTORY.

ides the human species, other is are subject to this com-It appears in fome of the horses in Poland. In them it ated in the mane, and fomein the long hairs around the and fetlock joint. It attacks he different species of the ; genus; dogs, wolves, and

Previous to its occurrence first, the symptoms of rabies y appear: the tail is dropped en the hind legs, there is a of frothy fally a from the i, the fight and appetite are red or entirely lost; they are ish, and disposed to bite, ieir bite does not produce hyobia. The wolf is affected fame manner; he leaves his d concealments in the woods, ins wildly among the flocks, , and destroying them, but ut producing hydrophobia,

: impossibility of ascertaining se causes of this singular difhas given rife to several vague tures on the subject; as that Fontaine, who attributes it.

rruption of the fat.

s fomewhat remarkable, that takes place only among the class of people; whence some conceived, that it is to be cond merely as a consequence of inliness.

, in objection to this opinion, y be urged, that it is una in the adjoining countries to the Prussian Govern. where the peafants are haed to the same customs and of life, or nearly the same, as oland—that its appearance s evident relief to the system, s'retrocession is productive of rous consequences. The idea is a real and idiophatic disease, is confirmed also by its occurrence in a variety of animals, and by the circumstance of its being confined to particular parts of the head; for which no reason can be assigned on the former supposition.

A peculiarity of climate cannot be adduced as a cause of this disease. Poland differs little in this respect from the adjoining countries. The fummer heat is confiderable, the thermometer rifing frequently to 98°. 100°. 104°. and the cold in winter so great, that it falls sometimes 10, 15 degrees below o. But though the changes in the atmosphere are so remarkable, at different periods of the year, they take place with the utmost reguthe temperature passing, by insensible degrees, from one extreme to the other.

The Poles themselves are a vigorous, hardy race; inured from infancy to labour, and to exposure to the viciflitudes of the atmofphere; almost regardless of cold, they frequently sleep in the open Their diet confists chiefly of animal food, and they are much addicted to the use of spirits. They have an equal fondness for other strong stimulating liquids. I have feen them drink, with the greatest pleasure, the salt brine in which herrings have been preserved, and even nitrous acid diluted with water.

Since no other cause can be affigued for this disease, it is probable, that it arises, according to the general opinion, from contagion; a contagion which, like that of Psora, can be communicated. by contact only: but this I have not been able to ascertain by any observations of my own.

It is faid, however, by authors D d 3 of reputation, that Plica is frequent in Tartary; and that it was brought into Poland in the 13th century by the Tartars, who at that period made' frequent irruptions into the eaftern parts of Europe.

A periodic confidence in the liberality and candour of a fociety, the exertions of which have added confiderably to the treature of icience, encourages me to submit to it thefe few crude and curfory remarks; truting that the most trivial contribution to the general flock, will not be deemed naworthy its attention. At some suture period I hope to have opportunity and leifure to renew my objetuations on the fubject; and I thall endeavour to supply the deficiencies of the present tketch, by transmitting to the fociety the refult of my future remarks.

On the Power of the fixed Alkaline Salts to Preferve the Flejh of Animals from Latrefactions, by the Rev. Hugh Hamilton. Fr in the Transactions of the Riyal Irish Academy.

I CAME to the knowledge of the above mentioned power of alkaline falts, I may fay, accidentally; I had a with to procure fome kind of alkaline liquor that might be fafely taken for the purpose of correcting acidities in the flomach. I knew that a folution of falt of tartar was exceedingly offensive to the taste; and that, if it was of fireigth fufficient to nentralize any quantity of acid in the flourish, it could not be iwallowed without danger to the passages, from as cambinary. It occurred to me, that its cautacity might probably arife from its has affinity to femething get at which it burner the texture of the fl fliould be the cafe, it : suppose, that this falt, mixed with fleth, w itfelf with whatever i had fuch a ftrong a and, being to faturat act no farther on or might, without dang inwardly. To try-th closed some bits of leam a vial, with a stror falt of tartar: but, g feveral days, no fuch I expected appeared i I was willing to acco by fuppofing the falt affinity to the water thing in the flesh; A fome flesh from the brea roafied the day before it as dry as I could; th in a mortar, adding, fome dry and finely-p of tartar!, until J tl was enough, for I ha judge by. The mixture and, when it was pounded, I spread it cake on an earthen c it before the fire, w became dry, I found i faponaceons mild taf take of the falt was ceptable. Having ma flesh in warm water, off the clear liquor, I ferrefeed with vine thewed that the falt w neutralized but that it itielf with an acid, f fidered it as a mild alk fuch as I fought for that I might have an a person of skill on the subject, I wrote to my late worthy and ingenious friend Dr. M'Bride, and acquainted him with the preparation I had made, and the intention of it. In his answer, he was pleased to fay he approved of the idea, and would make some of the liquor I described, and let me know what he thought of it. He afterwards wrote to me, and faid he had liquor, tried the alkaline thought it might prove an useful medicine, particularly as it might be mixed with milk and given to children, who have often acids in their stomachs. He also mentioned a physician, then in Dublin, to whom he had recommended the liquor, and who had found great benefit from it. I first made this liquor in the year 1771; and, in the year 1777, being then at Bath, I met with an account of some experiments made by Mr. Bewly, an ingenious chemist, which plainly proved that fixed air is an acid, and faturates alkaline falts; this at once informed me what it was, in the flesh of an animal, that alkaline falts had fuch a strong At the same time affinity to. I got from London one of Dr. Nooth's glass machines, for impregnating water with fixed air, and to the water I added falt of tartar; after this, I thought no more of my alkaline broth, having got a way of obtaining what I wanted in a much more elegant manner.

^{*} This falt had been fent to me rendered caustic by quick li and not defired it.

The only thing now worth attention in the experiment I have related is, that it discovered a power in even caustic alkaline salts to preserve slesh, I may say, incorruptible; though it has been generally imagined that such falts would conflume it. I have fome flesh prepared with these salts in the year 1772; for finding fome bits made the year before had continued unaltered, I made fome more, and laid it by, to fee how long it would keep, and what alterations it would undergo. made it into a cake, and, when quite dry, I cut it into round bits, about the fize of half a crown, and put them into a drawer in my deik: I shewed some of them to Mr. Kirwan the fummer before laft, when I had the honour of receiving a visit from him at Armagh; and a few months ago I found some pieces in another drawer, where they have lain near two and twenty years, and remain unaltered. When these pieces are broken they hang together by fibres, and look like a piece of platter taken from a wall; the fibrous or stringy parts of the flesh do not seem to have been corroded or dissolved by the falt.

After I knew that fixed air was an acid, and faturated alkaline falls, I began to form conjectures about the means by which thefe falts had fo entirely prevented putrefaction in the flesh to which they Animal substances were united. afford much volatile alkali, andnow they are known to contain alto a volatile acid gas. While thefe two volatile principles continue united with each other, they may prevent any material change from taking place in the substance; but, if one of them by any means escapes, the other will follow; the acid feems to be the most volatile. and escapes first, though we may not be sensible of its escape, because it has no such tirong smell as the alkali has. The letting loofe these volatile principles seems to be the beginning of putrefaction. If this be the case we may fee the reason why fleth, when growing putrid, is reftored fweetness by fixed air; that acid replacing what has escaped, and retaining the volatile alkali. It is probably on this account, that the aerial acid is found to be of use in stopping the progress of some putrid disorders; it seems to act as a sort of pickle. If vinegar preferve flesh by keeping its volatile alkali united with this acid, which is not volatile, we may expect a fixed alkali will have a like effect in preferving flesh, by expelling the weaker volatile alkali, and uniting itself to the volatile acid, which will therefore be attained. found to be really the case; for, while the flesh and alkali were combining in the mortar, a very strong imell arose, like that of fal walatile; and, at one time that I used a brass or metal mortar, I perceived its edges to be tinged with blue, which thewed that the metal had been affected by the volatile alkali.

Dd4

There feems to be a good reason why fixed alkaline falts thould preferve fleth much longer than any fluid acid, fuch as vinegar can do; for when the alkaline falt combines with the Lesh it expels what is volatile, the mass grows hard, and it is eafily reduced to a state of dryness, in which no fort of fermentation, or any intestine motion can take place, and therefore there is nothing that can effect a change compound substance. this Whereas, when an animal or vegetable substance is immersed in very heterogeneous vinegar, a formed, which, in mixture is length of time, will be apt to rut into a fort of fermentation, with an intestine motion among the minute particles; this will bring on some change in the texture of the substance, and every fermentation, when long continued, ends in putrefaction, which, indeed, is said to be the last stage of fermentation.

offered on this subject be well or ill founded is but of little consequence; the facts I have mentioned may be relied on.

Observations on the Nature of House, particularly on its saccharine Parts when obtained in a solid Form. By Mr. Lowitz, of the Occonomical Section at St. Petersburg.

I. A substance so remarkable and so useful as honey, ought to have been long since accurately analyzed by the chemists. Its saccharine taste has always led them to suppose that it contained a large quantity of sugar; but the great question was, how to separate the saccharine part from the mucilaginous, and other heterogeneous parts. This separation was the principal object of my enquiry, in the experiments which I am gening to give some account.

II. The property possessed by charcoal, of decomposing and absorbing the mucilaginous and phlogistic parts of various substances, and of which I formerly made, and of which I then gave an account,) induced me to hope that I could, by its means, obtain the object I had in view. I did indeed succeed in depriving honey, which had previously been dissolved in a sufficient quantity of water, of that finell which is peculiar to it, and also of its taste and colour; but, when I evaporated the folution, by a very gentle fire, it foon acquired its former brown colour, and did not shew any disposition to produce regular crystals. I therefore thought it reasonable to conclude, that this property, of recovering its original colour, either was natural to the whole substance of honey, or belonged exclusively to one of those constituent parts of it upon which charcoal had no power; for when a folution of common fugar is thickened by boiling, even though it is made to boil violently, it does not contract any colour until all the aqueous parts are evaporated.

III. The honey which had been treated with charcoal, and thickened by evaporation, in the manner already described, was observed, two months after, to have a great number of imall white lumps in it, which had the appearance of crystals; and, soon after, the whole mass seemed to be full of them. To diffinguish accurately the nature of these small lumps, it was necessary to separate them from the rest of the mass, which was entirely coagulated, very thick and glutinous. This operation I performed tolerably well, by washing the mass with alkalized spirit of wine, without heat. I toon perceived that the spirit dissolved the glutinous part completely, merely by shaking the mixture; but that fluid did not feem to have any effect upon the white granulated part; fo that I succeeded in obtaining this last quite pure. After having separated this saccharine granulated part from the liquor, by means of a filter, I dried it by a gentle heat, and reduced it into powder: this powder did not attract moisture, and had a very agreeable sweet taste.

IV. As the granulated confiftence of white honey seems to arise from the coagulation of its faccharine parts, I endeavoured to feparate that part by means of the purest spirit of wine, and which contained the smallest possible quantity of water. From twelve ounces of this fort of honey, I procured three ounces of saccharine matter. This matter still contained heterogeneous substances, which appear not to be foluble in spirit of wine. To dissolve the saccharine part, I again had recourse to the purest spirit of wine I could procure; which I made use of by putting the mixture into a glass matrass, and boiling it therein for fome time. By these means the faccharine part was entirely diffolved; while the infoluble part remained behind upon the filter, having the appearance of a greyish dirty flime. I had filtered the mixture while it was hot; after which I had poured the clear liquor into another matrass, in which I let it stand quiet for some days. After that time the fugar of the honey began to fix itself to the bottom of the vessel, in the of little spherical knobs, ranged in lines by the fide of each other; these, increasing in number every day, formed at last a solid crust, which was as white as snow, rather rough at the top, and which after being separated from the liquor above it, was so firm as to bear cutting with a knife into very thin flices. The remaining liquor, having been left quiet for fome days, let fall, in that interval.

val, a fresh portion of this saccharine matter, which was exactly fimilar to that already spoken of.

V. Having thus provided myfelf with a certain quantity of this kind of fugar, I tried various methods to make it take a regular cryfialized form; but in that reipect, all my trials were in vain. Whether I used the purest spirit of wine, or water, to diffolve this Jubstance, the result was the same. I remarked, indeed, that the folution of it in water, which had been thickened to the confistence of tyrup, deposited, after some time imall knobs on the fides of the veffel, which had the form of cauliflowers; the whole folution afterwards coagulated, and appeared like a folid, dry, white mass, full of small cavities, which, when examined with a microscope, seemed to be composed of very small long cryfials, extremely thin, and hardly visible to the naked eye.

VI. Though this manner of cryftalyzing fusiciently distinguishes the faccharine part of honey from common fugar, I suspected, at first, that this difference proceeded only from the presence of some heterogeneous parts, from which the honey was not sufficiently cleared; but the following experiments evidently shewed, that these two subitances differ from each other by properties which are very strongly marked.

1. If a certain quantity of limewater is added to a watery folution of the fugar of honey, it instantly acquires a brown colour, though it was before quite limpid and colourless.

2. Quick lime, which I added to the watery folution of fugar of honey, while it was upon the fire, produced a very strong effervercence, and the mixture immediately became of a dark brown colour, almost black. By continuing to add quick lime until the effervescence ceased, the sugar of honey was entirely decomposed; the mixture turned quite black, and emitted a fmell which was very disagreeable, and even nade icous.

3. The dark coloured foliution contains a large quantity of lime, which cannot be precipitated by means of aerated alkali, nor by an alkali rendered perfectly causie.

4. If vitriolic acid is made use of to precipitate this lime, it then appears in the form of gypfum; but the remainder of the liquor fill contains a very empyreumatic acid, which feems to have a strong analogy with the malic acid of Scheele.

5. If the acid of fugar of honey is treated with nitrous acid, it is converted into acid of fugar.

6. A much more pure acid may be obtained by making use of s double affinity. For this purpose, it is only necessary to boil together equal parts of honey and quick lime, in a great quantity of water, adding to this folution, which is of a brownish colour, as much charcoal-powder as may be requifite to take away the colour en-The folution must then be tirely. filtered, and to the clear liquor must be added a very saturated solution of lead in distilled vineger, until all precipitation has ceased. The precipitate obtained by thefemeans must be washed in such a quantity of water as will edulcorate it thoroughly; after which, as much much diluted vitriolic acid must be added as may be sufficient to separate the acid of the honey from the lead: this acid may then be concentrated by evaporation.

7 If the folution of honey and quick lime is thickened by evaporation, after its brown colour is taken away by charcoal, a transparent mass, of a light yellow colour, is produced, which resembles gum arabic; it has a bitter taste, and does not grow moist by being exposed to the air.

8. The clear mass which is produced from a mixture of the acid of honey and lime is perfectly insoluble in spirit of wine; and it may be precipitated from its solution in water by this spirit.

9. Caustic fixed alkalies produce upon honey, and upon the fugar which is procured from it, the same effect as lime. Honey, as well as its fugar, is entirely decomposed by them; and always with a very violent effervescence. dark coloured extractive mass which is obtained by these means is completely infoluble in spirit of wine; and, when the quantities of the two fubfiances are exactly proportioned, very little taste can be perceived in the mass; that little is by no means alkaline, and can hardly be called faline. This proves that alkalies, as well as quick lime, may be perfectly faturated by the acid contained in honey.

poses honey in the same manner, and with the same circumstances, as other alkalics; but this decomposition takes place much more slowly, and only when heat is at the same time made use of.

VII. That constituent part of honey which is got from it by treating it with the spirit of wine (III.)

may be distinguished from the fugar of honey, by the following property, viz. that it cannot be reduced into a dry or folid form. is owing to this particular part that the folution of honey fo readily contracts a brown colour; for a folution of sugar of honey, deprived of this glutinous part, may be thickened upon the fire without fuffering any alteration of colour. In other respects, the yellow glutinous part of honey, here spoken of, thews nearly the fame properties as the fugar of honey; and when treated with caustic alkalies, or with quick lime, its tafte is also the fame.

VIII. The properties which I have above described are those by which the sugar of honey differs essentially from common sugar. If this last is treated like honey, it exhibits the following results.

1. Neither quick lime nor fixed alkalies produce any decomposition in sugar; no effervescence is observed, nor does the solution shew any change of colour.

2. Whatever quantity of sugar is added to fixed alkalies, they always preserve their causticity; and, even if they are boiled with sugar for a considerable time, they never appear to be united with its acid.

As quick lime, when combined with fugar, is attended with some phænomena which appear not to have been taken notice of by any person, I shall here mention them.

By, boiling together equal parts of fugar and quick line, in a sufficient quantity of water, a solution is obtained, which, by the surprising quantity of lime it contains, may be considered as highly-saturated line-water, in which the taste of the sugar is not to be perceived.

412] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

By evaporating this folution to dryness, a white tenacious mass is obtained, which has such an acrid and burning taste as to affect the tongue like caustic alkalies.

3. By expoting a folution of lime and sugar to the air, after having been filtered into an open vessel, the surface becomes gradually covered with a great number of small crystals; these are succeeded by others whenever, by shaking the liquor, the first formed ones are made to fall to the bottom of the vessel. This formation of crystals at the surface continues till the liquor contains no more lime; then the sugar again acquires its proper taste.

4. The small crystals, of which I have just spoken, very readily lose their water of crystalization, by being exposed to the open air; according to my experiments, I should consider them only as an aerated calcareous earth crystalized.

5. One of the most remarkable properties of the filtered folution of lime and fugar is, that by being made to boil, it foon grows turbid and thick; the lime then falls to the bottom of the veilel, and this precipitate is of a milk-white colour; but as foon as the folution grows cold, the lime again diffolves in it spontaneously, and the solution becomes once more as limpid and transparent as it was at first. This phænomenon (which it is rather difficult to explain) was obferved by M. de Lassone, when, in the same manner, he combined the neutral salt of tartar with quick lime. (See Memoirs of the Academy of Paris, 1773, page 191.)

6. Alcohol, or very highly rectified spirit of wine, precipitates the lime from the forementioned solution.

7. Mild alkalies, by the aerist acid they contain, produce the same effect.

8. Caustic alkalies do not cause the smallest alteration in the solu-

IX. From what I have faid it follows, that the union which exits between the faccharine part of honey and the oily part is much weaker than the union between the fame parts in fugar. This last cannot be decomposed, in the humid way, except by treating it; with nitrous acid; while honey and the fugar it contains, may be decomposed, not only by that acid, but also by mild alkalies, and by lime.

Upon the whole, there appears very little reason to hope that we shall ever be able to obtain honey in the form of sugar; to bring it into that form, something more than a mere separation of its heterogeneous parts seems necessary. It is indeed said, that, in some kinds of honey, especially in that, from Narbonne, crystals of sugar, completely formed, have been observed; admitting the sact, I consider it only as an accidental cirecumstance.

USEFUL PROJECTS.

First report from the select Committee appointed to take into consideration the present high price of Corn.

THE select committee appointed to take into consideration the present high price of corn, and to collect evidence relative thereto, and to report the same, from time to time, as it shall appear to them, to the house, with their observations thereupon, proceeded, in the first instance, to consider such information as had been already collected concerning the same.

They examined, for this purpose, the minutes of the evidence taken before the lords of his majesty's privy council, upon this subject. They received from fir John Sinclair, one of the members of the committee, the substance of such accounts of the state of the late crop of grain, as the correspondence of the board of agriculture had enabled them, at the present period, They had further the to collect. opportunity of receiving from many of their members a statement of facts within their own knowledge or communicated by respectable authorities from their different counties.

They have received also from his majesty's principal secretary of state for the home department, such returns as had been hitherto made to the circular letter written by him, by his majesty's command, to the custodes rotulorum and sheriss depute in England and Scotland. defiring them to obtain meetings of the magistrates for the purpose of procuring an account of the state of the late crop: but these returns are not as yet sufficiently numerous or complete to lead to any precise conclusion.

On the whole, however, the general information derived from the fources above-mentioned fatisfied your committee, that the crop of other forts of grain than wheat has been upon the whole abundant. but that the produce of wheat has proved to far deficient, as to require the adoption of the speediest and most effectual measures for the remedy or alleviation of fo great an They were therefore of opinion, that they should best perform their duty by directing their immediate attention to the confideration of fuch measures; and have, on that account, deferred for the prefent pursuing a detailed inquiry into the exact amount of fuch deficiency; but they propose to report the same more particularly to the honse, when they shall have received such further information as may enable them to collect more fully the general opinion, upon a point which they are fenfible it is impossible at any time to ascertain with any great degree of accuracy.

The first and most obvious mode of supplying this deficiency is, the importation of grain from foreign parts—and for the purpote of forming an opinion as to what may the prospect of supply from thence, and the most expedient means to be adopted for procuring it, your committee proceeded to examine fuch persons, from whose knowledge and experience in the trade of corn they could expect the best information. It appeared from their concurrent teltimony, that, though the crop of wheat in the United States of America, and in the countries bordering upon the Mediterranean, was represented as abundant; and in the northern and eaftern parts of Europe as not materially deficient; yet, as the old flock was much exhausted, and the demand great, the price, according to the last advices, was every where uncommonly high. But, though there was upon this point fome difference of opinion, it appeared upon the whole very doubtful whether a supply to any confiderable extent could be depended upon from foreign parts, whatever measures might be adopted. Your committee next proceeded to inquire what measures, in the judgment of these persons, afforded the best probability of obtaining such a fupply. They thought it right to bring distinctly under their confideration the alternative of leaving the whole care of such purchases to the executive government, who would (it was conceived) be in fuch case the only purchasers, and be publickly known to be so; or of leaving the fame to the speculation of individual merchants, encouraged by a liberal bounty on importation, and by a public declaration on the part of government

(as foon as fuch declaration shall be practicable) of the quantity which they may then have at their disposal in consequence of former erders, and of their intention to give no further orders for the putchate of corn, and to fell what may have been procured in limited quantities, and at the market It appeared to your committee to be the preponderant opinion amongst those persons to whom this alternative was stated, that, upon the whole, the reftorstion of the trade in corn to its natural channel, with the additional encouragement of a bounty, was the most eligible mode of endervouring to procure from foreign parts fuch supplies as those markets might be found able to furnifi. Your committee were further confirmed in this opinion by the information they received from fome of their members, that there were merchants who had stated to them their readiness, under those circumfiances, to engage in speculations to a large extent. full confideration and discussion of this important point, your committee were of opinion, " that it was expedient for the executive government to defift from making any further purchases of corn; and that a bounty should be granted upon the importation of certain forts of grain into this country, for the encouragement of private spe-, culation."

Your committee next proceeded to the consideration of the amount and distribution of such bounty. They had been informed that, from the abundance of the crop of wheat in the countries bordering upon the Mediterranean, there might be a considerable disposeable surplus ofe markets; but that. from igh price of freight and infufrom those ports, and from lifficulty of procuring thipping thither in ballaft, a larger ty would be required to enige private speculation in that er than in any other; they therefore of opinion, that a ty of twenty shillings per er, and a proportional bounty arrel, should be given on any per of quarters of wheat, hing not less than 440 pounds dupois, or on any number of ls of flour, weighing not less 196 pounds avoirdupois, which be imported into Great Britain any port of Europe fouth of : Finisterre, or from any port e Mediterranean, or in Africa, ethe 31st day of August, 1796; the quantity of such wheat lour, taken together, shall e-300,000 quarters.

iey were further fatisfied, upie best information they could A, that from the other parts urope, and from America, a ty of 15s. per quarter upon a in quantity of wheat, and of per quarter upon all exceeding ould be fufficient to give a fair ce of procuring for the British ets a large proportion of whatfupply those countries might spected to furnish beyond their confumption: and they were fore of opinion, that a bounty teen shillings per quarter, and oportional bounty per barrel, d be given on any number of ers of wheat, weighing not han 44clb. avoirdupois, or on number of barrels of flour, hing not less than 1961b avoiris, which thall be imported all other parts of Europe, before the 3-1st day of August 1796; until the quantity of fuch wheat and flour, taken together, flau equal 500,000 quarters. Your committee were also of opinion, that a bounty of fifteen shillings per quarter, and a proportional bounty per barrel, should be given any number of quarters of wheat weighing not less than 440lb. avoirdupois, or on any number of barrels of flour, weighing not less 196lb. avoirdupois, which shall be imported from any of his majesty's colonies in America, or from the United States, before the 31st of August 1796; until the quantity of fuch wheat and flour, taken together, shall equal 500,000 qrs. Your committee were also of opinion, that a bounty of ten thillings per quarter, and a proportional bounty per barrel, should be given any number of quarters of wheat, weighing not less than 44clb. avoirdupois, or on any number of barrels of flour, weighing not less than 1961b. avoirdupois, which shall be imported into Great Britain before the 31st day of August 1796, and on which none of the before-mentioned bounties thall have been paid.

Your committee being convinced, that if a considerable quantity of Indian corn could be obtained (which from the abundance of that crop appears not improbable) it would afford a material relief, were also of opinion, that a bounty of five shillings per quarter, and a proportional bounty per barrel, should be given on any number of quarters of Indian corn, or on any number of barrels of Indian meal, which shall be imported into Great Britain before the 31st day of August 1796; until the quantity of such Indian corn

416] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

corn and meal, taken together, shall equal 500,000 quarters. Your committee were also of opinion, that a bounty of three shillings per quarter, and a proportional bounty per barrel, should be given on any number of quarters of Indian corn, or on any number of barrels of Indian meal, which shall be imported into Great Britain before the 31st day of August, 1796; and on which the before mentioned bounty shall not have been paid.

Your committee have some reafon to believe, that there may appear such a deficiency in the crop of rye, as may lead to the applica tion of similar measures for the encouragement of the importation of that species of grain, as, have been recommended respecting wheat; but they do not yet consider their information upon that point as sufficient to authorize them, at the present moment, to report any opinion to that effect.

Your committee have thought it incumbent upon them, humbly to suggest such measures as have hitherto appeared, in their judgment, the most likely to facilitate the procuring, without loss of time, in the least exceptionable manner, and on the least unreasonable terms, the largest supply of grain from foreign parts, which, in the present relative state of the markets, they can be expected to afford. It was particularly with a view to expedition that they have suggested the proposed plan of arranging the bounty But they feel it, at the same time, their indispensable duty expressly to state, that they are far from entertaining any opinion that any supply, by importation, can be depended upon to fuch an amount as to remove the necessity of recurring to every other practicable and reasonable mode, by which the present scarcity may be relieved; and particularly of attending to strict economy in the consumption of wheat and flour, and of promoting the substitution, to a certain extent, of other articles of food.

They intend to proceed immediately to the confideration of these and other parts of this extensive and important subject; and will, with the permission of the house, report, from time to time, such opinions as they may be enabled to form thereupon.

Second report from the select Committee appointed to take into consideration the present high price of Corn.

THE felect committee appointed to take into confideration the prefent high price of corn, and to collect evidence relative thereto, and to report the same from time to time, as it shall appear to them, to the house, with their observations thereupon,—have received, fince their last report, further information respecting the desiciency in the crop of rye, and the great want of that article in those parts of the country where it forms the principal fubfiftence of the people; and they are thereby induced to think that fimilar measures ought to be adopted for the encouragement of the importation of that species of grain, as have been recommended respecting wheat. They beg leave therefore to submit their opinion to the house, that a bounty of ten thillings per quarter should be given for every quarter of rye, weighing not less than fifty pounds per buthel, which shall be imported into Great Britain before the goth day of September, 1796, until the quantity ntity of such rye shall exceed, ,000 quarters; and also that a nty of six shillings per quarter ld be given for every quarter re which shall be imported in-Great Britain before the 30th of September, 1796, exceeding quantity to which the before-tioned bounty is limited.

our committee are also inclino recommend an extension of period for which the feveral sties on grain and flour are ofed to be granted. They rve, from the weekly returns e price of wheat in the whole dom, and of the price and itity in the London market, January laft, that the highest : and the greatest scarcity took a during the months of July August, and particularly in latter. These, therefore, are nonths for which it is most iment to provide; and they are to fear, that if the bounty is ned to fuch corn as may arbefore the 31st of August, hants may be difcouraged from ng fupplies to this country ig that month, by the appreon that they may not arrive ne to be entitled to the bounty.

beg leave therefore to fugin exter from of the time to the of September; and they subwhether it might not also be lient to place, in proper hands, cretionary power of allowing ounties to such thips as may a before the 15th of October, proof of their having actually if from Great Britain, from respective ports, at such time they might, in the ordinary of their voyage, have arrivfore the 30th of September. ut committee have also re-inferior a quality, as to be unfit for the use of man; and under a full perfusion of the necessity of fixing fome limit, in order to prevent the object, for which the bounty is given, from being defeated by the importation of corn inapplicable to the sublistence of the people They have fince received further information, which has fatisfied them, that wheat, naturally of fomewhat a lower produce . wholeweight, may fome food; and that cargoes, not frequently, arrive out of condition, in confequence of which the weight is for the time diminished, though it foon recovers; and that it might prove an inconvenient referaint on speculation, if the merchant were exposed to lose the whole of the bounty, by a flight inattention of his agents abroad, or by a temporary and accidental deterioration of the article imported: they are therefore of opinion, that a bounty, equal to four-fifths of the propoled bounty, should be given on all wheat weighing not less than at the rate of fifty-three pounds per buthel.

L. XXXVIII

Your committee having flated fuch further observations as they have thought necessary, respecting the amount of the bounties, and the limitations as to weight, and quantity, and time, beg leave to recommend, for the prevention of fraud, that all corn and flour imported for bounty should be subject, in addition to the inspection of the proper officers of the customs, to the examination of persons qualified to judge thereof; that without the certificate of fuch persons, Itating that the article is merchantable and fit for making bread, no bounty should be paid; and that the important fuch portant perifornd.

Your c ed infort DOM III laden wi ed to be and that the confi their cat lefs terr unload ti leave, th pediency to the c may not country, ous to 1 which it

I bird Re tee app tien th THE ed to ti prefent to collec and to re time, as the boul thereup their fi DIMUPEL enstodes counties the last addition (ubject of their however either f any oth clusion. complet principles, some stating the whole quantities of grain produced, others the number of acres fown, and others again the average produce of each acre; and drawing, in some instances, a comparison with the crop of last year, in others with that of certain preceding years, and in others with what is generally called a fair crop, that it is extremely difficult to combine and compare them, so as to state accurately the refult of the whole.

Your committee would have endeavoured to render this investigation more complete, if they had not felt the great importance of fuggesting, without further delay, fuch measures as have occurred to them for alleviating an evil which evidently exists to such an extent as to call for the most effectual remedy.

From the best consideration of fuch information as they have hitherto obtained, they should not feel themselves authorized in asfurning, as the ground of any opinion they may offer, that the deficiency of the crop of wheat is less than from one fifth to one fixth, compared with the crop of last year, and from one fourth to one fifth, compared with an average crop. The crop of rye, of which no great quantity is usually grown, may probably be confidered as equally deficient; but the crops of barley and nats are represented to be nearly double those of 1794, and at least one fifth better than an average crop.

rent testimony of intelligent perfons, that the stock of wheat in hand at the commencement of the last harvest was much less than at the same period of the preceding year, and there is also reason to believe that a larger quantity has been used for seed in the present seed time than in the last.—One of the causes of the extreme high price which prevailed antecedent to the last harvest, was generally supposed to be the very exhausted state to which the stock of the country had then been reduced. In order to avoid a repetition of this evil, to the same or to a much greater extent (if the succeeding crop should, from unfavourable feasons, be later or less productive than usual) it is certainly extremely defirable that the stock remaining in the country at the commencement of the next harvest should be more adequate to the demand than what remained this year at a fimilar period. Whatever is necessary for this purpole, ought therefore to be added to the amount of the deficiency.

Your committee have stated these circumstances to the house, in order to explain more fully the grounds of their opinion, that there' will be no fecurity against very confiderable distress in the course of the ensuing year, unless the deficiency of wheat and tye can be supplied by importation, or unless other means can be found, which, out of the stock of different forts of grain in the country, comfortable and wholesome subfiftence can be furnished to the people during the whole of that period.

Upon the first part of this alter-It appears also, from the concur- native, your committee have already humbly submitted their opinion; and though they flatter themselves, that from the adoption of the measures now in contemplation for the encouragement of the importation of wheat, of Indian corn, and of tye, fome confiderable supplies may be procured from foreign parts, yet they thould think it unwife to reft in any great degree upon the hope that fuch supplies can cover a large proportion of the deficiency. Your committee would feel great regret in stating this to the boule, if they were not also of opinion, upon the fullest consideration, that the country possesses other resources, both more extensive and more secure, in an economical use of the stock of wheat in the kingdom, and in the abundant crops of barley, of oats, and of potatoes.

ANNUAL REGISTE" 420]

It is obvious, that there must be a very numerous class of families where, in times of ordinary plenty, the confumption of wheaten bread and of flour is by no means an object of firict regulation and attention; and it can be as little doubted, that, under fuch a preffure as the prefent, an important reduction might be effected in this respect, without diminithing, in any degree, the quantity necessary for fubliftence, It is also to be remarked, that the confumption of this class of persons and their families, together with another class, far more extensive, consists in a large proportion of other articles than bread; and that the filuation of those classes may enable them, as circumstances require, to augment in some degree that proportion, and thereby to leave a larger there of the stock of wheat to those for whose subsistence it is in this opinic more immediately effential,

The reduction of the confumption of wheat may be confiderably aided amongst this description of consumption persons, and, in a great degree, extended to al if they can I the other re committee 1 avail therofe of other cros ency of whet

For the p in what prof fore enumers be mixed wi duce a breac purpoles of your commit refult of a v made by the der the di council, am municated to experiments. fame office, your commi alfo affifted culture, wh to them an with a still s tures. You. fon to doubt be made fro tures, with than three-f wheaten flou ecaion for bread would nutritive, be of this coun industry are. extent as in are wholly i fome one or ent parts of committee a the course c tile of mixed has been in to wheaten bread; that the con quence has been a confiderable duction of price to the labouri poor in fuch places; and that use of it has not been found to attended with any inconvenien The variety of different species unixed bread is such, as to offer confiderable number of altere tives to different parts of the cot try: and they will be naturally. to select those which are least 1 reign to their habits and predices, and of which, from local e cumitances, they can most conver ently procure a fupply.

confumption

That the factifice of fome degree of indulgence, or of prejudice, one, which, under the prefent counstances, can be made, a ought to be made, and that withe fuch a factifice to a confideral extent, the country will be expet to fill greater difficulties the those with which it has so late contended, is an opinion with which your committee are so strongly in pressed, that they cannot too carne by recommend at to the serious a tention of this house, and of the nation at large.

Deeply, however, as they fe this impression, they are far fro proposing any legislative measu to enforce a compliance with the They well know th fuggettion. the people of this, and of every oth country, are attached by habit their accultomed species of foor and that however they may, by 1 commendation and example, induced to make a partial chang yet any fudden and compulfory a teration might, perhaps, be mofentibly felt than the very grievan it was intended to remedy.

422] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

by at least one third of the usual quantity consumed in ordinary times.

In order to effect this purpose, either to limit to that exten the quantity of fine wheaten bread consumed by each individual in such families;

Or, to confume only mixed bread, of which not more than two thirds shall be made of wheat;

Or, only a proportional quantity of mixed bread, of which more than two thirds is made of wheat;

Or, a proportional quantity of bread made of wheat alone, from which no more than five pounds of bran is excluded;

If it should be necessary, in order to essect the purpose of this engagement, to prohibit the use of wheaten flour in pastry, and to diminish, as much as possible, the use thereof in other articles than bread;

By one of more of these meafures, or by any other which may be found equally effectual, and more expedient and practicable, in the respective situations of persons subscribing, to insure to the utmost of their power the reduction above mentioned.

This engagement to continue in force until fourteen days after the next session of parliament, unless the average price of wheat shall, before that time, be reduced to an amount to be specified.

Appendix to the Third Report from the Stlest Committee appeinted to take into conf. tion the prefent High

THE committee beg leave lay before the house, as an appandix to their last report, an account of the experiments made by the victualling office upon differdi kinds of mixed bread, under the directions of the privy coencil, and of this committee; they have not thought it necessary to add to the account of the experiments ma by the Board of Agriculture as they understand that it is the in tention of that board to communi cate that account to the public, gether with their observations th apon.

The committee have proceeded to take into further confidential different branches of this extension fubject. Being aware, however, that some of them contain makes which ought not to be made the object of regulation, except upon mature deliberation, and a civil mature deliberation, and a civil conviction of necessity, they have thought it most consistent with their duty, to defer making any further report till after the most; but they beg leave to add to the appendix, a few papers which have been communicated to them; are as intimating any opinion whatsver, as to the different observations and suggestions contained in tions and suggestions contained in these papers, but with a view of drawing attention to the principal points of which it may be needsary for the committee to resume the confideration.

An account, Mewing the produce of one quarter of wheat, barley, oats, and rye, respectively, dreffed throwgh a thirteen shilling cloth, and of the denomination of standard, or the

ANNUAL REGISTER,

through a twenty-one shilling cloth, and of the denomination of household sour; from which the loaves, prefented to a committee of the honourable House of Commons on In account, shewing the produce of one quarter of wheat, barley, oats, and rye, respectively, instant, were manufactured, as specified in the accompanying schedule. the 9th i dresed

SPECIES OF GRAIN.	Weight per bufael.	. Weight of the whole	Meal.	Lofs on grinding.	Fine Flour.	Middling.	Lofs on Derelling.	Bran
Wheat Barley Oats	1b. oz. 59 948 49 to-3 40 11 45 54 10-3	1b. 6z. 476 111 5 397 (14) 325 134	1b. oz. 470 83 388 15 314 5	1 8 9 9. 6. 9. 9. 9. 9. 9. 9. 9. 9. 9. 9. 9. 9. 9.	16. 02. 160 160 161 161 14	Hb. oz. 100 4 123 2 70 6	2 2 5 4 5 5 15 15 15 15 15 15 15 15 15 15 15 15	16 02. 88 11. 99 6 178 (.2.

N. B. The feveral species of grain in these tables were British, and of the growth of the present year; and cost, on the z6th of October, 1795, viz.—Wheat, 96s, per quartermoats 29s, 6ds—barley, 98s,—rye, 5cs, 6d. At subichatime the middlings from wheat were worth 99s, per quarter of 10 bushels of 56 lb each; and the brain from dixto; 10s. per quarter of 16 bushels of 16 lb each. But the value of the middlings and brain produced from the other species of grain, the Victualling Board are not of themselves competent to speak to: of grain, the Victualling Board are not of themselves competent to speak to. which time the Vienalling Office, Nov. 21, 1795.

Victualling Office, 8th Dec. 1795.

In account, shewing the produce of one quarter of wheat, barley, oats, rye, and Indian corn, from the Honourable Dudley Ryder, chairman of the corn. committee of the Honourable respectively, dressed through a twenty-one shilling cloth; prepared in pursuance of a letter House of Commons, duted the 28th November laft.

ANNUAL REGISTER, 17

through a twenty-one shilling cloth, and of the denomination of household shours. from which the loaves, prefented to a committee of the honourable House of Commons on the 9th instant, were manufactured, as specified in the accompanying schedule. In account, shewing the produce of one quarter of wheat, barley, oats, and rye, respectively, dressed i

SPECIES OF GRAIN.	Weight per bufael.	Weight of the whole	Meal.	Lofs on grinding.	Fine Flour.	Middling.	Lofs on Drefting.	Bran.
Wheat Barley Oats	1b. oz	1b. 62. 476 11 $ 397 :1$ 325 13$ 437 4½	1b. oz. 470 83 388 15 314 5	11 8 3.22.	15. 02. 160 6 160 8 191 14	Ho. oz. 123 2 2 2 6 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	16. oz. 5. 15. 5. 15.	#88 113 99 6 174 14

N. B. The feveral species of grain in these tables were British, and of the growth of the present; and cost, on the 26th of October, 1795, viz.—Wheat, 96s, per quarter—oats 29s. 6di—barley, 38s,—rye, 5cs, 6d. At which time the middlings from wheat were worth 99s, per quarter of 10 bushels of 56 lb cach; and the brain from disto; 10s. per quarter of 15 bushels of 16 lb cach. But the value of the middlings and brain produced from the ather species of grain, the Victualling Board are not of the middlings and brain produced from the of grain, the Victualling Board are not of themselves competent to speak to.

Wichaelling Office, Nov. 11, 1795.

THE REPORT OF THE PARTY OF THE

Victualling Office, 8th Dec. 1795.

An account, shewing the produce of one quarter of wheat, barley, oats, rye, and Indian corn, from the Honourable Dudley Ryder, chairman of the corn committee of the Honourable respectively, dressed through a twenty-one shilling cloth; prepared in pursuance of a letter House of Commons, dated the 28th November laft.

dough made therefrom, the quantity required for making two quartern loaves, according to the cuftom of the town bakers, being 9lb. 10 oz, or 4lb. 18 oz. outh, —the weight it turned out over or short thereof;—and the weight of the bread when taken out of the oven:—prein account, shewing the produce of 7 lb. (the hipulated quantity far two quartern lower) of fundry mixtures of grain, &c. directed to be baked into bread;—shewing the weight of pared in pursuance of a letter from the chairman of the corn committee, 28th Nov. laft.

USEFUL PRO

of a Letter from Charles Dundas, to the Chairman of the Comtree appointed to enquire into the the Price of Corn.

Sir,

3 many of the members, who attended the committee apted to inquire into the high of corn, may vifit their conents during the Christmas re-I beg leave to call their aton to a subject which I con- does most materially affect ale of wheat, and to propole nedy for some part of the grievs which are now complained neaning that our conflituents be confulted, during the adiment of parliament, on the icability of adopting weight regulator of measure, which ars to me to be the only criterion of the quality of this, jobbing would be annied, and certainty would be dished in the returns of your tets, and in the profits of the r, mealman, and baker. At instant, notwithstanding the ailing opinion, that the Winer bushel is the legal standard, here does not exist a certain ure in the kingdom. el kept in the Exchequer is than eight of the flandard ins there, the gallon less than standard quarts, and the quart ore than two flandard pints. bushel of queen Elizabeth, contains 2,124 cubical es; the gallon of the fame date, cubical inches, and the pint, 1 1602, 34 to cubical inches: efore the inequalities of your regulating standard measures are as

[423 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

med)

made by a reduction of the cuftomary meafure of the market to Winchester measure, the price of the measures of ten gallons being ranked as nine gallons, they raife the price of the article confiderably shove the value it fold for. In other markets, where no average is taken, the price of bread is generally fixed from the highest fale of the best wheat which has been in the market; consequently the price of flour, bearing a proportionate value to the wheat of which it is made, and that being put at a higher average (owing to this false return) it follows, that bread is fold at a dearer rate than it would be if the fale of wheat was properly regulated,

It will be faid, Why is not the ufe of the Winchester bushel enforced. as the law directs? This has been attempted during the last century without fuccess; it is a very uppopular proceeding to bring this The lower orders of forward. people detect it, from the finaliness of its contents, and, the dealers of provisions instigate them to this, it being their interest to retain every uncertainty in weights and meafures, and this cannot be enforced but by informations, which do not fuit the honest character of the people of this country, but if it was brought into general use, certainty (which is one object of this letter) could not be obtained; for in the act of measuring, no two men fill the fame quantity into the fame buthels, and the manner of firiking the measure is as uncertain as that of filling it. Weight, regulated by the 35th Geo. 111: which gives the magistrates a power of preventing false weights, would re-

Whee nearl will nal fo is to whea out o with(much arifin cultu measi fysten tifed it is 31ft 1 respec by the of the and as ing to of gr their the n propo: them, keeps: (who OWB (dealer dustric highel corn, floven price 1

Salt
fore—56lb. t regula lized a kingde follow fale of floor 1

of his

USEFUL PROJECTS.

between the articles corn, flour, and bread, afcerned and fairly regulated, and : magistrates should be emwered to control the clerk of the rkets, millers, and bakers, fo to prevent fraud, which is the y object of any regulation which vish to propose; but perhaps, if equantity to be weighed in the rket was declared to be not lefs n a bushel, this would meet the as of many gentlemen who now pplain of the difficulty of the or becoming the purchasers of all quantities of corn, and are irons of having that quantity ched in the market as a fample. d also, as the weight of the thel of the different grain is ed by the 31st George III. c. 30. aall add that regulation to what rished to submit to the consideran of the committee.

lb. awoirduprife.

thel of Wheat, weighing 57

Rye 55 Barley 49 Beer or bigg 42 Oats 32

Il be respectively deemed equal every standard Winch, bush,

Wheat meal 56
Wheat flour 55
Rye meal 53
Barley meal 48
Beer or bigg meal 41
Catmeal 22

Il be deemed equal to every such hel of the unground grain ereof it is made, and what will pass through a sourteen shillings the is to be considered as wheat al.

f, therefore, the committee are opinion that the introduction of use of weight, to regulate and ortain the measures of sorn, is ut their respective mills for the purpose of being ground.

430] ANNUAL REG

2. To grind all grain separately, massin excepted.

3. To keep a regular account of the produce of the faid grain, subject to inspection of the magistrates of the county or district where the mills are situated, when they shall find occasion for setting an assist on flour or bread.

4. Persons who have bid corn made into flour at any mill, to have the option of paying the miller's toll either in money or in kind (meal) as they choose.

5. That nothing in this shall affect the customs of soke mills, as far as relates to their ancient tenures, but that the magistrates shall have a power of examining their books as above.

When I propose these resolutions to the committee, it is for the purpole of drawing their attention to the subject, and to request of them to converse with their intelligent neighbours in the country, who are either farmers, flour dealers, or bakers. I have received feveral letters on this fubject, containing opinions of persons of experience and practice. They all agree in the justice of the plan I propose; some dread the diflike which attends every thing that is new; but almost all allow that the improvement would be of confiderable benefit to the country. I am particularly fatiffied by the decided opinions (in fayour of weight being the regulator of measure) of Mr. Strutt, of Terling, of Mr. Davies, of Longleat, and Mr. Messiter, of Wincanton sin their letters to Mr. Morton Pitt) and of Mr. Billingsley, of Ashurst Grove in Somerfetthire: gentlen who are to fit to judge

th me lii

of 241 1

pe for no cor for tio

tio lea poi ufe fur cor bil

me fhc in wa get

Ba

Coj

to grs ites and the E431

wife the following:

.t — 63 per Winch. buth.

7 52 or 53 ditto 38 or 40 ditto not only my own opinion, that of the most intelligent and corn dealers in our the kingdom, that such an on would be highly conduthe general weal of the m.

ım, dear Sir,.

your most humble fervant, J. BILLINGSLEY. grove, Dec. 6, 1796.

1016 Dec. 1795. Since I had the honour of ting the above letter to the ttee, I have received feveral from gentlemen of expeand judgment in the country, e proposal of substituting as the regulator of measures fales of corn; all of whom t two very respectable men) e of the plan The two nen I allude to fay, there e an alteration without an ement: their reasons have, er, relieved my doubts, as test their opinions on two

That weighing will occasion

That it is already practiced skilful purchasers.

niwer to the first. When a f wheat is delivered, if the should be suspected to be they are sooner weighed neasured; and if the corn is clean as the sample was, ight will prove this, which be done by measure.

loading and unloading of after having afcertained the t of a box or machine to run the wheat into, the weight of the grain would be much former proved than the quantity by meafure.

Gapy of a Letter from Mr. Billingsley to Charles Dundas, Efq.

SECONDLY, as to the prefent practice of weight being used, I am well acquainted with this circumítance, and it is a very obvious reason for endeavouring to make the mode general, as by this public regulation, fraud would be prevented, and the labourers or manufacturers purchating corn would be put on an equality with the most artful feller.—I have introduced the pitching of a buthel in the public markets, to meet the withes of many respectable manbers of the houle of commons, in confequence of applications from their constituents, who have found great difficulty in procuring wheat to purchafe. But as pitching a buthel may be attended with inconvenience to the farmer, and also to retail it. This increase of price would be very inconfiderable, and would be much less than the value of the time, which would be thrown away by the purchaser waiting in the market, or his loss by his ignorance of the quality of the commodity.

What I have faid respecting millers, appears to me to be most necessary to do away the present opinion, that the high price of flour is in some degree owing to the millers or mealmen; but as a respectable baronet has brought forward a bill on this subject, the resolutions contained in my letter respecting millers may be rendered unnecessary, except in drawing the attention of the country to the confideration of these lubjects, which I hope will be the confequence of the attention which has been paid by the committee to enquire into the causes of the high price of corn.

A table, like the following, might regulate the prices of a market, as far as related to the quantity and weight:

te	r bujbe!.			per load.
lb.		lb.		1.	5.	d.
60	or	59		12	0	0
58		57		11	17	б
56		55		11	15	6
-	-			11	12	б
	-	51		1 I	10	0
_		-	-	11	7	6

Thus 11. 10s. per load difference would be made in the price, where 28lb. per sack was the difference in weight, which would be five half hundreds in a load of wheat, which is the exact weight of a fack of flour, and which the best wheat would produce more than the lightest.—I have added this as a rule to fettle any dispute, in case the wheat delivered noder a particular sample, should prove lighter than the bushel erfack, registered with the clerk of the market.

I will only add, that from every convertation which I have had with farmers, mealmen and mil lers, fince this subject was brought forward, I am convinced that the use of weight, as the regulator of measure, will prevent fraud B dealings in corn, and will enable the magistrates or others, to read late the price of bread by the average price of wheat or flour, infent of being fixed by the highest price of wheat, as it is at prefent.

C. D. Extract of a Letter from Mr. Devict to William Morton Pitt, Efq. Longleat, Nev. 22, 1795

YOUR question—" Whether it be possible or proper that farmers, who fell their corn by fample, should be obliged to bring the whole or a certain quantity of it to market?"—involves fo many objects of confideration, that I must. beg your leave not only to give my opinion but to flate my realons at. fome length; the subject is a feet rious one, and I trust you will not think me more prolix than it men. quires.

The difficulties in reducing this plan to practice seems to be these:

ift. The infrequency of market towns in many parts of the kingdom, and the distance from these towns to the places where corn is confumed.

2d. The increased expense of carrying corn to markets; and then, in many instances, bringing. it back again to be consumed near the ipot where it grew.

The impolicy, if training, by compute of an article, indispensable in a claim as any ot to a free and voe; especially an argrowth as options e seller.

The absolute in ing a constant of every market deconsumption of that ma market day.

ie above are my racticability or ev of carrying a plan effect. My opi n do but little go great deal of harn iberty of supporti by the following ne prefent, and ity of corn, ariles lure of crops. nat failure must I to the grower (w y the fame rent i a increased price. ways regulated by ie great desideratu tar as possible, '

made to the co end for its obje all deference, to adequate.

emand and the ful

ive in a fituation ten fit me with the

The proposal made of corn to market quantity, small as o shillings, and not ontracted to take a hom it is intended, the poor seldom buy agriculture in the facturers live from seldom reckoned how rket to buy corn, e 24. XXXVIII.

asked, why cannot markets be held at these towns? - I answer the effablishments of markets are not the work of a day; - and suppose they were established, still that would not increase the quantity of corn grown in that country. dealers must still go castward for three-fourths of their supply, to the neglect of their own trifling markets, which of course would foon come to nothing again.

The avowed object of the plan before the committee is, doubtless, to defeat a supposed combination between buyers and fellers of corn to keep up its price, and to lay the markets open to a fair competition; and a very laudable object it is. have already stated my doubts as to the poffibility of carrying this plan into execution, or indeed any plan that would defeat this kind of combination; but I have very great doubts in my own mind as to the existence of combination to the extent we frequently hear of, and still greater as to the magnitude of the injury supposed to be done thereby to the public.—I am fenfi', le I am taking the unpopular fide of the argument.—I think you will agree with me in some parts of it at least; and if you do not, I am fure you will not be offended at my giving my opinion

That a combination should exift among farmers i imposable; they are too numerous, and many of them too necessitous, ever to act in concert.

Rich farmers may undoubtedly (and this year they have done it) keep their wheat from market. In times of fearcity, like the last months of June and July, it is well they did, we should otherwife have been quite starved in August. The shortness of the supply then produced a faving in the confumption, and thereby the flock in hand lasted out. Suppos we had had a wet harveft;, in the cafe the new corn could not have heen ground without an addition of old. The rich farmers who have wheat left would then have been useful men. The fact speaks for itself.

As to jobbers of corn, these men may combine together; their nanber is but few, comparatively speak. ing; but how do they combined: not to raise the price of corn; but to fink it! Warminster markets though a fack market, and nit s fample market, is in a great mesfure governed by thefe men;—and were it not for them, Bath and Briftol must be fed much desict If these men than they are now. cannot get corn at one market they go to another, and if there is not enough at market they go to fame houses. But when they get to the places of confumption, there was combination ends, and competition begins;—less profit will fuffices there men than the expence that would be incurred by ten times the numbers of bakers and malkery coming twenty or twenty-five miles In fact, had it not been to market. for men of this description, Briffor would have been starved last fummer.—There were initances, more than once, of that city being without a fortnight's fupply of com-These men knew it, and ransacked the country for more.—They did it for their own fakes, and thereby ferved the community.

But even admitting a combine tion between farmers and jobben to exist in any particular country; the moment corn gets above the price at which it would bear the additional expence of carriage ten miles farther, there is an end of the combination; and if it was possible the whole kingdom could combine, an importation from any country where it could be got cheaper would instantly knock it In fact, these very men, though dealing at all times under fuspicions, and this year frequently in danger of their lives, are the very hands that transfer the plenty of one country to relieve the diftresses of another; and though at former periods, as well as now, they have, in times of dearth, been pointed at as the cause of it, they have to my knowledge this year more than once sa ed whole towns from famine. In fact, times of Icarcity are favourable to this let of men. They are then (against their will, I allow) particularly nseful to all countries who do not grow corn enough for their con-cannot exist to answer their own purpose—in those times they are not wanted.

price

But the great evil which we in this country feel, and which our great corn markets rather encourage than prevent, is the inequality of measures by which corn, and particularly wheat, is fold; I do not speak of the various provincial measures. It is immaterial to a country whether eight, nine, or twelve gallons are sold for a bushel, provided all parties understand what the measure is.

But in this country, in all villages and small towns where there is no assize of bread, the baker fells his bread and his flour at his own price, for which he always quotes the highest market price of wheat; a few farmers, who happen to have extraordinary good wheat, make a point of adding two or three quarts to the measure. This fack of corn, so much better and bigger than the average of the market, will frequently sell for one fifth more than inferior samples of fair measure in the same This high price. which it is the interest of the buyer to give, forms a standard of price of bread and flour for the ensuing week.—No existing laws. are adequate to the remedy of this, evil, for as neither buyer nor felfer complain, who is to re-measure: this corn, though fold in a public market? Besides, there is so much art in measuring corn, that two people may make ieveral quarts difference in a fack, and yet both appear to measure fair.—If any remedy can be applied to this evil; it must be a compulsion to sell corn by weight;—this is done by choice at Manchester and Liverpool, and in this country the buyer. always aiks the weight, though he does not buy by it:—in fact, weight determines the quality as well as the quantity. If weight was adopted, the price would be nearly equal, and it would then be possible to frame a fair assize table, which in my opinion is impossible to do from measure, especially in such a year as this, when the difference in the price of good and bad wheat is full one third.

I cannot help thinking, that if this measure was tried a year, it would be found efficacious.—It would do one thing in an instant, which the legislature has not been able to do in a century—" equalize all the various measures in the kingdom."

Ff2

436] ANNUAL REGISTER

Copy of a letter from Sir Francis Baffet, from three to fi: Bart, to the Chairman of the Corn Committee.

Upper Grosvenor-street, Dec. 22, 1795. SIR,

MANY complaints having been made in different parts of England, of the hardships suffered by the poor from the prefent mode of payment for grinding corn, and also of the difficulty of obtaining redrefs, whenever there is a fuspicion that frauds are practifed by the millers; I beg leave, through you, to submit to the corn committee a plan for remedying those supposed grievances.

I would propose, in the first place, to alter the prefent cuftom of taking toll, into a uniform payment in money, to be fettled by the justices, with respect to all mills where fuch alterations would not interfere with peculiar rights, established by the courts of law. I further propose to enable those persons who may in future think themfelves aggrieved by millers, to obtain redress by a summary proceeding before two justices of the peace, instead of being obliged to have recourse to so expensive and so tedious a process as an indict- and by which t ment. As the law stands at prefent, the proprietor of an old mill may take his accustomed toll; but as that toll is known only to himfelf (for it is rarely avowed to his to the poor, who customer) this gives him a consi- they can the I derable latitude, and is a confiant if frauds are eve and never-failing fource of jealoufy lers, they are to those who employ him. I have place when the just faid that the customer feldom temptation, that knows what he pays; but in the a high price. few cases which have come to my knowledge, where the miller pro- much respectit festes to take a fixed toll, it varies which a summy chefter bushel, ance from a pot half for waftag the miller, by helps himself fr confifts of the b It appears then tor of an old n toll as is juilifi the owner of a . what toll he cl the opinion of cafe of the king probably, is the in which a to fixes the price without acquai what his terms

The millers, c take a fair pric and could not th reasonably obje obliging them payment in ma arbitráry and grain; indeed, vinced that the against them as many cases they would rather re of payment ado jealoufies will b an adequate co labour perform employed. Th is certainly en have over an indictment. An indictment is attended with a great certain expence, with confiderable delay, is liable to much evation and uncertainty as to the issue; the expence of an indictment, if traversed, amounts to at least seven pounds: this circumstance alone. would make it impossible for a poor man to have recourse to it; and, indeed, would render it imprudence even for a wealthy person, as in most cases he would find the remedy worse than the disease. But the delay is another main objection to proceeding by indictment, for if traversed, it cannot be tried till the sessions after it is laid; but, after all, if neither expence nor delay are confidered as fufficient objections, it must be observed, that when the cause is brought to issue, though the complainant may prove that the miller has taken exorbitant toll, the indicament must fall to the ground, provided it appears that the predecessors of the miller have taken the same toll, or that he is the proprietor of a new mill.

It will not 1

The measure I have in view, contains some other regulations, but they are chiefly subordinate, and connected with the two objects I have stated. If the plan I propose should be adopted, I think few disputes could hereafter arise between millers and those who employ them, as the chief subjects of their usual differences, namely, the exorbitancy and uncertainty of the toll, would no longer remain. But if, contrary to my expectation, there should be any complaints in future, they would be settled at a Imall expence, and without any delay, before two justices of tne peace, probably well known to both the contending parties. I propose that the decision of the justices should be final, for the purpose of avoiding expence and delay; but if this power is thought too great to be lodged in the hands of these magistrates, an appeal may be allowed to the quarter sessions.

I beg pardon for taking up so much of your time on this subject which really appears to me important, and therefore to deserve the serious consideration of the corn o mmittee.

I have the honour to be, &c.
FRANCIS BASSET.

The Select Committee bave come to the following Resolutions respecting the making of mixed Bread.

Resolved, March 24, 1796.

r. That it is the opinion of this committee, that it is expedient that magistrates should, in times of scarcity and high price of corn, have power to make certain regulations relative to the manufacture and sale of certain sorts of meal and bread; which they do not now by law possess.

2. That it is the opinion of this committee, that whenever the average price of middling British wheat shall be above a certain sum, magistrates, at their general quarter sessions, or at any sessions to be specially appointed for that purpose, shall be empowered, within their respective jurisdictions, to prohibit, for a limited time, the separation at the mill of more than five pounds of bran from every fixty pounds of wheat; and also to prohibit the sale of any wheaten meal from which a greater proportion of bran shall have been separated.

3. That it is the opinion of this. F f 3 committee, committee, that no miller should be prevented from making fine flour for the confumption of any persons who reside within the districts where the use of fine flour is not prohibited, so far as the making fuch flour for the confumption of such persons bath been the usual course of his trade.

438]

4. That it is the opinion of this committee, that magistrates be also empowered to prohibit, within their respective jurisdictions, for a limited time, the making for fale any other bread made of wheat meal alone, than fuch as shall be made of the whole meal, deducting only at the rate of five pounds of bran out of fixty pounds of wheat.

5. That it is the opinion of this committee, that magistrates be empowered, within their respective jurisdictions, to prohibit, for a limited time, the making of any bread for fale, except such as shall be made of the whole meal of wheat as above described, or of fuch mixtures of wholefome farinaceous food, and in such proportions as they thall appoint.

6. That it is the opinion of this committee, that for the purpose of carrying the last resolution into effect, magistrates be empowered to oblige the millers, within their respective jurisdictions, for a limited time, to grind and drefs, if required, and if confisient with the powers and mechanism of their mills, fuch forts of grain as shall be necentary for making the faid approved mixtures.

7. That it is the opinion of this committee, that magistrates shall not make any of the prohibitions before mentioned, without sufficient public notice.

8. That it is the opinion of this committee, that within the city of London and the liberties thereof. the company of the bakers of the faid city, and in any other county, city, division, district, town or place, any baker or maker of bread for sale, miller, or mealman, within the respective jurisdiction to which he or they do belong, or wherein he or they do exercise their trade, occupation, or mystery, have an opportunity of offering to fuch justices 44 aforesaid, all such objections as such company of bakers, or fuch bakers or makers of bread for fale or fuch millers or mealmen, may have and think fit to offer, against any fuch prohibition or regulation and aforesaid, at the time when such juftices as aforesaid shall have under confideration the ordering any fuch prohibition or regulation

Sir John Sinclair's Address to the Board. of Agriculture, the 24th May 1796.

Igitur et de cultură agri pracipen, principale fuit, etiam apud exteret siquidem et reges secere, Hiero, t bilanstor, Attalus, Archelaus, et duces Xense phon, et Pænus etiam Mago; cui dem tantum bonorem senatus noster (Romanus) hubuit, Carthagine captd; # cum regulis Africa biblicthecas donard; unins ejus duo de triginta de agricultura volumina, censeret in Latinam linguan transferenda, cum jam M. Cato pracepta condidisset, peringque lingua Pronicæ dandum negotium, in quo pracefit omnes wir clarissina familia D. Syllanns.

PLIN. HIST. MUND. 1. XVIII. C. 5.

Gentlemen,

AS it will probably be extremely difficult to procure again a sufficient attendance of the members of the board at this season of the year, and during the bustle of general election, I think it may not be improper to take the opportunity of this meeting briefly to state the progress we have made, since I last had the honour of addressing myself to you at the conclusion of the preceding session.

It is on all hands acknowledged, that the exertions of the Board of Agriculture last year, in promoting an extra cultivation of potatoes, was attended with the happiest consequences, the beneficial effects of which (both the culture and use of that valuable root having thus been greatly extended) will probably long be felt, when the circumstance from which it originated may be forgotten. In fact, in times of scarcity and distress, there is no comparable to potatoes. They will grow in the poorest soils; they can be taken up in detail as they are wanted; they require no manufacture of drying, milling, &c. previous to their being used; and they can be prepared in various ways for confumption. Aboye all. it is to be observed, that there is a space of perhaps four months, which generally is supplied from the old stock, but in times of fearcity must be taken from the new crop. That is a circumstance of lefs confequence where fpring corn is the food of the people (but even there it is desirable to thresh the corn in winter rather than in the spring, as the straw is better for the cattle:) but where the people live upon wheat, which is fown in autumn, the case is otherwise; and it is impossible to say what distress it might occation (when there is no old flock of wheat in the country), unless the aid of such an article as potatoes can be obtained, if the farmer is obliged, in a hurried and destructive manner, to thresh corn, both for feed for himself, and food for the public. He might be tempted, indeed, by the high price of grain for food, to delay sowing his seed until the favourable season has elapsed, in which case it is impossible to say what damage would ultimately result from it.

The board not having yet obtained the privilege of franking, its correspondence is much more limited and less regular than it ought to be, and is attended with a degree of trouble and inconvenience to the person who presides at it, of which it is difficult to form an adequate conception. In confequence, however, of the want of this privilege, so essential to a public institution, and the great restrictions recently imposed upon the privileges enjoyed by a member of parliament, it has been found impossible to keep up that extenfive and regular correspondence, and to procure that extent of information, from which the public might derive fo many important By the active zeal, advantages. however, of many friends to the institution, information was at a very early period fent to the board, containing rather unfavourable accounts of the last year's crop of wheat. I thought it a duty, therefore, incumbent upon me, to make use of every degree of influence which my fituation as prefident of this board gave me with the public, to recommend, in the strongest manner, an extra cultivation of wheat last au-My letter upon that fubtumn ject, dated 11th September 1-95, was fent to all the members of the board, was transmitted to the quarter fellions of the different counties. and was printed in above fifty different newspapers. It is with much plesture Ff4

440 ANNUAL REGISTER,

pleafure I add; that the recommendation was attended with more extenfive confequences than could well have been expected. From all parts of the kingdom intelligence has been received, that a greater quantity of wheat was fown last autumn than perhaps at any period in the memory of man; and should the ensuing harvest prove favourable, this kingdom will be as well stocked with grain as it was fome years ago. At any rate, by these measures, much risk of an immediate fearcity feems to be obviated.

The high price of corn, at the commencement of the last session, naturally directed the attention of parliament to confider the best means, not only to remedy the prefent diffress, but to prevent it in future. For attaining the first object, a select committee was appointed, known under the name of the corn committee, whose anxious zeal to do every possible justice to the great subject referred to their confideration merits the utmost praife. The measures recommended by that committee have fince been confidered unnecessary by fome individuals, in confequence of the price of grain having had a temporary fall—But it will probably yet appear, that, had it not been for the earnest recommendation of that committee to econdmize the confumption of bread, to use other kinds of grain as subitilutes for wheat, and to encourage the importation of foreign corn by bounties of uncommon magnitude, the price of grain would not probably have decreased, and complaints would have been made of the inattention of government to the diffrefles of the country; a more ferious gr than any over all times, partic fo critical a ma ence of the peop fable, but on t was not only proved extremel

It was a matt greater imports fome great and the risk of fca: our being und and fatal beceft pending upon f fublikence, bu ing its importat ties. With t quence of the board, I had th in parliament 1 of a felect com its confideration moting the c provement of ed, and unprokingdom. The bill of inclosu dently wither been attempte many was held By the exertic felect commi drawing up th fideration of the referred, a bill pared, which many intellige in that fubjec to the object is the last session carlier than w probably have of the legitle truft, bowever of the enfui have the cred important and which the future fu country depends. at leaft to fail, if it by the exertions of Agriculture.

Another measure by the board, of in portance, but at the neficial to the agric of the country, has I allude to the exen and rape cakes fro act of last fession, 113*. The first cake, is of confider to the feeders of c be had, it is suppose from America, whe tity of linfeed oil is painting their wood refuse, known unde linfeed oil or cake, there, in confequer abundance of other fion for cattle: No more defirable tha blish a new fource ficial to two coun by a race of men (p language, descende common origin, an confider themselve people.—As to n found to be a valu many parts of this diderable quantities it is fuppofed, n from the continent fince this regulaplace, Rape will tivated in America also to devote so boundlefs territorie of that plant, the ^{*} Intituled " An British Plantations, reign country, in Br ing to law, without

442] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

would of itself have been sufficient to have occupied the full attention of many focieties. The perfection to which the manufacturing of barley flour has been carried under the auspices of this institution, is a discovery of great importance, as it is thus afcertained, that from the meal of pearl or pot barley, bread may be made, in taste and colour, and probably in nourifhment, little interior to that of wheaten flour; and that in the proportion of at least one-third, fuch meal may be mixed with the produce of wheat, so as hardly to be diffinguished. A very general correspondence has been established, for the purpose of afcertaining the price of flock, both lean and fattened. Experiments on a great scale, under the directions of that able chymist Dr. Fordyce, are now carrying on at Gubbins in Hertfordshire, the scat of Mr. Lunter, for the purpose of ascertaining the principles of vegetation, and the effects of manures; and fieps are now taking, in order to procure such information respecting the various forts of live flock in the kingdom, as will enable us to give, in the course of next year, complete information to the public upon that important lubject.

I have ever confidered it to be a wife principle for the board to adopt, not to print books for reference, but books for use; not massy volumes on a variety of different subjects, beyond the income of the generality of the people to purchase, or their time to peruse; but, if possible, distinct publications, each of them on one article, exclusively of every other, avoiding the intermixture of various topics, and districts in the fame work. It would also be defirable, that no paper should be published by the board until it has been before it is printed, circulated among all those who are likely to correct and improve it, and brought to fome degree of perfection previous to its publication. Agriculture though often treated of, has hitherto never been discussed; and it can never be. much improved, until information respecting it has been collected; from all quarters, has been afterwards thoroughly canvassed. and has ultimately been condensed and, stiftematized. Such, however, has been the great number of communications transmitted to the board upon various important subjects, in particular farm buildings, cottages, and the flate of the poor, embankments, roads, the construction of mills, and of hand mills in particular; together with a variety of interesting papers respecting the agriculture of foreign countries, that the board has resolved to print a specimen of those papers in one volume quarto, in order to afcertain the opinion of the public. respecting that mode of laying before it the papers we have received, in addition to the county reports now publishing.

The business gone through by the board of agriculture is certainly more than could possibly be expected from an institution possessed of such limited powers, and of so consined an income. The time, however, it is to be hoped, is not far distant, when it will be put on a better and more respectable sooting;—when the superior impertance of such inquiries, the superior value of agricultural resources, and dreadful expence, and fatal consequences occasioned by their deficiency, will be so clearly ascertained, as not to be a subject of doubt to the weakest understanding. For the purpose of effecting fo defirable an object, I propofe preparing, in the course of the enfuing recess, for the consideration of the board, and, if it should have the good fortune of meeting with their approbation, to be laid before his majesty and both houses of parliament, a general report on the agricultural state of Scotland, and the means of its improvement. That work will probably explain, in a satisfactory manner, the soundness of that political maxim, that the prosperity of a country ought to be founded on a spirit of internal improvement; and that a fingle additional acre cultivated at home is more truly valuable, than the most extensive possessions acquired abroad, at an enormous expence of treasure and of blood, and retained with difficulty and danger. To that important subject, when · hostilities are brought to a conclufion, I trust that the attention of this country will be directed. Fortunately, by the exertions of the board of agriculture, when peace is happily restored, the internal state of this kingdom will be sufficiently ascertained, and we shall be able to judge, what are the fittest steps to be taken, in order to make the utmost of our domestic resources. To that period I look up with much anxiety If Europe once more breathes in peace, and is governed by wife countellors, the contest among nations naturally will be, not who will feel the greatest eagerness to rush again into the horrors of war, under the pretence of promoting national glory, but who will be the most anxious to remain in peace, for securing the national interests.

fatai

I cannot conclude without expressing my best acknowledgments : for the assistance I have received from to many respectable members, in carrying on the business of this institution. By their exertions, I trust, it will be brought to such a state, that from its establishment will be dated, not only the improvement and internal prosperity of our own country, but much of the comforts enjoyed in future times by fociety in general. Permit me to add, that when the board re-affembles, each of us will, hope, bring some proof of his zeal for the cause, by the additional information we shall respectively fur-He who augments the stores of useful knowledge already accumulated, whilst he secures to himfelf the most satisfactory sources of enjoyment, promotes at the same time, in the most effectual manner, the happiness of others.

On the use of Rice, by I homas Barnard, ssq I reasurer to the Foundling Hospital.

IN the beginning of last summer, when every individual attention was directed to the faving of flour, one of the first measures adopted with that view in the Foundling hospital was, to substitute rice-puddings for those of flour, which, by the table of diet, were used for the children's dinner twice a week; and the refult of the experiment proved, that one pound of rice would, in point of nutriment, supply the place of eight pounds of flour-puddings for The each ,

444] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

each day had confifted of 168lb. of flour, 14lb. of suet, and 14 gallons of milk, and cost 3l. 2s. 3d. The rice-puddings, substituted in their place, were made of 21lb. of rice, 16lb. of raisins, and 14 gallons of milk, and cost 1l. 9s. 2d. being not quite half the expence of the flour puddings. The 21lb. of rice was found to produce the same quantity of food, as the 168lb. of flour; but being more liked by he children, the quantity of rice has since been increased to 24lb.

The increase that rice acquires by being baked with milk, may be aftertained by baking in a common pan, without any previous preparation, eight ounces of rice, four ounces of raisins, and two ounces of brown sugar, with two quarts of milk, which, at the expense of about nine-pence, will produce sour pounds and a half weight of folid, nutritious, and pleasant food.

To shew, however, that the increase of bulk, and weight is not merely, though partly, owing to the milk, but chiefly to the nutritious quality of rice,—take a quarter of a pound of plain rice, and tie it up in a bag, so loose as to be capable of holding about five times that quantity, and boil it, it will produce above a pound of solid rice food; which, however, casy the cookery, will, if eaten with either sweet or savoury sauce, make a good palatable pudding.

If to the quarter of a pound of rice is added an egg, a pint of milk, a little sugar and nutmeg, it will make a better pudding than is made with either flour or bread. Observe, that it is only to the boiled pudding the egg should be added.

Rice is also a good ingredient in bread. Boil a quarter of a pound of rice till it is foft; then put it on the back part of a fieve to drain it, and, when it is cold, mix it with 3 quarters of a pound of flour, a tea-cup full of yeast, a tea-cup full of milk, and a small table. spoon full of falt. Let it stand for three hours; then kneed it up, and roll it up in about a handfull of flour, so as to make the outside dry enough to put into the oven About an hour and a quarter will bake at, and it will produce one pound fourteen ounces of very The loave good white bread. should be small, not larger than above-mentioned. should not be ate till it is two days old.

N. B. The draining of the rice will supply the place of starch for common articles.

In addition to the above, it is to be observed, that with a little bacon and seasoning, or any other meat, or with cheese, it stews down into a cheap and savoure dish, and that there is hardly any preparation of baked or boiled meat in which rice is not an economical and useful ingredient.

The preceding calculations were made when rice was at a higher price than at present. It will propeably be much cheaper, as large quantities of rice are expected.

The nutritious quality of rice is, attended with this benefit, that it is a food upon which hard work can be done. It contains a great-deal of nutriment in a small compass, and does not pass quickly of the stomach, as some other of the substitutes for wheat flour do; but is bracing and strengthening, and consequently very useful and proper for the laborious part of the community.

Specification.

Mr. Edward Thomas Jones, of the City of Bristol, Accomptant; for his Method or Plan for detecting Errors in Accounts of all kinds, (called the English System of Book-keeping,) whereby such Accounts will be kept and adjusted in a much more regular and concise manner than hy any other method hitherto known.

TO all to whom these presents shall come, &c. Now know ye, that, in compliance with the faid proviso, I the said Edward Thomas Jones do hereby declare, that my faid invention is described in manner following; that is to fay, the English system of book-keeping requires three books, called a daybook or journal, an alphabet, and a ledger, which must be ruled aster the following described method, viz. the day-book to have three columns on each page, for receiving the amount of the transactions; one column of which to receive the amount of the debits and credits, one column to receive the debits only, and one column to receive the credits only; or it may be raled with only two columns on each page, one column to receive the amount of the debits, and one column to receive the amount of the credits. There must also be, on each page of the day-book, four other columns ruled, two on the left fide, next the amount of the debits, and two on the right fide, next the amount of the credits, for receiving the letter or mark of posting, and the page of the ledger to which each amount is to be posted. The alphabet need not be ruled at all, but must contain the name of every account in the ledger, the letter that is annexed to it as a mark of posting, and the page of the ledger. The ledger must be ruled with three. four, five, or feven, columns on on each page, as may be most agreeable, for receiving the amounts of the different transactions entered in the day-book; and the process for using these books, or making up books of accounts on this plan, is as follows. When a person enters into trade, whether by himself, or with copartners, he must have an account opened with himself in the ledger; entering first in the day-book, and then to the credit of his account in the ledger, the amount of the property he advances into trade; the account may be headed either with his name only, or else called his stock account. If you buy goods, give the person credit of whom you purchase: when you fell goods, debit the perfon to whom faid goods are fold. If you pay money, debit the person, to whom paid, not only for what you pay, but also for any discount or abatement he may allow, and give the cathier credit for the neat amount paid. If you receive money, credit the person of whom you receive it, not only for what he pays, but also for any discount or abatement you may allow, and debit the cashier for the neat amount received; taking care in these entries to have nothing mysterious or obscure, but merely a plain narrative of the fact, introducing not one fingle useless word, and avoiding every technical term or phrase, except the words debit and credit, which are full and comprehensive, and the only terms that are applicable to every transaction, and may be affixed to every entry. But, as a hurry of bufiness will sometimes take place in almost every counting-house, which may cause the entries to be made to the debit instead of the credit of an account in the day-book, and to the credit instead of the debit, I have endeavoured, as much as possible, to counteract the evil by having only one column for receivi - the amount of every transaction, be dehits or credits, at the i and at an king the entry; and, for the convenience of feparating the debits from the credits, previons to possing which is necessary to prevent confusion and per; 'exity. I have two other column on the same page; that on the left fide into which the amount of every debit must be carefully entered, and that on the right for the amount of the credits; which columns must be cast up once a month. The column of debits and credits of itself forming one amount; the column for the debits producing a second amount; and the column of credits a third amount; which second and third amounts, added together, exactly agree with the first amount, or the work is not done right. this means the man of business may obtain monthly such a statement of his affairs as will thew how much he owes for that month, and how much is owing to him; and the debits being added together for any given time, with the value of the stock of goods on hand, will, when the amount of the credits is substracted therefrom, shew the profits of the trade. I thall now proceed to the process of posting; which begins with opening an account in the ledger with every person to whose debit or credit there has been an entry made in the day-book; affixing to each account a letter, which is to be used as a mark of posting. The person's name, place of abode, and the folio of the ledger, must then be entered in the alphabet; with the same letter prefixed to each name as is affixed to the sccount in the ledger. Next the page of the ledger on which each account is opened, (and which will be feen in the alphabet, y math? be affixed to each amount in:the day book, in the column for that purpose The date and amount of each debit must then be posted in the columns for receiving it in the ledger, on the left or debit fide of that account to which it relates: entering, as a mark of posting in the day-book, against each amount, the fame letter that is affixed to the account in the ledger, towhich faid amount may be posted. Observing that the debits of January, February, and March, &co. must be posted into the column for those months in the ledger, and the credits must also be posted in like manner, filling up each aocount in centre, at the expiration of every month, with the whole amount of the month's transactions; thus having, in a imail ipace, the whole statement of each perfon's account for the year; in the columns to the right and left the amount separately of each transaction, and in the centre a monthly statement. Having described the process of this method of bookkeeping, I shall shew how to examine books kept by this method, fo as to ascertain, to an absolute certainty, if the ledger be a true representation of the day-book; i.e. not only if each transaction be correctly correctly posted, as to the amount thereof, but also if it be rightly entered to the debit or credit of its This examination proper account. differs from the modes that have heretofore been practifed, as well in expedition as in the certain accuracy which attends the process; it being only necessary to cast up the columns through the ledger debits and credits, according to the examples given, and the amount of those columns, if right, must agree with the columns in the day-book for the same corresponding space of time. Thele castings should take place once a month, and, if the amounts do not agree, the posting must then, but not else, be called over; and when the time, whether it be one, two, three, or four, months, that, is allotted to each column of the ledger is expired, the amount of each column should be put at the bottom of the first page, and carried forward to the bottom of the next, and fo on to the end of the accounts; taking care that the amount in the day-book, of each month's transactions, be brought into one gross amount for the same But, although this process must prove that the ledger contains the whole contents of the day-book, and neither more nor lets, yet it is not complete without the mode of ascertaining if each entry be posted to its right account, which may be afcertained by the following method. I have laid down a rule that a letter, which may be used. alphabetically in any form or shape that is agreeable, thall be affixed to each account in the ledger, and the fame letter prefixed to the names in the alphabet, these letters being used as marks of posting, and affixed to each account in the day-book as it is posted; it is only necessary therefore to compare and fee that the letter affixed to each entry in the day-book is the fame as is prefixed to the fame name in the alphabet; a difference here shews of course an error, or else it must be right. At the end of the year, or at any other time, when persons balance their accounts, if there be no objection to the profits of the trade appearing in the books, the stock of goods on hand at prime cost may be entered in the day-book, either the value in one amount, or the particulars specified, as may be most expedient, and an account opened for it in the ledger, to the debit of which it must be posted. casting up of the ledger must then be completed, and when found to agree with the day-book, and the amount placed at the bottom of each column, subtract the credits from the debits, and it will shew. the profit of the trade; unless the credits be the greater amount, which will thew a loss. In taking off the balances of the ledger, one rule must be observed, and it cannot be done wrong; as you proceed, first see the difference between the whole amounts of the credits and debits on each page for the year, with which the difference of the outstanding balances of the feveral accounts on each page mustiexactly agree, or the balances will not be taken right. By this means every page will be proved as you proceed, and the balances of ten thousand lèdgers, on this plan, could not unobservedly be taken off wrong. In witness whereof. &c.

Account

Account of an Improvement in Sea Compasses; by Mr. B. Romans, of Pensacola.—From the Philosophical Transactions of the ...merican Phi-Infophical Society.

THE common mariner's compass has always appeared to accurate observers as an impersect in-Arument, but in nothing has it proved to be more defective than in its use in storms; the heaviest brass compasses now in use are by no means to be relied on in a hollow or high fea. This is owing to the box hanging in two brass rings, confining it only to two motions, both vertical, and at right angles with each other; by which confinement of the box, upon any fuccussion, more especially sudden ones, the card is always put into too much agitation, and, before it can well recover itself, another jerk prevents its pointing to the pole; nor is it an extraordinary thing to see the card unshipped by the violence of the ship's pitching.

All these inconveniencies are remedied to the full, by giving the box a vertical motion at every degree and minute of the circle, and compounding these motions with a horizontal one, of the box, as well as of the card. By this unconfined disposition of the box, the effects of the jerks on the card are avoided, and it will always very fleadily point to the pole. Experience has taught me, that the card not only is not in the fmallest degree affected by the hollow sea, but that, in all the violent shocks and whirlings the box can receive, the card lies as still as if in a room unaffected by the least motion.

Lately a compass was invented and made in Holland, which has all these motions. It is of the fize of the common brass compasses; the bottom of the brass box, instead of being like a bowl, must be raised into a hollow cone, like the bottom of a common glass bottle: the vertex of the cone must be raised fo high as to leave but one inch, between the card and the glass; the box must be of the ordinary. depth; and a quantity of lead mult he poured in the bottom of the box, round the base of the cone; this secures it on the stile whered it traverses.

This stile is firmly fixed in the centre of a square wooden box, like the common compass, except that it requires a thicker bottom The stile must be of brass, about fix inches long, round, and of the thickness of one third of an inch; its head blunt, like the head of a fewing-thimble, but of a good, polish: the stile must stand per-The inner vertex of pendicular. the cone must also be well polished;". vertical part of the cone ought to be thick enough to allow of a well-polished cavity, sufficient to admit a short stile, proceeding from the centre of the card The comwhereon it traverses. país I saw was so constructed; but I fee no reason why the stile might not proceed from the centre of the vertex of the cone, and so be received by the card the common-The needle must be a magnetic bar, blunt at each end; the glass and cover are put on in the common way.

A compais of this kind was given :. by the captain of a Dutch man-ofwar to captain Barnaby of the Zephyr floop; this gentleman gave: it to me to examine, and was very profuse in his encomiums thereon,

Laying

ANTIQUITIES.

- A short Account of Several Gardens near London; with remarks on some Particulars wherein they excel or are desicient, upon a view of them in December, 1691.—From the Archæologia, Vol. XII.
- 1. HAMPTON Court Garden is a large plat environed with an iron palisade round about next the park, laid all in walks, plats, and borders. Next to the house, some flat and broad beds are fet with narrow rows of dwarf box, in figures like lace patterns. In one of the leffer gardens is a large green-house divided into several rooms, and all of them with stoves under them, and fire to keep a continual heat. In these there are no orange or lemon trees, or myrtles, or any greens, but fuch tender foreign ones that need continual warmth.
- 2. Kenfington Gardens are not great, nor abounding with fine plants. The orange, lemon, myrtles, and what other trees they had there in summer, were all removed to Mr. London's and Mr. Wise's green-house, at Brompton-park, a little mile from them. But the walks and grass are laid very fine, and they were digging up a flat of four or five acres to enlarge their garden.
 - 3. The Queen Dowager's Garden at Hammersmith has a good green-house, with an high credict front to the fouth, whence the roof falls backward. The house is well stored with greens of common kinds; but the queen not being for curious plants or flowers, they were not of the most curious forts of greens, and in the garden there is little of value but wall trees; though the gardener there, Monf. Herman Van Guine, is a man of great skill and industry, having raised great numbers of orange and lemon trees by inoculation, with myrtles, Roman bayes, and other greens of pretty thapes, which he has to dispose of.

4. Beddington Garden, at preient in the hands of the duke of Norfolk, but belonging to the family of Carew, has in it the best orangery in England. The orange and lemon trees there grow in the ground, and have done fo nest one hundred years, as the gardener, an aged man, faid he believed. There are a great number of them, the house wherein they are being above two hundred feet long; they are most of them thirteen feet high, and very full of fruit, the gardener not having taken off so many flowers this last summer as usually others do. He said, ha gathered off them at least ten thoufans

And oranges this of the family be of age, the truste orangery, and the new house over fome myrtles grobut they look notrimming. The is all out of orabeing the garde but it is capable of the best garde soil being very age filver stream run

- great variety of pout of green-hou nial green hedge ferent coloured to the fades of herbs way; but many were not in so go be expected, a been answerable it. After I had that Mr. Watts was blamed for he would be ren
 - 6. My lord 1 being but latel are but finall; ders, and wal kept and elegar ing the advanta Chelfea Colle kitchen gardens with walks and being large ,a then under the painter. The fine within, al wainscoted wit: all the chimnies ing, as in the Chelfea College 7. Arlington (

the hands of my

9. Sir William Temple being lately gone to live in Farnham, his garden and green-house at West Sheene, where he has lived of late years, are not so well kept as they have been, many of his orange trees, and other greens, being given to fir John Temple, his brother at East Sheene, and other gentlemen; but his greens that are remaining (being as good a flock as most green-houses have) are very fresh and thriving, the room they stand in suiting well with them, and being well contrived, if it be no defect in it, that the floor is a foot at least within the ground, as is also the floor of the dwelling-house. He had attempted to have orange trees to grow in the ground (as at Beddington), and for that purpose had enclosed a square of ten feet wide with a low brick wall, and sheltered them with wood, but they would not do. His orange trees in summer stand not in any particular square or enclosure, under some shelter, as most others do, but are disposed on pedestals of Portland stone, at equal distance, on a board over-against a fouth wall, where is his best fruit, and fairest walk.

at Kew has as curious greens, and is as well kept, as any about London. His two lentifcus trees (for which he paid forty pounds to Vesprit) are said to be the best in England, not only of their kind, but of greens. He has four white striped hollies, about four feet above their cases, kept round and regular, which cost him five pounds a tree this last year; and six laurustinuses he has, with large round trual heads, which are very flowery and make a fine show. His orange trees about fourteen feetwide, enclosed with a timber frame about feven feet high, and fet with filver firs hedge-wife, which are as high as the frame, and this to secure them from wind and tempest, and sometimes from the fcorching fun. His terrace-walk bare in the middle, and grass on either fide, with a hedge of rue on one fide next a low wall, and a: row of dwarf trees on the other, shews very fine; and so do, from thence, his yew hedges, with trees of the same at equal distance, kept in pretty thapes with tonfure. His flowers and fruits are of the best, for the advantage of which two parallel walls, about 14 feet high, were now raifed and almost finished. If the ground were not a little irregular, it would excel in other points as well as in furniture.

11. Sir Stephen Fox's Garden at Chiswick, being of but five years standing, is brought to great perfection for the time. It excels for a fair gravel walk betwixt two yew. hedges, with rounds and spires of the fame, all under smooth tonsure. At the far end of this garden are two myrtle hedges that cross the garden; they are about three feet. high, and covered in winter with painted board cases. The other gardens are full of flowers and falleting, and the walls well clad. The green-house is well built, wellfet, and well furnished.

at Hackney, is very large, and not fo fine at present, because of his intending to be at three thousand pounds charge with it this next summer, as his gardener said. There are two green-houses in it, but the greens are not extraordinary; for one of the roofs being made a receptacle for water, overcharged with weight, sell down last year upon the greens, and made a great destruction among the trees and pots. In one part of it is a warren, containing about two acres, and very full of coneys, though there was but a couple put in a few years fince. There is a pond or a mote round about them, and on the outside of that a brick wall four feet high, both which I think will not keep them within their compass. There is a large fish-pond lying on the fouth to a brick wall, which is finely clad with philaria. Water brought from far in pipes furnishes his several ponds as they want it.

13. Sir Josiah Child's plantations of walnut and other trees Wansted, are much more worth feeing than his gardens, which are but indifferent. Besides the great number of fruit trees he has planted in his enclosures with great regularity, he has vast number of elms, ashes, limes, &c. planted in rows on Epping Forest. Before his outgate, which is above twelve score feet distance from his house, are two large fish-ponds on the forest, in the way from his house, with trees on either fide lying betwixt them; in the middle of either pond is an island betwixt 20 and 30 yards over; in the middle of each a house, the one like the other. They are said to be well stocked with fith, and so they had need to be, if they cost him 5000l as it is faid they did; as alto that his plantations cost twice as much,

14. Sir Robert Clayton has a great plantation at Marden in Surrey, in a foil not very benign to plants; but with great charge he forces nature to obey him. His gardens are big enough, but strangely irregular, his chief walk not being level, but rising in the middle, and falling much more at one end than the other; neither is the wall carried by a line either on the top or fides, but runs like an ordinary park wall, built as the ground goes; he built a good green-house, but set it so that the hills in winter keep the fun from it; so that they place their greens in a house on higher ground not built for that purpose. His dwelling-house stands very low, furrounded with great hills; and yet they have no water but what is forced from a deep well into a water-house, whence they are furnished at pleasure.

15. The archbishop of Canterbury's Garden at Lambeth has little in it but walks, the late archbishop not delighting in one; but they are now making it better; and they have already made a green. house, one of the finest and costliest about the town. It is of three rooms, the middle having a flove under it; the foresides of the rooms are almost all glass, the roof povered with lead the whole part (to adorn the building) rifing gravel-wife higher than the rest; but it is placed to near Lambeth church, that the fun shines most on it in winter after eleven o'clock; a fault owned by the gardener, but not thought on by the contrivers. Most of the greens are oranges and which have very large lemons, ripe fruits on them.

a greater lover of plants, and, having an extraordinary art in manageing them, is become master of the greatest and choicest collection of exotic greens that is perhaps any where in this land. His greens take

Gg3

454] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

take up fix or feven houses or roomsteads. His orange trees and largest myrtles fill up his biggest house, and another house is filled with myrtles of a less fize; and those more nice and curious plants that nced closer keeping are in warmer rooms, and some of them stoved when he thinks fit. His flowers are choice, his stock numerous, and his culture of them very methodical and curious; but, to speak of the garden in the whole, it does not lie fine to please the eye; his delight and care lying more in the ordering particular plants, than in the pleasing view and form of his garden.

- 17. Dr. Tillotson's Garden near Ensield is a pleasurable place for walks, and some good walls there are too; but the tall aspin trees, and the many ponds in the heart of it, are not so agreeable. He has two houses for greens, but had sew in them, all the rest being removed to Lambeth. The house moated about.
- villa at Deptford, a fine garden for walks and hedges (especially his holly one, which he writes of in his Sylva) and a pretty little green-house with an indifferent stock in it. In his garden he has four large, round philareas, smooth clipped, raised on a single stalk from the ground, a fashion now much used. Part of his garden is very woody and shady for walking; but his garden not being walled has little of the best fruits.
- den made near Enfield are new; but the garden for the time is very fine, and large, and regularly laid out, with a fair fish-pond in the middle. He built a green-house

(somewhat like the archbishop of Canterbury's), the middle with a stove under it and a skylight above, and both of them of glass on the foreside, with shutters within, and the roof sinely covered with Irish slate. But this sine house is under the same great fault with three before (Numbers 8, 14, 15): they built it in summer, and thought not of winter; the dwelling-house on the south side interposing betwixt the sun and it, now when its beams should refresh plants.

20. Brompton Park Garden, belonging to Mr. London and Ms. Wife, has a large long green-house, the front all glass and board, the northside brick. Here the King's greens, which were in summer at Kensington, are placed: but they take but little room in comparison of their own. Their garden is chiefly a nursery for all sorts of plants, of which they are very full,

21. Mr. Raynton's Garden at Enfield is observable for nothing but his green house, which he has had for many years. His orange, lemon, and myrtle trees are as full and furnished as any in cases. He has a myrtle cut in shape of a chaise, that is at least fix feet high from the case, but the lower part is thin of leaves. The rest of the garden is very ordinary, and on the outside of his garden he has a warren, which makes the ground about his feat lie rudely, and fometimes the coneys work under the wall into the garden.

22. Mr. Richardson at East Barnet has a pretty garden, with fine walks and good flowers; but the garden not being walled about they have less summer fruit, yet are, therefore, the more industrious in managing.

managing the peach a dwarf standards, which, fupply them plentifully good fruit. There is a pond in the middle o which a broad gravel wa the highway, where a 1 broad gates, with a na cither fide, open at the through fmall bars, we and well painted, are a ment to the garden. orange and lemon tree wife and fon being the of the garden (the huf gouty and not mindin cannot prevail for a hou other than a barn end.

23. Captain Forster's Lambeth has many curic His green-house is full a flourishing plants, and the finest striped hollyperhaps is in England many myrtles, not th but of the most fanciful t are any where elfe. framed walk of timber co vines, which with other on most of his walls wit dice to his lower trees, deal of wine. Of flowe good choice, and his V other birds in a great va his glass hive, add mu pleasure of his garden.

24. Monfieur Antho has a little garden of things. His green-house great number of plants he has are of the best very well ordered. His lemon (fruit and tree) a dinary fair, and for lent and Roman bayes he above others.

25. Ricketts at Hor large ground, and embroidered star of several colours; I faw not the like any where, no not at Dr. Uvcdale's, though he has the same plant. He raises many striped hollies by inoculation, though Captain Foster grafts them as we do apple-trees. He is very cutious in propagating greens, but is dear with them. He has a folio paper book, in which he has patied the leaves and flowers of almost all manner of plants, which make a pretty thow, and are more instructive than any cuts in Herbals.

28. Clements, at Mile End, has no bigger a garden than Darby but has more greens, yet not of fuch curious forts. He keeps them in a green-house made with a light charge. He has vines in many places about old trees, which they wind about. He made wine this year of his white museadine, and white frontinac, better, I thought, than any French white wine. He keeps a shop of seeds in plants, in pots next the street.

Jan. 26, 1691.

J. GIBSON.

Sketch of the History of Sugar, in the early Times, and through the Midale Ages. By W. Falconer, M.D. F.R. S. From the Menairs of the Manchester Transations.

THE use of sugar is probably of high, though not remote antiquity, as no mention of it is made, as far as I can find, in the facred writings of the old Testament*. The conqueits of Alexander feem to have opened the discovery of it to the western parts of the world.

Nearchus, † his admiral, found the sugar cane in the East-Indies, as appears from his account of it, quoted by Strabo. It is not however, clear, from what he fays, that any art was used in bringing. the juice of the cane to the confist-ence of lugar.

Theophrastus, who lived not long after, seems to have had some knowledge of fugar, at least of the cane from which it is prepared. In enumerating the different kinds of honey, he mentions one that is found in reeds, which must have been meant of some of those kinds which produce fugar.

Eratosthenes, also, is quoted by Strabo, as speaking of the roots of large reeds found in India, which were fweet to the tafte both when raw and when boiled...

The next author, in point of time, that makes mention of fugar is Varro, who, in a fragment quoted. by Isidorus, evidently alludes to: this substance. He describes it as a fluid, preffed out from reeds of a large fize, which was fweeter than honey.

Dioscorides, speaking of the different kinds of honey, says, that " there is a kind of it, in a concrete state, called Saccharon, which is found in reeds in India and Arabia Felix. This, he adds, has the appearance of falt; and, like that. Since writing the above, I have observed that the sweet cane is mentioned in. two places in Scripture, and in both as an article of merchandize. It does not from to have been the produce of Judea, as it is spoken of as coming from a far country. Isaiah, chap. xliii. v. 24. Jerchiiah, chap. vi. v. 20.—It is worthy of remark, that the word Sachar fignifies, in the Hebrew language, inebriation, which makes it probable, that the juice of the cane had been early used for make the femie fermented liquor.

+ Ante Christ. Ann. 335c that, is brittle wais beneficial to the mach, if taken dand is also useful bladder and kidne kled on the eye, substances that ob The above is the have seen of the of fugar.

Galen appears to acquainted with describes, nearly had done, as a kinged Sacchar, that and Arabia Felix in reeds. He defweet than hone qualities, as determed digerent. He ference, however, not like honey in; mach, or productive

If the third boo on medicines that procured," be go reason to think it a scarce article as peatedly prescribe Lucan alludes third book, where fweet juices expre which were drank India.

Seneca, the pl wife speaks of an in reeds, which p gar.

Pliny was better this substance, wh the name of Sacce that it was brong and India, but the latter country. The kind of honey, obtaof a white colour, and brittle when prehoney; and which being boiled, in the same manner as honey, is rendered less purgative, without impairing its nutritive quality."

Paulus Ægineta speaks of sugar, as growing, in his time, in Europe, and also as brought from Arabia Felix; the latter of which he seems to think less sweet than the sugar produced in Europe, and neither injurious to the stomach nor causing thirst, as the European sugar was apt to do.

Achmet, a writer, who, according to some, lived about the year $30, speaks familiarly of sugar as common in his time.

Avicenna, the Arab physician, speaks of sugar as being a produce of reeds; but it appears he meant the sugar called Tabaxir or Tabbarzet, as he calls it by that name.

It does not appear, that any of the above mentioned writers knew of the method of preparing sugar, by boiling down the juice of the reeds to a confidence. It is also thought, the fugar they had was not procured from the fugar cane in use at present, but from another of a larger fize called Tabarzet by Avicenna, which is the Arundo Arbor Caipar Bauhin, the Sucea Mambur of later writers, and the Arunbo Bambos of This yields a sweet milky juice, and oftentimes a hard crystallized matter, exactly relembling fugar, both in tafte and appearance.

The historians of the Crusades make the next mention of sugar of any that have fallen under my observation.

The author of the Historia Hierosolymitana says, that the Crusaders found in Syria certain reeds called Canameles, of which it was made; but does not fay that be faw any so manufactured.

Albertus Agnenfis relates, that, about the same period, " the Crofaders found fweet honeyed recting in great quantity, in the meadows about Tripoli, in Syria, which: reeds were called Zuera. These the people (the Crusaders army) fucked, and were much pleased with the fweet tafte of them, with which they could scarcely be satisfied. This plant (the author tells up) is cultivated with great labour of this husbandmen every year. At the time of harvest, they bruise it when ripe in mortars; and fet by. the strained juices in vessels, till it is concreted in form of fnow, or of This, when scraped, white falt. they mix with bread, or rub it with water, and take it as pottage; and it is to them more wholesome and pleasing than the honey of beds. The people who were engaged in the sieges of Albaria Marra and Archas, and fuffered dreadful hunger, were much refreshed hereby."

The same author, in the account of the reign of Baldwin, mentions eleven camels, laden with sugar, being taken by the Crusaders, to that it must have been made in confiderable quantity.

Jacobus de Vitriaco mentions, that "in Syria reeds grow that are full of honey, by which he understands a sweet juice, which by the pressure of a screw engine, and concreted by fire, becomes sugar." This is the first account I have met with of the employment of heat the fire in the making of sugar.

About the same period, Willer mus Tyrensis speaks of sugar made in the neighbourhood of Tyre, and fent from thence to the farthest at the court of James IV. whose parts of the world.

Marinus Sanutus mentions, that in the countries subject to the sulquantity, and that it likewife was made in Cyprus, Rhodes, Amorea, Marta, Sicily, and other places belonging to the Christians.

wrote about the time of the emperor Frederic Barbarossa, speaks in great quantity in Sicily. It apboiled down to the confiltence of boiled farther, so as to form a solid men: body of fugar.

that have occurred to my reading on this fubject. They are but few and inconfiderable, but may fave trouble to others, who are willing to make a deeper enquiry into the history of this substance.

Jan. 24, 1790.

marriage with Margaret of England he has celebrated in the Thittle and the Rofe; an happy allegory, tan, fugar was produced in large by which the vulgar topics of an epithalamium are judiciously avoided, and exhortation and culogy delicately infinuated. The verfification of the poem is harmonious, Hugo Falcandus, an author who the stanza artificial and pleasing, the language copious and felected, the narrative divertified, rifing often to of fugar being in his time produced dramatic energy. The poem from its subject is descriptive, but Dunpears to have been used in two bar improves the most luxuriant destates; one wherein the juice was foription by an intermixture of imagery, fentiments, and moral obferhoney, and another where it was vation. The following is a speci-

The foregoing are all the passages. The purpour sone, with tendle bemys reid,

In orient bricht as angell did ap-

Throw goldin fkyis putting up [1]. heid.

Quhois gilt, treffi schone so

Account of Portry in Scotland, during the Sixteenth Century. From Dr. Henry's Hiftory of Great Britain.

In Scotland, poetry, fuch as Chancer might acknowledge and Spencer imitate, was cultivated in a language superior to Chaucer's. Dunbar and Douglas were diffinguished. I poets, whose genius would have reflected luftre on a happier period, and whole works, though partly obleured by age, are peruled with pleasure even in a dialect configued to ruftics. Dunbar, an ecclefiaftic, at least an expectant of church preferment, feems to have languithed

D

460] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

The Golden Terge is another allegerical poem of Dunbar's, constructed in a stanza similar to Spencer's, but more artificial, and far more difficult . In description perhaps it excels, in fentiment it icarcely equals the Thitile and Its narrative is not inter-Rofe. charged with dialogue; its allegory refers to the passions, the dominion of beauty, the subjection of reason, and is less fortunate than the Thistle and Rose, whose occult and secondary fignification is an historical truth that fubfifts apart, and however embellished, cannot be obfoured by the oftenfible emblem. When the passions or the mental powers are pertonified and involved in action, we purfue the tale, forgetful of their abstraction, to which it is relative; but to remedy this, t'e golden Terge has a merit in its brevity which few allegorical The allegorical poems possess. genius of our ancient poetry difcovers often a fublime invention; but it has intercepted what is now. more valuable, the representation of genuine character and of the manners peculiar to ancient life. These manners Dunbar has sometimes delineated with humour, in poems lately retrieved from oblivion t; and from them he appears in the new light of a skilful satirist and an attentive observer of human nature.

Gawin Douglas, his contemporary, was more conspicuous by the rare union of birth and learning, and is still distinguished as the first poetical translator of the elassics in B itain. Early in youth he translated Ovid's de Kemedio Amoris, (2 work that has perished); at a maturer age, Virgil's Envid into Scottish heroics; a translation popular till superceded at the elose . of the last century by others more elegant, not more faithful, nor perhaps more spirited. His original poems are King Heart and the Palace of Honour, allegories too much protracted, though marked throughout with a vivid invention; but his most valuable performances are prologues to the books of his Eneid; stored occasionally with exquisite description. As a poet he is interior to Dunbar, neither th tender nor fo various in his powers. His tatte and judgment are less correct, and his verses less polithed. The one describes by selecting, the other by accumulating images; but with fuch fuccess. his prologues descriptive of the winter solftice, of a morning and evening in fummer, transport the mind to the seasons they delineate, teach it to sympathise with the poet's, and to watch with his the minutest changes that nature ex-These are the earliest poems professedly descriptive; but in description Scottish poets are rich Their language, beyond belief. fwells with the fubject, depicting nature with the brightest and happiett selection of colours. language of modern poetry is more intelligible, not so luxuriant, nor the terms fo harmonious. Icription

^{*} Like Spencer's it confilts of nine verses, restricted however to two rhimes instead of three which Spencer's admits of.

⁺ Vide his Poen's in Pinkerton's Collection.

[‡] It was finished in sixteen months; and till Dryden's appeared, seems to have been received as a standard translation: till then it was certainly the best translation.

scription is still the characteristic, and has ever been the principal excellence of Scottish poets; on whom, though grossly ignorant of human nature, the poetical mantle of Dunbar and Douglas has successively descended *.

Extract from an account of the Collegiate Chapel of St. Stephen, Westminster.

KING William Rufus built the royal palace at Westminster; and, according to Stow, king Stephen erected this religious structure, in honour of St. Stephen the protomartyr. King Edward I. however, seems to have rebuilt this chapel; for, in the 20th year of his reign, the 28th of April, 1292, the works of the new chapel began, and continued for more than two years. An account of the expence of these operations is preserved in rolls of weekly payments remaining in the exchequer, which I have been indulged with the perusal of, by our learned brother, Craven Ord, esq. F. R. S. These curious rolls contain the articles purchased within the week, and the daily payments to each workman of every denomination.

The feveral articles bought are stated; then follow the payments to workmen. They are too minute to be here enumerated, but these are apparent—to carpenters five pence each per day;—to other workmen three pence halfpenny;—some three pence;—some two pence halfpenny each.

Although the amount of each feparate week does not appear to be much, being in general between twenty and thirty pounds, yet, from the length of time which the works continued, the cost of the whole must have been very considerable.

Whether king Edward I. completed his designs in beautifying this structure, we are not informed; but if he had, his labours were soon after unfortunately rendered abortive; for we are told by a very accurate chronicler, Stow—" that on the 20th of March, 1208, a vehement fire being kindled in the lesser hall of the king's palace at Westminster, the slame thereof being driven with the wind, fired the monastery adjoining: which, with the palace, were both consumed."

This disastrous event could not be repaired for some time following; for Edward I. being almost constantly engaged, in the latter part of his reign, either in external wars, or in the conquest of Scotland, the prevailing object in the mind of that monarch, he cannot be supposed to have had either leifure or wealth to bestow on works of art; and the weak and turbulent reign of his fon, Edward II. did not allow much time for domestic improvements. But early in the fucceeding reign this building engaged the royal attention; for, on the 27th of May, 1330, 4 Edw. III. the works on this chapel again The comptroller's commenced. roll of the expence of these operations, for near three years, is remaining in the king's remembrancer's office, in the exchequer.

The length of this account will not allow of the whole to be here inferted; but it is extremely curious, because it preserves the names

^{*} Other poets of inferior reputation flourished during this period in Scotlan 1; but it is the purport of this history to record the progressive improvements, not the stationary merit of poetry.

names of every artist employed, the wages they received, and the price of every article used, as far as the account continues.

The amount of the wages, during the whole time of this account, was 350l. 128.04d.; and of the materials used in the building, 1581. 4s. 4½d.; making together

5081. 168. 54d.

These works were not completed for several years after the termination of this account; but on the 6th of August, 1348, in the 22d year of Edward III. that king, by his royal charter, recited that a spacious chapel, situate within the palace of Westminster, in honour of St. Stephen, protomartyr, had been nobly begun by his progenitors, and had been completed at his own expence, which, to the honour of Almighty God, and especially of the blessed Mary his mother, and of the faid martyr, he ordained, constituted, and appointed to be collegiate.

Notwithstanding this constitution of the college, yet it is evident that the chapel was not then finished; for on the 18th of March, 1350, in the 24th Edward III. the king appointed Hugh de St. Albans, then master of the painters for the works within the chapel, to take and choose as many painters, and other workmen, as should be necessary for carrying on the works in the chapel, as he should find in the counties of Kent, Middlesex, Essex, Surry, and Sussex; such workmen to be employed and paid at the expence of the king. mer's Fædera, tom. 5, p. 670.

A like appointment was made of John Athelard, for the counties of Lincoln, Northampton, Oxford, Warwick, and Leicetter; and of Benedict Nightengale, for the counties of Cambridge, Huntingdon, Norfolk, and Suffolk.

Again in the 37th Edward III. June 4th, 1363, according to Rps mer, William de Walfingham was appointed to take a fufficient number of painters and workmen, to be employed at the charge of the king, in the chapel of St. Stephen. within the royal palace. Unfortunately the accounts of these workmen have not come to dist View.

King Edward III. ereched, for the use of this college, at some tiltance west, in the Little Sanchury. out of the palace court, a firm clochard, or bell tower, of flower and timber, covered with leaf and placed therein three great belle; which were afterwards usually rung at coronations, triumphs, and funerals of princes, which gene fuch a huge found, that was commonly faid they foured all the drink in the town. Howell's Loom dinopolis, p. 378.

This college of St. Stephen was, valued at the suppression to worth 10851. 10s. 5d. and was fire rendered in the first year of this Edward VI. A lift of the de and canons of this college may seen in Newcourt's Repertorism."

The chapel of St. Stephen: w foon afterwards fitted up for the meeting of the house of dominates which had before usually affected in the chapter house of the shi and has ance of Westminster, continued to be appropriated to the fame use, to the present time: 14

Of ancient Spain and its original P From Mannett Nor babitants. thern Geography of the Greeks and Romans.

THE name of Spain is p of Phœnician origin. mans borrowed it from the ginians, through whom they came acquainted with the The Greeks every where Iberia, without attaching the fame idea to the denom The elder Greeks, till the of the Achæan league and closer acquaintance with affairs, understood by it the fea-coast from the columns cules to the mouth of the because throughout this the Iberi were to be found times apart, fometimes with Ligurians. The riv has its name from them.

The fea-coast beyond the they called Tarteffis. The of the country went long a name among the inhabit cause each nation confider as a whole, and lived no connected with its nei Among the Greeks, it the vague name of Kelrica was also applied to th north-west of Europe. tered these ideas, and the Greeks appropriate the nar to the fame country wi Romans called Hispania. this last name the Gree. fionally use, but understan the region between the and Iber or Ebro. Not second or third century Latin name fully received Greek tongue, although ea stances occur. Hesperia, west country, is a comme among the Greek poets Italy and Spain; for th with the occasional epithet History mentions as the

the first in the Court and may جيد يام ي حجرمنمه يعي منه يديدي and the I mark . The anima with a remersion of the individuals ef the fourth betame and carbon wind the Meires the ordaer Coemicegrand companies. From the grade . Nelt o armor i me troces legistated. war effect in the carrier of an area to the mouth of the river Arts (seadiama. Ameriber gestiere commgied the numbered entremity onder the rime of Amilia. The former preferred the general name c: 11 - 3

The Greeks emablished some colonies along the cash of Theri within the columns, but, except the Seguntum of the Lakyntihans and the Emperium of the Machilears or Phoceans, they were of Hole importance.

All tile numerous tribes, therefore, walch are afterward four d in Spain, may be divided, I into the unmixed aboriginal inhabitants, and if, into the tribes whilly or partially competed of intruders. The former occupied the each and west class of the ocean, the Pyreness, and great past of the country east of the Ib ro It cannot be proved that the north-west missbatinto see the fame with the neeper lucci of the furth eart: but I find no objectle to this epinion. To the hoselong the Lutitini. Flar-petani, Hallalki, and Vakkei, of the weit; the Afturian, Cantabrian and Vatk, of the north; the inhabitants of the Fyrences, through whole territory many I was patied without staying, and i me tribes dwelling along the Ther, of the eaf; finally, the in-Labitants of the nighlands, of Ortospeda, the Oretani Olkadi, and Estimated of the fauth. The land mage, manners, and mespons of the open of the all her they are one per a manner subdivisions.

The mixed tribes may be again. in the control the Keitiberi and the there is the with-coaft. The Limiter comprehend in a manner Fig. 128 of and unharitants of the thath. The Kelts chiefly fireggled with the Iberi in the neighherized at the river to called; but, after the incorporation they inter a recentled the mountainous tructry on the west of the lber, as far as the fource of the Durius and Tagas. This was Keltiberia in its namewest import: but the nation, his og multiplied greatly, difpoliented or reduced to tlavery feveral trices, as the Vakkei, Karpetain, Oretani, &c. who are thence incorrectly reckoned as a part of it.

The people of the coast beyond the pillars are a mixture of themtives with Phoenicians; and, within the pillars, a mixture of the natives with Greeks. Romans, and Carthaginians. Their commerce with itrangers defiroyed all pecaliarity of character. At first, they learned the Punic, afterward the Riman language and mannen. Tae c mmerce to which they were devoted, habitueted them to affume every form. For this reason, the inlanders despited them, made inreads on them, and forced them to recur for defence to foreign protection. The Keltiberians, on the contrary, prided themselves on retaining their native favageness of drefs, weapons, language, manners.

Nore will be faid of the peculiarities of each people, when the description of their boundaries is undertaken. Thus much was necessary ceffary to prepa the remainder.

Of the Illyrian From

The Illyrians fame stem with leaft, the elder visited the con with natives of together: when always contra them, even wi them. Of all tions, the Illyr only had the p their bodies. guage is probat Epirotic diale times: but in Slavonian tribe tinguished eve The eaftern co Alps comprised lings of the From the Juli lands spread uni the Save and Hæmus and to mountainous d occupied the together with about Aquilci Epirus.

On these ver the southern de Save, were the Pæonians, as them: of the Latins called tended from the pia. Thus St station, and it Augustus and conflict with the confirmed by and Appian, taries of Augustaries of August be remembered, from the Roman province films nis.

Vol. XXX

De la Carina, himielf a governor of their Prononia, clames the Granks for rendeunding the Pacopians near Macedon with the Pannonians near the Danube: but as ne importa ni opinions on ilight ground a und a sala derive the name Pannon's from sungs, (the material of their large theves.) it feems more rational to resed his notion,—ir ding rather to Strabo, ${f V}$ die. ..., and Appian, who place the Exemian and Pannonians all along their mountains. His error is natural enough to one who first knew the langualins in modern Hungary, in a tutored agricultural itate, and had only heard of the rude Paronians of Macedon; between which nations, much of I lyria and .v.æiia icemed to interpole.

China as known to the Ancients. From the jame.

Serica is bounded on the west by Scythia, on the north-east by an unknown country, on the south by India beyond the Gangus, and also by the Sinæ in a latitude of about 35. This comprehends Koshotey, the Chinese province of Shiensi, Mongolia, and part of Siberia. The uconic are called Sères

The people are called Sères.

The fouthern part of the country has many mountains, which are continuations of those in Scythia; such as the Aszak mountains in the Ruslian province Nertshink; and consequently they have been already mentioned Still farther south, occur the Asmirean mountains (Aspassa ign) which form the northern limit of the desert of Kobi. To these adjoin the Kasian mountains which Bretch along the Chinese wall.

Mount Thagunon (so Capaçor est.) directhes from touth to moth at the eastern end of the Kasian mountains, and must be that part of the Mongosian chain which meets the river Stoang-ho. Next lie the Emod a mountains, which extend from the north of Thibet towards the province Shiens; of which the Ottorokorras, (va Orregueges,) and which many rivers rise that sall into the Yellow river, is a postione.

I wo great rivers water the First, the jor part of Serica. ()ichardes, of which the morthage: fource is to be fought in the mount tains of Atzak. A fecond five the it comes from the Afmireon ma tains of the fouth-east in the 475 degree of latitude. Farther well where the main firesm inclines to wards the Emodian mountains. third tributary river arises, under the 44th degree of latitude, & more to the north than the Renti-This latter arm is undoubtedly the Erzinch, which loles itself in the defert of Sobuk, or in the The cattern fires lake Sopu. can hardly be any other than the river Onghen; which, like the Erzineh, never mingles with main stream, but in a menner-a proaches it. Ptolemæus, it should frem, had two accounts before him: an intervening diffrict was unknown to both his travellers:  was only from probability that he conducted their several rivers into the great one. The main stream, Oichardes, then, must l the Selenga; which, according to the geographer, takes a southerly. direction.

Secondly, the Bautifus (or, no cording to the edition of Erasum, the Bautes) has its source in the north by the Kasian mountains on the borders of Serica in the 43d degree of latitude. It trends fouth-c wards the Emodian hills for degrees, when it receives a arm thence defcending. It farther progress, they bend t the mountain Ottorokorra país into an eaftern unknown try. The Hosing ho, or river, can scarcely be more described from mere report northern arm Olanmuren ar Koshotey, near to the des Kobi, and from the fame tains as the Erzineh. Its co. fouth caftward, when it recfouthern branch Haramuren: from the mountains of T takes a crooked north-east c Of its northern bend Ptole fays nothing: but he appe pre suppose it, as he assume: ther bend to the east; which, supposed the stream to flow would be needlefs.

The rivers Pfitaras, Car and Lanos, which Pliny affig the Seres, probably belong here, but to the Indian coa of the Ganges.

The people of Serica are di into the Authropophagi, (or cording to Ammianus, XXI Alttrophagi.) of the north, the Annibi who dwell contito thefe. Between the latter the Afzak mountains are the ges. The cannibals are place the north of Siberia, of which thing was known; of the two, who feem to have dwelt the fea of Baikal, he may heard. Above the Qicharder the Damnæ and the Piadæ, near to the river the Qicharda.

Again, in the north, but es the Annibi, are fituated the ara, which gives name to a tribe, lay near to the northern Bautifus, and eastward from its source; on the Olanmuren river, therefore, and probably in Koshotey. Rhosoche lay much farther east in the same latitude. I know not where to feek it. Paliana and Abragana were both on the banks of the northern Bautifus and in Koshotey. Togara and Daxata were both in the middle of the province Shienfi, and probably near the Hoa-ho; for all these places were in a south-east line towards the bend of the Bautisus, and towards Sera, the metropolis. Orofana lay near the fource of the fouthern Bautifus, or the Haramuren. Ottorakorra along the course of the fame river near its easterly bend, and to the north of the district to which and to whose inhabitants it gives its name. Solana was more castward: I know not where.

Perhaps Pliny, VL. 17.

Sera, the capital, was at some distance from the south bend of the If Ptolemæus means, Bautisus. by this south extents, the contiguous river Hoa-ho, this Sera can be no other than Singan-fu, which is at some distance from its southern evolution:—but, if he knew of the bow of the Hoang-ho, it must be placed more eastward at Honan. The first feems to be more probable, as Ptolemæus appears ignorant of the eastern course of the river, and may well have mistaken a part of the Hoa-ho for a continuation of his Bautisus; and also as Singan-su is named as a former metropolis of the north-west parts of China. Sera was the easternmost resort of the merchants; and beyond it Ptolemains knows nothing.

Historical Ascount of Sculpture. From Falconer's chronological Tables; beginning with the reign of Solomon, and ending with the Death of Alexander the Great.

ALL the ancient writers have agreed in dividing it into two periods, the latter of which begins with the age of Phidias. ascertains these ages very exactly, tho' rather foreign to his subject; for, in describing the temples of Ephefus, there are some which he calls ancient, and in these were actain antique wooden figures. In the other temples, built, in de rois usign, in after-times, he transgresses from his usual form, and describes three statues in particular, which were probably of the age of Phidius and Scopas. Pliny and Paulanias abound in examples of this division of the periods. The former, when discourfing of Myron, 'says, " capillum non emendatius fecisse quam rudis antiquitas instituisset." This "rudis antiquitas" means what is termed the age of Dædalus and his scholars, who improved but little on the models brought from Egypt. However, as we have some dates in Pliny, which fix the progression of this art with tolerable accuracy, we shall briefly touch on the history of this period from the earliest times; though the vague, and nearly fabulous relations, of Dædalus form some embarrassment in fixing the commencement of this æra. Diodorus Siculus and Paufanias agree in supposing there was an artist of that name who worked for Minos in Crete, and built a labyrinth at Gnossus, of which no vestige was left in the time of Augustus. Homer, in his 18th Hiad, does mention a \aida\os, who formed formed a dance for Ariadne; but, as he uses the same word, a sew lines after, adjectively, to signify artificially made, he might mean by the former no more than what the word imports, an ingenious artist. Eustathius interprets Homer as meaning that Dædalus only invented the dance itself, and not that he worked it in either wood, stone, or metal.

The statues of Dædalus, mentioned by Pausanius, were all of wood, and resembled, as we may suppose, the Egyptian; for Philostratus says, that the statue of Memnon was formed with the feet joined together, and the arms resting on the feat, after the manner of cutting figures in the age of Dædalus. Such was probably the figure of Minerva in Troy, mentioned in the 6th Iliad, which seems to have been in a fitting posture. We have no remains of these rude ages; but the forms of the luno of Samos, carved by Smilis of Ægina, to be contemporary with Dædalus, and that of the Diana of Ephesus, by the hand of Endæus, or Endyus, a pupil of Dædalus, are preserved on the medals of their respective cities. representations gave a very unfavourable idea of the Dædalean vage; yet we have no reason to doubt their authenticity, for the artists of polished times would never have disgraced their coinage with fuch uncouth figures, had they not been exact resemblances of objects made venerable by superstition. Some more of these wooden statues are described as existing at Thebes, Lehaden, Delos, and Crete, to the reign of Hadrian. They were nearly destroyed by age; and yet Paulanius, fired by religious and antiquarian enthufiasm, could find in them something divine; but what it was he does not explain. Some other of these statues were plated with gold, and their faces painted red, viz. two of Bacchus, in the forum of Corinth; which gives us but an indifferent idea of the taste of that period. The Venus of Delos had only a head and arms, with a quadrangular basis instead of feet; which flews that these sculptors had improved but little on the rude ages of Greece, when unhewn stones, or at best cut into a quadrangular form, were the only emblems of their divinities. Yet even these figures, I think, were not introduced into European Greece tillafter the days of Homer. name of Dædalus was, we know, given to artists long after the Athenian Dædalus is supposed to have flourished. Pausanias himself mentions one of Sicyon of that name, which he seems to confound with the Dædalus mentioned by Homer, Dipænus and Scyllus, according to Pliny, were the founders of the school of sculpture in Sicyon, and were the first who were celebrated for carving in marble. flourished, says the same author, in the 50th Olympiad, which is very probable; for at that period, the states of Greece were beginning to cultivate their talents, and to lettle a form of government. Paulanius, by a strange anachronism of above 400 years, says, that Dipænus and Scyllis were the fons of that very Dædalus who lived fo long in Crete. Pliny indeed fays, they were Cretans by birth, but that they settled at Sicyon. not then more likely that they were instructed long after by Dz-Hh 3 dalus des, which gives same as a wife. Hidwani. her near to the northern housing. and extraori from in logrer: ca. the Chamman new Acreson, and probably in Latherer . Thefortie im priek fartier eat in die fone laurade - Lianow and where a On look 2. Paliana and Airraguna was both so the backs of the northern Bentains and in Lohency. Togers and Densta were both in the middle of the province Stants, and probably sear the idea-ho; for s'i thele places were in a fourh-east - ancient, a Fire towards the bead of the Bon- Sieve in tifes, and sowerie Sera, the me- in the o tropolis. Orolans lay seat the 4 mil seu leaves of the localera Beatilian, or grelles for the Haramoren. Ottorakorra along describes the course of the fame river near lar, which i's eaker!7 bead, and to the north age of Pla of the diffrict to which and to and Paula whose inhabitants it gives its name. of this a Solana was more easiward: I know. The form But where,

ANNUAL REGIS 455

Sera, the capital, was at fome mendation diffance from the fouth bend of the spicer inf If Proleman, means, ant quitae Bautifus. by this fouth except, the conti- the age of gueus river Hou-ho, this Sera can lars, who be no other than Singan-fu, which - models bu is at fome diffance from its fourb- ever, as ern evolution:-but, if he knew Pliny, wh of the bow of the Hoang-ho, it must this art be placed more eastward at Hones. The first feems to be more probable, as Ptolemans appears ignorant of the eaftern course of the river, and may well have miffaken a part of dalus form the Hea-ho for a continuation of fixing the his Bautifus; and also as Singan-lu zera. Die is named as a former metropolis, faniasagr of the north-west parts of China, an artist of Sera was the eafternmost refort of for Minor the merchants; and beyond it labyrinth Flolencers knows nothing.

Tales of ALL t 24 12 No. 124 w is the C. Taire ritio 200 Myron, f we fhall tory of th times; t nearly fal veftige w Augustus. formed a dance for Ariadne; be as he uses the same word, a se lines after, adjectively, to siguiartificially made, he might mer by the former no more than wh the word imports, an ingenior artist. Eustathius interprets He mer as meaning that Dædalus on invented the dance itself, and no that he worked it in either wood stone, or metal.

The statues of Dædalus, mer tioned by Paufanius, were all c wood, and refembled, as we ma suppose, the Egyptian; for Phile firatus fays, that the flatue c Memnon was formed with the fee joined together, and the arms refl ing on the feat, after the manner of cutting figures in the age of Da dalus. Such was probably the fi gure of Minerva in Troy, menti oned in the 6th Hiad, which feem to have been in a fitting posture We have no remains of these rud ages, but the forms of the Juno o Samos, carved by Smilis of Ægina faid to be contemporary wit. Dædalus, and that of the Disna o Ephefus, by the hand of Endacus or Endyus, a pupil of Dædalus preferred on the medal of their respective cities. These reprefentations gave a very un favourable idea of the Dædaleas vage; yet we have no reason to doubt their authenticity, for the artifts of polithed times would never have difgraced their coinage with fuch uncouth figures, hac they not been exact refemblances of objects made venerable by fuperflition. Some more of these wooden statues are described as exifting at Thebes, Lehaden, Delos and Crete, to the reign of Hadrian. They were nearly destroyed by age; and yet Paufanius, fired by

470] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

datus Sicyonius, and that the identicy of names was the fource of the error?

However celebrated there artifis were for marble foulpture, yet the most noted performances from their hands were cut in ebenus, a fort of lignum vitz, with pieces of ivory interspersed; a practice much improved afterwards. Tettæns and Angelian were the scholars of Dipoznus; they carved the Apollo at Deice, and Callon, their pupil, the statue of Minerva Sthenias, in the citadel of Athens, about the 63d Aympiad. The other memorable pupils of this school were Theocles and Doriclydas, both Lacedemonians, whose works were to be seen, as Pausanius informs us, in his time at Elis.

The ichool of Chies, formed by Malas about the fame time with shat of Sicyon, or probably before, was fail more noted. Bugalus and Authermus carved well in the 60th Olympiad; some of whose works had a piace in the palace of Augultus Cæiar. Yet even in this period we are uncertain whether the Greeks knew the art of casting statues in metal. The oldest brass statue known in Greece was one of Jupiter, in the Chalcicecos and Laconia, in which the limes had keen separately formed, and then nalled together; yet this imperfect estay was ascribed to Learchus, a Scholar of Dipcenus, who must have lived about the 53d or 54th Olympiad. So little was this art known in the school of Sicyon, when it was celebrated for marble sculp-About the 63d Olympiad, we find the name of Rhoccus and Theodorus, both of Samos, the fame who built the temple of Juno, in the reign of Polymones, and practited the art of calling formal with inecess.

Hence, I think, the School Sicyon and Chies divide this into two parts. The Ca or berbamus ago, costes ingoth Olympiad's the middles which gave better forms to the l man figure, but not the la lith, nor an exact reporters the minuter parts, may be eather to the 33d Olympind; when t great genius of Phidias books o at once in full baker in the Ju at Olympia, and the Minerya Athena. Paulanius has deferit the former of these with great socuracy; and Livy the hi with a fublimity of expection a most equal to the ideas of the s titi, points out in a few words, it effect on the beholder. Amilias, lays that writer, travelling through Govern entered the temple to furvey colonial flatue; when Jeven we prælentem intuens, motus ania eft. It is generally known th this figure was composed of issu and ornamented with gold, a tice of great antiquity in the Kalliout few confider the difficulty di executing a grand idea with fi minute materials. If any other graces were fill wanting in sculpture, the skill of Praxiteles and Lylippus gave those sinished touches. which produced fablianity in family figures without diminishing their elegance. Such was sculpture 🛍 the days of Alexander. Some specimens of this zera are most make bably even now to be feen at Ros and Florence, viz. the Medicesia Venus, the Hercules Farnese, a the Beviderian Apollo.

.3

ANTIQUITIES.

genius of Michael Angelo was unequal to the imitation of these singures; and should we conceive them to be the production of a later age, as that of Augustus, or even later, as that of the Antonines, it will only raise our ideas of the age of Alexander, to find that the best artist of modern times was inserior to those sculptors who by the general consent of antiquity, were themselves below the merits of a Phidias or Praxiteles.

Letter form King Charles II. to the Duke of Ormond, upon his taking the Sea's from Chancellor Clarendon Copied from the Original in the King's own Hand, and inderfed in the Duke of Ormond's.

The King's

15 Sept.

Rec. 24 Sept.

at Kilkenny.

Anfwered, 2 Oct 67.

I SHOULD have thanked you fooner for your inclancholly letter of the 26th August, and the good counsell you gave me in it, as my purpose was also to say something to you concerning my tal feals from the chancellor, or which you must needs have heard all the passages, as he would not suffer it to be done so privately as I intended it. The truth is, his behaviour and humour was growne so insupportabe to myself, and to all the world else, that I could not longer endure it; and it was impossible for me to live with it, and doe those things with the parliament which must be done, or the government will be lost. When I have a better opportunity for it,

MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS

on to Influence of This apper the French of the according of Lorent France the Physiophical Companies.

TFL suranduar midusk uf laf camer compared with the unifical feveres of the January preording affords a perularin favourave construit of microing the edici v sacı vi tuck isalov sovresident with each prince. For the tiele ini luccessive vinnere in ven ne court, no tie vier tie varaech of which any regular sections is ever been been in this country. Nor a till by any means ar. ile becumin ir maner it mere curately for one of the first fiend anasier dississante cre resign ne tour felicon extennues. H is boom ouc tie livites from villed diesles we to the tropic limitations. ATIC THE nay make the prefent anglety more Included theful a time the codur et l'inne meatre à maile 20şese og sæ folkowing finnemenne. is the continue to the preparates this in the second upon the fub-

Director art Termany rapiding was made required their to mean enginefacts of the underlocationalist of the weather a such degree destitute want of the local degree of sold, insulabe reached by it putoit diderfer, and I show him when states remise of made logs. On the stilled desci, " a processes as leading the grant of any processes as leading the grant of any processes as leading the grant of the grant of

Winterer defendanc be due w TEXTIFIC IDDIES. I APPEAR TO BE inverse ince the firms fence that the projulines of work are upon this point at minumet. The ti seat upot Falmadanita meier kent in London 📥 monte of January 1795, 🗪 2 n the morning, and 39°4 in 1 afternoon. The average in June स्तर अनुद्री स्थान नहीं है के बीच 🚥 ing, and her in the alless A difference of short tracky do grees ' And if we turn our affintion from the comparative collinal ui usie montie. 19 de combo ting realimes of cock, or from the weekin bills of market ve had inci the result no less somarkanie. For in the works to even in 311 of Documer 1791 and the 3th of February 1795. I whole annaber of duriels annot cî ir zêz: : anê îs an canal penisê ct five whele herwood the 30th of December 1755 and the ad of live brown 179f, to 1471. So th excels of the mornibly in Jan ergs above that of Lanuary 179 was not leds time of 1352 perfe A sumber inficient finely to see ken the attention of the mijudiced admirers of a frosty And though I have only stevidence of two years, the conclusion may universide awn; as I have learned careful examination of the bills of mortality for man. These two seasons were cobeing each of them very able, and in immediate steving to the other, and in body's recollection.

MISCELLA

It may not be impertithe objects of this fociety, entering too much into the of medicine. to confider more particularly the fevein which this effect may posed to be produced; and out some of the principal which people are liable to in their health from a few. And one of the first thimust strike every mind in this investigation, is its old people. It is curious to

				707
Week ending	Mean heat.	Ve itale No. A sed above of deaths 60.	Ased above 60.	Afther	Apople xy and Paliy.	Fever.	Confumption.	Dropty.
Mor 6 Jan. 25°	Morn. Noon	244	51	13	+-	00	73	1.
13 Jan.	260 320	532	139	56	13	49	158	20
zo Jan.	240 300	637	145	51	11	81	164	37
17 Jan.	. 19° 27°	543	143	79	11	42	151	17
3 Feb.	250 370	867	239	98	13	99	273	+
Refult	23. 29.	4 2823	717	249	52	258	825	126
				1796.	•
Week ending.	Mean heat.	Whole No. of deaths	Aged above 60.	Afthma	Apoplexy and palfy.	Fever.	Confumption.	Dropfy.
5 Jan.	Morn, Noon.	300	35	8	7	34	79	13
12 Jan.	.41° 49°	273	37	6.	2	25	53	61
19 Jan.	.48° 53°	313	68:	••	+	39	, 11	-
26 Jan.	470 520	257	80	7	6	33.	47	-
2 Feb.	410 490	328	-32	9	'	88.	*	91
								•

MISCELL

Notwithstanding the plag remittent fever, the dysente the fearvy, have so decrease their very name is almo known in London; yet th I know not how, arifen a dice concerning putrid (which feems to have made miore and more appreher them, as the danger ha growing less. It must i meafure be attributed to the the confumption of Peruvi in this country has, wit last fitty years, increase 14,000 to above 100,000 And the fan annually: has probably contributed, millaken mode of reafon prepatiets people with the the wholesomeness of a ha But it has in another place very ably demonstrated that frost is eventually produthe worst putrid fevers the this time known in Londo that heat does in fact prov preventive against that And although this may be be a very remote effect of it is not therefore the lefits influence upon the r of London. Accordingly parison of the numbers foregoing table will thew t nearly twice as many perf of fevers in January 179 in the corresponding mont I might go on te that the true fcurvy was generated in the metrope the fime canfes extende .unufoal length. But the no means the only ways deed do they feem to be cipal ways, in which a f rates to the destruction numbers of people. The noxious, are daily imposed upon the world for want of attention to this great truth; that it is from general effects only, and those founded upon extensive experience, that any maxim to which each individual may with confidence refer, can possibly be established.

Obervations on the jail

The Domiphobia, or dread of home. From the Monthly Magazine.

I very much approve of your allotting a particular part of your magazine to the valuable purposes of medical improvement; what has been already done, will, I hope, lay the foundation of a feries of communications, from which physicians may derive great advantage. From entertaining fo high an opinion of this part of your magazine, I am induced to offer my mite, by contributing a few remarks on a dilease, not yet touched upon by your medical correspondents, but which, by the time this communication will appear, must be pretty well known in most families. It is very prevalent in the months of June and July, is at the height in August, begins to decline in September, and about the end of October generally disappears, though much will depend upon the weather.

I am somewhat at a loss to defcribe this disorder, because being of very recent appearance in this country, it has escaped the attention of Sauvages, Vogel, Cullen, and all our late Nosologists. It to the patients, from the very first has some symptoms peculiar to the class of fevers, and some to that of inflammations, but it is a disease, if I may use the phrase, so original, fo much per se, that we must be content to let it be the root of a peculiar class, which may hereaf. ter be divided into species, when the faculty shall have made it more their study.

I call it, merely for distinction's fake, the Domiphobia, or dread of home, which is the principal symptom; it begins, as I said before, about the month of June, or earlier, for I have at this moment a family under my care, who are dreadfully afflicted with it. mother, a remarkably healthylooking, and indeed a very handfome woman, complains of a wasting of the flesh, want of appetite, liftlessness, and dejection. two daughters, though possessed of the finest bloom of complexion, are inclined to confumption, have also lost their appetites, and are, to use their mother's expression, in a very alarming fituation. The fons have various pulmonic symptoms, shortness of breath, cough, and complain that the Imoke of London entirely disorders them. The hufband is the only person who has escaped the disorder, although he feems fo much distressed at the fight of his family, that I should not wonder if he caught it from them. Every medicine I have prescribed, has failed in its operation. Indeed, I must confess, that this is one of those disorders, in which we are not to expect a cure from chemicals or Galenicals. On the contrary, if we leave nature to perform her work, a cure is immediately found, for nature suggests attack of the disease, that it can be relieved only by a jaunt to a Watering Place. And hence a very expert practitioner in my neighbourhood, chooses to call it the Hydro-mania; but I he is mistaken, for I n a patient more attache when abroad, than whe There certainly, how fymptoms, which indic of fome kind or other; perfect is our knowledge cases, that I can derive mation from books. A not mention it in his h although probably he n next, for which I am preparing materials. confess, that I am not a to increasing our catalo mas. So many things brought under this tit general hittory of made I am afraid, be as con as the Annual Register, a work which profesfed to actions of man; but th gredion.

the

MISCELL

It is peculiar to the di now ipeaking of, that toms of it never appear patients are by them prefence, however, of or a party of strangers, to bring on the cough and other concomitants. all other occations, the exasperated in the pres head of the family, father, an uncle, or a Now, as this is as muc of the mind as of the ffrikes me, that the pa vy, or jealoufy, is ftro ed by the fight of perfe not afflicted with th which is generally the fathers, uncles, and and that the patient, f fire of communicating is impelled to throw miafmata, contagious which will affect al

478] ANNUAL RE

Domiphobia, they may be divided,  in the case of other disorders, into remote, proxinate, and occafional. On these I shall not be prolix. It is a great mistake, however, to afcribe this diforder to low living, or a poor diet. If that were the case, the poor would be afflicted by it, particularly this feason. But the fact is, it attacks persons who live well, freely, upon a generous diet. Excessive indulgence never fails to bring it on, and it is remarkable, that those who have once indulged, are fure to have a relapte the following year. I fcarce know an inflance to the contrary. The mental affections are also to be taken into the account, and I have known cases where it was brought on merely by talking about it; a wonderful proof of the intimate conpection betwixt the mind and the body That there is an affection of the head, cannot well be doubted, from its being almost always attended with giddiness, wanderings, vain fears, and fometimes downright raving, the patient perpetually talking of balls, dances, breakfafts, raffles, fubicriptions, and other things, which very feldom much occupy the attention of perfons of found minds and robift health.

I have now, fir, communicated the refult of pretty accurate observation, and fome practice in this disorder. I am aware, that, in the curative part, I have failed to impart much information The fact is, and I honestly confess it, I have fucceeded in very few cases, and those were chiefly where the diforder was flight. Taken at the beginning, much may be done, but the patients are very apt to my wants. It has a la creery way communing up the prodigious influx of wealth, rest and artificial, which for fome time patt has been pouring into this. kingdom. Hitherto however I have found my income aqual to:

MISCELLA

Inhabit a good house in tow four months of the year, at refide amongst my tenants neighbours for the remaining with credit and hospitality. indeed myfelf fo fond of the try, and so ave se in my nat every thing of hurry and b that, if I consulted only m tafte, I fhould never feel a w leave the thelter of my own in the dreariest season of the but I looked upon our annua to London as a proper comp with the gayer disposition of wife, and the natural curio the younger part of the fa besides, to say the truth, it i advantages in avoiding a rot dinners and card parties, we must otherwise have en in for the winter feafon, or been branded with the appel of unfociable. Our journey me an opportunity of furn my fludy with fome new boo. prints; and my wife of grat her neighbours with fome mental trifles, before their was funk by becoming cor or of producing at her table, her furniture, some new in refinement of fathionable ele-Our hall was the first that was ed by the lamp d'Argand; flill remember how we were tified by the aftenifhment gnests, when my wife with dible voice called to the for for the tongs to help to the ragus with. We found it pl too to be enabled to talk of c artifts and favourite actors; made the better figure in it litical debates from having the most popular speakers i houle.

Once too, to recruit my

480] ANNUAL REGISTER,

that we discovered how far ready furnished lodgings were from affording every article in the catalogue of necessaries. We did not indeed give them a very ferupulous examination, for the place was for foli, that when we arrived late at night and tired with our journey, all the beds at the inn were taken up, and an eafy chair and a carpet were all the accommodations we could obtain for our repose. The Bext morning, therefore, we cagerly engaged the first lodgings we found vacant, and have ever fince been disputing about the terms, which from the hurry were not fufficiently afcertained; and it is not even yet fettled whether the little blue garret which ferves us as a powdering room, is ours of right or by favour. The want of all forts of conveniences is a confant excuse for the want of all order and neathers, which is fo Visible in our apartment; and we are continually lamenting that we are obliged to buy things of Which we have fuch plenty at home.

It is my misfortune that I can do nothing without all my little conveniences about me; and in order to write a common letter I. equally falutary, at must have my study table to lean my elbows on in fedentary luxury; you will judge therefore how little I am able to employ my leifure, when I tell you, that the only foom they have been able to allot for my use is so filled and crowded With my daughters hat-boxes, bandboxes, wig-boxes, &c. that I can fearcely move about in it, and am this moment writing upon a spare trunk for want of a table. I am therefore driven to faunter about indulge themfelves with the rest of the party,; but infleed of the fine and waving fields been accustomed to eyes, I fee nothin beach, almost with posed by turns to ti ern blaft, and the fun. and covered qually painful to the feet. The occi object of unipeak but when it has bee in a florm and in a have feen the fun before and the motended furface, its haufted, and the e quire the fofter and ing scenes of cul My family have in fuaded feveral time fea tiil more, by little failing party | tunately, Northan not afforded them a of becoming featon parties of pleafure tended with the mo ness. This likewis very good for the may be fo for augh confess I am apt to it ing an emetic at h would be more dept help imagining tha daughter's lover affiduous, fince h plated her in the ind of a thip cabin. Il ed to amuse myself pany, but without it confifts of a few ple, who make a fe and think they are (freedom of a wate ot peliffenmeries; 22

MISCEL

motley group of that chants' clerks, kept mi men, and nervous have been accustomed in my choice of acqua pecially for my famil greater part of our here, are fuch as we ashamed to acknowledg elfe, and the few we above ourselves will a claim us when we me next winter. As to inhabitants of the place do not get by us vie diflike, because we rai of provisions; and the which, in one way or a prehends all the lower Jost every trace of rura and are verfed in all the cunning and chicane. of greediness and rap where so conspicuous lodging-houses. At c the country, our dot cerns went on as by c a quarter of an hour fettled the bills, and men wished, and non practife any imposition were known, and the of their different beha have been their bein for life, for encourager diftruft. But here th fluctuation of company all regard to character respectable and ancie have no influence any t as they featter their rea neither gratitude nor felt where there is no b tual attachment, befic cessities of the press flould be happy if we contend with this spiri prefent excursion, but Vol. XXXVII.

traband, was in reality the homebred manufacture of Spital-fields.

My family used to be remarkable for regularity in their attendance on public worthip; but that too here is numbered amongst the amusements of the place. Lady Huntingdon has a chapel, which fometimes attracts us; and when nothing promifes us any particular entertainment, a tea-drinking at the rooms, or a concert of what is called facted mulic, is fufficient to draw us from a church, where no one will remark either our abfence or our prefence. Thus we daily become more lax in our conduct, for want of the falutary reftraint imposed upon us by the consciousness of being looked up to as an example by others.

In this manner, fir, has the feafon past away. I spend a great deal of money and make no figure; I am in the country and fee nothing of country simplicity, or country occupations; I am in an obscure village, and yet cannot flir out without more observers than if I were walking in St. James's Park; I am cooped up in less room than my own dog-kennel, while my fpacious halls are injured by standing empty; and I am paying for tafteless unripe fruit, while my own choice wall-fruit is rotting by buthels under the trees. -In recompense for all this, we have the fatisfaction of knowing that we occupy the very rooms which my lord—had just quitted: of picking up anecdotes, true or false, of people in high life; and of feizing the ridicule of every character as they pass by us in the moving show glass of the place, a pastime which often affords us a good deal of mirth, but which, I confess, I ca out reflecti amplement to the great excursion, 1 cannot boaf We have hi mer; and th either old or new one the accomm ring the fea vances for breezes that a circumfià iume lagaci `always atter der patients compact, f take the gi of which th ring the w inhabited b the poverty him from la paigs than s a thowy and Be that as i prefent fuhr the breeze, ingenious doors, patti of cupboar puttying cre closet-doors levere touch and all my or other affi est daughte: her bathing never gives

In answer I am told here, that in the sam ought to ta tinent, and Nice, whice business. I am en opinion, that it we the business; and I taken the liberty of before you; and am

Нвия

The Invention of Organ de Genlis' Knights The imprison'd win joyful found, Proclaim their liberty

Il n'est ame si revés touchée de quelque reve têtte vassité sombre de s le son devotieux de nos

THE two friends the promife which inviolable fecrefy, (tered upon his won-" I am thirty-six my career is comp passed through it perhaps with glory fortune strewed it till the fatal inflar vered the abysis in nearly overwhelme every thing, even to the inhabitants of tion it flill with be affection of a grate petuates the remei and yet it must not t Condemned to obfe come a stranger to am unable to enjoy all the world; it is filence of the tom the approbation and my contemporaries tunate victim of the fatal example

AFA! ANNUAL REGISTER, 1796.

lucies en colle unar le leme

 Monther times or fermal the first the second second that he was Di and at the LBC life latter tear LTS, and as we comed not en that-منتقاري والمتاك المرازي المساورة والمراز المناز المناك The first in the first in the second 🗲 i 👉 et instillatet i e kom, and the rule our epart-THE PROPERTY OF THE FIRST PARTY the term of the spirit to the term of and the content of the minute of the entry of the state of the state The state of the s end the season of the Carrie vinte pas prouties នាត់ការបញ្ជាប់ នេះ ស្ត្រីស្រែ ស្ត្រីនេះសំណង់ខ្លួ the Circristo, under palett iteale, tring effert ling to believe their sel gibus nites. They were illi wed, Fowever, the protings to performing them in indulik. This print the official me ie i grafi at literalizated what mests to a be about to elife i ili. 1419 a getila ili marro de ación erei dementefrom the little contract the contract of configuring so comment which mageria is a suitable with which I was a municipal eren the lunch com i entire i to ន៍ស្តេក ក្រុម សមាស្រុក សមាល់ សេខ ការណ៍ និង pro governous most cand that li might products to the ear the ene vida viniko. I vieli-i it الم المراجعة المساورة والمساورة Miller and fix montes produced andre in entrefat recombination, toward digare the morte of Organ, aud in in gerfeith, andviered int P to that P then placed in P Pnor my whilew, and played on it to the morning and night, clienting the ferrile at the fame time. I't the call or forme days, information was tent to the Chiph, that the Christians, notwithfunding deregard of his problemes, and beput eren their religious concerts, RILL WILL MAIN SHIRKERY THER COLL. The Calina indeed his orders in confequence . end one maching. ATTE AND DISTURE OF MA CANADA et the title nour. I beard a violent enocking at my door. I fact up my organication and role to complete into the came: when at the four milett a number of served week came into my mom, and tellified the greatest attantifisment at finding me since. The coptain of the compeur eilei me, viice vese 🛒 accomplices. I replied, that I had none. The paid no amendon to this an wer, and sought in wain in all my moders for the other marketime. life paded leveral times in the front of my organ, without imagining it to be a mulical infirement; water was in fome meafure owing ti my having given it the appearance of a coeff of drawers. At largth, not being able to companinti how my companions had this peti, he ordered me to follow rim. I defined to be conducted into the prefence of the Caliph. He replied, that he was conveying me thither. In fact, the prince had refelred to fee me, and to interrogate me himfelf. He recelved me with a gloomy and fovere zir, confidering me fometime in filence; and firuck with the forenity of my countenance, " Indiferent young man," faid he, " what could inspire thee with so much audacity, and fo much contempt for life?" "Sir," faid I in reply. " nothing fo effectually eacourages innocence as the affect of an equitable judge."-"Thou cast not." answered he, " deny thy difobedience. I myself have been under thy wind have heard the f ments and voices but thyfelf has be chamber. Where nions?" " I have," " Liften," replie " thy physiognon pleases me, and th my pity. I am w thee, but I expec fession." No, my I, " you will not who shall be m inform against his friends," " We the Caliph with vic Christians at preser be this day put in will be in that fitu. hours," faid I in " and who fhall -" I, my lord." the Caliph becan aftonishment, and c he should pronour or difmifs me as I began therefore: dress him. "Sir, to protest to you, . difobeyed your ord was alone, of which eafy to convince y deign to fend for th ers, which is in my open in your prefe ous article of furnit find in it a compl my innocence." Th aftonishment was this difcourfe, iffu the order for wh and my organ wa his apartment, W myfelf in putting it Caliph, who waite curiofity as impatie taftroplie of this went out for the fire to have the mechanism of this marvellous machine explained to me, and I charge myself with thy fortune: Thus," pursued he, addretting himself to his fister, " you shall be satisfied, Abassa; I shall keep the instrument and its inventor."

" The very fame day I was efter blished in the palace. I was furnished with an extensive apartment, a multitude of flaves, and feveral magnificent prefents. I had no fortune, and I was charmed that I had acquired one with to much rapidity and fingularity; but I was not lefs Bruck with the despotitm which this prince mingled with his fayours, even those which were most I diffinguished. He had disposed of a me as of a flave, without confulting my inclinations, without condescending to inform himself whether 🕦 any particular engagement might Interfere with the defire he felt of attaching me to him. I made on this subject many melancholy reflections; but I was young, without experience, and dazzled with the brilliant qualities of the Caliph. In truth, he has very exalted ones. I thut my eyes against the terrible effects of his disposition and character, and deli ered up my mind to the fplendid profpects with which fortune and ambition prefented me." The next day the Calipli tent for me, to explain to him the mechaniim of my organ. While demonstrating its principles, I percented in a few minutes that he had no notion of the previous information that was necessary to comprehend with facility the mechaniim of a machine fomewhat complicated ; and, at the fame time, had to much felf-conceit as to defire to conceal his ignorance. As he has a fund of intelligence have happened, whi defolation on town Has not philosop foring, and borrowe in order to make comprehend that if fantly to occ-ipy t the happinets of that, in facrificing fare to the defires duals, they did n the avidity of their they expoted them of feeing extingalt of their fubjects th fo natural to the pe dominion, and which support of their the the days of the au chus poitoned wit he dared to trace, of Louis XIV. t great king ? Was whelmed with a le for having effayes heart of the fame misfortunes of his

Misc

Did not Voltaire Mably, Rouffeau, philosophical and use all their estorts XV. from his feand and to low in his f feeds of virtue? even to exaggera not given to Henry excite the emulatic ants, and to cauft vived in the heirs The wifeth counfe dained, the best in mated. Then the phy was irritate the prophetic tone with clearly am events which now and aftenth our truths appeared fo try, have they not leagued against a minister who would have been the protector of their properties? Far from voluntarily yielding to the voice of reason, and making flight facrifices to the public intereit, they have aggravated their yexations, and immolated men to the preservation of their animals; yet, instead of reproaching their own injustice, and attributing to their pride and unfeeling sternness the vengeance of their former valfals, they impute it to philosophy. Ah! let her no longer be calumniated! she foresaw all our misfortunes, she braved and hazarded perfecution to avert them: but her efforts have been fruitless! Princes have more heavily burthened their people instead of relieving them; the great have humbled instead of fuccouring them; pontiffs have scandalized instead of edifying them; magistrates have outraged instead of protecting them. The moment of their power arrived. Then they recollected nothing but the infults and fufferings which they had so long endured. If their vengeance has been terrible, it is not philosophy that has directed it; on the contrary, the has tried to alleviate its effects: but it has no more been in her power to stop the excelles at which the deeply groaned, than it was to realize the good which the proposed.

It is not during the flame of revolutions that the voice of fages has any empire over the human passions. What could the Roman orators and philosophers do amidst the proscriptions of Sylla and the triumvirs? no more than the de Thous and l'Hospitals in the rage of the League. Could Fenelon, Montesquieu, Voltaire, and Rousseau himself, were they still living, by their discourses or writings put a stop to the sanguinary acts which tarnish our liberty and excite the lamentation of our legislators? Reduced to fruitless regrets, we should see them resemble the pilot, who, during the fury of a horrible tempest, contemplates with stupefaction the vessel which he can no longer govern. Let a fingle philosopher, worthy of the name, be mentioned to me, who has excited the people to murder and conflagration; who has not recommended to them to be generous in victory, to respect legitimate property, to spare imbecility, to condemn the guilty by the rules of justice alone!

Of the Causes of the Increase of Crimes. From Colquboun's I reatise on the Police of the Metropolis.

IN developing the causes which have so multiplied and increased those various offences and public wrongs which are at present selt to press so hard upon society, it may be truly affirmed in the first instance, much is to be imputed to desicient and inapplicable laws, and to an ill-regulated police.

Crimes of every description have their origin in the vicious and immoral habits of the people;—in the want of attention to the education of the inferior orders of society; and in the desiciency of the system which has been established for guarding the morals of this useful class of the community.

Innumerable temptations occur in a great capital where crimes are reforted

MISCEL

reforted to, in order to f ginary wants and impr fications, which are not lefter focieties: and aga the laws have provided cable remedies in the w vention

The improvident an luxurious mode of liv prevails too generally am classes of the lower ra people in the metropoli much misery and to ma

Accustomed from the infancy to indulge the eating many articles of food in its feafon, and little or no knowleds kind of fragality and enables well-regulated make every thing to g pottible, by a divertifie cookery and good mana Affailed also by the temptations held out by lotteries, and places o fort and amutement; all, by the habit of great deal of valuable t as money unnecessarily houf s; and often allu gaming, to fquander they can afford, there inflance of accommoda come to the expenditu the best of times, with able body of the lowest c people inhabiting the c hence a melancholy 🚱 drawn, warranted by aftunied fact, that abi thousand individuals morning in this great without knoving how, means they are to be fu ring the pathing day, or are to lodge on the arght.

lings ;—defensing their health ; traffing their time, and reating up their children to be perfective and Exercs before they know that it is s crimt.

So early as the seign of Groom Anne, 📧 this expedence and military our race of such from the property affect the sine who tion of the legislature is a very par- and ticular degree, for the act of the pi grh of her majetly reciting " that a divers letted and different perions any live at great expenses, having no feits vistie ekste, profesion, or calling, to maintain themielves; but fup- Gen port these expenses by gaming a fa ecly; and enacts that any two justices a lo that cause to be brought before hun them, all perfous within their Nmits, whom they thall have just legiexule to suspect to have no visible efiate, profession, or calling, to maintain themselves by, but who for the meit part support themselves by gaming, and if foch perfors Call not make the contrary appear. to fuch justices, they are to be bound to their good behaviour for a twelve mosth, and in default of nam sufficient security, to be combait- mix ted to prifon, until they can find from the fame, and if fecurity thall be incr given, it will be forfested on their all playing or betting at any one time, whi for more than the value of twenty gilk th.llings."

If in conformity to the spirit of rait this wife statute, sharpers of every fort denomination who support them- the ferves by a wariety of cheating and mid fwindling practices, without har- fuffi ing any visible means of support, were in like manner to be called upon to find fecurity for good behaviour in all cases where they cannot thew they have the means duc of fubfilling themtelves honeftly, gen the number of th. fe petts of fociety, đo i tbe 126 426

Sur

ductive of more and more real and wretchedness great metropolis their folly migh and comfortable, lumes could deta

A mistaken se stitutes human ha mass of the peop means of movin above the middle the fatal error what is called if that can be c Faro Tables and hazard are intro families —Wher mendation (and pains to obtain admits all ranks a genteel exteriyoung and the initiated in ever ing to dehafe th ter, and taught tempt every acqu with those dutie mettic happines jects of utility either fex respec

To the horde fent upon the to rendezvous furn tive harvest.

Many of this haps themselves minaries of the to which they when vanity

POETRY.

ODE for the NEW YEAR.

By H. J. PYE, Esq. Poet-Laureat.

I

Where is immortal Virtue's meed,
Th' unfading wreath of true renown,
Best recompence by Heaven decreed
For all the cares that wait a crown;
If Industry, with anxious zeal,
Still watchful o'er the Public Weal;
If equal Justice' awful arm,
Tempered by Mercy's seraph charm,
Are inessectual to assuage
Remorseless Faction's harpy rage?
But the fell Dæmons, urg'd by Hell's behest, Threaten, with frantic arm, the royal Patriot's breast!

Η.

Yet not, Imperial George, at thee, Was the rude bolt of Malice sped, E'en fiends that Crown with rev'rence fee Where Virtue consecrates th' anointed head— No—at thy bosom's fondest claim, Thy Britain's peace, their shafts they aim. Pale Envy, while o'er half the world War's bloody banners are unfurl'd, Beheld our coasts from ravage free, Protected by the guardian sea, Where Commerce spreads her golden stores, Where fleets wast triumph to our shores: She faw, and fick'ning at the fight, • Wish'd the fair prospect of our hopes to blight; Sought out the object of our dearest care, Found where we most could feel, and try'd to wound us there. The broken Shall to ( Inscribe on And bid
For there (
In deathless
How Britain's
And deem'd the

Now strike Selected f To celebr From Britai Mild Sov're Whose eye's The pow'rs With each (Propitious Bloffoms of Than all th Cull'd from For fee, an A Bud it Sweeter th That erc O may thy Omens of Bid the loud And tune

ODE o

Where all the To bind Whote a Pictur'd Seem'd Prompt Calm the And hall v

11

For, lo! on you devoted shore,
Still through the bleeding ranks of war;
His burning axles steep'd in gore,
Ambition drives his iron car.
Still his eyes, in sury roll'd,
Glare on fields by arms o'errun;
Still his hands rapacious hold Spoils injurious inroad won;
And, spurning with indignant frown
The sober olive's proffer'd crown,
Bids the brazen trumpet's breath
Swell the terrific blast of destiny and death.

IIT.

Shrinks Britain at the found? Though, while her eye O'er Europe's desolated plains she throws, Slow to avenge and mild in victory, She mourns the dreadful scene of war and woes; Yet, if the foe, misjudging, read Dismay in Pity's gentlest deed, And, construing mercy into fear, The blood-stain'd arm of battle rear, By infult rous'd, in just resentment warm, She frowns defiance on the threat'ning florm; And, far as Ocean's billows roar, By ev'ry wave encircled thore, From where o'er icy seas the gaunt wolf roves, To coasts perfum'd by aromatic groves; As proudly to the ambient sky In filken folds her mingled crosses fly; The foothing voice of Peace is drown'd A while in war's tumultuous found, And strains, from Glory's awful clarion blown, Float in triumphant peal around Britannia's throne.

A beautiful Spring in a VILLAGE.

From POEMS by S. T. COLERIDGE.

NCE more, sweet stream, with slow foot wand'ring near, I bless the milky waters, cold and clear. Escap'd the flashing of the noontide hours With one fresh garland of Pierian flowers (Ere from thy Zephyr-haunted brink I turn), My languid hand shall wreath thy mossy urn; For, not through pathless grove with murmur rude, Thou soothest the sad wood-nymph Solitubs:

Nor thine, 1 The Hermit-Pride of the The featter' The Elfin tr With infant Releas'd fro Launch pape The Ruftic 1 Whiftling le Or, flarting To lift the n Sue, vainly Lotters-the Unboaftful 1 The faded fo What time tl And all was A transient Like patting Life's curren Or, filv'ry f Ah, now it Or o'er the

To Mrs. BISHOP Mr.]

I dare m Whate'er This verfe To mark Whom lo I've feen, But hear If candon Fvc feen l Than half Seen her, Draw righ Seen her f At once, As if her Could lim Seen ber, Above art And, whe Improve u

496] ANNUAL REGISTER,

Seen her, in short, in ev'ry part,
Discernment, temper, figure, heart,
So perfect, that 'till lleav'n remove her!
I must admire, court her, love her Molly, I speak the thing I mean;
So rare a woman I have seen;
And send this honest glass, that you,
Whene'er you please, may see her too!

LENORA.

A BALLAD, FROM BURGER.

From the Monthly Magazine.

The following translation (made some years since) of a celenubich other versions have appeared, possesses so much peculimerit, that we have given it the preference in this Selection

A T break of day, with frightful dreams
Lenora ftruggled fore:
My William, art thou flaine, fay'd fhe,
Or doft thou love no more?

He went abroade with Richard's hoft,
The Paynim foes to quell:
But he no word to her had writ,
An he were fick or well.

With fowne of trump, and best of drum, His fellow-foldyers come; Their helmes bydeckt with oaken boughs, They feeke their long'd-for home.

And ev'ry roade and ev'ry lane
Was full of old and young,
To gaze at the rejeicing band,
To hail with gladfome toung.

"Thank God?" their wives and children faide,
"Welcome!" the brides did faye:
But greete or kifs Lenora gave
To none upon that daye.

She askte of all the passing traine,
For him she wisht to see:
But none of all the passing traine
Could tell if lived bee.

And when the foldyers all were bye,
She tore her raven haire,
And cast herself upon the growne
In furious despaire.

POETRY.

Her mother ran and lyste her up, And clasped in her arme,

"My child, my child, what doft thou ail? God shield thy life from harm!"

"O mother, mother! William's gone! What's all befydes to me? There is no mercye, fure, above! All, all were fpar'd but hee!

"Knell downe, thy paternoster saye,
"Twill calm thy troubled spright:
The Lord is wyse, the Lord is good;
What hee hath done is right."

"O mother, mother! say not so;
Most cruel is my fate:
I prayde, and prayde; but watte avayl'd?
"Tis now! alas too late."

"Our Heavenly Father if we praye, Will help a fuff ring childe: Go take the holy facrament; So shall thy grief grow milde."

"O mother, what I feel within, No facrament can staye; No facrament can teche the dead To bear the fight of daye."

"May be, among the heathen folk Thy William false doth prove, And puts away his faith and troth, And takes another love.

Then wherefore forrow for his loss?

Thy moans are all in vain:

And when his foul and body parte,

His falschode brings him paine."

"O mother, mother! gone is gone:
My hope is all forlorne:
The grave mie onlye safeguarde is—O, had I ne'er been borne!

Go out, go out, my lampe of life;
In grissie darkness die:
There is no mercye, sure above!
For ever let me die!"

"Almighty God! O vot
My poor unhappy
She knows not
Her anguith

My girl, forget thine earthly woe, And think on God and bliss; For so, at least, shall not thy soule Its heavenly bridegroom miss."

"O mother, mother! what is bliffe, And what the fiendis celle? With him 'tis heaven any where, Without my William, helle.

"Go out, go out, my lamp'of life;
In endless darkness die:
Without him I must loathe the earth,
Without him scorne the skye."

And so despaire did rave and rage Athwarte her boiling veins; Against the Providence of Heaven She hurlde her impious strains.

She bet her breaste, and wrung her hands, And rollde her tearlesse eye, From rise of morne, till the pale stars Again did frecke the skye.

When harke! abroade she hearde the trampe Of nimble-hoosed steed; She hearde a knighte with clank alight, And climb the staire in speede.

And soon she herde a tinkling hande, That twirled at the pin; And thro' her door, that open'd not, These words were breathed in.

"What ho! what ho! thy dore undoe;
Art watching or asleepe?
My love, dost yet remember mee,
And dost thou laugh or weep?"

"Ah! William here so late at night!
Oh! I have watchte and wak'd:
Whence dost thou come? For thy return
My herte has sorely ak'd."

"At midnight only we may ride;
I come o'er land and sea:
I mounted late, but soone I go;
Aryse, and come with me."

"O William, enter first my bowre,
And give me one embrace:
The blasts athwarte the hawthorne hiss;
Awayte a little space."

The blafts athwarte the hawthorn hifs,
I may not harboure here;
My spurre is sharpe, my courser pawes,
My houre of flighte is nere.

All as thou lyeft upon thy couch,
Aryse, and mounte behinde;
To-night we'le ride a thousand miles,
The bridal bed to finde."

"How, ride to-night a thousand miles?
Thy love thou dost bemocke:
Eleven is the stroke that still Rings on within the clocke."

"Looke up; the moone is bright, and We Outstride the earthlie men:
I'll take thee to the bridal bed,
And night shall end but then."

"And where is, then, thy house and home; And where thy bridal bed?"
"Tis narrow, filent, chilly, dark; Far hence I rest my head."

"And is there any room for mee, Wherein that I may creepe,"

"There's room enough for thee and mee, Wherein that wee may sleepe.

All as thou ly'st upon thy couch,
Aryse, no longer stop;
The wedding guests thy coming waite,
The chamber dore is ope."

All in her farke, as there she lay, Upon his horse she sprung: And with her lily hands so pale About her William clung.

And hurry-skurry forth they go,
Unheeding wet or dry;
And horse and rider snort and blow,
And sparkling pebbles fly.

How swift the flood, the mead, the wood,
Aright, aleft, are gone!
The bridges thunder as they pass,
But earthlie sowne is none.

Tramp, tramp, across the land they speede;
Splash, splash, across the see;
Hurrah! the dead can ride apace;
Dost seare to ride with mee?

The moone is bryghte, and blue the nyghte;
Doft quake the blaft to fiem?
Doft fluider, mayde, to feeke the dead,?"
"No, no, but what of them?

How glumlie sownes you dirgye song!
Night-ravens slappe the wing.
What knell doth slowlie toll ding-dong?
The plalmes of death who sing?

It creeps, the swarthie funcial traine,
The corse is onn the beere;
Like croke of todes from lonely moores,
The chaunte doth meet the cere."

"Go, beauther corfe when midnight's past, With fong, and tear, and wayle; I've gott my wife, I take her home, My howre of wedlocke heyl.

Lead forth, O clarke, the chausting quire,
To swell our suptial song:
Come, prictie, and reads the bieffing some;
For bed, for bed we long."

They heede his calle, and hufht the fowne;
The biere was feene no more;
And followde him ore feeld and flood
Yet fafter than before.

Hallo! hallo! away they goe,
Unheeding wet or drye;
And hosse and rider snort and blowe,
And sparkling pebbles slye.

How swifte the hill, how swifte the dale, Aright, alest, are gone!

By hedge and tree, by thorpe and towne, They gallop, gallop on.

Tramp, tramp, across the land they speede;
Splash, splash, acrosse the see;
"Hurrah! the dead can ride space;
Dost sear to ride with mee?

Look up, look up, an airy crewe
In roundel daunces reele:
The moone is bryghte, and blue the nyghte,
Mayft dimlie see them wheele.

Come to, come to, ye gostlie crew,
Come to, and follow mee,
And daunce for us the wedding daunce,
When we in bed shall be."

And brush, brush, brush, the ghostile crew, Come wheeling ore their heads,
All rustling like the wither'd leaves,
That wyde the wirlwind spreads.

Halloo! halloo! away they go,
Unheeding wet or dry;
And horse and rider fnort and blowe,
And sparkling pebbles flye.

And all that in the moonfayne lay, Behynde them fied afar; And backwarde foudded overhead The fky and every ftar.

Tramp, tramp, across the lande they speede;
Splash, splash, across the sea:
"Hurrah! the dead can ride apace;
Dost fear to ride with mee?

I weene the cock prepares to crowe;
The fand will foone be runne;
I fauffe the earlye morning aire;
Downe, downe! our work is done,

The dead, the dead can syde apace;
Oure wed-bed here is fit:
Oure race is ridde, our journey ore,
Oure endleffe union knit."

And lo! an yren-grated gate
Soon biggens to their viewe:
He crackte-h
The doore

They pass, as "Tis hith And many a Lay inn th

And when he His armon
Did monider
As were it

His head bec Nor haire His body gre Whilome !

And att his d No fpur w And inn his The (cyth)

And lo! his steede did thin to smoke,
And charnel fires outbreathe;
And pal'd, and bleach'd, then vanish'd quite
The mayde f om undernethe.

And hollow howlings hung in aire,
And shrekes from vaults arose.
Then knew the mayde she mighte no more
Her living eyes unclose.

But onwarde to the judgement-seat,
Thro' myste and moonlighte dreare,
The gostlie crewe their slyghte persewe,
And hollowe inn her care:—

"Be patient; tho' thyne herte shoulde breke, Arrayne not Heven's decree; Thou nowe art of thie bodie reste, Thie soule forgiven bee!"

Mr. Surreutter's commencement in his legal career. From the PLEADERS Guide, a Didactic Poom in two books.

[7HOE'ER has drawn a Special Plea, Has heard of old Tow TEWKESHURY, Deaf as a post, and thick as Mustard, He aim'd at Wit, and bawl'd and blufter'd, And died a Nij: prius Leader— That Genius was my Special Pleader-That great man's office I attended. By HAWK and BUZZARD recommended, Attorneys both of wondrous skill To pluck the Goose, and drive the Quill; Three years I sat his smoky room in, Pens, paper, ink, and pounce consuming, The fourth, when Essign Day begun, Joyful I hail'd th' auspicious Sun, Bade Tewkesbury and Clerk adieu, (Purification, Eighty-two) Of both I wash'd my hands; and though With nothing for my cath to hew, But Precedents so scrawl'd and blurr'd, I icarce could read one fingle word, Nor in my books of Common Place One feature of the law could trace, Save Buzzard's note and vilage thin, And HAWK's deficiency of Chin, Which I while lolling at my ease Was wont to draw instead of Pleas;

The artificial phantoms of delight; Nor let his early ign rance, and mistake, The lober blifs of age and reason shake. Hide from his heart each full ring country's wee, And o'er its chains thy coving mantle throw; Hide you deluded agonizing train, Who bleed by thousands on the purple plain; Their piercing cries, their dying groans controll, And lock up all the feelings of his foul. Shield him from flander's persecuting race, Who feek to wound, and labour to difgrace, Who view the humblest worth with jealous eye, The viper brood of black malignity! So shall, perchance, content with thee return, 'Mongst vernal sweets to raise his wintry urn; To his retreat tranquillity repair, " And freedom dwell a pensive hermit there." O! in retirement may be rest at last, The present, calm, forgotten all the past; Beside the babling brook at twilight's close, Taste the soft solare of the mind's repose; List the lorn nightingale's impressive lay, That foothes the evening of retiring May, When the young moon her paly flag displays, And o'er the stream the panting zephyr strays; No heedless hours recall'd, no festive roar, That once deluded, but can please no more; No wild emotions bid his comforts cease, Or from his cottage drive the angel peace; Nor vain ambition tempt his thoughts anew, But still preserve the friendship of the few; Still, still preserve the fond domestic smile, Of her, whose voice can ev'ry care beguile; With meek philosophy his hours employ, Or thrilling poetry's delicious joy; And from the faded promises of youth, Retain the love of liberty and truth.

SONNET.

Sacred to the Memory of Penelope. By Sir Brook Boothby, Bart.

HOUGH fince my date of woe long years have roll'd,
Darkness ne'er draws the curtains round my head,
Nor orient morning opes her eyes of gold,
But grief pursues my walks, or haunts my bed.
Visions, in sleep, their tristful shapes unfold;
Show Misery living, Hope and Pleasure dead.

I, who am always all compliance, As well to Pupils as to Clients, Took as genteelly as they paid it, And freely to my purse convey'd it; That I might practically shew, And they in special manner know Ere they began their Pleas to draw, What an Assumpsit meant in Law-To wit for divers weighty fums Of lawful cash at Pleader's Rooms, By me said Pleader, as was prudent, Had and received to use of Student: In short, I acted as became me. And where's the Pleader than can blame me? Not one of all the trade that I know, E'er fails to take the Ready-rino, Which haply, if this purse receive, No human art can e'er retrieve. Sooner when Gallia's credit's flown To some Utopian world unknown, ASTREA shall on earth remain The last of the celestial train. To tender Assignais at Par Triumphant in the Champ de Mar', And when their deep laid projects fail, And Guillotines no more avail, Her baffled Statesmen shall excise Some new found region in the kies, And tow'ring in an air halloon Pluck Requisitions from the Moon: Sooner the daring wights who go Down to the watery world below, Shall force old Nectune to difgorge And vomit up the ROYAL GRORGE, Than He who hath his bargain made And legally his cash convey'd, Shall e'er his pocket reimburse By diving in a Lawyer's Puric.

From MERRY'S Pains of Memory. Address to Forgetfulness,

HOU too, forgetfulness! whose opiate charm Can bush the passions, and their rage disarm; Approach, O kindly grant thy suppliant, aid! Wrap him in sweet oblivion's placed shade; Veil the gay, transitory scenes, that fled, ike gleamy sunshine o'er the mountain's head; Sink in the dark aby so of endless night

The artific Nor let hi The fober Hide from And o'er it Hide you Who bleer Their pier And lock Shield him Who feek Who view The viper So thall, p 'Mongst ve To his reta " And fre O! in reti The prefer Beside the Tafte the f Lift the lo That footh When the And o'er t No heedle That once No wild e Or from h Nor vain But Kill pr Still, Rill | Of her, w With mee Or thrillin And from Retain the

Sacred to

THOU Dark Nor orient But grief I Visions, in Show Mife

Pale shrouded beauty, kisses faint and cold,
Or murmur words the parting angels said.
Thoughts, when awake, their wonted trains renew;
With all their stings my tortured breast assail;
Her faded form now glides before my view;
Her plaintive voice now floats upon the gale.
The hope how vain, that time should being selies!
Time does but deeper root a real grief.

DESCRIPTION OF THE PERSON AND MABITATION OF DESPAIR.

From Southey's Joan of Arc. An Bpic Poem.

AN aged Man

Sat near, seated on what in long-past days."
Had been some sculptured monument, now fall'n
And half-obscured by moss, and gathered heaps
Of withered yew-leaves and earth-mouldering hones:
And shining in the ray was seen the track
Of slimy snail obscene. Composed his look,
His eye was large and rayless, and fix'd full Upon the Maid; the blue slames on his face
Stream'd a drear light; his face was of the hue
Of death: his limbs were mantled in a shroud.

Then with a deep heart-terrifying voice,
Exclaim'd the spectre, "Welcome to these realms,
These regions of Despair! O thou whose steps
By Grief conducted to these sad abodes
Have pierc'd; welcome, welcome to this gloom
Eternal; to this everlasting night;
Where never morning darts the enlivening ray,
Where never shines the sun, but all is dark,
Dark as the bosom of their gloomy king!"

So faying he arose, and by the hand
The virgin seized with such a death-cold touch
As froze her very heart; and drawing on,
Her, to the abbey's inner ruin, led Resistles: through the broken roof the moon
Glimmer'd a scatter'd ray: the ivy twin'd
Round the dismantled column: imaged forms
Of saints and warlike chiefs, moss-canker'd now
And mutilate, lay strewn upon the ground;
With crumbled fragments crucifixes fallen,
And rusted trophies; and amid the heap
Some monument's defaced legend spake
All human glory vain.

The loud blast roar'd Amid the pile; and from the tower the owl

Scream'd

Scream'd as the ten He, filent, led her o And pointed, that l At leifure the dreat

THE SORRC

From the Royal Tour, or I The intended annihilation of most outrageously zealous M Elegy. The hint is borrows of Old May-Day."

Rejoicing in
As Scriptu
When, full
And won Down in a
And touc

- " O hard Si " Sir Wil
- " And Mr. To spoil
- "Ah! plea Enjoying Amid these To see the
- " Since the Which ft As Mofes, i (And Mc
- " Why flic At broth Pray, fweat Of mang
- ' Break Sin Scrub, w Give unbel And stop
- Spit in fou Kill, with

Give to blac And box, with t

" Sulan, the confts And Marian, to

Ah! shall not they desert the house's gloom,
Breathe the fresh air one moment, and look smart?

"Meet, in some rural scene, a Colin's smile; With Love's soft stories wing the happy hour; Drop in his dear embraces from the stile, And share his kisses in the shady bower?

"No;" roars the l'untingtonian Priest—" No, no!
Lovers are liars—Love's a damned trade;
Kissing is damnable—to bell they go—
The Devil's claws await the rogue and jade.

"My chapel is the purifying place;
There let them go to wash their fins away;
There, from my hand, to pick the crumbs of grace, Smite their poor finful craws, and howl, and pray."

"How hard, the lab'ring hands no rest should know, But toil fix days beneath the galling load, Poor souls! and then the seventh be forc'd to go, And box the Devil in Blackfriars Road.

"Heaven glorieth not in phizzes of dismay;
Heaven takes no pleasure in perpetual sobbing;
Consenting freely, that my favrite day
May have her tea and rolls, and hob and nobbing.

"In footh, the l ord is pleas'd when man is bleft;
And wisheth not his bliffes to blockade;
'Gainst tea and coffee ne'er did he protest,
Enjoy'd, in gardens, by the men of trade.

"Sweet is White Conduit-house, and Bagnigge-wells, Chalk-farm, where Primrose-hill puts forth her smile; And Don Saltero's, where much wonder dwells, Expelling work-day's matrimonial bile.

"Life with the down of cygnets may be clad!
Ah! why not make her path a pleasant track;
"No!" cries the Pulpit Terrorist how mad!

"No! let the world be one huge hedge-hog's back."

"Vice (did his figid mummery succeed)
Too soon would smile amid the sacred walls;
Venus, in tabernacles, make her bed;
And Paphos find herself amid St. Paul's.

"Avaunt, Hypocrify, the folemn jade,
Who, wilful, into ditches leads the blind:
Makes of her canting art, a thriving trade,
And fattens on the follies of mankind!

"Look at Archbishops, Bishops, on a Fast, Denying hackney-coachmen e'en their beer; Yet, lo!
With
"The p
The l Confecti
The 1
"In fec
In pu Order ti
And 1

From

THE
A
From all Far from
In metar
And with
At anate
And call

(a) When I ar from giving the I mune omnium? or a propos?" I only
(b) The word an in an Epittle from in an Epittle from ed with fome indi-CEANT?" Brasmi characters over the

(c) Morosophos.

Phos, the Man of
(d) A learned a bridge. See his \

(e) All the learn that men had once them to go upon ale them to go upon all (f) James Earle, of the celebrated P notes which Mr. I treatifes he has giv tice and observation

(g) A young Sur whole genius and feience will hereaft

510] ANNUAL REGISTER,

With Symonds, and with Grafton's Duke (b) we A Dilettante in Divinity; A [pecial clerk for method and for plan, Through science by the alphabet he ran. Prudent, as Newton, in domestick care, With no Scriblerian (1) (cruples for his Heir, He took, not e'en in thought inclin'd to rove, A wife for regularity, not love. A little architect in all his schemes, Some fay, he had a method in his dreams. Three fellions in the House he daily toil'd, In every plan, in every motion foil'd; Till like grave Nicholls in pet he fwore, " I'll move my/elf; the House I move no more 1" Then penn'd to Pitt his monitory firain, (1) As Murray, clear, and as fond Randolph, plain Refolv'd on case, his travels were at home, And Lum'sden (/) taught him to converse of Ros The arch Paliadian and the Parian stone He lov'd, the pride of Chambers and of Scane. (But late, by Carter's (n) boly pencil won, Wyatt and Gothick berefy would shun;

(b) The Duke of Grafton the Chancellor, and John Syms fessor of Modern History in the University of Cambridge, have public attention by their various Hints and Observations on ture.

(i) See the Memoirs of Martinus Scriblerus. Chap. 1. How ferved all the rules given by the antients to those who desire be of wit, which Dr. Morosophos magnanimously disregarded. 1

the South or the West Wind.

(k) The three great, yet familiar, Letter-witers of the age are, M. P. for Tregony, 1797. Sir James Murray (Pulteney) Seen York in Germany, and the Rev. Dr. Randolph.—See "A verse, with notes: the first to the Rev. Dr. Randolph, &c.." I recommend them to the general entertainment, and perhaps publick.

(1) That ingenious, accomplished, and very learned gentlem MISDEN, Esq. F.A.S. Edinb. has since that time taught agreeable scholar-like manner. See his "Remarks on the Antiits Environs, being a classical and topographical Survey of the lebrated City." 4to. 1767. It is a pleasing and most judicion Gentleman who appears to have enjoyed the united advantages studious leisure, and polite company.

(m) Two celebrated architects. The professional knowledge bers, Knight, (of most beroick memory) was profound an Soane has more fancy and airiness of design, and is certainly a and ingenuity. But he indulges himself a little too much is cobims. See the Bank.

(π) I am obliged for this information to a Fellow of the S

N h ii a fi ci fi

1

The Bengal Squad he fed, though wondrous nice; Baring his currie took, and Scott his rice.

Loyal and open, liberal of cash,
(Not your damn'd dollars (*), or Bank-paper trash)

Nor tax, nor loan he fear'd, at table free.

And drank the Minister with three times

Till with a pun old Caleb (*) crown'd the "Consols, and not philosophy, cashie."

He talk'd, like Indian (a) Rennell rath And would at time regale you with a figure feldom that; in mariek though a property the little Doctor fwell'd, and look'd for Nay to Greek (a) notes would trill a Green In distonick kind and Lydian mode, And then with Burney, as his fit grew Convers'd of Stentor, the great (a) always Or with Raimondi's fire, and warlike a Play'd fome French General's aligner par Banks gave him morning lettens how to And Morgan (a) whifper'd courage and

- " Prens moi là bon parti; laisse la tous Exerce-toi, mon fils, dans ces bauto Prens, an lieu d'un Platon, er uiden
- order of Council was fent to the *k & w made to pass through the pillars of 1 pin for current silver.
- (t) Caleb Whitefoord, Esq.—N. B. If you do but ready as quits upon the fretful porcupine. I wish him a year, in a green old age; and then with the Epinic uti conviva fatur.

(a) Major James Rennell, the great Geographer of man to whose accuracy and extent of knowledge this debted. But this has nothing to do with his coveres

(x) Dr. Morosophos, the man of method, was rathe on this subject of Greek Musick. He wished to put But there is still reason to think that he never faw th Apollo, and Nemesis, printed with the Greek musical sung, at the end of the Oxford edition of Aratus in more accurate copy of these hymns in Mr. Burette's Memoires de l'Academie des Inscriptions, tom. 5.— little of the system of the Lydian Mode in the diaton reason to think the see knew as little, as Bishop Horse the Yours breas, or the Repowers press, &cc.

(7) "Stentor is celebrated by Homer as the most ill antiquity." Burney's Hist. of Music. 4to. vol. 1. p. 1 (2) Maurice Mo.gan, Esq; an ingenious writer, aut waganza on the Courage of Sir John Falstast. Mr. friends by the name of Sir John. In his politicks, he

A Poet too he Something bet He dealt in tra With half, who Method was all He fear'd the At last the Do (Not verse, lik Chambers ar From fruitful

RICHAL

From

HAT o (Sucl But moving on Where mouri For there etern. And all the r And there one c With quiv'rin Full in the midt On which rec Of all that e'er Who rul'd the Twas he who to Of proud Bok And taught the By tyrant forc Two penfive puj Who drew (w) Whole art in virt The forms of The friend of Ju Obtain'd a bal While here no re But rash'd ind

(a) Knight and Jerning!

"Soyez plutet ma
Ouvrier estimé da
Qu' écrivain du c

ACCOUNT OF BOOKS for

Zoonomia; or the Lanut of Organic Life. Vol. II. 4to. By Erafmus Darwin, M. D. F. R. S. 1796.

TAVING in our volume for 1794, given an account of the first volume of this ingenious work, it might perhaps be fufficient for us barely to announce to our readers the appearance of the fecond volume of a work, the former part of which has already excited the attention of most, of those who pursue the sludy of of medicine as a branch of science. and interest themselves in all its ingenious povelties; and indeed. we mean to do little more than give fuch a general idea of its contents, as may ferve to afford information of what may be expected from it. A full analysis of the work would be dry; a minute criticifm would occupy too many of our pages with a topic addressed only to professional men; and partial criticisms would be unfair and impertinent, where the whole is concatenated by a fystem, only to be properly comprehended in an Bhiverfal view.

The volume confists of part 2d and 3d of the Zoonomia. The 2d contains 'a catalogue of discases distributed according to their prox- classification, imate causes, with their subse- culiar and at quent orders, and with the The 3d comp the Materia count of the cine.' Thus a practical sys ed on the do economy laid ceding volume of difeates fol culties or pov established in nomia. As a ed to originat deficiency, c of these facu in difordered the proximate tions of these four natural (derived from the fenforium denominates 1 fensation, of fociation. T of these class the circumsta minution, an the actions: ed from the p species from disease in the coincide with 1 . thologists and reader must the felf for a conf furprize, at th blages of which vious idea: an of many things diseases which mere fymptom that are natur ducible to no re disease. It wo to anticipate 1 production of fort : but this ' fairly towards author; who c that a regular 1 led to analogic which no othe could discover.

It is not to

Meantime, i arrangement o proximate car thoroughly fcie fuppose a degri our knowledge in its healthy which elevates humble rank art, to that formed ference is that in wh its progress we and that whic nius will atte it:-but the fuch attempts inadequate, int bler efforts of miflead by fal they instruct t It is not easy rangement of ble to common in the prefer probable that ceive, and o

Principles of Legislation. By Charles Michell, of Forcett, Esq. 8vc. 1796.

A S the most useful publications are not always the most entertaining, those which are cakeulated chiefly for the instruction of mankind are rarely perused, except by the small circle of readers who are endowed with a clear understanding and sound judgment; and who, divested of passion or party spirit, seek only for the improvement of the mind, or the means of meliorating the condition of the bulk of their fellowcreature. The great mass of men in every nation, though they feel oppression with as much sensibility as the most enlightened, are rendered incapable, through the want of education, of finding out a remedy of precifely that degree of strength which is sufficient to remove the evil- of which they complain, without producing in its place any other grievance of equal or greater magnitude. Those who feel pain are unquestionably best able to tell in what part they are affected, and how acute are their fufferings: but it does not follow that they best know how to get rid of it without destroying themselves. The case is the same in the political as in the natural body. poor can tell, for instance, when the scarcity of provisions raises the price of them, and when the usual fum with which they go to market will not produce the usual supply of food; but we may venture to fay that they are not the best judges of the cau'es of scarcity, nor of the means either of guarding against or removing it. Some may think that it arises from too find a division of farms, others from so great a confolidation of theme fome from the policy of allowing # exportation of grain, others for want of a bounty on the import tion: and fome from a radical defai in the organization of governme while others afcribe it to fome pin ticular measure pursued by ministration. These various can having numbers of partizans, e proposing different remedies; having nothing in common be tween them but the certain es rience of the fearcity, the remedi if left entirely to those who full must be as various as the peri proposing them; and, conseque ly, the evil, inflead of being stroyed, would necessarily be gravated.

Fully convinced of the calculties that may be brought on feelets by a departure from found print ciples of legislation, or by a adoption of fuch as are fuggette by the uninformed, the prejudice or the designing, the author of the work before us makės an appei to the found fense of his country men, and calls them to the ferious consideration of the grounds of which political conftitutions ough to be raised and maintained. Their who look into books/only for as musement; those who are inexpable of feeing objects with calif philosophic temper and clearness or whose judgments are chained; down in adamantine fetters their passions or by party com tions; we advise to throw affice without reading, the volume that we are going to review: but let it be feriously perused by these wh are in fearch only of truth; and who are ready to embrace it an whatever form it felf. Let fuch p in the fully certain with principles, w in all cafes irrefrag general irrefifibly may be fure of finds tion, and a fair a underflanding. the author the Rea tional liberty, and enemy of despotish ing from the cold 1 of an individual, confusion and anar fee that Mr. M. opinions which are tremely popular, ne are entertained by the people, but be calculated, in his o the public, and t threne of liberty. points in it on w widely from Mr. work of equal exic in the prefent feri produced, that mu acquirfornce of m doctrines? His c dead, are generally arguments powerf ledge of human nat his acquaintance v of anticut and mor tentive and correct ers of reafoning are only by his mode per: -which failed believe) in the couand that was wh Thomas Paine,

4

Having thus cl publication before proceed to give a contents. It is di books, the former eight, the latter int tremity to which the seaman is fome times exposed, of being forced to send before the storm, the statesman is or ought to be exempt. The elements which he has to manage, the passions, habits, and prejudices of the people, are in some degree under his controul or guidance; and if ever a political tempest arises, it must be ascribed to some gross violation, immediate or remote, of the principles of legislation.

Mr. Michell blames those who, at the present moment, see in our political constitution nothing but pertection, while its affailants are pointing out numberless defects in it. General panegyric opposed to general consure does not, in his appearance mind, convey any idea of ability in the defenders of our own frame of government; and nothing honourable to it can be derived from the arguments of those who defend it man from only by pointing out greater defend a bility distinges the perfect of the pe

He then proceeds to examine the principles that the French have laid down as fundamental maxims of legislation, which he reduces to two:

Man is born equal;
And he continues equal in his rights;

So far is he from admitting them to be true, that he contends most strenuously that, as far as they are applicable to legislation, they strongly enforce the necessity of framing a constitution on principles directly opposite. Nature, he allows, shews no partiality to any rank in the distribution of her favours either a difference, one, exists t all ranke, sı by pature by pation, and former, he əlasınmi aş the civilized from the g produces a less between another. H only in an a tion and a duties of cit far excels his that, as the is necellary арреагавсе beight, he i per-eminene dolence as to

Integrity ability diffin from an ig therefore, he to be placed lity in the 1 the man of ferred to the man of fense him who por ont the latte of a ,legistat the integrity trufted; and we may be (lities will duties.'

In his Hd confideration rights; and ^{* } Bacon speaks with great contempt of this system Empire.

the acceptation of the French, it is either in or subversive of their gislation. Equal prothe power of gove from the injustice o he admits to be the man in society; and he makes this judicio

Civil rights may in an absolute mone pure democracy: if there much security to continue so. But to authority which the assumes a criterion of personal independence restrained in conditues teemed most free."

The inequality of plified in the exempt tain burthens of the by privileged orders, to times of conquet conquerors affumed privileges which they to the conquered.

 Latterly indeed, peafants, whether de the conquerors or t became vallals; buti in those times of c violence, the poor Fra defend himfelf, vol rendered his liberty, obtain protection une of a powerful chiefta though all the states o thew privileged or from the burthens w the community, this mant of what conque arrogated to themfelv no one pretends to ju

It is not necessary, to annialate a constituorganize a nation, in privileges bodies to tors declare, " The maintaining our natural, civil, and political rights";" for this last right (if they will use the term) has existence only subsequent to, and in confequence of, the formation of fociety. The natural rights of men, in which it is allowed all continue equal, are not infringed, although the offices of finte are reftricted to particular And their civil rights may be equally respected or yio-Inted in any form of government whatever; if the latter thould happen, no more is proved, than that the governors neglect or betray their duty."

In chapter I'I. book I. Mr. M. examines another favourite polition of the French revolutionists, viz. " the will of the majority is binding on the whole;" and he controverts it, if not with complete fuecess, at least with greatingenuity. His first objection is founded on the difficulty, if not impossibility, of ascertaining what is the unbiasted will of the majority of a nation as to any particular question :

In cities, (fays he,) a very fmall portion of the inhabitants may, with the advantages of union and preconcerted operations, dictate with uncontrollable authority to the whole. The lets fanguinary Romans (among whom this principle prevailed) were content to furround the forum, and precocupy all the avenues to the huftings with an armed mob, by means of which the most alert faction patied what laws it pleased. The terocious Parisians, by a liberal exercise of the lanthorn and pike, awe their oppoi compel the opinions. great natic to the argu our oppoliti of addresses meral opinio may be app. petitions or on any par corporate t is more diffi to ostablish an extentiv fingle city : established, which the their endea far more se united forc into acquie has cafily q furrections Marfeilles, other plac France; the doubt but would, if (overwhelme

supposing afcertaining rity to be remain a fl principle it argumentati majority of conflitution republic, or anity to pag follow that right to legitable contends disolution o

^{*} New Conflictation of France by Condo

ine fociety of f ginally founds on this head a

' Admitting have a right t felves, they h giffate for oth reason or equiappears to on able, may to nonfenfe, or But in thefe ca neglečted, ant determine the fociety being of pre-occupa for one party I as the other; a in the fituation tribes or nati fame momen country. If t div de it, one It is a legiti in which neith a right to treat or mailtons II a contett deny liberty of with their families, the disputed to themis lives elfe every principle manity.

That a par ther they fore may be justifi to obtain an a blished constit committing, is tice of their c of the God o deny. But be slight motives they in tack dis and renounce them birth, support the est can in hard!

without restraint promulgated among all ranks of fociety, experience has proved the maxim to be false. Calling history to his aid, he thus argues :

'The republics of ancient Greece were undoubtedly free, many carried freedom to excess; yet the art, of printing being then unknown, the communication of knowledge was necessarily confined to a few. Books were fearceand excessively dear, therefore beyond the reach of the multitude : and in matters of religion, the most jealous and cruel inquisition was exercised over writers and teachers. The Swife Cantons acquired their freedom at a period, when probably not one in a thousand could read or write; they have continued to preferve it for centuries, (many of the Cantons in the form of a pure democracy,) without the aid of newspapers and political pamphlets, which their poverty banishes much more esfectually than any law could do. In our own country, almost in our own times, freedom triumphed over monarchical prerogative, both In the æra of Charles I, and James Yet from the former to the latter period, the communication of political knowledge was much confined, by the difinclination or inability of the people to read. It is faid, that now corruption and mismanagement are in the extreme, and we are directed to reftore the conftitution to its former purity; a good one, therefore, could subfift without this general diffusion of political knowledge, which, if it has not produced, at leaft has not prevented the progress of corruption.'

He then goes on to snimadvert on the advice given by those who defire that the parallel alarmed at the wather the prefs, for that will always preprocessing observations are just and forcible.

' Let parents a for the youth up let us, if possible own vices, and felves. Have we that the exhortation the lecture of the aided by the dicu confeience, form cient barrier again of pattion, and which artful fope inclinations which ashamed of, pour In the declining a Rome, did the de or Epicurus make ber of profelytes? there was no wan by their writings, amples of their li endeavoured to u of 'virtue; yet th tarded, they did rapid progress of v fued its triumphan expired in the rule people.'

Having combat of others respectin ness of the press, .

bis own:

The licentions fuch as is now p compatible with . rity; it requires to but to ascertain the parates excess of l proper restraint, a where the power claw should be plant.

which requires, if it does r ceed, the greatest abilities. much, however, may be efta as certain; it is better that things should be concealed might be communicated, th even a few thould be con cated which ought to be wi-It is abtolutely necessary t every precaution against th gerous class of men. quence of a writer is as pow that of an orator, is more ex in its effects, and full as h be made an engine to in despotain into the bosom of I

The 5th chapter of thi treats of hour; by which the author means that e appetite for enjoyment of an mental or corporeal, active five, which leads a man to his duties, and to injure or others, in order to obta object of his defire. Mr. I quivocable denies that luxury is a vice in those who are add it, is productive of good to and-hear it, ye financier look to luxury for the chief of revenue, hear it, ye ma turers, who are engaged i branches by which luxury and the kingdom, it i ts curiched!—he maintair " no national advantage at est juttly be ofcribed to Lixu

Chapter VI. contains a c tion on the law of Primoge which Mr. M. teems to conmajor, but which he won venture to abolith, becan thinks the abolition would tended with tome collate judious circumitances, mor counterbalancing the goo might be expected from i equal right of inheritance England: but he does not allow. with modern reformers. 'that every one thould have a right to kill game wherever he can find it

After all, Mr. M. recommends a material alteration in the whole system of game laws, and thinks it would be better for the public that game thould be made private property.

I can game the author proceeds to the confideration of the tithe Fig pronounces the epinion to be ill founded, which states a heavy burthen tithes to be on the farmer; whose situation would, according to Lim, be precifely the fame, whether a tenth, a fifth, or a twentieth of the produce of the land were levied for the support of the clergy. Le contend that this tax falls folely on the landlord who is obliged to let his land proportionably lower on account of the tithes.—he how. ever, admits the tax to be impolitic, for this plain reason, that it is a continually varying one, on the produce of skill and labour, and on the uncertain bounty of nature; and confequently that it is always galling and vexatious.

Chapter I. of Book II. opens with the important questions, whether there ought to be allowed, in a tiate, a diffinction of orders among its citizens; and which form of goverument is preferable, a monarchical or a republican. For his arguments on these topics we must refer to the chapter itself, which contains much found fense and able reationing. We shall content ourselves with stating that he is decidedly for the existence of a body of nobility; without which, he maintains, there would be an infinitely greater distance than with it, between the rich and the poor; he infifts that population is increased by an inflitution which contributes to render marriages more frequent in the higher classes of fociety, because, wherever birth, without, any other recommendation, is a pafiport into fociety, celibacy will be less frequent; that it checks the rage of appearance, the vanity of thew, and removes one great temptation to expence, the chief cause of venality; that it brings for wards to public life that deteription of men by whom the nation has the best chance of being served; that it renders manners more amiable. and fociable; and finally, that almost all the objections, which are urged against the institution of nobility, may be equally if not more justly urged against wealth; the abolition of which would convulse and defiroy fociety.

The discussion of this subject, together with that of the form of government, is carried on through the first five chapters of the fecond book, and branches out into a very long, interesting, and ingenious differentiation respecting a standing army; for which Mr. M is a firenuous advocate. He does not argue for a standing army as a mere machine of government, calculated to enable the crown to enforce measures dangerous to or incompatible with a free constitution,but, for a standing army modelled on principles that would make it a guardian and firm support of the constitutional liberty of the subject; a body so organized and officered as that, though the crown might at all times look for its co-operation in all constitutional pursuits.

it would be community vernment vexpect affit in which is would be a even dang country.

Mr. Mic provement which gent to fit in thinks a n qualified fo of a legislat of opinion cligible by gislature, the age of

In chapt the qualifiinitead of furtrage to of 21, he outly for those who perty, but pendent for wages of he mainta restriction, conflictution

Mr. M.
the populanicate the above that view of pr tyranny, at as petible.
welfare.
diferiminat he,) of a framing a and mutt h of each part to him all the offices

honourable birth, their power would be nugatory, their infigura Luxury, that bane to ridiculous. national prosperity, by causing the extinction of eld families, inc arably vitietes, to a certain degree, the constitution of the boufe of lords. A new-created peer will never be respected as much as one who derices his honours from a long line of This evil would not, ancertors however, be very confiderable, if the vacancies were supplied as they ought to be; but of late years, instead of selecting those commoners who are most distinguished by their family and fortune, peerages have been lavished on professional men, often of the most obscure birth, and who for etimes have not even attrined an independence, but are compelled still to follow their profellions or truff to places and penfions for a maintenance. practice partly arites from the indolence and effeminate frivolity of those who are born to opulence, and who defert the service of the public, or at least confider it as tubordinate to their pleafures and amusements; they therefore not only have n claims to any recompence from government, but, from the degradation of their perfonal character, are of little importance in the eye of the mini-It proceeds, however, still more from the necessity the minither lies under, of attaching to himfelf as many men of professional eminence as possible, who, knowing their own importance, make their own terms; and also of securing a devoted majority in the upper as well as in the lower house.

' It believes all parties at prefent to recollect themselves. Power, such as is yested in an English peer, can safely be entrusted only to one who is altogether independent of the imiles of the prince, or the minister, as to his fortune; and if the house of lords is, as it always has been effected, the firmeft support to royalty, and a necessary refuge to the constitution against the fickleness and violence of the people, it is the interest both of the people and of the crown to unite; as formerly, political power and honorary iplendour to hereditary opulence and personal authority. Whatever may be his abilities and: merits, however splendid his fervices, a new man, (nover bone,) particularly if he has his fortune to make, is not competent to fulfil: all that is required of a peer."

Then, criticifing the famous pafa'

sage in Goldsmith,

" Princes and peers may flourish or may fade,

A breath can make them, as a breath has made;

But a bold peafantry, their conntry's pride,

When once destroy'd, can never be supplied:"

he fays—The fentiment is false, for it would be still more difficult to re-establish a recrage than a peafantry; and he is certainly right,... if it be true that hereditary nobles are useful inasmuch as they are, venerated by the public, and that. antiquity of descent is one of the causes, if not the principal one, of the veneration in which they are held? by the people. He then proceeds to shew that, notwithstanding the many additions made to the lift. of peers, the power of the ariftocracy is rather on the wane, and that ductory Records, Illustrations, &c. and the Early History of the Town of Leicestor.

Vol. 2. Part 1. Containing Framland Hundred.

Common Paper, 51. 5s. Royal Paper, 71. 7s. boards. Nichols. 1796.

WE cannot sufficiently admire or applaud the extraordinary perseverance and assiduity of research which our estimable author must have bestowed on so dry but useful a publication as the one now before us.

We have no hesitation in placing the history of Leicestershire at the head of all the county histories which have yet appeared, for extent of information and minuteness of investigation, and though from its bulk and locality, its merit is not likely to be sufficiently appreciated by the present generation, yet posterity will consider it as an invaluable legacy, and be grateful to its disinterested author for so complete a collection of antient records, authentic documents, and original information.

The introductory volume begins with an account of Leicesterthire extracted from Domefday book, with a translation. It is succeeded by a curious and valuable differtation on Domefday book, closed by a tabulary description of Leicesteribire as it was in the time of William the conqueror. Then follows an effay on the Mint at Leicettershire, with views of coins. The names and arms of knights of the county of Leicester who served under Edward I. are next given, with other lists of persons who bore honours, &c. A copy of the Testa de Neville, as far as it relates to his county, a matriculus of the clurches of the archdeaconry of

Leicester in 1220, a rotula of the churches of Leicestershire in 1344, and other tables relating to ecclefiastical matters, come next. These are followed by a variety of papers, containing taxations, lifts of freeholders, knight's fees, tenants in capite, &c. &c. Mr. Leman's treatife on the Roman roads and flations in Leicestershire, with additional observations by the bishop of Cork, and remarks on Roman roads by other writers, together with a learned effay on a Roman milliary found near Leicester, by the Rev. George Ashby, form the fucceeding fet of papers. The rivers and navigations of Leicesterfhire are the subject of the next article, chiefly confisting of copies of the acts obtained for the purpofes of navigation, mostly of very late date. Dr. Pulteney then contributes a catalogue of rarer plants found in the neighbourhood of Leicester, Loughborough, and in Charley forest, drawn up with the judgment and accuracy that might be expected from so able a botanist. The returns made to parliament of charitable donations within the county fill a large number of fucceeding pages. All the remainder of the volume is composed of the history and antiquities of the town of Leicester, with a series of its bishops, of the kings, dukes, and earls of Mercia, and their fucceffors, earls of leicester. A great portion of this trenches deeply on the general history of England, in which the Montfort family, with others who bore the Leicester title, made so conspicuous a figure. The writer (an anonymous friend of Mr. Nichols) has also contrived to bring in the whole ftory of Thomas a Becket, who feems to be a favourite charact memorialist, who certa an intimate acquain many nice historical poi few, we imagine, will through all his narrati quisitions, which are I tle enlivened by the composition. An a charters, deeds, and papers, concludes this the introductory volum

The first part of the lume, containing an Framland Hundred, is of what is to constitute matter of the work. thip in the hundred i treated in an alphabe The author's general m give the name, fituatic tents of the district; t all the owners of the the landed property o from the earliest record the present time: with troduced genealogies principal families, as necdotes, biographical ry, of all extraordin connected, by birth o with the township. I matter comes next, fuc of all religious and char dations, account of living, its nature and trons, and incumben mental inferiptions, e the parish register, popu bills of mortality at di ods, &c. Very few de tural history or econon are to be found; and, tle occurs for the amui common reader, excep graphical relations, for are curious The pref comprising Belvoir caft except here and there a small piece which the landlords permit the tenants to break up occasionally, when it becomes very mossy; but then this is laid down again usually at the end of three or four years. There are no woods; but there are iome imaliplantations of oak, ash, and clm of no very long date. There is abundance of ash in the hedge rows, and scarcely any other tire. The foil is a strong clay; there is no waste ground in the lordthip; but it is not cultivated, in my opinion, to the best advantage. They depend chiefly on their dairies; they breed, however, very tine theep, famous for the whiteness of their fleeces, which weigh from feven to nine pounds: they breed also fine horned cattle; but the lordship, in general, is not good feeding ground.

· This lordship is remarkable for having first made the best cheese perhaps in the world, commonly known by the name of Stilton cheese, from its having been originally bought up, and made known, by Cooper Thornhill, the landlord of the Bell inn at Stilton. It began to be made here by Mrs. Orton, about the year 1730, in small quantities; for at first it was supposed that it could only be made from the milk of the cows which fed in one close, now called Orton's cloie; but this was afterwards found to be an error. In 1756 it was made only by three persons, and that in imall quantities; but it is now made, not only from one, but from almost every close in this parish, and in many of the neighbouring ones. It is well known that this fort of cheefe is made in the shape, and of the fize, of a collar of brawn. It is extremely rich, because they mix among the new milk as much cream as it will bear. It requires much care and attendance; and, being in great request, it setches rod. a pound on the spot, and is. in the London market.

'There is no stone, gravel, or fand, in this lordship, except a listle fand stone on the fide of Burrow-hills: it is mostly a strong blue clay; and in some parts of it is a good brick earth. There is only one spring, and that a chalybeate; it lies high, in a close belonging to the vicar, known by the name of the fpring close; it runs over a great part of the year, and difcharges itself into the valley, where the village lies. Nobody ever attempted to fink for a well in this parish, till, in the winter of 1777 and 1778, Edward Wigley Hartop, Esq. dug and succeeded. He penetrated through a bed of stiff blue clay; and at the depth of 66 feet the water gushed in, when, I apprehend, the workmen were coming to the limestone rock, by their having thrown out some fragments of blue stone. To the depth of 10 feet were frequent nodules of chalk; at that depth the clay was full of small selenites. At 30 feet deep the clay was found to be full of pectens, and other shells very perfect, but extremely tender. Nodules of ludus belmontii were interspersed; ammonites of different species in great quantities, gryphites, and other shells; and plates of a clear foliaceous mica, refembling Muscovy glass. I am informed that the water did not prove. good, and that little or no use is made of this well.

'I have not found any natural productions, either animal, vegetable table, or f mon in o neither wo the parish where man the foil toh thing to fe ferviceable

'The ai fogs are no early when habitants a them live (

'Their f they have Derbyshire Middleton ham. Th and the re them 15d. weight: b has been rough, the per hundre

'No gre parish; bu Oakham te a mile by come upor at about t they come

'There through th it; and o brook, wi This joins rable, tha by Leefthe ing jointly into the r tingby and

'There i nor one d nation.

'The p James; to dedicated.

'There tions time

chefiras, by fingers the most compatting and Imouth toned, have concurred in winging the thates of his tong to our inmost fensibility. The painter's magnificent perspectives, the dazzling pageants of the decorator, the easy floating motions of groupes of graceful dancers, and all the magic glories of realized mythology, have mingled at the theatre their influence with that of the poet, and have assisted in flirring up within us that luxurious irritation and tumult of feeling, which form the highest scope of the artist and the purest enjoyment of Stript, however, the connoisseur. of all these circumstances of effect, Metaffafio has acquired a reputation for genius and abilities, which the philosopher who peruses his writings in the closet will not, probably, hesitate to ratify. Yet how often does it happen that, removed from within the glare of theatric illumination, the god of the operahouse has withered into an ordinary man; and that the liquid language of the fkies had lent an oracular folemnity to simple thoughts, or a bewitching harmony to in ignificant infipidities? Be this, however, as it may, and even supposing that the literary character of Metatiafio himself thould be fated to fuffer depreciation by time and revolutions in tafte; - should his dramatic writings even become a mere ichool-book for the learner of Italian;—yet he has refided fo much at courts, and has been the darling of fo many artists, that his life can never be an object of indifference to those whose gentle eye preferably fixes on those places and periods, in which the pleasures of man have been the chief occupation of his rulers; and in which factions have confined their bloodlet's struggles to the establishment of a theory of music, and have never extended their profcriptions beyond the condemnation of a tragedy.

To the inherent fashion of the subject of these volumes, is superadded the stronger recommendation which they derive from the celebrity of the author. The hiftorian of music is accustomed to convene and to satisfy an elegant audience; and, whether he touches the harp or the monochord, he displays a masterly band. His materials have been industriously collected at Vienna and in Italy, and comprehend, besides the wellknown biographies of Retzer and of Christini, many works of inferior note, as well as the posthumous edition of the poet's letters. bulk of this publication confifts indeed of a translation of those letters. connected by the requisite interstices of narrative; all which form a very amuling wbole.

Metastasio was born at Rome in 1698, where his father had fettled as a confectioner. At school he displayed early talents as an improvilatore, and before eleven years of age could fing extemporaneous Gravina, the civilian, known by having written tragedies on the Greek model, heard, admired, and adopted the young bard; to whom he gave a literary education, getting him admitted to the bar, and to deacon's orders, that civil and ecclesiastical preferment might be alike open to him. When 22 years of age, Metastasio visited Naples, having inherited the property of Gravina, and attached himself as cicisbeo to the female finger Romanina. He there wrote an opera, which fucceeded.

and fron ly to the was invi rial La furnish bespoke Dr. I is positi study, a good cri without ginal w those w The opi fore, m when he writers (dern ope tation o his prat that he tal erro difcover means o Іу арраг more h more at an equa with th approac commor

HISTORY or EUROPE,

CHAP. I.

Situation of the French Nation and Government, and Views of the Directory, —Difficulties to be encountered by France at the Close of 1795.—State of Parties in England.—Temper of the British Nation.—Assemblies for the Purpose of a Parliamentary Reform, and Peace with France.—A great and dangerous Scarcity of Provisions.—Meeting of Parliament.—Insults and Outrages of an immense Mob against the King, on his Way to the House of Lords.—The regret of all People of Sense at this Treatment of the King.—

Speech from the Throne.—Debates thereon.—In the House of Commons.—
And in that of the Lords

CHAP. II.

A Proclamation offering a large pecuniary Reward for the Discoury of any Persons guilty of the recent Outrages against the Person of the King reconference between the Lords and Commons on this Subject.—A Bill for the Sasety and Preservation of the King's Person and Government.—Debates thereon in both Houses of Parliament.—A Bill for the Prevention of Seditious Meetings.—Debates thereon.—The two Bills under Discussion in Parliament occasion a general Alarm, and much Opposition without Doors.—In this Opposition the lead was taken by the Whig-Club.—Which was followed by the Corresponding Societies and other Associations.—As well as different Bodies legally incorporated.—The Ministry still personer in their Measures.—Debates on the numerous Petitions against the two Bills now pending in Parliament.—General Indignation against the Principles and Objects of these.—The two Bills passed into Laws

CHAP: III.

In the House of Commons, Regulations respecting the Sale of Flour, and the Making of Bread.—Motions by Mr. Lechmers and Mr. Whithread, respecting the Causes of the Scarcity of Wheaten Flour, and the Hardships incident to the Labouring Poor—Negatived.—Bill for Encouraging the Cultivation of Wase Lands.—Motions for the Support of the Land and San Service.—Strictures on the Conduct of Ministry in the War. Department.—Replied to by Mr. Wyndham.—Debates on the Erection of Barracks.—A Statement of the Expences of 1796, amounting from menty-seem to Vol. XXXVIII.

Twenty-cight Millions sterling.—Debates concerning the Terms of the Loan.

—Vete approving the Conduct of the Minister on this Subject.—New Taxes.—Debates thereon.—Message from the King, intimating his Disposition to enter into a Negociation with the present Government of France.

—An Address moved, expressing the Readiness of the House to concur in such a Measure.—Amendment thereon, moved by Mr. Sheridan.—This rejected, and the Address carried.—Motion for Peace, by Mr. Grey.—Negatived

Negatived

CHAP. IV.

Free Negroes in the Island of Jamaica.—Hunted by Blood-Hounds.—Motion, by Mr. Grey, in the House of Commons, for an Inquiry into the State of the Nation.—Negatived.—Further Taxes.—For paying the Interest of an additional Loan.—Mortality among the Troops fent against the French West-India Islands .- Neglect and Distresses of the Troops .- Motion for Documents on these Subjects by Mr. Sheridan.—Debates thereon.—Mr. Sheridan's Motion agreed to.-Motion, in the House of Peers, for the Production of Papers respecting a Vote of Parliament, in 1783, recognizing the Necessity of certain Public Reforms .- Debates thereon .- The Motion negatived,-Report of the Committee of Supply on the Resolution for granting a Subfidy to the King of Sardinia. Conversation on that Subject. -Charges laid against Ministry, by Mr. Grey, as Ground of Impeachment; and a Motion on that Subject .- Negatived .- Motions, in both Houses of Parliament, against the Continuation of the War.—Negatived.— Motion, by Mr. Wilberforce, for the Abolition of the Slave-Trade, on a certain Day .- Negatived. The Seffion of Parliament closed by a Speech from the Throne . . 60

CHAP. V.

CHAP. VI.

Address of the Directory to the French Armies.—Determination to carry the War into Italy.—Difficulties to be encountered in carrying this Plan into Execution.—Buonaparte.—The French Army, under his Command, makes rapid rapid Progress in Italy.-The Austrians, under General Reaulieu, confluntly repulsed, yet not dispirited.—Various Actions.—Suspension of Arms agreed on between the French, and Piedmontese Armien.—General Beautieu re-crosses the Po, for covering the Countries to the North of that River.—At Paris, Negociation for Peace between the King of Sardinia and the French Republic.—Treaty of Peace between France and Sardinia ratified by the Legislation Bodies of France. Exultation and Confidence of the French.—Improved by Buonaparte, for the Purpose of leading on the . Army to farther Exploits,—Address to the Army.—General Object and Tendency of Buomaparte's private Conversation.—Homage paid to the Merit . of Buonaparte and the Army, by the Directory.—Buonuparte puts his Army in Motion.—Croffes the Po, and leaves General Benglieu to break up his Camp.—Armistice between the French Army and the Duke of Parma. —The French advance toward the Capital of Lembardy.—Battle of Lodi,— The Austrians retreat to Mantua.—The French proceed to Milan, where the French General allows his People some Days of Repose

CHAP, VIL

Exultation of the French at the Successes of their Armies.—Their Army in Italy animated by the Praises of their Countrymen, and the Conversation as well as the Proclamations of Buonaparte to a high Passon for Glory.—i Enter the Duchy of Modena.—Spoliation of Monuments of Antiquity and Art.—Abhorrence of the Italian Nobility and Clergy towards the French greater than that of the inserior Glasses.—A general Insurrection, ready to break out, quashed by the Vigilance and Promptitude of Buonaparte.—The Austrians, under General Beaulieu, with the Connivance of the Veneticus, take Possession of Peschiera.—, retreats to the Tyrolere.—The, ams from their Territories the 1 Crown of France.-Buomapari Mantua. - Prepares to march in in the Districts, known under t suppressed, he carries his Arms logna, and Urbino. -- Menaces Buonaparte,—Sufpension of Hoy and Patron of Men of Learni. French Republic.—Infurrection the French.—The Blockade of 1 by Mar, hal Wurmfer. - Action Austri ins, reinforced by Detach of Presence of Mind in Buonapa Adige

CHAP. VIII.

Italian Mobs excited against the French. Suppressed by a Torror of the electrons French. Marshal Wurmfer, purjust by Buttupparte, retreate P 2

the Tyrolesc.—The Siege of Mantua resumed.—Marstal Wurmser, rfully reinforced, makes Head against the French in the Venetian itories.—But is defeated.—The French take Possession of Trent. nued Success of Buonaparte. - Marshal Wurmser, with the Remains s Army, makes good his Retreat, and takes Shelter within the Walls of tua. - Corsica, evacuated by the English, returns under the Governof France. - Pacification between France and Naples - including the cian Republic.—Religious Zeal of the Romans.—Awakened by the Court me into rage, and acoued Preparations for War against the French. ru Republic, composed of several small States.—Prevalence of the blican Spirit in Italy .- The Austrians reinforced with Troops from vany, advance against the French .- Retake Trent .- But are de-I with prodigious Loss at Arcola.—The Austrians, though frequently ted, return to the Charge. - High Spirit and Courage of the Tyns. - Decotion of the Army in Italy to the French Republic. - Patience e French Soldiers under manifold Privations 109

CHAP. IX.

gn in Germany.—Opposite Designs of the French and Austrians.— Jes of the French.—They invest Ehrenbritslein.—Driven back, by the duke Charles, to Dusseldorf.—The Division of the French Army under can takes Post at Strasburg.—The Plan of Operations proposed by this ral.—Crosses the Rhine.—Reduces the Fortress of Kehl.—Defeats the ians, under Marshal Wurmser, near Philipsburg .- And in various Successive Engagements.—The Austrians retire, in order to wait for forcements, into the Interior of Germany .- Junction of the French os under Jourdan and Kleber .- These united reduce Franksort .see of Morcau in Swabia.—Cessation of Hostilities between the French he Princes of Wirtemberg and Baden.—Conduct of Prussia.—A Prussian y takes Possession of Nuremberg .- Impolicy of the French in the Mode ifing Contributions.—Cause of this.—Depredations of the French in vany.—Operations of the French Armies under Moreau and Jourdan. lers of the Austrians.—The Emperor represents the Situation of vany, and his own Situation, in an Appeal to his Bohemian and Hunga-Subjects.—Diet of the Empire.—Partakes of the general Confernation rmany.—Determination to open & Negociation for Peace with France. e Tide of Success turned against the French by the Germans, under the duke Charles.—Obsinate Engagements.—Masterly Retreat of the h Armies.—Particularly of that under Moreau.—Consequences.— Austrians occupied in the Siege of Kehl .- Sally of the Garrison there. rious Actions.—Armistice between the French and Austrians.— Diet of the Empire re-unimated by the enterprizing Spirit and Success. e Archduke Charles, folicitous to regain the Favour of the Imperial 126

CHAP.X.

State of Parties in France.—A Revival of the Reign of Terror threatened in the Southern Departments by Freron.—The Directory defert and oppose the Jacobin Interest.—Conspiracy of Jacobins.—Discovered and descuted.—Arrangements respecting the Estates of Emigrants.—Instuence of the non-juring or refractory Clergy troublesome to Government. — Scandalous Neglect of the Execution of Justice.—Criminal Trials.—Money and Finance.—The same Impositions laid on the People of the Austrian Netherlands as on those of France.—New Plots and Insurrections.—Law for reconciling the different Factions in France, by the Extinction of Terror.—Proposal for repealing a Law which appeared to some to bear too hard on the Relations of Emigrants.—Rejected.—But an equitable Alteration made in that severe Law.—This a Matter of Triumph to the moderate Party

CHAP. XI.

Effects expected in France from a growing Spirit of Moderation.—The Chief Object in the Councils of France, how to Break or to Weaken the Power of England.—Plan of the French for that End.—Means for Resoring the Pecuniary Credit of the French Republic.—A Rupture threatened between the French Councils and Exècutive Directory.—Prevented by the necessity of their acting in Concert.—The Legislature Invade the Province of the Directory, by the Appointment of a Committee for judging in Cases of Appeals from Emigrants.—Lostiness of the Directory.—Humbled by the Wise Economy and Firmness of the United States of America.—Jealousies and Disputes between the French and Americans.—And an open Rupture

C H A P. XII.

The Haughtiness of the Directory towards different Nations.—Particularly towards the Dutch, whom they consider, not as Consederates, but a conquered People.—Moderation of the Republic and prepondering Party in the United Provinces.—Batavian Convention.—Its Proceedings.—Affairs of Geneva.

—Meeting of the National Institute of France.—Considered as an amplicious Omen of the Return of Peace and Reign of the Aris.—And Liberty of Thinking and Publishing on all Subjects.—The Alliance between the Church and Monarchy of France, in the End, ruinous to both.—The new, or constitutional, Clergy arow their Assent to the Separation of the Church from the State.—Yet venture to condemn some Things settled, ar experiend, by the republican Government.—But which they considered as adverse to the Dignity and Interests of the ecclesistical Order.—The Settlement of ecclesistical Assarch fairs considered by the Generality of the French as a Matter of great Importance

CHAP.

C II A P. XIII.

In France, a General wish for England will continued.—C Republic.—Negociation for Africas! Maritime and C Frence Gevernment to their tions as d Expedition for a of Catharine II.—And th	Overtur r Pcai doniul Engag m Inve	re of	Pene Pari och ar tswith of Ire	from s. id Er the I land	Eng Abrup ritifle- Outch: —Def	land Ly (—Inj —Fr cated	to the broken fidelity ench 1 —Th	re	rench f — of the para-
CH	R O	N	I C	Ļ	E.			1-	69
Births in the Year 1796		•		•		•		•	49
Marriages .	•		•		•		•	•	51
Promotions .		•		•		•		•	52
Deaths Sherijis	•		•	•	• .		•	•	55 69
overigi.		•		•		•		•	68
APPENDIX	TO	тня	E CI	IRO	ONI	CLI	E.
London Gazette, June .		•		•		•		•	70
The like, July 2	•		•		•		•	•	72
Articles of Capitulation of the	Island	of St	. Luci	a, M	ay 25	•	•	•	74
The like of Cosombe, in the Isl	and of	Ceylor	r, Fel	ruary	15		•	•	75
The like of St Vincent's, June	e I I	•		•		•		•	80
The like of Grenada	• .	•	•		•		•	•	.,81
London Gazette Extraordinary	y, 1100	. 3		•		•		•	101d.
London Gazette, Nov. 29	• •••	T.A	•	16	•		•	•	90 92
Articles of Capitulation of A The like of Banda, March 8	mooyna	, 1.0	umy	10		•		•	ibid.
Circular Letter to the Lieutene	ents of	Coun:	ies on	ibe S	ea Co	alts.	Now.	5.	93
Letter from the Chancellor of									94
The like to the Bank .				•		•		•	ibid.
Account of the total nett Produ	uce of a	all the	Taxe	s for	one Y	ear,	ending	0	Rob er
10, 1796	•		•		•		•	•	93
Account of Wheat fold in the C	Corn-M	arket,	Mark	k-Lan	e, fron	n Ch	ristma	5, 1	795, to Christmas, 1796 .		•		•		•	•	•	99
Price of the Quartern-laf for			•	1700	•		•	•	100
A general Bill of Christenings					_	•		•	101
Sulfance of the Act for previous of Common Prices of Common ton 1		EAIIIO	us Alji	emolie	5		•	•	ibid.
Average Prices of Corn for 1 Nieteorological Table for 1790	_	•		•	_	•	·	•	104 105
Supplies granted by Parliamen		796	•	_	•		•	•	106
Principal Public Acts passed i	n the S	ixth	Seltion	of the	e Seve	enteen	th Pa	rlic
of Great Britain	•		•	•	•		•	•	109
Prices of Stock for 1796	•	•	_	•		•		•	110
Trial of Mr. VI illiam Stone f	for Hig	b-Tre	ason		•		•	•	111
Petition of Sir Francis Blake	to the L	Icuse e	of Con	nmons	, Febr	uary	8 .	•	715
							ST	Λ	TE.

STATE-PAPERS.

His Majesty's Speech on close	ng the Seffion	May 19.	•		117
The like on opening the Seffic		- ,	•	•	118
Protest of Earl Fitzwilliam		*	• :	,	120
Message from the King, Dec.				•	123
The like, Dec. 17	•		•	•	ibid.
The like, Dec. 26 .	 		٠		124
Note transmitted to M. Bart	belemi by Mo	. Wickham	March 8		125
Answer thereto, March, 20			, 4.2.0.		sbid.
Note of Observation thereon,	April 10				126
Explanatory Article to the To		Great Rris	ain and A	merica.	ibid.
Treaty between Great Britai
Trous of the great Distan		ing a con di		homes 2 4	128
Letter from Sir G. Elliot,	Viceron of Co	reca to the	Carrerson	of Porto rain	Victory by	Micas in in	. Go-041 mei	9 1 9110
Articles hu muhish she Drieil	h Tracks took	Politolian of	Danta Fan		133
Articles by which the Britis	Ditoups took	Diamena a	forto feri	ille Dans	134
Proclamation by General I	roroes to the	Funters of	r the span	ijo Part	f St.
Domingo .	. C	•	• . •	•	ioia,
Order by the King in Council	, september 3		• .		136
The like, Oct. 12	•	•	•	. •	138
The like, Nov. 9	• • •	$_{i}$ $ullet$ \cdot	• 5	•	ibid.
The like, Dec. 28	. •		•	•	139
Answer of the British Gover			•		141
Official Correspondence publ	ished by the	British God	vernment, 1	relating t	o the
Negociation for Peace bet	ween Great I	Britgin and	the French	republic	· 147:
Credentials of Lord Malmele	bury in Latin,	, with a Tr	anslation .	•	17.2
Manifesto of the British Go	vernment agai	inst France,	Dec. 27	• • •	173
Speech of the Lord-Lieutenant				t, Jan. 21	, 177
The like, April 15	• •	- •		•	179
The like, Oct. 13	•	, •	•		180
Proclamation by the Lord-Li	eutenant in C	louncil, Now	. 16		180
Decree of the National Assen				Abolition	of a privileged Church, Augus		•		•	183
Proclamation of the same,		Importation	of Britill	Merchan	dize.
September 10 .			P =	•	184
Proclamation of the States-	General of th	e United Pr	OULUCES.	7 1 E	186
Proclamation of the Dutch ?					188
Manifesto of the Batavian	- • • •				189
Manifesto of Spain against (77	195
Letter from General Beaulie			ument on	entering	their Territory .		nocyc. (py os)	inchairm's Hall	- brancisco	197
Address of the French Mini	for to the Da	ce of Genn	.		ibid.
Note of the French Minister				١٨.	198
7			•	IO _f	• `
Letter from the Commissary	Director, O	nex, to the	. Fre	₹.	ļa . U ū
Lauterne Reply Sept 10	•	•			199
Reply, Sept. 12	. 424 D	-4			bid.
Letter from M. Barthelemi to	o the Burgom	व्यास्ताः, ५६० ।	9		200

Letter of the Executive Directory, to the Helvetic Body	: 200
Declaration of the Executive Directory to the Senate of Bafle	. 201
Letter from the Sovereign Council of Baste to M. Barthelemi, April 9	ibid.
Letter from M. Barthelemi to the Canton of Baste, May 9	. 203
Answer of the Canton of Basle thereto, May 11	. 204
Note from Mr. Wickbum to the Senate of Berne, June 26 .	. 205
Articles of the Concordat, agreed upon at Geneva, August 31	206
Official Note of Count Bernstorff, Danish Minister of State	207 to Count
Bernsterff	. 208
Answer of Count Bernstorff, March 19	209
Proclamation of the Queen of Portugal, for making Liston a free Port
Manifesto of the Queen of Portugal, against the Batavian Republic	. 211
Letter from the King of Naples to the Marquis del Vajlo	. 212
Proclamation of the King of Naples, May 18	. 213
Edict of the King of Naples, addressed to his Subjects	. 214
Proclamation issued at St. Petersburg, respecting Dutch Ships, May 20	. ibid.
Dispatch from Count Osterman to the Russian Minister at Madrid	21 5
Ansaver of the Prince of Peace thereto, Murch 17 Note from the Russian Minister at Stockholm to all the Reveius Minister	. 216 214
Note from the Russian Minister at Stockholm, to all the Foreign Minister. I etter of Consideration addressed by the King of Prussia to the differen	_
Letter of Convocation, addressed by the King of Prussia to the different wishing to enjoy the Advantages of Neutrality, April 22	. 218
Royal Prussian Edict, July 16	. 219
Declaration of the King of Prussia, put against the Gates of Nurember
Submission of the Imperial City of Nuremburg, to the King of	Profia.
August 16	. ibid.
Declaration in Answer delivered to the Magistrates of Nuremberg	. ibid.
Rescript of the King of Prussia, respecting his Territories on the left	_
the Rhine, December 29	• 221
Treaty of Peace between the Duke of Wurtemburg and Teck and the	French
Republic	. 222
Treaty of Peace between the French Republic and the Margrave of Bad	m 224
Treaty of Peace between the French Republic and the King of	the two
Sicilies	. 227
Offensive and Defensive Treaty of Alliance between France and Spain	r, 228
Treaty between France and Prussia, August 5	. 232
Treaty of Peace between France and the Infant Duke of Parma	. 233
Proclamation of the French Commissioner to the Citizens of St. Domin of the Executive Directory to the Armies of the Sag Meuse, May 29	238
of General Buonaparte in Italy	, ibid.
by Commissary of Salicetti	. 240
of Buonaparte to his Brothers in Arms	. ibid.
Address of the Deputies of Abbe to Buonaparte	241
Buonaparte to the Republic of Venice	. 242 :
Buonaparte to the People of the Milanese	ibid
Proclamation of the Municipality of Milan, June 12	243
Buonaparte to the Inhabitants of Tyrol Buonaparte to the Grand Duke of Tuscany, June 26	. 244
5	Antwe

CONTENTS,

A. C		245
Answer	Tuna OO
Buonaparte, to the Grand Duke of Tuscany,	June 23	stid.
Answer	• •	ibid.
The Executive Directory to Citizen Buouapas	rte, July 31 .	246
The Ambassador of Sweden to the French M	wister for Foreign Affairs	247
Resolutions of the Executive Directory, Augus		248
Note from the Minister for Foreign Affairs		ibid.
Proclamation by the General-in-Chief of the		249
Address of the French Ambassador to the D		sbid.
Message from the Executive Directory to	the Council of Five H	unared,
August 23	•	. 25
Proclamation by the Executive Directory. A	lugust 29	252
General Buonaparte to the Executive Directo		253
	· J ; · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
Gentili to Buonaparte	•	. ibid.
Gentili to the French Commissioners		254
Message of the Executive Directory to	the Conneil of Five H	undred,
October 16 • • •	•	. ibid.
The like, October 26 .	• • • •	255
Resolutions passed by the Council of Five Hu	ndred, November 2	256
Message of the Executive Directory to the C		• ter 10
	- Carlina	258
Proclamation of the Commissioner Salicetti, i		259
Treaty of Peace between the French Republ		• 262
Message of the Executive Directory to the C	puncting Frye Hundred	• 26 5
The like to the Council of Ancients '	•	• 267
The like to the Council of Five Hundred	•	• 968
Proclamation of the Executive Directory	•	. 270
The Executive Directory to the Citizens of	Paris .	. 272
Address of the Executive Directory to the F		274
Proclamation by Scepaux, in the Western Des		275
Megage from the Executive Directory to the	Council of Five Liunuses	ibid.
Decree published at Modena, Oct. 18		276
The Congress of Cispadana to the People of	Bologna, &c.	. ibid.
Letter from the Pope to all the Catholics in .	France .	. 277
Edict, published by the Pope, on the Reception	n 40bich bis Subjects ought	to give to the Franch		. 278
Note of the Papal Minister to the French Co	anmillionere	279
State Paper, published at Dresden, July 30	· farmaffeet a	. ibid.
Declaration of the Flotier of Hanner to the	. Died of Besiden
Declaration of the Elector of Hanover to the	Dies of Kasyven	280
Proclamation by the Archduchess of Austria	to the 1 groleje	. ibid.
Proclamation by his Imperial Majesty, Fran	cis II. Aug. II	. 281
The like, Aug. 21	•	. 282
The like, Sept. 18	• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •	. 284
Imperial Reserret to the Duke of Wurtembur	y • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •	. ibid.
Resolutions of the States of Flungary	•	. 287
Substance of the Correspondence between the	be Cabinets of Vienna and respecting the Line of Demarccition	· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	000
Reply, by the Court of Vie nna.	• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •	490
Mallana of the Deschara and The	a di Cairman	289
Message of the President of the United State	is to Congress.	. 290
ı		Artus

Anfaver of General Wushington to a Resolution of the House of	Ra	presen
latives .		290
Addrey? of General Washington on his retiring from the Presiden	י אנטי	of the United States of America, Sept. 17		293
Note from the French Enwoy to the Executive Government of Americ	a .	304
Reply of the Brecutive Government thereto	_	307
Memorial prejented by the French Envoy to the American Secretary for	r F	areian
Affairs	~ _ (310
Note published by the French Minister at Philadelphia	•	313
Address of the President of the United States to Congress, Nov. 15	•
Answer to the above Address.	•	ibid.
	•	317
Reply of the Prefident	•	318
CHARACTERS.
Particulars of the earlier Years of Mr. Gibbon's Life, and of the	e C	ourla of Studies which laid the Foundation of his subjequent Celebrity, by himself		319
Account of Solomon G. sner	•	338
Some Particulars of the Death of Condorcet	•	340
Biographical Account of the Count de Busson	•	342
Account of Apoltolo Vieno	•	346
of the Peasantry of Norway	•	347
of the Hoozuana's, a wandering Tribe of Savages .	•	349
of the Celebration of Good Friday in Bruffels .	•	351 of the Alteration produced by the French Revolution at Straft	ura
of the public Enting-bouses at Vienna	,m, g
The Life and Writings of the Albé Barthelemi	•	353
	•	35 5
Character of Evasmus Anecdotes of the late Dr. James Fordyce		359
Account of the Donal Cocier of Franchis		360
	•	362
of the late Sir William Chambers	•	364
Interesting History of Dev Parker and Dava Invers de Castro		366
Interesting History of Don Petho, and Dona Ignez de Castro Frances trom the Correspondence of Mr. Gibbon, quith gravious		371
Extracts from the Correspondence of Mr. Gibbon, with various	4716	~ ~ ~
Eminence in the Literary liverld.	•	373
NATIDAL BISTODY		•
NATURAL HISTORY.
Some Particulars in the Anatomy of a Whale		380
An Account of the late Discovery of Native Gold in Ireland	•	383
A Mineralogical Account of the Native Gold levely discovered in Irela	ind.	38 5
	,,,,	389
On the Cold felt on high Mountains, and at great Depths . Account of the great Speckled Disser or Loop	•	39 2
Account of the great Speckled Diver, or Loon Controlls and Confinancies between Animals and the Earth	•	394 394
Contrasts, and Consonancies, between Animals and the Earth Account of the Knirsh a Steeles of Gazelle, on Autologe	•	39 8
Account of the Kainfi, a Species of Gazelle, or Autolope Reflections on certain File to of Heat and Chican the liming System	•	399
Reflections on certain Effects of Heat and Coul on the living System	•	402
Account of the Munner of treating Bees in Portugal	•	Qn
		W 18